VOLUME XLIX

Kept to Date by Cumulative Annual Pocket Parts

EXPLANATION

THE object in view in preparing Corpus Juris Secundum has been two-fold: First, to provide a complete encyclopedic treatment of the whole body of the law, which means that it must be based upon all the reported cases; Second, to present each title of the law in form and content most suitable as a means of practical reference for the Bench and Bar.

Corpus Juris Secundum is therefore a complete restatement of the entire body of American Law. The clear-cut and exhaustive propositions comprising the text are supported by all the authorities from the earliest times to date. The supporting case citations, conspicuously set out in the notes, point to all decisions handed down since the publication of Corpus Juris. When the searcher may wish to consult earlier authorities, a specific reference to Corpus Juris makes available all cases back to 1658.

Each title is preceded by a complete section analysis, greatly simplified to facilitate research. Where the scope of any section is such as to require it, a more minute analysis is found thereunder in its appropriate place within the title (see Abatement and Revival, Section 112). The convenience of this method—an innovation in encyclopedic writing—must immediately commend itself.

A concise black-letter summary, indicative of its scope, precedes the full treatment or statement of the law under each section. These introductory summaries, concise and free from interlineation of authorities, have proven of great convenience and value in legal research.

An index is found in the back of each volume covering the titles contained therein, thus providing another convenient means of ready access to the text and notes.

Corpus Juris Secundum is kept to date by means of annual cumulative pocket parts for each volume. This feature of supplementation which has proved so successful in modern digests and statutes conveniently, and with certainty, keeps each title constantly to date through current cases and new precedents.

Corpus Juris Secundum represents the combined product of the highest editorial talent and manufacturing skill. Its many excellent editorial features are fittingly accompanied by corresponding innovations and improvements in mechanical arrangement, typography, and design, which the publisher believes will commend themselves to the profession as representing a new standard in legal publications.

I. DEFINITION, NATURE, AND KINDS

§ 1. Definitions

A judgment may be broadly defined as the decision or sentence of the law given by a court or other tribunal as the result of proceedings instituted therein; in this sense a decision of any court is a judgment, including courts of equity, and in a criminal case a sentence is a judgment.

In its broadest sense a judgment is the decision or sentence of the law given by a court of justice or other competent tribunal as the result of proceedings instituted therein,[1] or the final consideration and determination of a court on matters submitted to it in an action or proceeding,[2] whether or not execution follows thereon.[3] More particularly it is a judicial determination that, on matters submitted to a court for decision, a legal duty or liability does or does not exist,[4] or that, with respect to a claim in suit, no cause of action exists or that no defense exists.[5]

In the broad sense here defined, a decision of any court is a judgment,[6] including courts of equity,[7] admiralty,[8] and probate.[9] The judgment of a court of equity or admiralty, however, as distinguished from the judgment of a court of common law, is generally known as a "decree."[10] In a criminal case a sentence is a judgment.[11] In a narrower sense the term "judgment" is limited to a decision of a court of law.[12]

Under codes. Under most codes of procedure, judgments are defined in substance as the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding.[13] Under codes abolishing the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, a decree is included in the code definition of a judgment, and the final determination of a cause is a judgment whether the relief granted is equitable or legal.[14] Indeed the terms "judgment" and "decree" are more or less synonymous and interchangeable in code practice.[15]

An "adjudication" is a judgment or the entry of a decree by a court with respect to the parties in a case.[16]

§ 2. General Nature

A judgment is a judicial act which settles the issues, fixes the rights and liabilities of the parties, and determines the proceeding, and it is regarded as the sentence of the law pronounced by the court on the action or question before it.

A judgment is the judicial act of a court[17] by which it accomplishes the purpose of its creation.[18] It is a judicial declaration by which the issues are settled[19] and the rights and liabilities of the parties are fixed as to the matters submitted for decision.[20] In other words, a judgment is the end of the law;[21] its rendition is the object for which jurisdiction is

Determination of judge

Fiat

A judgment is a fiat of a court, settling the rights of the parties, and, however unjust, erroneous, or illegal the settlement may be, the parties can claim under it only that which, by its terms, the judgment awards.—Lacaze v. Hardee, La. App., 7 So.2d 719, 724.

(2) Purpose of every judgment should be to limit litigation and clearly establish rights of parties as found by courts.—Cameron v. Feather River Forest Homes, 33 P.2d 884, 139 Cal.App. 373.

19. Tex.—Lewis v. Terrell, Civ.App., 154 S.W.2d 151, 153, error refused.

Opinion and adjudication

Judgment reciting in substance that court, considering proof and pleadings, was of opinion and so adjudged that defendant was indebted to plaintiff in certain sum with interest and costs was "judgment."—Bell Grocery Co. v. Booth, 61 S.W.2d 879, 250 Ky. 21.

conferred and exercised,[22] and it is the power by means of which a liability is enforced against the debtor's property.[23] A judicial judgment is not necessarily a judgment for money or thing enforceable by execution or other process; it may be a final and conclusive determination of a status, or a right, or a privilege, or the basis of action.[24] A judgment is neither an action nor a special proceeding, but is the determination of an action or proceeding.[25]

A judgment is the sentence of the law on the ultimate facts admitted by the pleadings or proved by the evidence.[26] It is not a resolve or decree of the court, but the sentence of the law pronounced by the court on the action or question before it.[27] It must be based solely on the legal rights of the litigants and not on the result of the litigation.[28]

A judgment constitutes the considered opinion of the court[29] and is a solemn record[30] and formal expression and evidence of the actual decision of a lawsuit.[31] The precedent or draft for judgment may not be treated as a judgment.[32]

Vested right of property. A judgment may constitute a vested right of property in the judgment creditor[33] within the protection of constitutional provisions discussed in Constitutional Law §§ 271–272.

§ 3. —— Entirety of Judgments

A judgment is an entirety.

It has generally been held to be the rule that a judgment must be treated as an entirety.[34] The effect of this rule as requiring that a judgment stand or fall as a whole, and the circumstances under which a judgment which is partially invalid may be enforced as far as it is valid, are discussed infra § 450.

§ 4. —— Distinguished from Decisions and Findings

As a general rule, decisions, opinions, findings, or verdicts do not constitute a judgment or decree but merely form the basis on which the judgment is subsequently to be rendered.

As a general rule, the decisions, opinions, or findings of a court,[35] referee,[36] administrative board,[37] or committee[38] do not constitute a judgment or decree, but merely form the basis on which the judgment is subsequently to be rendered.[39] Under some statutes, however, the word "decision" is used as the equivalent of "judgment" and "decree,"[40] and is distinguished from the term "opinion" in that the latter term refers to a statement of reasons on which the decision or judgment rests.[41]

A verdict is not a judgment, but only the basis for a judgment, which may, or may not, be entered on it.[42] A finding is not a judgment any more than is the verdict of a jury.[43] Such findings or decision amount only to an order for judgment[44] and

§ 5. —— Distinguished from Rules and Orders

Judgments generally are distinguished from rules or orders in that a judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties ending the suit whereas a rule or order is an interlocutory determination of some subsidiary or collateral matter, not disposing of the merits.

As a general rule, judgments are to be distinguished from orders or rules; one does not include the other.[46] However, certain orders have sometimes been denominated as judgments,[47] and it has been held that the character of an instrument, whether a judgment or an order, is to be determined by its contents and substance, and not by its title.[48] As distinguished from a judgment, an order is the mandate or determination of the court on some subsidiary or collateral matter arising in an action, not disposing of the merits, but adjudicating a preliminary point or directing some step in the proceedings;[49] and the term is commonly defined in codes of procedure as every direction of a court or judge, made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment.[50] A judgment, on the other hand, is the determination of the court on the issue presented by the pleadings which ascertains and fixes absolutely and finally the rights of the parties in the particular suit with relation to the subject matter in litigation, and puts an end to the suit.[51] The distinguishing characteristic of a judgment is that it is final,[52] while that of an order, when it relates to proceeding in an action, is that it is interlocutory,[53] although there are so-called interlocutory judgments, as is discussed infra § 11, and final orders, as is discussed in the C.J.S. title Motions and Orders § 2, also 42 C.J. p 468 notes 65–74.

A decision sustaining or overruling a demurrer ordinarily is an order, not a judgment,[54] although there is also some authority to the contrary.[55] An order or rule ordinarily is not founded on the whole record in the case, but is granted on a special application to the court called a "motion;" the determination of such motion is an order, not a judgment.[56] A special proceeding regularly terminates in a final order, not a judgment,[57] although the final order in a special proceeding is in effect a judgment and is sometimes referred to as such.[58]

Order for judgment. An order merely directing or authorizing the entry of judgment in the case does not constitute a judgment; to have this effect it must be so worded as to express the final sentence of the court on the matters contained in the record and to end the case at once, without contemplating any further judicial action.[59] Orders for judgment, however, have sometimes been deemed sufficient as judgments.[60]

Order for an execution. An order of a judge to the clerk to issue execution for a specific sum with costs has been held equivalent to a judgment,[61] although there is also authority to the contrary.[62]

§ 6. —— Judgments as Contracts or Obligations

Although judgments are sometimes regarded as contracts or debts of record and as obligations enforceable by contractual remedies, they are not true contracts or debts in a strict sense, and are included within those terms as used in statutes only where such is the intent of the statutes.

Broadly speaking, a judgment is an obligation for the payment of money.[63] Under the classification of all obligations into two classes, namely, those arising ex contractu and those arising ex delicto, and the further division of obligations ex contractu into simple contracts, contracts under seal or specialties, and contracts of record, it has been usual to classify judgment obligations as contracts of record.[64] Judgments have been declared to be contracts,[65] and, likewise, judgments have been de-

Purport
An order for a judgment is not a judgment, because it does not purport of itself to determine the rights of the parties.—Ericson v. Steiner, 6 P.2d 298, 119 Cal.App. 305—33 C.J. p 1104 note 32.

An entry in the record, ordering that plaintiff recover judgment from defendant in the amount therein stated, was not a judgment, but merely an order for judgment.—Illinois Trust & Savings Bank v. Town of Roscoe, 194 N.W. 649, 46 S.D. 477.

Judgment nisi has no more effect on parties' rights than verdict, being only order for entry of effective judgment, absent intervening proceedings.—Hodgson v. Phippin, 150 A. 118, 159 Md. 97—33 C.J. p 1055 note 54 [a].

New obligation
A judgment is not a contract or an obligation of a contract but is a new obligation under which antecedent rights are to be enforced.—Tradesmens Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Floyd, 39 A.2d 728, 731, 156 Pa. Super. 141.

Recognition of obligation
Judgment is the recognition of the preëxistence of a debt or obligation.—Bailey v. Louisiana & N. W. R. Co., 105 So. 626, 159 La. 576—Holland v. Gross, La.App., 195 So. 828.

Whether recovered for tort or on contract, the judgment becomes a debt which defendant is under obligation to pay, and the law implies a promise or contract on his part to pay it.

Partition judgment from which parties did not appeal could be in-clared to be debts[66] of record,[67] or specialties.[68] It is only by a legal fiction, however, and for the purpose of enforcing the obligation by contractual remedies, that judgments can be considered as contracts.[69] Thus an action on a judgment is an action on a contract,[70] irrespective of the nature of the original transaction on which the judgment was founded,[71] and the same provisional remedies may be had as in an action on an express contract.[72]

On the other hand, the essential elements of every true contract, such as competent parties and assent, are often wanting in judgments which usually are rendered in invitum, and often against infants, lunatics, or married women.[73] Accordingly it has also been declared that judgments are not contracts[74] or debts[75] in the strict sense of these terms.

Withing meaning of constitutional and statutory provisions. The fact that a judgment is sometimes regarded as a contract is not conclusive on the question whether it is a contract within the meaning of that term as used in particular statutory or constitutional provisions, and in all such cases the intent of such provisions is determinative.[76] Accordingly, it has been held that a judgment is a contract within the meaning of statutes conferring[77] or limiting[78] the jurisdiction of a court in actions on contracts, prohibiting the assignment of choses in action not arising out of contract,[79] authorizing set-offs and counterclaims,[80] making joint contracts joint and several,[81] and prohibiting the issuance of process against the body in an action on a contract.[82] On the other hand, a judgment is not a contract or debt within statutes requiring actions on contracts to be brought in the name of the real party in interest,[83] or making trustees or stockhold-terpreted as contract between parties.—Frazier v. Hanlon Gasoline Co., Tex.Civ.App., 29 S.W.2d 461, error refused.

§ 7. —— Judgments as Assignments or Conveyances

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a judgment is not an assignment and ordinarily is not effectual to pass the title to land.

A judgment is not an assignment,[86] even when entered on confession,[87] although, by statute, judgments suffered under particular circumstances may operate as an assignment for the benefit of creditors.[88] A judgment is not effectual to pass the title to land,[89] apart from statutory provision to that effect,[90] unless it substantially undertakes to vest title, as by declaring that it shall operate as a deed of conveyance, in a case where the court has jurisdiction to affect the title to land by a judgment or decree operating in rem.[91]

§ 8. Classification and Kinds

Judgments have been classified with reference to the state of the pleadings at the time of pronouncement, and the proper style of the judgment may also depend on the form of the action.

Under common-law practice, judgments usually are classified with reference to the state of the pleadings at the time judgment is pronounced, under which classification they fall into several basic groups.[92] The proper style of the judgment may also depend on the form of the action, immemorial custom having prescribed the formula of words to be employed in the judgments rendered in certain classes of proceedings.[93]

The form of judgment granted on determination of issues of law or fact is discussed infra §§ 9, 10. Numerous particular kinds of judgments are defined infra this section, and there may be found elsewhere in other connections a consideration of judgments by confession, or judgments by cognovit actionem and judgments by confession relicta verificatione, discussed infra §§ 134–137, judgments on consent, offer, or admission, discussed infra §§ 173–186, judgments by default or nil dicit, discussed infra § 187, judgments of dismissal, discontinuance, nonsuit, or retraxit, discussed in Dismissal and Nonsuit §§ 1–5, judgments non obstante veredicto, or judgments notwithstanding verdict, discussed infra §§ 59–61, judgments nunc pro tunc, discussed infra §§ 117–121, and judgments on the pleadings, discussed in the C.J.S. title Pleading § 511, also 49 C. J. p 779 note 29–p 780 note 48.

Irregular or erroneous judgment. An irregular judgment is one entered contrary to the course of the court, that is, contrary to the method of procedure and practice allowed by law in some material respect.[94] An erroneous judgment is one rendered according to the course and practice of the court, but contrary to law.[95]

A judgment on the merits is one rendered after argument and investigation and when it is determined such party has a right, as distinct from a judgment rendered on some formal or merely technical fault or by default without trial.[96]

Judgment nihil capiat per breve or per billam is the form of judgment against plaintiff in an action either in bar or in abatement; literally, "that he take nothing by his writ or declaration."[97]

Judgment nisi. At common law, a judgment nisi was one entered on the return of the nisi prius record, which, according to the terms of the postea, was to become absolute unless otherwise ordered by the court within the first four days of the next succeeding term.[98]

Judgment of non pros. or non prosequitur is a judgment of the court on motion of defendant in a civil action in case plaintiff does not file his declaration or replication in due time.[99]

Judgment quod billa cassetur is the common-law form of judgment sustaining a plea in abatement where the proceeding is by bill, that is, by a capias instead of by original writ; literally, "that the bill be quashed."[1]

Judgment quod eat sine die is the old form of a judgment for defendant;[2] literally "that he go without day."[3]

Judgment quod recuperet is a judgment in favor of plaintiff rendered when he has prevailed on an issue in fact or an issue in law other than one arising on a dilatory plea.[4]

Judgment respondeat ouster is a form of judgment for plaintiff on an issue in law arising on a dilatory plea.[5] The judgment is that defendant answer over, and, since it is not a final judgment, the pleading is resumed and the action proceeds.[6]

A punitive judgment is one the purpose of which is to inflict a penalty or punishment as distinguishment from one granting a remedy.[7]

A self-executing judgment is a judgment that accomplishes by its mere entry the result sought, and requires no further exercise of the power of the court to accomplish its purpose.[8]

§ 9. —— Judgment on Issue of Law

A judgment on a demurrer to pleadings is on an issue of law and is the same as it would have been on an issue of fact between the parties, but a judgment sustaining or overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement is not of a final nature.

When the pleadings terminate in a demurrer on either side, an issue of law is presented, and a judgment on such demurrer is on an issue of law.[9] On demurrer to any of the pleadings which go to the action, the judgment for either party is the same as it would have been on an issue of fact joined on the same pleading, and found in favor of the same party.[10] At common law the judgment for plaintiff on a demurrer to any of the pleadings in chief is quod recuperet, that is, that he recover;[11] that for defendant is quod eat sine die, that is, that he go hence without day.[12] As is discussed in the C.J.S. title Pleading § 274, also 33 C.J. p 1060 notes 10–12, and 49 C.J. p 461 note 4–p 465 note 81, the judgment is final unless leave to amend or to plead over is given, but, since the granting of such leave is almost a matter of course, it is not now usual to enter final judgment on demurrer unless the party fails or refuses to amend or to plead over, as the case may be.

On demurrer to a plea in abatement, if the demurrer is sustained, the judgment is not final but is respondeat ouster, that is, that he answer over;[13] final judgment is rendered only on failure to plead further.[14] If the demurrer or other objection is overruled, and the dilatory plea is held sufficient in law, the judgment is that the writ or declaration be quashed,[15] but this rule of the common law has been changed by some statutes permitting plaintiff after overruling of his demurrer to take issue on the facts.[16]

§ 10. —— Judgment on Issue of Fact

Final judgment on an issue of fact, if for the plaintiff, is that he recover, but judgment for the defendant on a fact issue raised in a plea in abatement is merely that the writ or declaration be quashed.

The final judgment on an issue of fact, taken on the declaration, or a plea in bar, if for plaintiff, is quod recuperet, that is, that he recover;[17] if for defendant, the judgment is nihil capiat per breve or per billam, that is, that he take nothing by his declaration or writ.[18] Where an issue of fact on a plea in abatement is found in favor of defendant, the judgment must be cassetur breve or billa, that is, that the writ or declaration be quashed, as where a demurrer to such a plea is decided in his favor; the judgment cannot be nihil capiat, or on the merits, because the plea is not in bar of the action.[19]

Trial court, after sustaining plea in abatement on ground that suit had been prematurely brought, committed error in rendering judgments that plaintiff take nothing by the suit, since such judgments without restrictions as to future prejudice to relitigate the same subject matter would afford a basis for interposing a plea of "res judicata" should such suit be refiled in the future and proper judgment was one of dismissal which would preclude an adjudication on the merits.—Reed v. § 11. —— Final and Interlocutory Judgments

a. In general
b. When judgment becomes final

a. In General

A final judgment is one which disposes of the cause both as to the subject matter and the parties as far as the court has power to dispose of it, while an interlocutory judgment is one which reserves or leaves some further question or direction for future determination; but whether a judgment is final depends somewhat on the purpose for which, and the standpoint from which, it is being considered.

Judgments may generally be classified as either final or interlocutory.[21] In determining whether a judgment is "final," no hard and fast definition or test applicable to all situations can be given, since finality depends somewhat on the purpose for which, and the standpoint from which, the judgment is being considered, and it may be final for one purpose and not for another.[22] Generally, however, a final judgment is one which disposes of the cause both as to the subject matter and the parties as far as the court has power to dispose of it,[23] while an cause and the dismissal order is effective only as long as the cause of abatement continues to exist.—Zarsky v. Moss, Tex.Civ.App., 193 S.W. 2d 245.

Necessity of trial on facts

Disposition, on pleas in abatement, of claims based on negligence without a trial on the facts was error.—Rose v. Baker, 183 S.W.2d 438, 143 Tex. 438.

33 C.J. p 1060 note 21—49 C.J. p 244 note 13.

Liability established

The court's decision overruling defendant's plea in abatement on fact issue establishes defendant's liability and deprives it of trial on merits, so as to entitle plaintiff to final judgment, unless judge permits defendant to answer over by special order or action equivalent to such order.—Krinsky v. Stevens Coal Sales Co., 36 N.E.2d 411, 309 Mass. 528.

Different meanings

Although "final" is frequently used with "judgment" to distinguish from interlocutory orders or judgments in the same court, "final judgment" also describes a determination effective to conclude further proceedings in the same cause by appeal or otherwise, especially where time within which to act is limited to run from "final judgment".—Northwestern Wisconsin Elec. Co. v. Public Service Commission, 22 N.W.2d 472, 248 Wis. 479.

33 C.J. p 1061 note 30.

The general test for determining whether a judgment is "final" is that, when no issue is left for future consideration except fact of compliance or noncompliance with terms of the first decree, decree is final, but, where anything further in the nature of judicial action on the part of the court is essential to a final determination of the rights of the parties, the decree is "interlocutory".—Bakewell v. Bakewell, 130 P.2d 975, 978, 21 Cal.2d 224—Lyon v. Goss, 123 P.2d 11, 17, 19 Cal.2d 659.

Synonymous with "final determination"

"Final judgment" is synonymous with "final determination," which means the final settling of the rights of the parties to the action beyond all appeal.—Quarture v. Allegheny County, 14 A.2d 575, 578, 141 Pa. Super. 356.

Judgments held final

(1) Judgment expressly or by necessary implication disposing of all parties and issues is final.—Southern Pac. Co. v. Ulmer, Tex.Com.App., 286 S.W. 193—Duke v. Gilbreath, Tex. Civ.App., 2 S.W.2d 324, error dismissed—Adcock v. Shell, Tex.Civ. App., 273 S.W. 900.

(2) A judgment may be "final" whether it is based on a determination of a question of law or a question of fact.—McWilliams v. Blackard, C.C.A.Ark., 96 F.2d 43.

(3) Judgment may be final although it fails to award writ of execution for its enforcement.—Reed v. Bryant, Tex.Civ.App., 291 S.W. 605.

(4) Judgment requiring defendant to pay amount into court to await determination of conflicting claims in another court was, as between the parties, final.—Graham Refining Co. v. Graham Oil Syndicate, Tex.Civ. App., 262 S.W. 142.

(5) A judgment dismissing cause as to one defendant after giving peremptory direction to find for such defendant and rendering judgment for plaintiff against another defendant on verdict for plaintiff was final disposition of issues as to former defendant.—Newdiger v. Kansas City, 114 S.W.2d 1047, 342 Mo. 252.

(6) Where a plaintiff's alternative plea was not on trial and was effectually disposed of by award, on her principal cause of action, judgment predicated on ultimate issues raised by both pleading and evidence was a "final judgment."—Connor v. Buford, Tex.Civ.App., 142 S.W.2d 592, error dismissed, judgment correct.

final determination of the rights of the parties, as discussed supra § 1, there can be no such thing as an interlocutory judgment in the strictly technical sense of the term; such interlocutory judgments are in fact interlocutory orders.[25] The term "interlocutory judgment" is, however, a convenient one to indicate the determination of steps or proceedings in a cause preliminary to final judgment, and in such sense the term is in constant and general use even in code states.[26] In determining whether a judgment is interlocutory or final, it should be construed in accordance with the conduct of the parties and the intention of the court gathered from the language of the judgment or decree.[27]

A judgment may be final although it does not determine the rights of the parties, if it ends the particular suit,[28] such as a judgment of dismissal, nonsuit,[29] or discontinuance,[30] or a judgment abating an action.[31] Also a judgment may be final although further directions may be necessary to carry it into effect,[32] although further proceedings remain to be taken in court to make the judgment effective,[33] or

Proceedings incidental to execution

(1) Decree may be partly final and partly interlocutory; final as to determination of all issues, and inter-

although the court reserves the right to modify the judgment.[34] The finality of a judgment is not affected by the fact that it constitutes an erroneous decision as to the law or the facts.[35]

On the other hand, a judgment is not generally considered final where further judicial action is necessary in order fully and finally to settle the rights of the parties,[36] as where the judgment settles only some of several issues of law or fact,[37] or does not dispose of the case as to all the parties;[38] but judgments determining particular matters in controversy, and of such a nature that they could be immediately enforced and by their enforcement deprive the party against whom they were rendered of any benefit which he might obtain from an appeal at any subsequent stage of the proceedings, have been deemed final.[39] A judgment is not final which is to become effective only on the happening of a future event or contingency[40] or which is made subject to revision at a future specified date.[41]

locutory as to mode of execution.—Perry v. West Coast Bond & Mortgage Co., 29 P.2d 279, 136 Cal.App. 557.

(2) A judgment over against principal and in favor of surety on fidelity bond was "final", notwithstanding it was made contingent on payment by surety of primary judgment against it on the bond, since all litigated rights relating to matter involved were determined and further proceedings required in complete satisfaction of decree were merely incidental to its proper execution.—American Employers' Ins. Specific disposition unnecessary

It is not essential to the finality of a judgment that it in express terms specifically dispose of each issue, since the fact that judgment disposes of a particular issue may be inferred from other provisions thereof, provided such inference follows as a necessary implication.—Gamble v. Banneyer, 151 S.W.2d 586, 137 Tex. 7.

Where several distinct causes of action are united in the same suit, the rule that a judgment to be final must dispose of the entire case does not apply.—Shamburger v. Glenn, Tex.Civ.App., 255 S.W. 815—33 C.J. p 1063 note 38 [d].

Compliance with conditions

A judgment granting plaintiff an injunction, but which requires him to comply with certain conditions imposed within a certain number of days, and provides that, in the event of plaintiff's failure so to comply, the judgment shall be for defendants, is not a final decree.—Consumers' Oil & Refining Co. v. Bilby, 217 P. 484, 91 Okl. 282.

Judgment held not contingent

Agreed provisions in judgment for suspension and postponement of issuance of order of sale under judgment until judgment debtor's default in payment of any stipulated installment of judgment debt to court clerk did not render judgment indefinite, or prevent it from being "final judgment" after its proper entry on payment of first installment as there was no further contingency on happening of which court might properly be required to perform any further judicial function in connection with case.—Grayson v. Johnson, Tex.Civ.App., 181 S.W.2d 312.

of the entire case to the court,[43] or on submission for decision on the pleadings.[44] A judgment or decree by consent may constitute a final disposition of a cause.[45] Judgment upon demurrer to any of the pleadings in chief is generally final unless leave to amend or to plead over is given,[46] in which case the judgment is interlocutory.[47] A judgment or decree for an accounting is interlocutory in character.[48] The question whether a particular order or judgment is final or interlocutory most frequently arises as a question of appealability, and these cases are discussed in Appeal and Error §§ 94–108.

b. When Judgment Becomes Final

A judgment is generally considered final and enforceable as soon as it is entered, read, and signed in open court, but for some purposes it may not be final until a later time.

For most purposes a judgment will be considered final and enforceable by appropriate writ as soon as it is entered, read, and signed in open court,[49] notwithstanding a motion for new trial remains undisposed of,[50] that the judgment is still subject to appellate review,[51] or that an appeal is actually pending.[52] A judgment is not "final" for some purposes, however, merely because execution may be issued on it,[53] and it has been variously held that finality attaches to the judgment only at the end of the term of court at which it was entered,[54] or at the end of a specified period of time after the date of its rendition,[55] or after the time for filing motions to prevent entry of judgment has expired without such motions being filed, or, if filed, after they are determined.[56] It has also been held that a judgment becomes final only after expiration of the time allowed by law for appeal therefrom, or, if an appeal is perfected, after the judgment is upheld in the appellate court,[57] but this rule is inapplicable if the judgment is not subject to review.[58]

§ 12. —— Judgments in Rem and in Personam

A judgment in rem is an adjudication pronounced on the status of some particular subject matter, while a judgment in personam is in form and substance between the parties claiming the right in controversy and does not directly affect the status of the res.

Judgments, for certain purposes, are divided into three classes designated as "judgments in personam" or "personal judgments," "judgments in rem," and "judgments quasi in rem."[59] A judgment or decree in rem is an adjudication pronounced on the status of some particular subject matter by a tribunal having competent authority for that purpose.[60] It differs from a judgment or decree in personam in this, that the latter is in form as well as in substance between the parties claiming the right in controversy, and does not directly affect the status of the res, but only through the action of the parties.[61] Judgments quasi in rem are rendered in proceedings quasi in rem and affect not only title to the res, but likewise the right in and to it possessed by individuals.[62]

II. ESSENTIALS OF EXISTENCE, VALIDITY, AND REGULARITY OF JUDGMENT

A. IN GENERAL

§ 13. General Statement

It is essential to the validity of a judgment that it be based on, and be in conformity with, recognized principles and fundamentals of law.

It is essential to the validity of a judgment that it be based on, and be in conformity with, recognized principles and fundamentals of law.[63] Where statutory powers are conferred on a court of inferior jurisdiction, and the mode of executing those powers is prescribed, the course pointed out must be substantially pursued, or the judgments of the Judgment obtained at variance with practice of court or contrary to well recognized principles and fundamentals of law must fall.—Stockyards Nat. Bank of South Omaha v. Bragg, 245 P. 966, 67 Utah 60.

Legality

The requirement that judgment to be valid must be one which the court could legally render means only that judgment must be one which could have been legally rendered on the issue shown by the pleadings and evidence.—Wall v. Superior Court of Yavapai County, 89 P.2d 624, 53 Ariz. 344.

Judgment rendered on proceeding improperly commenced is void.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Prever Lumber Co., 3 N.Y.S.2d 642, 167 Misc. 662, reversed on other grounds 6 N.Y.S.2d 28, 168 Misc. 358.

Unauthorized practice of law

Fact that judgments were procured by one engaged in the illegal practice of law did not render them void or voidable.—Bump v. Barnett, Iowa, 16 N.W.2d 579.

Upholding judgment

Sound public policy demands that judgments be upheld, where it can be done without violating any statute or settled principle of law.—Betsill v. Betsill, 196 S.E. 381, 187 S.C. 50.

court will be void.[64] A court should not render a decree which is void for constitutional reasons.[65]

§ 14. Statutory Provisions and What Law Governs

The validity, force, and effect of a judgment must be determined by the laws in force at the time and in the jurisdiction where it was rendered.

The validity, force, and effect of a judgment must be determined by the laws in force at the time[66] and in the state or country where it was rendered.[67]

§ 15. Duly Constituted Court

It is essential to the validity of a judgment that it be the sentence or adjudication of a duly constituted court or judicial tribunal.

It is essential to the validity of a judgment that it be the sentence or adjudication of a duly constituted court or judicial tribunal.[68] Judicial powers are sometimes conferred on tribunals not technically courts, and decisions by such tribunals, in the exercise of powers thus conferred, are considered as judgments.[69]

Judgments of de facto courts. On principles of public policy and for the security of rights it has been held that the regular judgments of a de facto court, whose existence has afterward been pronounced unconstitutional and void, are nevertheless valid and conclusive.[70]

Signing judgment in another county
(1) It has been held that a judgment rendered at the close of the evidence at the place of trial is not rendered invalid because it was signed out of the county where trial was had, under a statute providing that judgment or decree may be rendered by the judge at any place in his district.—Swanson v. being, therefore, coram non judice.[74] In some cases, however, it has been held that the fact that a term of court at which a judgment was rendered was held at a time other than that prescribed or authorized by law, while rendering the judgment erroneous and constituting ground for its reversal, does not render the judgment void;[75] but a contrary view has also been taken and a judgment rendered under such circumstances has been held to be void.[76] It has been held that the mere fact that the court was held at a place other than that directed by law will not of itself render the judgment void,[77] as where the court errs with respect to the location of the county seat.[78]

The proper time for the rendition and entry of judgment is discussed infra §§ 113–116.

b. At Chambers

Judgments should be rendered in open court and not in chambers.

Judgments should be rendered in open court and not in chambers,[79] and it has been held that judgments rendered in chambers are void,[80] in the absence of statutory or constitutional provisions authorizing such action at chambers.[81]

§ 17. —— Judges

a. In general
b. Disqualified judge
c. De facto judge
d. Special judge

a. In General

Illegal constitution of the court with respect to the judge or judges sitting renders the judgment absolutely void.

Illegal constitution of the court with respect to the judge or judges sitting, as distinguished from mere disqualification of one or more of such judges, renders the judgment absolutely void.[82]

b. Disqualified Judge

In the absence of a constitutional or statutory provision forbidding a disqualified judge from acting, a judgment rendered by a disqualified judge is voidable but not void.

Assistant county attorney
Where a county judge hearing secor prejudice,[87] any judgment by him in disregard of the prohibition is void. Consent of parties cannot confer jurisdiction in such cases,[88] unless the statute excepts from its prohibition cases where the parties consent, in which event consent of parties removes the disqualification to act,[89] as would be the case in the absence of any express prohibition to act.[90]

Where there is no absolute prohibition of his acting, the mere fact that the judge is disqualified does not render the judgment void, although it may render it voidable or reversible.[91] There is authority, however, holding that such judgments are void even in the absence of any statutory prohibition.[92]

While it has been held that, where several judges constitute the court, and one of them is disqualified, the judgment is void, if such disqualified judge participated in the hearing and determination,[93] there is also authority to the contrary.[94] In some cases it has been held that a disqualified judge may sit, pro forma, to make a quorum without invalidating the judgment, provided he does not otherwise participate in the proceedings;[95] but there is also authority to the contrary.[96] It has been held that two judges of an appellate court may render a valid judgment where the third judge has disqualified himself.[97]

Entry of formal judgment. A judge who is disqualified in a cause may enter a formal judgment directed by the appellate court, as in such case he is not required to exercise any judgment or discretion.[98]

c. De Facto Judge

A judgment rendered by a judge de facto is valid.

A judgment rendered by a judge de facto is valid.[99] On this principle, it has been held that a judgment rendered by a properly elected judge before the legal commencement of his term of office,[1] or after the expiration of his term,[2] is valid.

d. Special Judge

A judgment rendered by a special or substitute judge is valid where such a judge has been duly appointed and is authorized to act.

A judgment rendered by a special or substitute judge is valid where such a judge has been duly appointed and is authorized to act.[3] A judgment rendered by a special judge without proper authority is a nullity,[4] as where the appointment of a special judge was unauthorized.[5]

§ 18. Formal Proceedings

It is essential to the existence and validity of a judgment that the decision shall have been rendered in an action or proceeding before the court, in some form recognized and sanctioned by law.

It is essential to the existence and validity of a judgment that the decision shall have been rendered in an action or proceeding before the court,[6] in some form recognized and sanctioned by law.[7] The established modes of procedure must be followed,[8] although mere irregularities in the proceedings will not necessarily invalidate the judgment.[9] Accordingly, a judgment in a court of record must be based on definite and regular proceedings, which the record must disclose.[10] Likewise, as a general rule, before a valid judgment may be rendered against a defendant, he must be accorded an opportunity to be heard and present his defense,[11] and for this purpose, as discussed infra § 23, he must be given notice of the action or proceeding against him. It has been held that it is not essential to the validity of a judgment against a defendant in a civil action that he be present at any of the pro-

Other statements of rule

(1) Where a court acts without authority, its judgments are nullities.

N.M.—State v. Patten, 69 P.2d 931, 41 N.M. 395.

(2) Judgment is void where jurisdictional fact on which court's authority to act depends is absent.—Turk v. Turk, 18 S.W.2d 1003, 230 Ky. 191.

(3) "Without jurisdiction there is no validity or vitality to the judgcause except to dismiss the suit.[14] The validity of a judgment depends on the jurisdiction of the court before rendition, not on what may occur subsequently.[15] It has been stated, however, that it cannot be broadly asserted that a judgment is always a nullity if jurisdiction of some sort or other is wanting.[16]

Loss of jurisdiction. Jurisdiction which has once attached may be lost, and thereby the court may be deprived of the authority to make any further order or judgment,[17] as where the case has been taken up on appeal or error,[18] or duly removed from a state court to a federal court.[19] So jurisdiction may be lost and the authority of the court terminated by the expiration of the term without judgment rendered and without a proper continuance.[20]

Error in exercise of jurisdiction. Want of jurisdiction must be distinguished from error in the exercise of jurisdiction.[21] Where jurisdiction has once attached, mere errors or irregularities in the proceedings, however grave, although they may render the judgment erroneous and subject to be set aside in a proper proceeding for that purpose, will not render the judgment void,[22] and, as discussed infra § 449, until set aside it is valid and binding ment."—Carroll v. Berger, 150 N.E. 870, 872, 255 Mass. 132.

(5) A court cannot render valid judgment in case of which it has no potential jurisdiction.—Kirk v. Head, 152 S.W.2d 726, 137 Tex. 44.

(6) Where court is inherently without power to hear and determine, any judgment rendered is a mere nullity.—United Production Corporation v. Hughes, 152 S.W.2d 327, 137 Tex. 21.

Necessity of record

Operation and effect of void and voidable judgments see infra §§ 449–452.

Other statements of rule

(1) A judgment is not void, even though it may be erroneous if court had jurisdiction of person of defendant and of the subject matter of the suit and had power to render particular judgment which it entered, and such a judgment is valid until reversed.—People ex rel. Merrill v. Hazard, 196 N.E. 827, 361 Ill. 60.

(2) Where court of general jurisdiction has jurisdiction of subject matter and parties, no judgment it may render within the issues is void, however erroneous it may be.—City of Huntington v. Northern Indiana Power Co., 5 N.E.2d 889, 211 Ind. 502, dissenting opinion 6 N.E.2d 335, 211 Ind. 502.

(3) Where a court has jurisdiction over the person and the subject for all purposes. Error in the determination of questions of law or fact on which the court's jurisdiction in the particular case depends, the court having general jurisdiction of the cause and the person, is error in the exercise of jurisdiction.[23]

b. Jurisdiction of Person

A judgment in personam is void unless the court has jurisdiction of the persons involved.

A judgment in personam is void unless the court has jurisdiction of the persons involved.[24] The matter, no error in the exercise of such jurisdiction can make the judgment void even if there is a fundamental error of law appearing on the face of the record and such judgment is valid until avoided.—Mahaffa v. Mahaffa, 298 N.W. 916, 230 Iowa 679.

(4) A judgment is never void for error, provided the court rendering it had jurisdiction over the person of the defendant and the subject matter of the action.—Sheridan v. Sheridan, 4 N.W.2d 735, 213 Minn. 24.

Property rights

Where a court in the exercise of its jurisdiction enters a decree affecting property rights contrary to statute, the court is guilty of error of judgment, but such error does not render the decree void, nor does the fact that the error may appear on the face of the decree itself indicate its nullity.—In re Gardiner's Estate, 114 P.2d 643, 45 Cal.App.2d 559.

(3) It is essential to the efficacy of a judgment that the court have jurisdiction over the person.—Crabtree v. Ætna Life Ins. Co., 111 S.W. 2d 103, 341 Mo. 1173.

A judgment or portion thereof which attempts to settle rights of parties, over whom the court has no jurisdiction, is void as to such parties.—Barrett v. Board of Com'rs of Tulsa County, 90 P.2d 442, 185 Okl. 111.

court must have jurisdiction of plaintiff, or the person in whose favor it is rendered,[25] and also of defendant or the person against whom it is rendered.[26] Accordingly a judgment for or against one who for any reason is no longer before the court is wholly void.[27] Where a statute requires that certain actions shall be brought only in the district or county where defendant resides, it has been held that no jurisdiction of the person of defendant can be obtained in any district or county other than the one in which he resides, if defendant stands on his privilege, and a judgment against him in such other district or county is void for want of jurisdiction.[28]

Consent. Where the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter or cause of action, jurisdiction of the parties may be conferred by their consent, and in such cases the judgment is valid,[29] as where defendant waives an exemption from suit and consents to be sued,[30] or waives the privilege of being sued only in a particular place, county, or district, and consents to be sued in some other place, county, or district,[31] except where the rights of other persons would be prejudiced[32] or some rule of public policy requires that defendant shall be sued only in a designated place.[33]

c. Jurisdiction of Subject Matter or Cause of Action

A court cannot render a valid judgment unless it has jurisdiction over the subject matter of the litigation or the cause of action.

Even with full jurisdiction over the parties, no court can render a valid judgment unless it also has jurisdiction over the subject matter of the litigation or the cause of action.[34] A judgment is wholly void in cases where the subject matter is with-

d. Jurisdiction of Question Determined and Relief Granted

It is necessary to the validity of a judgment that the court should have jurisdiction of the question which its judgment assumes to decide, and jurisdiction to render a judgment for the particular remedy or relief which the judgment undertakes to grant.

In addition to jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter, it is necessary to the validity of a judgment that the court should have jurisdiction of

Court of general jurisdiction

Even a court of general jurisdiction has no power to render any judgment affecting persons or property, unless the particular judgment is brought within court's jurisdiction according to law.—Herb v. Pitcairn, 51 N.E.2d 277, 384 Ill. 237, reversed on other grounds 65 S.Ct. 954, 325 U.S. 77, 89 L.Ed. 1483, rehearing denied 65 S.Ct. 1188, 325 U. S. 893, 89 L.Ed. 2005. Opinion supplemented 64 N.E.2d 318, 392 Ill. 151.

Jurisdiction or power to render a particular judgment does not mean that the judgment rendered must be the one that should have been rendered, since the power or jurisdiction to decide carries with it the power or jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as to decide right.—U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., D.C.Okl., 24 F.Supp. 961, modified on other grounds, C.C.A., 106 F. 2d 804, reversed on other grounds 60 S.Ct. 653, 309 U.S. 506, 84 L.Ed. 894.

A decision, whether correct or wrong, made by a court in excess of its jurisdiction and power is void.—Spencer v. Franks, 195 A. 306, 173 Md. 73, 114 A.L.R. 263.

Manner forbidden by law

A judgment is void when the court proceeds without authority and in a manner forbidden by law with respect to matter being adjudicated, although it may have jurisdiction of parties and subject matter.—Wagner v. Peoples Building & Loan Ass'n, 167 S.W.2d 825, 292 Ky. 691—Jones v. Keen, 160 S.W.2d 164, 289 Ky. 779—Soper v. Foster, 51 S.W.2d 927, 244 Ky. 658.

§ 20. Matured Cause of Action

It is essential to the validity and regularity of a judgment that the demand whereon it is rendered shall have existed as a matured cause of action at the time the action was commenced.

It is essential to the validity and regularity of a judgment that the demand whereon it is rendered shall have existed as a matured cause of action at the time the action was commenced,[42] it being a general rule that a party must recover according to his legal rights at the commencement of the action.[43]

§ 21. Definitiveness

A judgment must be definitive.

A judgment must be definitive.[44] By this is meant that the decision itself must purport to decide finally the rights of the parties on the issue submitted, by specifically denying or granting the remedy sought by the action.[45] The converse of this proposition is also true, and every definitive determination of the rights of the parties in a proceeding before a competent tribunal is a judgment.[46]

§ 22. Reasons for Judgment

Ordinarily the reasons assigned by the court for the judgment rendered do not constitute a part of the judgment.

Although it has been said that every court should state on the record the legal grounds for its judgment,[47] the reasons assigned by the court for the judgment rendered do not constitute a part of the judgment.[48] Also if the judgment given is correct, it is immaterial whether the reasons adduced for giving such a judgment are correct.[49] Therefore a judgment or decree of the court controls the written opinion, and if they are at variance, the former prevails and determines the rights of the parties.[50]

When judgment roll on its face shows that court was without jurisdiction to render the particular judgment, its pronouncement is not in fact a judgment.—Hodson v. O'Keeffe, 229 P. 722, 71 Mont. 322.

Relief denied by law

A judgment granting relief which the law declares shall not be granted is void.—Moroney v. State ex rel. Southern Surety Co., 31 P.2d 926, 168 Okl. 69—State v. Armstrong, 13 P. 2d 198, 158 Okl. 290.

Special statutory powers

Where court is exercising special statutory powers, judgment in excess of statutory authority is void. —Ætna Casualty & Surety Co. of Hartford, Conn., v. Board of Sup'rs of Warren County, 168 S.E. 617, 160 Va. 11.

Transcending jurisdiction

Where court, after acquiring jurisdiction of a subject matter, transcends the limits of jurisdiction conferred, its judgment is void.—Flake v. Pretzel, 46 N.E.2d 375, 381 Ill. 498.

Death rendering decree timely

However, where testatrix devised realty in trust for benefit of husband during his life, the trust to terminate at husband's death, and husband who elected to take against the will died during pendency of defendants' appeal in husband's partition suit, realty was to be distributed by trustee as directed by will and decree, and order directing sale of property and that trustee distribute proceeds, if premature when entered, was held to be rendered timely by husband's death.—Flynn v. (2) The constitutional mandate that judges shall refer to law and adduce reasons on which definitive judgments are founded refers only to cases wherein real controversies or claims are decided or adjudicated and not to rule taken by wife for issuance of writ of fieri facias on judgment for amount of past-due and exigible alimony payments previously ordered by judgment in her suit for separation from bed and board.—Erdal v. If the judgment is one which the court had power to make on any ground, it is not void for want of jurisdiction because it is based or made on an improper ground.[51]

B. PROCESS, NOTICE, OR APPEARANCE

§ 23. Necessity

A valid judgment may be rendered against a defendant only where he has been given notice; and accordingly a judgment which is rendered without any notice to, or service of process on the defendant, and without his voluntarily appearing, is generally void for want of jurisdiction.

As a general rule, before a valid judgment may be rendered against a defendant, he must be accorded an opportunity to be heard, as discussed supra § 18, and for this purpose he must be given notice of the action or proceeding against him,[52] and this notice cannot constitutionally be dispensed with.[53] Accordingly a judgment which is rendered without any form of notice to, or service on, defendant is wholly void for want of jurisdiction,[54] unless he voluntarily appears, as discussed infra § 26, or

Process or notice as essential element of due process of law see Constitutional Law § 619.

Regardless of statutory provision with respect to issuance and service of process, no judgment, order, or decree is valid or binding on the party who has no notice of proceeding against him, since court must have jurisdiction of the person as well as of the subject matter and legislature is without power under constitution to dispense with notice either actual or constructive.—Maddox v. otherwise waives service of process,[55] or authorizes its acceptance;[56] and in some states this rule obtains by statutory provision.[57] However, the principle that a judgment obtained without service of process or voluntary appearance is void for lack of the court's jurisdiction does not apply to a decision on a collateral question, in a case where the parties are before the court;[58] and a failure to give notice to a party who has no concern or interest in the question decided does not affect the validity of the judgment.[59] A judgment which merely determines rights may be conclusive without the service of any process for its enforcement.[60]

a. In General

Formal process or notice served in the manner authorized or required by law is essential to support a judgment.

Formal process or notice served in the manner authorized or required by law is essential to support a judgment;[67] mere informal knowledge of the pendency of the action is not sufficient.[68] Thus a judgment is a mere nullity where service is made on a third person, who is not authorized to accept service, instead of on the actual defendant,[69] not-

Where intervention was filed after service of citation had been had on defendants and intervener did not cause citation to issue on its cause of action and defendants made no appearance, trial court was without jurisdiction to enter judgment for intervener against defendants.—State v. Corporation and stockholders

Where court had jurisdiction over subject matter of suit against corporation, and president of corporation was served with citation, stockholders were not "necessary parties" or "proper parties" to suit, and hence notice of suit and service on them was not required for rendition of valid judgment against corporation and stockholders.—Cruse v. Class representative

(1) Conditions under which defendants may be bound by judgments in "class suits," and in other cases in which doctrine of virtual representation is applied, constitute exceptions to statutory provisions making service of process a condition precedent to rendition of judgment.—Southern Ornamental Iron Works v. Morrow, Tex.Civ.App., 101 S.W.2d 336.

(2) However, the equitable doctrine of class representation does not permit a plaintiff to designate certain parties as representatives of other numerous members of a voluntary unincorporated association in order to obtain personal judgments as to members not properly served in action on alleged indebtedness of the association.—Webb & Martin v. Anderson-McGriff Hardware Co., 3 S.E.2d 382, 188 Ga. 291.

withstanding defendant had knowledge of the action and the attempted service.[70] The service must be accomplished by a method which gives defendant actual or constructive notice,[71] and is reasonably calculated to afford him the constitutional protection of due process of law.[72] It must apprise defendant of what is required of him and of the consequences which may follow if he neglects to defend the action.[73]

b. Personal Service

A personal judgment which is rendered without service of process on, or legal notice to, defendant is void in the absence of a voluntary appearance or waiver.

A personal judgment rendered against a defendant without service of process on him, or other sufficient legal notice to him, is without jurisdiction and void,[74] unless he has appeared voluntarily, as discussed infra § 26, or otherwise has waived personal service,[75] or has acknowledged service,[76] or has authorized its acceptance in his behalf.[77] In a proceeding in rem, or quasi in rem, a valid personal judgment cannot be rendered against defendant without personal service of process on him, in the absence of his voluntary appearance.[78]

Extent of jurisdiction of court in absence of personal service of process see Courts § 83 b (1).
Judgment in rem see infra § 908.

c. Substituted and Constructive Service; Publication

Ordinarily no valid personal judgment may be rendered against a defendant on whom the service of process was merely constructive or by publication and who did not appear.

It has been held that a state has the right to prescribe the mode of serving the process of its own courts on its own resident citizens, and that a judgment is valid, at least until set aside in a direct proceeding for that purpose, when based on such a form of citation as the law authorizes, although without actual notice to defendant.[79] However, a personal judgment on merely constructive service is not entitled to full faith and credit in the courts of another state, under the constitutional provision in that regard,[80] and the weight of authority is to the effect that no valid personal judgment may be rendered against a defendant on whom the service of process was merely constructive and who did not appear.[81]

d. Extraterritorial Service

Service of process on a nonresident beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the court from which the process issued will not support a personal judgment against the nonresident. It has also been held that extraterritorial service on a resident will not support a personal judgment against him.

It is a fundamental principle that a judgment affecting personal rights must be founded on service of process, within the territorial jurisdiction of the court on the party to be affected.[82] Accordingly, a valid personal judgment cannot be rendered against a nonresident based on process served on him beyond the limits of the state from whose courts the process issued,[83] and such a judgment cannot be Judgment rendered on substituted or constructive service is as conclusive on residents of state not residents of county of suit as one rendered on personal service.—Werner v. W. H. Shons Co., 173 N.E. 486, 341 Ill. 473.

Compliance with statute

Where jurisdiction is obtained by a prescribed form of constructive notice, the statutory conditions on which the service depends must be strictly construed, and unless statute has been complied with court has no jurisdiction to render judgment.—Pinon v. Pollard, 158 P.2d 254, 69 Cal.App.2d 129.

authorized constitutionally even by express statute.[84] However, such service may be sufficient to support a judgment in rem, or quasi in rem, as discussed infra §§ 908, 911. Although there is authority to the contrary,[85] it has been held that extraterritorial service on a resident of the state will not support a personal judgment,[86] and that, in the absence of statute, a personal judgment is void, even where it is based on the service of process within the state, but beyond the limits of the county or district, which comprise the territorial jurisdiction of the court.[87]

b. Nonresidents

A valid personal judgment may be rendered against a nonresident only where he is brought within the jurisdiction of the court by the service of process or notice on him within its territorial jurisdiction, or by his voluntarily appearing and submitting to its jurisdiction. Mere constructive or substituted service is not sufficient.

Extraterritorial service as insufficient see supra subdivision d of this section.

Joint defendants see infra § 33.

Jurisdiction of nonresidents generally see Courts §§ 83–87.

A state has power to provide for notice of actions against nonresidents found within its borders in such manner as it may see fit and to render personal judgments against them based thereon, provided method employed gives reasonable notice and affords fair opportunity to be heard before issues are decided.—Taplin v. Atwater, 8 N.E.2d 786, 297 Mass. 302.

Sufficiency of service

A nonresident defendant who is served in person in commonwealth with notice of pendency of action warning defendant to appear and show cause why judgment should not be rendered against him is a party to action so that a binding personal judgment may be rendered against him, since notice itself is "process" within statute permitting personal action to be maintained against nonresident who has been served with process in commonwealth.—Taplin v. Atwater, 8 N.E.2d 786, 297 Mass. 302.

Constructive or substituted service alone, will not support a personal judgment against a nonresident,[95] unless he can be deemed to have assented to such mode of service.[96] A statute purporting to authorize a judgment against nonresidents on constructive or extraterritorial service has been held to that extent unconstitutional and void.[97] However, it has been held that constructive service, as by publication, will give the court such jurisdiction over a nonresident that its judgment, although not enforceable beyond the state, may be satisfied out of any property of defendant found within the state,[98] and within the jurisdiction of the court,[99] and to that extent he is bound by the judgment, provided all the precedent proceedings relating to such service strictly conform to the law.[1] Nevertheless, the generally prevailing rule is that a personal judgment against a nonresident rendered on constructive service is void for all purposes, even within the state where it has been rendered,[2] unless defendant appears,[3] or unless specific property within the state has been attached, and thus subjected to the jurisdiction of the court.[4] Where neither person nor property of a nonresident is found within the state, a judgment with respect to the rights or obligations of the nonresident is without jurisdiction and wholly void.[5]

f. Attachment and Garnishment

A valid judgment in personam may be rendered against a defendant in an action begun by attachment or garnishment only where he has been personally served with process within the territorial jurisdiction of the court or has voluntarily appeared and submitted to its jurisdiction.

Where jurisdiction of an action is acquired by attachment or garnishment of defendant's property or credits, although the property or credits so attached or garnished may be subjected to, and bound by, a judgment rendered in such action, as a judgment in rem, or quasi in rem, as discussed infra §§ 908, 911, a valid general judgment in personam may be rendered against defendant only where he has been personally served with process,[6] or where he voluntarily appears in the action and thus subjects himself to the jurisdiction of the court,[7] as where he files a forthcoming or replevy bond.[8] Under some statutes, if defendant is about to remove the property from the state with the intent to hinder or delay creditors, and all the parties are before the court, a personal judgment may be rendered against him without the issuance of new process.[9]

Nonresidents. The same rules apply where defendant in such an action is a nonresident; a valid personal judgment may be rendered against him only where he has been personally served with process, within the jurisdiction of the court,[10] or has voluntarily appeared and submitted to the jurisdiction of the court,[11] or acknowledges service of the writ and waives the benefit of the statutes respecting absent defendants;[12] and, in the absence of such service or appearance, a judgment although expressed in general terms will be effective only against the property so attached, as discussed infra §§ 908, 911. It cannot be made the basis of further proceedings in personam against defendant.[13]

g. Defective Process

A judgment is void if it is based on a process which is so radically defective as to be equivalent to no process; but may be merely voidable if the defect is a mere irregularity which does not prevent the process from constituting legal notice to defendant.

A judgment is void where it is based on process which is so radically defective as to be equivalent to no process,[14] and this rule applies with respect to such a defect in the issuance of an alias or pluries writ.[15] A defective process, however, may be sufficient to constitute legal notice and support the judgment,[16] and if the process, although imperfect or irregular in some particulars, is sufficiently complete to constitute a legal notice to defendant, and to inform him of the essential facts he is entitled to know, the consequent judgment is not void,[17] par-

Judgment not "personal"

In action on note and open account accompanied by an attachment of land of nonresident defendant, judgment ordering sale of the attached property and appropriation of the proceeds to payment of the debt sued on was not erroneous as a "personal judgment" against the nonresident.—Hall v. Bradley, 160 S.W.2d 641, 290 Ky. 130.

Where garnishment is filed against resident garnishee, the court acquires jurisdiction over the garnishee and the nonresident defendant to the extent of the value of the property in the hands of the garnishee, and the court may then proceed to a trial of the issues, and if court finds that the garnishee is not indebted to defendant, power of the court further to proceed against defendant is ended.—Colby v. ticularly where defendant has waived such defects in the process.[18] Although there is also authority to the contrary,[19] it has been held that the omission of a proper seal from the process, or the use of an improper seal, merely renders the judgment defective, and not void,[20] particularly where service has been accepted and defendant has voluntarily appeared.[21]

Designation of parties. Process which is radically defective with respect to the designation of the names of the parties,[22] either plaintiff[23] or defendant,[24] will not support a judgment. On the other hand, the validity of the judgment is not affected by an inaccuracy in the designation of a party in the process if the real party intended is not misled thereby.[25] With regard to misnomer, it has been held that if process is really served on the person intended to be sued, although a wrong name is given him in the writ and return, and he suffers a default, or omits to plead the misnomer in abatement, he is bound by the judgment rendered against him.[26] A similar rule applies in the case of a misnomer of plaintiff.[27]

h. Defective Service

A judgment based on a service of process which is so defective as to amount to no service at all, has been held void. If, however, the service, although defective, is sufficient to give the defendant notice of the action or proceeding, a judgment based thereon has been held merely voidable.

Where the service of process on a defendant is so defective as to amount to no service at all, a judgment based thereon has been held to be void,[28] notwithstanding he had knowledge of the suit.[29] A judgment against defendant is void, in the absence of appearance, where it is based on the service of process on another than defendant, the person named in the process,[30] although the person served bears the same name.[31] A judgment has also been held void where the service of process on a nonresident, within the jurisdiction of the court, was obtained by fraud, as where he was induced by fraud to come within the jurisdiction of the court, where he was served with process.[32] A judgment is also void where process directed to the sheriff of one county was served by the sheriff of another county.[33]

A defective service, however, may be sufficient to constitute legal notice and support a judgment.[34] If the service is merely irregular, but actually gives defendant notice of the action or proceeding, a judgment based thereon has been held not void, but at most merely voidable,[35] as where there is a mere defect or irregularity as to the time of service[36] or in failing to serve a copy of the complaint;[37] and, moreover, the judgment is not even voidable if the defect or irregularity has been waived.[38]

Substituted or constructive service. In accordance with the rule requiring the statutory provisions relating to substituted or constructive service of process to be strictly applied, unless defendant has appeared or pleaded in the case[39] a judgment has been held void where it is based on substituted or constructive service, or service by publication, which is not made in strict compliance with the essential statutory requirements relating thereto,[40] provided, under some statutes, the failure to com-

Under unconstitutional statute

Service of summons on alleged resident agent of nonresident individual would not warrant rendition of judgment against the individual as such, where the statute authorizing service on agent of nonresident individuals engaged in business within the state is unconstitutional. —Jones v. Fuller, 134 S.W.2d 240, 280 Ky. 671.

Defects held fatal

(1) Service by publication when defendants were residents of state at date of service and their residence known to plaintiff.—Perez v. E. P. Lipscomb & Co., Tex.Civ.App., 267 S.W. 748.

(2) Service by publication under order not based on affidavit for attachment, stating that defendant was nonresident, but solely on allegation or finding that she could not be summoned.—Haake v. Union Bank & Trust Co., Mo.App., 54 S.W.2d 459.

(3) Leaving summons at place which was not defendant's last and usual place of abode.—F. H. Hill Co. v. Dee, 189 N.E. 583, 286 Mass. 187.

(4) Leaving citation at house in which nonresident defendant had resided, but which was no longer his domicile.—Williams & Miller v. Jones, La.App., 180 So. 140.

(5) Service by mail.—Estok v. Estok, 157 A. 356, 102 Pa.Super. 604—Skrynski v. Zeroka, 98 Pa.Super. 469.

(6) Service on one not living at defendant's domicile.—Richardson v. Trustees' Loan & Guaranty Co., 132 So. 387, 15 La.App. 645.

(7) Service on director of corporation instead of on person named in statute.—State v. District Court of Seventh Judicial Dist. in and for Mineral County, 273 P. 659, 51 Nev. 206, followed in 273 P. 661, 51 Nev. 214, and rehearing denied 275 P. 1, 51 Nev. 330.

Improvidently made

The fact that affidavit supporting request for issuance of citation by publication on ground that defendant's residence was unknown had been improvidently made, if established, would not render judgment in the proceedings void.—Commercial Credit Corp. v. Smith, 137 S.W. 2d 363, 143 Tex. 612.

"Whereabouts" instead of "residence"

§ 25. Return and Proof of Service

A valid judgment ordinarily may be rendered only where due service of process is shown by a return or other proof.

Although the validity of a judgment rests on the service of process rather than on the return, which is simply evidence in respect of the process,[46] a proper return, showing that process has been duly served, is ordinarily necessary in order that a valid judgment may be rendered.[47] Accordingly a judgment has been held void where the return or other proof is so faulty or defective as not to show a legal service of process,[48] although mere irregularities in the return or proof will not vitiate the judgment.[49] If the nonservice of process appears on the face of the papers or is discernible from an inspection of the record, the judgment may be treated as a nullity,[50] and it has been held that the judgment is void whether such lack of jurisdiction appears on the face of the record or is shown aliunde.[51]

§ 26. Appearance

A judgment based on the voluntary general appearance by or on behalf of the defendant is valid.

A voluntary general appearance in an action is a waiver of a want of process, or of any defects in the process or its service, or return, and gives the court full jurisdiction over his person, as discussed in Appearances § 17, and accordingly, although a defendant has not received any notice, or proper process or service thereof, a judgment in personam against him is valid and binding if a general appearance has been entered by him or on his behalf.[52] However, a judgment in personam known, instead of the word "residence," which is used in the statute, is a mere irregularity which will not render an attachment judgment void. —Fisher v. Jordan, C.C.A.Tex., 116 F. 2d 183, certiorari denied Jordan v. Fisher, 61 S.Ct. 734, 312 U.S. 697, 85 L.Ed. 1132.

"The citation itself is the important legal fact upon which the validity of the judgment rests, while the return is simply evidence in respect to that fact. The citation in a case must not be confounded with the sheriff's return, which recites his own actions in the matter of the service thereof. The citation may be good, though the return for some reason be irregular; while the return may be perfect in its recitals, yet the citation be null."—Adler v. A deputy sheriff's individual return to a writ of summons directed to his superior, is void, and a judgment predicated thereon is likewise null and void.—Stuckert v. Thompson, 164 S.W. 692, 181 Mo.App. 518.

Inability to find citation

Proof that attorney was unable to find original citation in clerk's office insufficiently supported allegation that judgment was void for want of legal citation.—Thompson-Ritchie Grocery Co. v. Cary, 135 So. 707, 17 La.App. 270.

Publication

Nonresident defendants, whose post office addresses were not shown by proof of publication of notices to them, were not in court, which had no power to render judgment or apply testimony against them.—Sellers v. Powell, 152 So. 492, 168 Miss. 682.

Substituted service

A return of process disclosing substituted service is insufficient to confer jurisdiction over person of defendant unless return affirmatively shows, under strict construction and unaided by reference to statute, compliance with all essential requirements of statute authorizing such service.

Irregularities not affecting judgment

(1) Failure to file affidavit of mailing notice to defendant served by publication, prior to rendition of judgment.—Young v. Campbell, 16 P.2d 65, 160 Okl. 265.

(2) Failure to file proof of service on defendant outside state until entry of judgment.—Winter v. Winter, 175 N.E. 533, 256 N.Y. 113.

against defendant is not validated by his special appearance for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the court by taking advantage of a failure of notice or defective service,[53] or for some other special purpose.[54]

By attorney. An appearance for defendant by his authorized attorney is sufficient to support a judgment against defendant.[55] If, however, the appearance was in fact unauthorized, a judgment based thereon has been held voidable,[56] and according to some decisions the judgment is wholly void[57] and subject to collateral attack, as discussed infra § 424. It has been held that a judgment rendered on the appearance of an attorney, who has acted without authority, is regular and valid,[58] the sole remedy being an action for damages against the attorney, as discussed in Attorney and Client § 147. If there was due service of process sufficient to support the judgment, as discussed supra § 24, the validity of the judgment is not affected by lack of authority of the attorney who appeared and made defense.[59]

Appearance by plaintiff. As a rule, if plaintiff fails or refuses to appear and present his case, the court may dismiss the action for want of prosecution, as explained in Dismissal and Nonsuit § 65 a,

Neither void nor voidable

but it can render no judgment against plaintiff[60] unless defendant has filed a cross action or requested affirmative relief.[61] On the other hand, if plaintiff appears and answers a cross action, a judgment may be entered thereon, although defendant did not serve him with notice of the cross action.[62]

C. PARTIES

§ 27. In General

Parties whose rights are determined are essential to a judgment.

An essential element, implied in all the definitions of a judgment which have been given, is that there must be parties whose rights are determined by the adjudication.[63] A valid judgment cannot be rendered where there is a want of necessary parties,[64] and a court cannot properly adjudicate matters involved in a suit when necessary and indispensable parties to the proceedings are not before it.[65] The absence of persons necessary to a complete settlement of the entire controversy, however, will not prevent the rendition of a valid judgment where their interests are so separable that a judgment may be rendered between the parties before the court without affecting the rights of persons who are not parties.[66] A judgment which is a mere negation of plaintiff's asserted claim is not erroneous for want of necessary parties.[67]

In the case of ex parte proceedings there are parties on only one side, as discussed in Ex 32 C.J.S. p 1145 note 75–p 1146 note 80. In the case of proceedings in rem, the parties on one side, at least, consist merely in the personification of a res, but the determinations in this class of cases are nevertheless judgments, as considered infra § 907.

To enable a judgment to be rendered the litigants must have the capacity to stand in judgment.[68] The

Proper procedure
The court should require the absent persons to be made parties to the proceeding or dismiss it without prejudice.—White v. Walker, 10 S.W.2d 1071, 226 Ky. 326.

Sum held by stranger
The district court erred in including in amount of money judgment sum shown by parties' stipulation to be held in judgment debtor's name by corporation not party to suit wherein judgment was rendered.—O'Meara v. Williams, Tex.Civ.App., 137 S.W.2d 66, error dismissed, judgment correct.

67. Proceeding to terminate rights under deed
A judgment in an administrator's suit to terminate defendant's rights under a deed from his intestate is not erroneous for want of necessary parties because intestate's heirs were not parties to the suit, where it is a mere negation of plaintiff's asserted claim.—Jones v. Imprisonment of defendant pending civil suit Where, pending a civil cause, defendant is arrested and confined in jail by virtue of a warrant issued for a criminal offense at the instance of a third person not in collusion with, or instigated by, plaintiff, plaintiff is entitled to proceed with his cause to judgment, and such judgment will not be set aside as irregular.—Peterson v. C. A. Mar-rules governing judgments with respect to persons under a disability are discussed in Husband and Wife §§ 447–457, Infants §§ 120–124, and Insane Persons § 151. Also the rules applicable to judgments relative to persons whose personality is or has been suspended for juristic purposes are considered in titles wherein the law relative to such persons is treated, such as Bankruptcy §§ 489–491, Convicts § 7, Insolvency § 17 a (2), and Slaves § 7, also 58 C.J. p 758 note 59; and in titles discussing particular kinds or classes of actions and proceedings are considered the rules particularly applicable to parties to judgments or decrees in such actions or proceedings.

§ 28. Judgment for or against One Not a Party

A judgment can be rendered only for or against a party to the action or proceeding and not for or against one not a party: the rights and liabilities of persons not parties cannot be adjudicated.

In general a judgment can be taken only for or against a party to the action or proceeding.[69] It cannot properly be rendered for or against one who is not a party thereto,[70] or against one who is not

(2) Judgment against alleged ward on cross petition in proceeding brought by alleged guardian acting under wholly void court order is erroneous.—Ruckert v. Moore, 295 S. W. 794, 317 Mo. 228.

(3) Other cases see 33 C.J. p 1106 note 58 [e].

Judgment for plaintiff as trustee for one not a party to the action is erroneous.—Rush v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corporation, 31 N.Y.S.2d 550, 263 App.Div. 69, appeal denied 32 N.Y.S.2d 1016, 263 App.Div. 868, motion denied 41 N.E.2d 173, 287 N.Y. 849.

Individual sued in representative capacity

In suit against state superintendent of insurance, to recover a fund in his possession officially, in which the superintendent as an individual defendant was stricken out, the jurisdiction of the court is limited to the res, and it has no power to charge defendant with interest beyond what he actually received.—Porter v. Beha, D.C.N.Y., 8 F.2d 65, affirmed, C.C.A., 12 F.2d 513.

Unknown or unnamed parties

Law court cannot enter judgment for unknown and unnamed parties, nor has it ancillary jurisdiction to subject to the jurisdiction of the court.[71] A judgment so given is void in so far as it concerns the person improperly included in it,[72] whether or not such person is sui juris or under disability,[73] and, according to some authorities, is a mere nullity as to all the parties to it,[74] although other cases hold that it is not void as to those who were actually parties to the suit.[75] A judgment for one not formally a party has been held proper, however, where the case was tried and the parties acted on the understanding that such person was a party.[76] It has been held that mere service of process on a stranger to the proceedings will not support a judgment against him.[77]

Where he is not a party to the action, judgment cannot properly be rendered for or against an assignor,[78] an employee in an arbitration proceeding between his employer and labor union,[79] an insurance company in an action against the state superintendent of insurance in whose hands it has been placed for liquidation,[80] an insurer of defendant, even though insurer's attorney took over the defense and participated in the trial as fully as though insurer had been a party,[81] an officer of a defendant county,[82] an officer, agent, representative, or legal assign of a defendant corporation,[83] a party's attorney,[84] a witness,[85] or a member of a class.[86] However, there is authority which holds that, in a rep-determine the parties entitled to the benefit of such a judgment.—McNary v. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, D.C.Ohio, 6 F.Supp. 616.

Judgment held not in favor of one not a party

Judgment that, as between plaintiff and defendant, plaintiff is liable for payment of note to bank is not a judgment against plaintiff in favor of the bank, which was not a party to the action.—Nants v. Doherty, 262 S.W. 979, 203 Ky. 596.

Ohio.—Cahill v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 175 N.E. 39, 37 Ohio App. 444.

Where plaintiff not in court

Judgment for member

(1) In representative action on behalf of all similarly situated, only those named as plaintiffs and who enter the action before judgment may share in recovery.—Atkins v. Trowbridge, 148 N.Y.S. 181, 162 App. Div. 629—Hendry v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 300 N.Y.S. 741, 165 Misc. 349, modified on other grounds 8 N.Y.S.2d 164, 255 App.Div. 497, affirmed 21 N.E.2d 515, 280 N.Y. 740.

(2) In class suit under Fair Labor Standards Act by employee as representative of class of employees to which he belongs, no judgment could be entered in favor of any employee against employer for any specific sum of money unless such employee was either a party to the suit, or had expressly designated some one to represent him in the suit, or had intervened in the suit.—Brooks v. Southern Dairies, D.C. Fla., 38 F.Supp. 588.

Judgment against member

(1) The equitable doctrine of class representation does not permit a plaintiff to designate certain parties as representatives of other numerous members of a voluntary unincorporated association in order to obtain personal judgments as to members not named.—Webb & Martin v. Anderson-McGriff Hardware Co., 3 S.E.2d 882, 188 Ga. 291.

resentative or class suit, where those joined as parties fairly represent those not joined, and their interests are the same, a judgment entered as in a class suit will be binding on all members of the class.[87]

In general the rights and liabilities of persons not parties to the action cannot be adjudicated therein,[88] since a court should not adjudicate the rights or liabilities of a person unless he is actually or constructively before it.[89] Title to property of one not a party may not be determined,[90] or a lien established and foreclosed against one not a party,[91] or the right to the proceeds of taxes levied to pay bonds determined in a suit to which bondholders are not parties,[92] or a contract with one not a party

(2) In bondholder's suit to enforce trust and alleged lien against state and numerous owners of lands, where such owners were designated as a class but not actually made parties, the court had no jurisdiction to enter decree against them or their lands.—State v. Woodruff, 150 So. 760, 170 Miss. 744.

87. Ill.—Newberry Library v. Board of Education of City of Chicago, 55 N.E.2d 147, 387 Ill. 85.

Persons bound by judgment by reason of privity or representation, although not formal parties, may be subjected to the judgment by rule.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schmidt, Ky., 20 S.Ct. 620, 177 U.S. 230, 44 L.Ed. 747.

Administrators acting as plaintiffs

Where in suit by stockholders the recovery was purely representative, it was held immaterial that certain of the plaintiffs held only as administrators.—Stearns Coal & Lumber Co. v. Van Winkle, C.C.A.Ky., 221 F. 590, 137 C.C.A. 314, certiorari denied 36 S.Ct. 554, 241 U.S. 670, 60 L.Ed. 1230.

§ 29. Death of Party

a. In general
b. Joint parties

a. In General

Ordinarily a judgment rendered subsequent to a party's death is erroneous. If the party died prior to the commencement of the action the judgment is absolutely void, if he died subsequent to its institution the judgment is generally held to be voidable, but if he died after verdict or decision the judgment is generally held to be valid.

Ordinarily a judgment should not be entered for or against a party after his death;[3] and if the action is continued or revived thereafter the judgment should be for or against his representative.[4] A judgment for or against a person who was dead at the time the action was instituted is at least erroneous.[5] If the defendant was dead at the time the action was commenced the judgment will be absolutely void;[6] and like rule has been applied where one named as plaintiff died before commencement of the action,[7] although there is other authority which holds that a judgment rendered in an action begun after plaintiff's death is not void but voidable.[8]

Where the court has acquired jurisdiction of the subject matter and the person during the lifetime of a party, the prevailing rule is that a judgment rendered for or against him after his death, although erroneous and liable to be set aside, is not void but voidable;[9] but there is substantial authority to the effect that such a judgment is absolutely void,[10] even though the party died after trial.[11] If, however, plaintiff[12] or defendant[13] dies after verdict or decision it is generally held that a proper and valid judgment may be rendered on the verdict or decision. Also under statutes expressly so providing a valid judgment may properly be entered in cases where a party dies after verdict, decision, or report, or after an accepted offer to allow judgment to be taken.[14] Although such statutes have been held to be in derogation of the common law,[15] they have also been declared to be declaratory of the common law, which never allows a delay by the court to change the condition of a suit.[16] A judgment rendered subsequent to the death of a party after verdict or decision may properly be entered nunc pro tunc as of the date of the verdict or decision, as considered infra § 118; and in jurisdictions where a judgment rendered after the death of a party by a court which has acquired jurisdiction of the parties and subject matter is not void but voidable, a judgment entered as of the actual date when rendered, at a time subsequent to plaintiff's death after verdict or decision, is not void.[17] Under a statute authorizing a judgment subsequent to a party's death after verdict or decision if the court renders its opinion and directs judgment in plaintiff's favor prior to defendant's death it may, after defendant's death, order the findings filed nunc pro tunc as of the date of the opinion, as considered in the C.J.S. title Trial § 645, also 64 C.J. p 1271 note 78, and enter judgment against decedent on such findings;[18] or, if no findings are required because the case was submitted on an agreed statement of facts, the court may ren-

(2) It was never intended to allow a judgment to be entered against deceased which could not have been entered in his lifetime.—Nicholson v. McMullen, supra.

Actions to which applicable

(1) The statute applies generally to all ordinary civil actions, whether involving equitable or legal rights.—State v. Stratton, 19 S.W. 803, 110 Mo. 426.

(2) The statute applies only to actions not abating on death.—Grotsch v. Hassey, 231 N.Y.S. 469, 133 Misc. 373—34 C.J. p 76 note 67 [a] (1), (3).

der judgment after defendant's death where it was submitted prior thereto.[19]

A judgment entered nunc pro tunc after the death of plaintiff and at a time when a substitution of parties for decedent had not been made has been held void.[20] In some jurisdictions where defendant dies before judgment the court is without jurisdiction as to him until the action is revived and his representatives are brought before the court,[21] and in other jurisdictions service of notice on all persons interested in the estate of the deceased defendant is prerequisite to a valid judgment.[22]

A judgment erroneous because rendered for or against a dead person may be reversed on appeal if that fact appears on the record.[23] If such fact must be shown by evidence aliunde, the remedy is by writ of error coram nobis, or by motion or petition in the cause.[24] The right to impeach in a collateral proceeding a judgment rendered subsequent to the death of a party is considered infra § 419.

Terminated trust. A judgment cannot bestow on retiring trustees of a terminated testamentary trust continuing power to control and manage the real estate of the trust,[25] even though all the beneficiaries under the will acquiesced in or expressly consented thereto.[26]

b. Joint Parties

Whether or not a judgment for or against joint parties, rendered after the death of one of them, is void or voidable depends on the rule followed in the particular jurisdiction as to the effect of the death of a party before judgment, and on whether or not the judgment is an entirety.

Under the rule, considered infra § 33 b, that a judgment for or against several parties is an entirety and either good or bad as a whole, and where, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, the death of a party before judgment renders the judgment void, a judgment for or against several parties jointly after the death of one of them is void as to all of them;[27] but where such death renders the judgment merely erroneous and voidable, a judgment for or against several parties jointly after the death of one of them, while not void, is erroneous and voidable as to all of them.[28] On the other hand, in jurisdictions where a judgment for or against several parties is not necessarily good or bad as an entirety, considered infra § 33 b, the death of one of such parties before judgment will render the judgment void,[29] or merely erroneous and voidable,[30] as to such deceased party, according to the locally prevailing rule, considered supra subdivision a of this section; but it will not affect the validity or regularity of the judgment as to the other parties.[31]

In jurisdictions where judgment may be taken for or against one or more of several defendants, judgment may be taken against the surviving defendant or defendants in an action against several defendants, one or more of whom dies prior to judgment.[32] The rule that judgment may be rendered against a party who dies after verdict but before judgment has been applied where one of two joint parties die after verdict.[33] In an action by several plaintiffs, the death of a plaintiff whose cause of action dies with him does not abridge the court's right to enter judgment in favor of the surviving plaintiffs.[34] Plaintiff is not entitled to judgment against a defendant as to whom the venue was proper only during the time a codefendant, who died during the pendency of the action without its revival against his administrator, was a party to the action.[35]

§ 30. Joint Parties

Under the codes and practice acts the judgment may determine the ultimate rights of all parties.

Under various codes and practice acts the court, in rendering judgment, may determine the ultimate rights of all the parties to the controversy,[36] and may render as many judgments, joint, separate, and cross, as may be necessary to adjust the rights of the several parties.[37]

§ 31. —— Plaintiffs Generally

At common law where several plaintiffs join in an action all must recover or none; but under the various statutes and practice acts judgment is authorized in favor of such plaintiffs as show themselves entitled to recover, although others fail.

At common law, and in the absence of statute changing the rule, where several plaintiffs join in a common-law action, all must recover or none, and if only some of the plaintiffs have a right of action, the suit must fail as to all.[38] The rule applies to actions on obligations alleged to be due plaintiffs jointly,[39] and in some jurisdictions has been limited to actions in which plaintiffs assert a joint right or title.[40] It has been applied to actions ex contractu in which a joint obligation or indebtedness to all plaintiffs is alleged,[41] to actions for contribution,[42] and to actions to recover land in which a joint title is alleged in the plaintiffs,[43] such as actions in ejectment.[44] On the other hand, judgment has been permitted in favor of fewer than all the plaintiffs in actions founded on tort, as an action for conversion,[45] in proceedings to cancel a chattel mortgage,[46] and in ejectment where the plaintiff entitled to recover is trustee of his coplaintiffs[47] or where a plaintiff's right to recover is barred by the statute of limitations.[48]

Under the various codes and practice acts judgment is authorized in favor of any plaintiff who shows himself entitled, although the others may fail,[49] as where the claims of the several plaintiffs are distinct, although sufficiently united by a common interest to authorize their joinder in a single suit;[50] and, even though the coplaintiffs are entitled to share in the recovery, a judgment awarding the entire recovery to one plaintiff alone is not void.[51] The authorization for such a judgment has been held to apply in all actions, whether in law or equity,[52] and in actions ex contractu[53] and in ejectment.[54] In equity, the common-law rule has no application, and a decree may be rendered for one or more joint plaintiffs and against others, as justice and equity in the particular case may require, as discussed in Equity § 601.

A judgment against coplaintiffs is void as to a plaintiff over whom the court does not have jurisdiction;[55] but in jurisdictions where a judgment is not regarded as an entirety, which is either good or bad as to all, the invalidity of a judgment as to one of two or more coplaintiffs against whom it is rendered will not vitiate it as to the others.[56] Where an action should have been dismissed as to one of two defendants on plaintiff's motion therefor, it has been held that a judgment entered on the other defendant's cross bill cannot determine issues between plaintiff and the defendant as to whom the action should have been dismissed.[57]

Joint or several judgment; separate judgments. A judgment in favor of joint plaintiffs should be joint if their cause of action is joint;[58] but if their cause of action is several the judgment should be several.[59] Thus a joint recovery on separate, several, and independent causes of action in favor of separate plaintiffs is improper;[60] in such case a judgment which does not preserve the separate rights of each in the total recovery is illegal.[61] However, the failure to designate the amount awarded to each of the plaintiffs has been held not to be error where only one plaintiff's cause was actually tried and the judgment is for plaintiff, in the singular.[62] In some jurisdictions a judgment which does not dispose of the case as to all the plaintiffs is erroneous;[63] but under some statutes the common-law restriction against the rendition of more than one judgment in an action has been changed so as to permit the rendition of as many separate judgments as are necessary to adjust the rights of the several plaintiffs.[64]

§ 32. —— Relief as between Coplaintiffs

Under various statutes a judgment determining the ultimate rights of the plaintiffs as between themselves is authorized.

Under the statutes and practice acts in a number of jurisdictions the judgment may determine the ultimate rights of the plaintiffs as between themselves.[65]

§ 33. —— Defendants Generally

a. In general
b. Entirety of judgment
c. Process against joint defendants

a. In General

The common-law rule requiring judgment in an action against several defendants to be against all or none has generally been changed by statute so as to permit judgment against some or all of the defendants.

changing the rule, if several defendants are joined in an action recovery ordinarily must be for or against all or none,[66] at least in an action in which the liability asserted is joint.[67] In many states, however, under the codes and practice acts therein or authorized rules of court, judgment may be given for or against one or more of several defendants, and in an action against several defendants the court may in its discretion render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others whenever a several judgment is proper.[68] Such statutes were intended to create a common procedure for both actions ex contractu and ex delicto,[69] and to apply to all actions founded on contract the same rule with regard to the right of recovery against some of the defendants which prevails at common law in the case of actions founded on torts,[70] or, as some authorities say, to adopt the rule prevailing in equity as to joint defendants.[71]

Under such statutes the court possesses chancery powers and may adapt its judgment to the rights of the parties as found from the facts established from the evidence.[72] If a plaintiff sues two or more defendants on a liability alleged to be joint, or joint and several, he is no longer compelled to establish a joint cause of action against all, but a judgment may be taken against the party or parties shown to be liable, when the others are not liable,[73] and in favor of defendant or defendants found not liable.[74] Plaintiff is not required to elect before completion of the trial whether he will ask for a joint judgment against all the defendants sued or a several judgment against one of them.[75]

A statute which authorizes judgment against such defendants as are defaulted or on trial are found liable has been held not to enable the court, on sustaining a demurrer as to one defendant, to proceed to trial and enter judgment against the remaining defendants.[76] Since an amendment cannot be made which effects an entire change of parties defendant, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Parties §§ 72, 85, also 47 C.J. p 131 note 28, p 161 note 20–p 162 note 37, if plaintiff is not entitled to recover against the original defendant judgment cannot be had against a new defendant brought into the case, unless he consents thereto.[77]

Abatement as to some of defendants. In an action against several defendants on a joint obligation a judgment in abatement in favor of one of the defendants on his plea of privilege as to venue, applicable to himself alone, has been held to be erroneous.[78]

b. Entirety of Judgment

In some jurisdictions a judgment against several defendants is an entirety, and if erroneous or void as to any of them is equally so as to all; but in other jurisdictions the rule is otherwise.

According to some authorities a judgment against two or more defendants jointly is regarded as an entirety,[79] whether rendered in a contract or tort action,[80] so that, if it is irregular or erroneous[81] or void[82] as to any of the defendants, it is equally so as to all. According to other authorities, however, a judgment against two or more defendants is not regarded as an entirety,[83] and a judgment may be valid and enforceable as to one or some of defendants, although voidable or void as to others,[84] at least in actions ex delicto.[85] Decisions even within the same jurisdiction are sometimes in conflict as to the entirety of judgments.[86] In some of the decisions it has been stated that the common-law rule that judgments are entireties is effective only in exceptional cases,[87] that the rule has been relaxed in some cases in the interest of justice where error is found as to one party only,[88] and that the rule is not applicable to judgments in actions in rem.[89]

c. Process against Joint Defendants

(1) In general
(2) Resident and nonresident joint defendants
(3) Statutory joint judgment
(4) Statutory separate judgment

(1) In General

In an action against several defendants, only some of whom were duly served with process, judgment against all is void as to the defendants not served; and, unless the rule is changed by statute, it is void as to the others if the judgment is considered as an entirety. If judgment is rendered against only the defendants served with process, it is erroneous or voidable where the action is on a joint contract, unless the statutes provide otherwise.

In general, as discussed supra §§ 19, 23, a judgment against persons over whom the court has not acquired jurisdiction is void. Accordingly, if there are several defendants, all must be served with process or appear in the action in order to warrant a judgment against all;[90] and, where none was properly served with process or made an appearance in the action, a personal judgment against such defendants is void.[91] A judgment against all the defendants, some of whom were not served with process and did not appear in the action, is void as to the absent defendant or defendants,[92] and at common law and in the absence of statute changing the rule is at least erroneous and voidable as to all the defendants.[93] In jurisdictions where a judgment is considered as an entirety and if void as to one party is void as to all, discussed supra subdivision b of this section, such a judgment is absolutely void as to all.[94] However, in jurisdictions where judgments are not considered as an entirety, such a judgment is at most voidable and not void as to the defendants who were served with process or appeared;[95] and in some jurisdictions if the action is ex delicto the judgment is valid and binding against the defendants served with process.[96] Under the codes and practice acts in various jurisdictions the judgment is valid and binding against parties over whom the court had jurisdiction by proper service of process or appearance,[97] or at least it is an error or irregularity of which the defendants served cannot complain.[98]

At common law and in the absence of statute changing the rule, a judgment against only the defendants served with process or appearing is erroneous and voidable as to them in an action on a joint contract against several defendants, some of whom were not subjected to the jurisdiction of the court by due service of process or appearance,[99] it having been the rule under the early common law that, where several defendants were sued on a joint contract, plaintiff was not entitled to judgment against any of them, until all were served with process, or until those not served were prosecuted to outlawry.[1] Under some statutes the failure to obtain service of process on some of several defendants will not affect the validity of a judgment against the others in an action on a joint and several obligation;[2] and under others it has been held that in an action against several defendants on a joint obligation judgment may properly be taken against one, or fewer than all, where the other defendants were nonresidents not served with process.[3] A voluntary general appearance for defendants not served will confer jurisdiction and permit a judgment against all.[4] Statutes in derogation of the common law, and authorizing judgment jointly against all defendants on process served on only some of them, discussed infra subdivision c (3) of this section, or a several judgment against

Unauthorized appearance
Judgment against nonresident defendant on demurrer filed by other defendants and purporting to include him was void where he had not been served with process, had not voluntarily appeared or authorized any attorney to appear for him, and had not authorized any of codefendants or other persons to employ counsel for him.—Street v. Dexter, 77 P.2d 707, 182 Okl. 360.

only those served, discussed infra subdivision c (4) of this section, must be strictly construed and followed; judgment is authorized only in cases falling within the statute as thus construed.[5]

Construction of judgment. Where process is served only on some of the defendants, and judgment is taken against "defendants" without naming them, and without any appearance of those not served, the judgment will be understood to be only against those who were duly served.[6]

(2) Resident and Nonresident Joint Defendants

In the absence of a compliance with statutory requirements, a judgment against joint defendants, residents of different counties or districts, is void as to the nonresident defendants.

Under statutes authorizing the venue of actions against several defendants, who are properly joined as such, although residents of different counties, to be laid in the county where one of them resides or is summoned, discussed in the C.J.S. title Venue §§ 93–98, also 67 C.J. p 101 note 22–p 118 note 27, and permitting in such actions the issuance and service of process on the nonresident defendants, discussed in the C.J.S. title Process §§ 8, 32, also 50 C.J. p 451 notes 6–12, p 475 note 1–p 476 note 13, a judgment taken against a nonresident of the county of venue contrary to the provisions of the statute is void as to him;[7] but in jurisdictions where judgments are not considered as an entirety, discussed supra subdivision b of this section, it is not thereby made void as to parties who were properly served with process.[8] Thus a judgment against a defendant who was not summoned in the county of venue is void as to him where the resident and nonresident defendants were improperly joined in the action;[9] and it is likewise void, where a statute prohibits judgment in such case, if the action is discontinued or dismissed as to,[10] or judgment is not rendered against,[11] the defendant or defendants residing or served in the county of venue. If, however, the nonresident defendant appears and contests the court's jurisdiction over him, or otherwise enters his appearance, a judgment against him is at most erroneous or voidable.[12]

(3) Statutory Joint Judgment

Under various joint debtor acts a judgment in form against all the defendants may be rendered in an action on a joint obligation against several defendants, some of whom were not served with process, which is good as a personal judgment against the defendants served and enforceable against their separate property and the joint property of all, located within the state, but not against the individual property of those not served.

Under a class of statutes commonly known as "joint debtor acts,"[13] which have been sustained as essentially constitutional,[14] and which were enacted to supersede the necessity of proceeding to outlawry against one not found or brought into court,[15] it has been held that, where one or more defendants are sued on a joint obligation, and process is served on one or more but not on all defendants, plaintiff may proceed against those served, unless the court otherwise directs,[16] and, if successful, recover a judgment in form against all the defendants,[17] which is good as a personal judgment against defendants who were served, or who appeared, and is enforceable against their separate property,[18] and the joint property of them and the absent defendant[19] located within the state,[20] but not against the latter's individual property.[21]

Judgment under the statute is not authorized unless the obligation sued on is the joint[22] contractual[23] obligation of all defendants. A judgment against only the defendant or defendants served is erroneous.[24] Nonresident joint debtors are within the operation of the statute, and property within the state owned jointly by nonresident and resident defendants may be subject to the judgment,[25] but a judgment under the statute against a citizen of another state, as an absent joint debtor, is wholly void in every other state, and will not be enforced or given any effect.[26] Other similar statutes limited to particular classes of cases, such as actions on bills or notes, or other designated instruments, have been enacted from time to time in different jurisdictions.[27]

Such a judgment is not good and binding as a personal judgment against the absent defendant,[28] unless made so by the statute, in which event it may operate as a personal judgment within the state where rendered,[29] subject to the right of the absent defendant to show that he was not in fact a joint debtor, and that therefore the judgment against him was void for want of jurisdiction, being unauthorized by statute.[30] It has been held that such a judgment will not support an action against him on the judgment in the state where the judgment was rendered,[31] although the rule is otherwise under some statutes,[32] and especially not in the courts of another state,[33] and is not entitled, under the constitution, to full faith and credit in other states.[34] It will not stop the running of the statute of limitations in favor of the absent defendant,[35] or merge or bar the original cause of action,[36] at least not in other states,[37] although it may so operate in the state where rendered if the statute so provides.[38] Such judgments have no other force or effect than such as has been expressly given to them by the statutes,[39] which may, and sometimes do, make the judgment prima facie evidence against the absent defendant, reserving to him the right to contest the merits and show that he ought not to have been charged,[40] while under other statutes the judgment is not even prima facie evidence of indebtedness.[41] A joint defendant not served has a right to appear voluntarily in the action against plaintiff's objection.[42] A statute providing that, when defendants are joint and solidary obligors, they may be cited at the domicile of any one of them does not give the court jurisdiction to render a judgment in personam against a nonresident not found within the state.[43]

(4) Statutory Separate Judgment

Under various statutes in a joint action against several defendants, some of whom were not served with process, judgment may be rendered against those served, excluding the others, provided the statutory conditions precedent thereto are shown, which separate judgment binds the joint property of all the defendants and the individual property of those served.

Under statutes so providing if two or more persons are sued in a joint action, plaintiff may proceed against any one or more of them on service of process on them, notwithstanding there may be others not served, and recover a judgment against those served, excluding the others,[44] provided it is shown that defendants not brought in cannot be found or that it is impossible to serve process on them,[45] and that there is a joint liability or joint cause of action against all,[46] and notation of the fact of nonservice on the absent defendant is made to appear in the judgment,[47] where the statute makes such facts conditions precedent.[48] Such separate judgment binds the joint property of all the defendants and the individual property of the defendants served.[49] A several judgment may be rendered against only defendants served where the liability is joint and several,[50] or, in some jurisdictions, even though it is joint.[51]

§ 34. —— Contract Actions

At common law and in the absence of a statute changing the rule, a judgment in an action ex contractu against several defendants must be in favor of all defendants or none, unless a defendant pleads matter which goes to his personal discharge or an unnecessary and improper party was joined as defendant. Under various codes and practice acts, however, judgment may be taken against the party or parties found liable and in favor of those found not liable.

At common law, and in the absence of a statute changing the rule, if several defendants are joined in an action ex contractu, and all are brought before the court by service or appearance plaintiff must recover against all or none, and it is not competent to enter a judgment in favor of one defendant and against another.[52] Under codes and practice acts authorizing judgments to be rendered for or against one or more of several defendants, discussed generally supra § 33 a, which are applicable in actions ex contractu,[53] including actions on quantum meruit,[54] judgment in an action against several defendants on a joint, or joint and several, obligation may be taken against the party or parties shown to be liable, when the others are not liable,[55] and in favor of defendant or defendants found not liable.[56] However, as discussed infra § 36, such statutes do not permit the rendition of a several judgment on a joint cause of action. If plaintiff sues on and shows only a joint obligation, judgment must be against all jointly liable or none,[57] except, under some statutes, where the other joint obligors are not served with process, as discussed supra § 33 c; but if the proofs show a several obligation, or a joint obligation as to two or more defendants fewer than all, a recovery may be had against those shown to be liable regardless of the fact that only a joint obligation was alleged.[58] In an action on a contract which at common law would have been joint only, but which by force of statute is joint and several, as considered in Contracts § 355 a (2), judgment may be had against him or those of the obligees sued who are shown to be liable.[59] In an action on a contract judgment may run against a party who is not a party to the contract but is liable on an independent agreement to pay the amount due under the contract.[60]

Exceptions to common-law rule. Although the common law rule has been long and well established, it is not universal, whenever a defendant pleads matter which goes to his personal discharge, or any matter that does not go to the nature of the writ, or pleads or gives in evidence a matter which is a bar to the action against himself only, and of which the others could not take advantage, judgment may be for such defendant and against the rest.[61] In such case judgment in favor of a defendant relying on a defense personal to himself does not discharge the other joint obligors.[62] It is essential to the operation of this exception that a defense insisted on by one of several joint debtors be personal to him, and not one of which the other defendants could take advantage.[63] Personal defenses within the exception to the rule include a discharge in bankruptcy[64] or insolvency;[65] the defense of the statute of limitations;[66] a release of an obligor with a reservation of the right to proceed against the remaining obligor or obligors;[67] personal disability to contract,[68] such as infancy,[69]

insanity,[70] or coverture;[71] and other like matters.[72]

The rule has no proper application to an action against administrators as such on a contract alleged to have been made with decedent,[73] or where some of defendants are not served with process and do not appear,[74] or where the statement of claim shows a several liability against one defendant, and the action is dismissed as to the other joint defendants before submission to the jury.[75] Another exception to the rule arises when one who is an unnecessary or improper party is joined as a defendant.[76]

§ 35. —— Tort Actions

In tort actions judgment ordinarily may be rendered for or against one or more of several defendants.

In actions for tort against several defendants it has generally been held that judgment may be rendered against one or as many of defendants as the proof shows were guilty of the wrong, and in favor of those as against whom the proof fails,[77] or against some of defendants shown to be liable where plaintiff waives his right to recover against the others,[78] although there formerly was some authority to the effect that, in an action against two or more for a joint tort, recovery was required to be against all or none.[79] This is also true under codes and practice acts authorizing judgments to be rendered for or against one or more of several defendants, as considered generally supra § 33 a, which are applicable in actions for tort,[80] as are rules of court to the same effect.[81]

If it appears during the course of the proceedings that a defendant is not liable, the court may render judgment in his favor and allow the case to proceed against the others,[82] and the court's discharge of some of defendants in an action charging concurrent wrongful acts or omissions will not preclude judgment against the others.[83] Even after verdict, where a joint liability has been found to exist,[84] or where several damages have been given by the jury,[85] judgment may be rendered against one defendant alone. ties, as considered in the C.J.S. title New Trial § 12, also 46 C.J. p 78 note 31–p 80 note 55, the court may grant a new trial to one or more of several defendants if satisfied that they were wrongly convicted, and render judgment on the verdict as to the remainder.[86]

The common-law rule which requires judgment against all joint defendants or none in actions on contracts, as considered supra § 34, has no application to actions for torts,[87] except where the action is for a negligent performance of, or a negligent failure to perform, a duty arising out of a contract, in which case the rule is the same as in actions on contract, and, if a joint contract and liability are alleged, a joint liability must be shown.[88] However, where the relation of the parties is such that an issue found for one defendant necessarily inures to the benefit of his codefendant,[89] as where a defendant's culpability is the sole predicate for his codefendant's liability,[90] judgment cannot be entered for the former and against the latter; but this rule has no application where each defendant is charged with acts of negligence resulting in the injury.[91]

In jurisdictions where there is a statutory right to contribution between joint tort-feasors who are codefendants in judgment, as considered in Contribution § 11 b (5), it has been held that, where plaintiff has consented to a voluntary nonsuit as to one of two defendant joint tort-feasors, it is erroneous to render judgment against the other,[92] although, if the jury exculpate one of two joint tort-feasors sued jointly, judgment may be rendered against the other.[93] In an action for fraud against defendants jointly and severally liable therefor it is unnecessary for the judgment to provide that recovery be first had as far as possible out of the defendant primarily liable where he is hopelessly insolvent.[94]

It has been held that the judgment should be against all defendants shown to be jointly liable for the tort;[95] and in some jurisdictions it has been held that judgment must be against all joint tort-feasors who are not discharged.[96] On the other hand a joint judgment against joint defendants, some of whom are not guilty, is erroneous;[97] but there is authority which holds that as to defendant or defendants actually liable for the tort the judgment is not invalid or improper.[98] Under some statutes, where the original defendants bring additional defendants into the action, asserting that they are primarily liable, plaintiff is entitled to judgment against them the same as though they had been directly sued by him.[99]

In an action for ejectment based on a tort, judgment may be rendered against defendants served who appeared, even though a default could not properly be entered against defendants who did not appear because of plaintiff's failure to comply with a statute requiring him to file an affidavit that they were not in the military service.[1]

1. Cal.—B. & B. Sulphur Co. v. Kelley, 141 P.2d 908, 61 Cal.App.2d 3.

a. In General

At common law and in the absence of statute changing the rule a joint judgment is the only proper judgment in an action brought as a joint suit against several defendants; but a joint judgment cannot be rendered against defendants whose liability is several and not joint or who are not all liable.

At common law and in the absence of statute changing the rule only a joint judgment may be rendered in an action brought as a joint suit,[2] as an action ex contractu against several defendants.[3] On the other hand, a joint judgment may not be rendered against defendants who are severally and not jointly liable,[4] or where each defendant is not liable to the full extent of the verdict.[5] Also a joint judgment against two or more defendants, one of whom is not liable, is erroneous.[6]

In actions at common law for tort, while judgment may be entered against certain defendants, and in favor of others, as discussed supra § 35, the judgment must be a joint judgment for one single amount against all found liable,[7] and cannot exceed in amount that for which judgment could have been rendered under a verdict returned against a particular defendant.[8]

What constitutes. In determining the character of a judgment as joint, several, or joint and several, the circumstances with respect to the case may be considered,[9] and recourse may be had to the pleadings on which the judgment is based.[10] The identity of issues as between plaintiff and the various defendants does not determine the character of the judgment.[11] Ordinarily it is determined by the nature of the liabilities or interests involved in the litigation,[12] and this is true, although in form the judgment includes several defendants under the form of a joint judgment.[13] Thus judgments have been held to be several where the liabilities of defendants were several;[14] and as joint and several where their liabilities were joint and several,[15] although there is other authority to the effect that a judgment against several defendants in an action on a joint and several obligation is joint and not joint and several as to all defendants therein.[16] A judgment that plaintiff recover of two or more named defendants a specified sum of money is in form a joint judgment,[17] and a judgment against two or more named defendants, and each of them, constitutes a joint and several judgment.[18] However, there is authority, particularly in jurisdictions where by statute joint contracts have been made joint and several and authority given to proceed against one or more of those liable on a joint obligation, to the effect that, although a judgment is rendered against two or more parties jointly, the judgment itself is a joint and several obligation.[19]

b. Under Codes and Practice Acts

In general under the various codes and practice acts the judgment should be joint, several, or joint and several, according as the liability of the defendants against whom judgment is rendered is joint, several, or joint and several.

Judgment as contract within statute making joint contracts joint and several see supra § 6.

In general under the various codes and practice acts in an action against several defendants, a joint judgment is proper against defendants whose liability is joint or arises out of joint conduct;[20] but it is improper against defendants whose liability is not joint, although each may be severally liable,[21] or where the liability of defendants and the measure of recovery are proportional.[22]

A several judgment is not ordinarily proper against defendants whose liability is on a joint obligation or other joint cause of action;[23] but such a judgment is proper in an action against several defendants who are liable on a joint and several obligation, or on a cause of action where each defendant is liable only for his own acts, or for his proportionate share of the total damage, or in a different amount from his codefendants, or in any case where separate actions might properly have been maintained.[24] The test as to whether a several judgment may be had is whether a separate action could have been maintained.[25]

A joint and several judgment is proper against defendants whose liability is joint and several,[26] but not against defendants who are individually and solely liable on different items of the total amount demanded.[27]

Where the items of damages are distinct, a joint judgment cannot be entered unless each defendant is liable to the full extent of plaintiff's demand or recovery.[28] If defendants are not all liable to the same extent on the liability sued on, the judgment may be for different amounts against them;[29] and, where one of the several defendants is not liable for all the items of damage for which recovery is allowed, a judgment against all defendants which does not segregate the damage is erroneous,[30] at least as to the party not liable for the full amount.[31] However, in an action ex contractu a joint judgment has been held proper against defendants who are liable for the same demand;[32] and, if the action is on a joint contract or obligation against several defendants who plead and defend jointly, the judgment against them must be joint and not several.[33]

pacity, the judgment against them should be several[34] or joint and several.[35] In an action to impose liability on heirs or devisees of a decedent for a liability of decedent, the judgment should be several against each defendant for the amount received by him from decedent, not to exceed the sum to which plaintiff is entitled;[36] and it has been held proper to make the judgment collectable in full from any of several defendants who received that amount or more from the estate and to limit it as to defendants who received less to the amount each received.[37]

Under statutes in Louisiana providing therefor, a joint judgment against several defendants in a suit on a joint obligation must be against each defendant separately for his proportion of the debt,[38] which is determined by the number of obligors;[39] and, where only one of several joint obligors is sued,[40] or the court erroneously rejects plaintiff's demand against all the joint obligors, except one,[41] the judgment against him must be for his aliquot portion of the obligation and not the entire amount thereof.

Actions ex delictu. In an action of tort against several defendants, plaintiff is entitled to a joint judgment if, and only if,[42] he shows a joint tort[43] or single cause of action against them,[44] even though one of defendants owed plaintiff a higher degree of care than did the other;[45] and, if defendants plead jointly, and a joint verdict is given against them, the judgment must be joint and not several.[46] It has also been held in some jurisdictions that defendant tort-feasors must be in pari delicto as to the tortious act and each responsible for the entire damage for a joint judgment against them to be proper;[47] and, where a primary liability for the injury rests on one defendant and a constructive or secondary liability on another defendant, and their breaches of duty to plaintiff are not through concert of action or independent but concurrent action, a joint judgment may not be rendered against them.[48]

If the liability of defendants is joint and several, the judgment should be joint and several;[49] but a joint and several judgment should not be rendered unless it is established that defendants were joint tort-feasors,[50] and is improper where it appears that defendants are not liable on the same torts but are solely and independently liable on different torts alleged.[51] A joint judgment has been held proper against defendants, each of whom is responsible for the same sum of money,[52] or whose independent tortious acts produced a single injury, objections to the trial in one proceeding having been waived.[53]

Since joint tort-feasors are each individually liable to the party injured for the full extent of the damage done, and not only for a proportionate part, as considered in the C.J.S. title Torts § 34, also 62 C.J. p 1131 notes 52, 53, ordinarily the judgment cannot segregate or apportion the liability of the joint tort-feasors;[54] but it must be in one amount[55] and jointly and severally[56] against each and all of defendants against whom a joint liability is established.[57] However, any statutory limitation of liability applicable to any defendant, as distinguished from the full liability of other defendants, may and should be incorporated in the judgment entered on the verdict;[58] and, where a joint and several liability is established as to some of the defendants and a separate liability for only a portion of the total against others, the judgment may run against the various defendants in the amounts and according to the liabilities established.[59] Where the liability of defendant tort-feasors is direct and several, as well as joint, a judgment for different amounts against the various defendants has been held not improper.[60]

If the jury, without fixing the total amount of plaintiff's recovery, returns several verdicts or in one verdict assesses each defendant separately, it has been held that, if the same amount was assessed against each defendant, a joint judgment should be entered against all defendants for that amount, not the total,[61] or, if different amounts were assessed against the various defendants, plaintiff may enter a joint judgment against all defendants for the largest amount found against any of them.[62] There is other authority, however, which holds that, where separate verdicts for different amounts are returned against joint tort-feasors, the lesser amount being against defendant who actively committed the wrong and on whose culpability the other defendant's liability is predicated, the judgment should be for such lesser amount.[63] It has also been held that, in an action on a joint tort, if the verdict assesses each defendant separately for different amounts, judgment cannot be rendered against all the defendants for the total of the different amounts.[64]

64. Miss.—Gillespie v. Olive Branch

Under some statutes several judgments may be rendered against joint tort-feasors for separate or proportionate amounts,[65] at least where defendants have severed in their defense, and separate verdicts have been found against them.[66]

In ejectment it has been held that, if there are several defendants, there may be a joint judgment against all,[67] although they are severally in exclusive possession of different parts of the premises, no request for a several judgment being made;[68] but there is other authority to the effect that a joint judgment is not proper against defendants who occupy or claim separate and distinct portions of the realty involved,[69] and that, if plaintiff is not required to elect which of several defendants in separate possession he will proceed against, judgment may be rendered against each.[70] Where defendants plead jointly in trespass for mesne profits but separate verdicts are found, there may be a judgment against one and nolle prosequi as to the other.[71] Where, however, one defendant enters subsequent to another it is error, in a joint action of ejectment and for mesne profits, to render a joint judgment against both from the time of the entry of the latter.[72]

c. Disposition of Case as to All Parties; Separate Judgments

At common law and under statutes so providing only one final judgment, which must dispose of the case as to all the parties, is proper in an action; but, under permissive statutes, separate judgments may be rendered at the same time or different times against the various defendants in actions in which several judgments are proper.

At common law, and in the absence of statute changing the rule, and under statutes expressly so providing, only one final judgment may be entered in an action, as discussed infra § 65, which must completely dispose of the whole case as to all the parties.[73] The rule is applicable in tort actions[74]

One judgment record

against joint tort-feasors,[75] and in actions on joint and several obligations which plaintiff has elected to enforce as a joint obligation.[76] It applies, even though the rights or liabilities of a particular defendant or defendants appear from the proceedings or are determined prior to the completion of the case,[77] where the cause of action is joint and several and defendants answer jointly,[78] and however independent of each other the respective defenses of the various defendants may be.[79] Each suit which may be brought on the individual liability of a number of persons jointly and severally liable on an obligation constitutes a separate cause within the rule against more than one final judgment in an action.[80]

Judgment should be entered as to all the defendants.[81] If a final judgment does not dispose of the case as to all the defendants, it is erroneous;[82] and in some instances it has been held that a judgment which does not do so is not a final judgment[83] but remains under the control of the court.[84] However, it has been held that in tort actions such a judgment against some only of defendants is at most a harmless irregularity, even as to defendants against whom alone it is rendered.[85] An additional judgment entered against other defendants after final judgment was entered against a defaulting defendant has been held to be merely erroneous and voidable, and not void.[86] It is unnecessary for the judgment specifically to dispose of the rights of all the parties, but it is sufficient if the rights of those not specifically disposed of are disposed of by implication.[87]

Ordinarily the entry of judgment against one or more joint defendants in jurisdictions where only one final judgment in an action is proper operates as a discontinuance of the case as to all the others, and merges the cause of action in the judgment, preventing further prosecution of it against the others in the same or subsequent actions.[88] Thus, if against defendants found liable and that in favor of defendants found not liable.—Hundhausen v. Bond, 36 Wis. 29.

In tort actions

A separate judgment against one or more of several defendants amounts to an informal dismissal of the action as to the other defendants.—Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v.

final judgment is entered against a defaulting defendant,[89] or against a defendant who admits his liability on certain items,[90] it is improper to proceed with the trial and render another and additional judgment against other defendants.

If the rights or liabilities of a particular defendant or defendants appear from the proceedings or are determined prior to the completion of the case, final judgment as to such defendant or defendants will not be entered in the action at that time, but it will be held in abeyance until proper disposition of the entire cause has been determined when final judgment as to all the parties will be entered.[91] If, in such case, however, plaintiff desires to take judgment against defendants whose liability has been made to appear, he should obtain a severance of the action into two actions, enter judgment in one, and proceed with the other to judgment against the defendants in that action, as discussed in Actions § 119 b (2); and, if judgment is entered against one of the parties prior to severance, plaintiff must obtain a vacation of the judgment and severance of the action before he may proceed with the action and obtain judgment against the other defendant or defendants.[92]

Separate and distinct judgments cannot be rendered against defendants sued jointly,[93] even where the action is on a contract which is both joint and several.[94] Where several defendants are all liable, but for different amounts, plaintiff must elect or the court order which of them shall be discharged.[95] In such case judgment should not be entered against some only of the several defendants, unless plaintiff has previously discontinued against the other defendant or defendants.[96]

Where statutes authorize separate judgments. Separate and distinct judgments may be rendered against the several defendants under statutes which provide that more than one judgment or separate judgments may be rendered in the same cause,[97] or that, when a several judgment is proper, judgment may be given for or against one or more of defendants,[98] or that judgment may be rendered against any of defendants, severally, when plaintiff would be entitled to a judgment against such defendants if the action had been against them severally.[99] Also, where the statutes provide therefor, the court, in its discretion, may render judgment against one or more of several defendants, leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment may be proper.[1] A statute authorizing judgment against fewer than all of several defendants sued does not authorize the entry of separate and distinct judgments against the various defendants.[2]

Under statutes authorizing separate judgments, where it appears, either from the proceedings or during the progress of the case, that a several judgment is proper as to one or more defendants, the court may render a judgment for or against him or them, in advance of the final trial, leaving the action to proceed against the other defendants,[3] including defendants who were not served with process at that time,[4] and defendants as to whom an appeal against an improper dismissal is pending.[5] If no sufficient case is stated against one of several defendants, a final judgment may be entered disposing of the case as to him;[6] or separate judgments may be entered at the conclusion of the trial against defendants who could have been sued severally.[7] If the action is such that a several judgment would be proper, as where it is brought to enforce liability for tort,[8] or on a contract which is both joint and several,[9] judgment may be rendered against any one or more of defendants sued, without affecting or barring the remedy, at whatever stage of the case their several liability is made to appear, as where such party suffers a default, as discussed infra § 191, or submits to judgment by an offer, infra § 184, or consent, infra § 178, or confesses judgment, infra §§ 144, 164, or where plaintiff is entitled to such judgment on the allegations and admissions in the pleadings, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Pleading § 433, also 49 C.J. p 676 notes 89, 90. Also, under various statutes, it has been held proper to render separate judgments against each defendant where each is liable for only a proportionate amount of the total recovery,[10] or where the liability of each, as expressed in the contract sued on, is several and differs in extent proportionate to the respective and different interests of each,[11] or where independent acts of tort-feasors have combined to cause plaintiff's injury and separate verdicts against each for varying amounts have been returned.[12]

On the other hand, if the cause of action sued on is such that the judgment must be joint and under the circumstances the case is not a proper one to go to judgment against one of the defendants liable, the court cannot properly render judgment against any of those defendants whose liability has been made to appear,[13] although the entry of judgment as to some of the defendants prior to final trial is not error of which the other defendants may complain, where it does not prejudice any defense, set-off, or counterclaim of theirs.[14] It has also been held that separate judgments are permissible only where the substantive law controlling the case is such as to impose several separable and different respective liabilities on defendants.[15]

The entry of a separate judgment against one or more defendants, under a statute authorizing it, does not merge the cause of action, as at common law, and prevent the further pursuit of judgment against the other defendants.[16] It is not binding on the other defendants;[17] but it operates as a severance of the cause of action, and after such judgment the issues made by the remaining defendants are to be heard and determined as if they had been sued alone.[18] On such final trial, a judgment may be rendered against the remaining defendant for the whole or such part of the cause of action as may be proved against him.[19] It is no objection that the various judgments are for different amounts.[20] Separate judgments against different defendants have been converted into one judgment against all the defendants in solido in order to fix the obligation inter se.[21]

On new trial as to some of codefendants. In jurisdictions where separate judgments against codefendants are authorized, separate judgments may be recovered where some of the defendants, after a joint judgment against them, obtain a new trial;[22] but, in jurisdictions where only one final judgment may be entered in an action, it has been held that, where a new or further trial is found necessary as to one defendant and the case has been correctly tried as to another, the case will be held in abeyance as to the latter until after the new trial and then one final judgment entered,[23] or it will be retried as to such defendant on the issue of amount of liability only.[24]

Right of appellate court to affirm as to some defendants and reverse as to others see Appeal and Error §§ 1919–1922.

Retrial on reversal as to some of defendants

Where, on appeal, a case is affirmed as to some of defendants and reversed and sent back for retrial as to others, the judgment on the first trial, as it was affirmed, and the judgment on the retrial have been held to constitute one final judgment so as not to violate the statute against more than one final judgment in a case.

Interested person not a party litigant. The mere fact that a judgment is not res judicata to an interested person who is not a party litigant does not prevent the court from rendering a judgment which is final and res judicata as to all the parties to the proceeding.[25]

§ 37. —— Relief between Codefendants

Judgment determining the ultimate rights of defendants as between themselves is authorized under various codes and practice acts, but such a judgment is not authorized at common law.

At common law, and in the absence of statute changing the rule, one defendant to a suit cannot recover a judgment against a codefendant, because the issue is as to the liability of defendants, or either of them, to plaintiff, and not as to the liability of defendants as between themselves;[26] if one defendant is entitled to contribution, indemnity, or other relief against his codefendant, it must be obtained in an independent action.[27] As between codefendants, nothing is adjudicated by a joint judgment against them, as considered infra § 440, although in equity a decree between codefendants may be rendered in proper cases, as considered in Equity § 603.

Under codes and practice acts, affirmative relief may be granted as between defendants in relation to the subject matter of the action,[28] on proper pleadings and procedure in accordance with the statute,[29] it being usually provided that a judgment may determine the ultimate rights of the parties on the same side as between themselves.[30] Such relief may be granted, even though as between the various litigants the issues are contractual as to one and tortious as to the other.[31]

Such a statute, however, does not make codefendants adversaries.[32] It permits the determination of questions of primary and secondary liability between joint tort-feasors,[33] but it does not authorize judgment as to matters not connected with the subject of plaintiff's action.[34] The judgment authorized is only such as is responsive to the issues in plaintiff's action and incidental to defendant's defense therein,[35] as a defendant is not authorized to inject into plaintiff's suit an independent suit, either at law or in equity, against his codefendant, not necessary or germane to his defense to plaintiff's suit,[36] unless a statute authorizes the determination of particular issues.[37] Under some statutes, where a defendant is impleaded as being ultimately liable, the judgment against such defendant should be in favor of the original defendant and not in favor of plaintiff, whose judgment should be against the original defendant.[38] Service of process, or notice of some sort, as by service of a copy of the answer or cross complaint praying such relief, is essential to the validity and regularity of a judgment in favor of one defendant against his codefendant.[39]

§ 38. Nominal Parties

Ordinarily judgment should be in the name of a nominal or formal party, but it is proper to show therein the real party in interest.

In general judgment must be entered in the name of plaintiff, although for the use and benefit of another,[40] and, if entered in favor of the beneficiary alone, it is irregular and erroneous.[41] Where the real parties in interest will be estopped from again asserting the claim in suit, judgment in the name of a nominal party is not error.[42] However, under statutes requiring that actions be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, it has been held that judgment may not be rendered in favor of a plaintiff who fails to show any remedial interest in himself, even though defendant has contested the case on the merits.[43] It has been held that a pro forma plaintiff cannot recover.[44] Judgment may be rendered against a defendant, although he is only a nominal or formal party,[45] but the judgment properly should discriminate between the actual defendants charged with liability and mere nominal or unnecessary defendants not under any liability to plaintiff.[46] In an action against a husband in which his wife, without having been served with a summons, was made a nominal party defendant on plaintiff's motion, a judgment against her is voidable.[47]

tion it has been said that courts have no power to render judgment until their action is called into exercise by pleadings,[50] that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter or controversy in the absence of pleadings,[51] and that a judgment rendered without pleadings in support thereof is fundamentally erroneous,[52] a nullity,[53] and void[54] rather than voidable.[55] Where pleadings are lost, judgment should not be rendered until they have been restored.[56]

A declaration, petition, or complaint is essential to the regularity of a judgment,[57] and it has been held that such a pleading is essential to the court's jurisdiction to enter judgment,[58] and that its absence will render the judgment void,[59] although objection to the absence of such a pleading may be waived.[60] Aside from judgments by confession, consent, or default, as discussed infra §§ 150, 151, 174, 199, a plea or answer may be essential to the regularity of a judgment.[61] Where the initial pleading has been filed in one division of a court, and the answer is filed in a different division, the former has been held to lack jurisdiction to enter judgment.[62] judgment, and a judgment rendered on a complaint failing to state a cause of action has been held erroneous.

As a general rule, pleadings must be sufficient to support the judgment;[63] they should be of such a character that a final judgment will be sustained by findings thereon.[64] While mere generality of the allegations is not of itself fatal to the validity of a judgment,[65] a judgment cannot be sustained by allegations which are only conclusions of law rather than averments of fact.[66] Pleadings have been held substantially defective where oral,[67] and facts presented by an unauthorized pleading do not afford a proper predicate for judgment.[68]

In determining the sufficiency of the pleadings to support the judgment it has been said that the court will consider the pleadings of both parties,[69] and that facts pleaded by the adverse party are available to either party in support of the judgment.[70] In testing the sufficiency of the complaint as a basis on which to rest the judgment, averments unsupported by the proof should be eliminated.[71] A judgment must be based on material allegations in the

Contradictory allegations

A pleading alleging that acts for results of which the recovery of damages was sought were malicious and grossly negligent, and pleading alleging that acts were malicious, wrongful, willful, and wanton, were insufficient to authorize judgment based on negligence, or willful misconduct because pleadings were contradictory.—Michels v. Boruta, Tex.Civ.App., 122 S.W.2d 216.

pleadings.[72] Under some practice a judgment may not be entered on a cause of action asserted by reply.[73] Error in asserting the amount due in a counterclaim and cross action should be corrected by amendment thereof rather than by asserting the correct amount in reply, and a judgment based on the reply stating the correct amount cannot stand.[74]

Defects in form; irregularities. A pleading which is merely deficient in form has been held not to render the judgment void,[75] but only voidable.[76] Thus mere defects and irregularities in the pleadings will not invalidate the judgment,[77] at least where no timely objection thereto has been raised,[78] and, even though a petition does not perfectly state a cause of action, a valid judgment may be entered thereon.[79] A petition cannot be said to be so defective that no legal judgment may be entered thereon where the defect is amendable,[80] but a judgment has been held void where the petition was not amendable.[81] A judgment may be sustained despite defects in the pleadings on which it is based where the case falls within the purview of statutory provisions designed to protect judgments, such as statutes requiring a liberal construction of pleadings,[82] or statutes of jeofails.[83]

Sufficiency of pleadings as basis of judgment for defendant. If a petition or similar pleading is insufficient as a basis for judgment in favor of plaintiff, it is also insufficient to serve as the basis for a judgment for defendant.[84] Where plaintiff fails to amend, the proper judgment to enter is one simply of dismissal,[85] and the fact that the pleading fails to state a cause of action will not prevent rendition of a judgment of dismissal.[86] When issues are framed on a plea in abatement and those issues are found for defendant, resulting in a judgment for him, such judgment has been held not void even though a demurrer to the complaint was sustained, since in such a case the judgment is not dependent on a complaint to give it effect, but is dependent

Jurisdiction of court

Where the nature of the suit invokes the actual jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment and the petition is merely lacking in allegations as to the fullness of facts, it presents a matter for determination by the trial judge and any error committed in rendering the judgment on insufficient facts does not render the judgment void.—Rice v. Improper designation of court

While a judgment on petition which fails properly to designate court in which it is filed and in which judgment is asked is void, nevertheless an error or mistake in addressing a petition to the wrong court can be cured by supplemental or amended petition filed before issue joined and giving the proper name and title of the court and in such case the petition will support the judgment.—Kunnes v. only on the continued existence of the cause in court.[87] While defendant's pleadings must be sufficient to support the judgment rendered,[88] they may be sufficient although defective if the defect is amendable.[89] It has been held that affirmative relief cannot be granted a defendant on the basis of his answer, but that a judgment for affirmative relief must be supported by a counterclaim.[90]

Defects in petition or complaint. As a general rule, where plaintiff's declaration or complaint is defective in substance, to the extent of failing to make out a cause of action, it cannot support a judgment in his favor, and such judgment will be erroneous and reversible[91] notwithstanding no demurrer was filed,[92] or, if filed, was overruled, and defendant has answered over.[93] It has been held that failure of plaintiff's initial pleading to state a cause of action is not a jurisdictional defect,[94] and that, except where the complaint shows that the court has no jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter[95] or fails to show affirmatively that the court has such jurisdiction,[96] a judgment rendered

Allegation of liability

(1) A petition or similar pleading which fails to allege some liability against a defendant does not state a cause of action within the rule requiring written pleadings in support of a judgment of a court of record.—Woodward v. Acme Lumber Co., Tex.Civ.App., 103 S.W.2d 1054—Fisk v. Warren, Tex.Civ.App., 248 S.W. 406.

(2) In an action on notes signed jointly by a husband and wife, a petition stating only that the former is the husband of the latter, and not that he executed and delivered the notes, is insufficient to sustain a judgment against him.—Fisk v. Warren, supra.

Cause of action in alternative

A pleading stating a cause of action against two parties in the alternative is insufficient to sustain a judgment against either.—Hartzell v. Bank of Murray, 277 S.W. 270, 211 Ky. 268.

Jurisdiction

The sufficiency of a petition in a court of record is not the test of jurisdiction, since the court may commit an error in holding it sufficient.—In re Warner's Estate, 288 N.W. 39, 137 Neb. 25.

95. Cal.—Moran v. Superior Court in and for Sacramento County, 96 P.2d 193, 35 Cal.App.2d 629.

"The law makes a distinction between a complaint which does not state a cause of action by reason of defects in the allegations therein contained, where the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, and cases where the court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter. If it appears from the complaint that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the judgment of course is void, but if the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, its rulings upon demurrer as to the sufficiency of the complaint constitutes only errors in procedure in the trial."—Behrens v. Superior Court in and for Yuba County, 23 P.2d 428, 429, 132 Cal.App. 704.

thereon is not void merely because the complaint fails to state a cause of action,[97] as long as it apprises defendant of the nature of plaintiff's demand.[98] In this connection it has been said that jurisdiction of the court to render judgment does not depend on the sufficiency or fullness of a cause of action pleaded,[99] and that, if a cause is pleaded belonging to a general class over which the court's authority extends, jurisdiction attaches, and the court has power to determine whether the pleading is good or bad and to decide on its sufficiency as a statement of a cause of action.[1] On the other hand, it has been broadly stated in some decisions that, where a complaint or similar pleading fails to state facts constituting a cause of action, the court lacks jurisdiction to render a judgment thereon,[2] and that a judgment rendered thereon is ordinarily void,[3] at least where it rests solely on allegations of a complaint so deficient in substance as conclusively to negative the existence of a cause of action at the time of its rendition.[4] Where the facts stated in the pleadings do not justify the judgment entered, the latter is coram non judice,[5] and where a pleading is so drawn as to show that the court can have no jurisdiction of the controversy, or is a nullity, any judgment rendered thereon is void.[6]

§ 41. —— Several Counts

The more modern rule, prevailing under statute, generally regards a judgment on a general verdict as referable to good counts in a pleading and valid despite the existence of bad counts therein.

At common law, and in the absence of statute changing the rule, where the verdict is general, and one of the counts is bad, the judgment has been regarded as erroneous,[7] except where all the counts relate to the same cause of action, in which case it has been held that the rule does not apply.[8]

The modern rule, however, usually applied by virtue of statute, holds a judgment valid under such circumstances where there is one good count in the declaration or complaint,[9] the judgment being referable to the good count,[10] unless it affirmatively appears that the verdict and judgment are based only on the defective counts.[11]

It has been said that failure to require a party to exercise his right of election as between tort and contract counts in his pleading is at most a mere irregularity which will render the judgment voidable rather than void.[12] If there was a demurrer to a defective count, which was erroneously overruled, the judgment is invalid where the record does not show affirmatively that the judgment rests exclusively on the good counts;[13] but all counts must be bad, however, to establish invalidity where there was no demurrer.[14] Where the verdict is special, and responsive to a good count, a judgment thereon is, of course, unobjectionable.[15] Where all the counts show a good cause of action, the judgment is not bad because it was general, although, on the evidence, plaintiff was not entitled to recover on some of the counts.[16]

§ 42. Issues

Ordinarily the pleadings in a cause must evolve an issue of law or fact before a judgment can regularly be rendered.

Subject to exceptions which may occur in the case of judgments by confession, consent, or default, as discussed infra §§ 150–151, 174, 193, or following submission on an agreed statement of facts under principles considered infra § 186, it is a general rule that the pleadings in a cause must evolve an issue of law or fact before a judgment can regularly be rendered.[17] A judgment rendered without issue joined or waived is erroneous,[18] some authorities holding that such a judgment is void[19] and others that it is merely voidable.[20] When an issue is tried which is not within the pleadings, no duty rests on the trial court to render judgment thereon and its failure or refusal to do so is not erroneous.[21]

§ 43. —— Determination of All Issues

Generally a judgment must dispose of all issues in the case, either expressly or by necessary implication.

The prevailing rule under common law and statutes declaratory thereof requires a judgment to determine all issues[22] among all the parties,[23] except such issues as are waived or abandoned on the trial of the case.[24] So the judgment must be as broad as the issues and must respond to all the issues both

Counterclaim

In absence of showing that defendants pressed counterclaim, defendants will be held to have acquiesced in rendition of judgment dismissing petition without disposing of counterclaim.—City of St. Louis ex rel. and to Use of Sears v. Clark, Mo.App., 85 S.W.2d 936.

of law and fact,[25] and it must dispose of the entire subject matter of the litigation[26] and conclude all further inquiry into the issues joined by the pleadings, leaving nothing further to be done except to carry the judgment into execution.[27] In rendering judgment the court may, however, properly disregard an immaterial issue.[28] A judgment will be held sufficient if it disposes of material issues by necessary implication even though it does not do so in formal terms,[29] and as a rule it will be presumed that the court passed on all questions properly presented which under its own ruling it was possible for it to adjudge.[30]

Ordinarily judgment should not be rendered without disposing of matters raised by defendant's pleadings,[31] such as a counterclaim[32] or cross complaint,[33] unless the determination of the issue on which the judgment is based is necessarily decisive of the whole case[34] or the actions have been separated under statutes or court rules permitting such practice.[35] An answer filed by one of several defendants, which may be or become common to all, and which goes to the right of plaintiff to recover, precludes judgment against a codefendant until the issues have been disposed of by the court.[36] It has been held improper to render judgment on an intervention without at the same time acting on the principal action.[37]

Necessary implication
(1) Set-off or counterclaim need not be expressly mentioned in judgment, provided it is disposed of by necessary implication.—Prim v. Latham, Tex.Civ.App., 6 S.W.2d 173, error refused.

A failure to pass on a motion is immaterial, as the entry of judgment is in effect a final disposition of motions previously filed.[38]

Partial judgment under statute or rule. Under statutes or court rules providing that, where after answer part of plaintiff's claim is admitted or uncontested, plaintiff may have judgment for so much of his claim, subject to such terms as may be just, the intent is to enable the court of first instance to clear away portions of a claim or defense not involving disputed questions of fact by entering a partial judgment thereon.[39] Such a statute should not be so construed as to permit a judgment on part of a cause of action where the part is an incomplete fragment of an entire claim which cannot be thus divided without mutilation.[40]

§ 44. Evidence

As a general rule a judgment must be supported by legally adduced evidence of a substantial and sufficient character, and a judgment may not rest on mere speculation, surmise, or suspicion.

While exceptions may occur in respect of judgments by confession or consent, or those entered on admissions or default, under principles discussed infra §§ 162, 174, 185, 210–213, as a general rule the evidence must sustain the judgment,[41] proof being as essential to the support of a judgment as pleading.[42] The evidence must be of a substantial character,[43] sufficient to support the judgment rendered.[44] The judgment must be founded on suffi-in effect awarded to third intervener as exempt without necessity for rendition of judgment in his favor for such amount.—Coles v. Fewel, Tex.Civ.App., 80 S.W.2d 323, error dismissed.

cient facts legally ascertained,[45] and cannot rest on evidence of an incompetent character,[46] or which was never adduced in court,[47] such as matters not put in evidence of which the court took judicial notice.[48] A judgment may not rest on conjecture and speculation[49] or on mere surmise or suspicion,[50] nor may a judgment find support in assumptions[51] or in possibilities or probabilities falling short of actual proof.[52] While an inference of the truth of facts essential to a cause of action will support a judgment rendered in accordance with such facts,[53] the court should not base its judgment on a state of facts so inadequately developed that it cannot be determined where inference ended and conjecture began.[54] However, it is not essential to the validity of a judgment that it rest entirely on uncontradicted evidence,[55] and it is not fatal that a different conclusion might have been reached on all

Evidence held sufficient to support judgment

(1) Generally.

U.S.—State Bank of New York v. Henderson County, Ky., C.C.A.Ky., 35 F.2d 859, certiorari denied Henderson County, State of Kentucky, v. State Bank of New York, 50 S. Ct. 245, 281 U.S. 728, 74 L.Ed. 1144, 1145.

Ky.—Small v. Minton, 192 S.W.2d 184.

Tex.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Neely, Civ.App., 296 S.W. 948.

(2) Judgment foreclosing mechanics' liens held not objectionable as rendered on unverified account to admissibility of which defendants excepted, where other facts showed amount due.—Boozer v. Smith, Tex. Civ.App., 36 S.W.2d 1064, error dismissed.

(3) A judgment which did not state whether it was based on one or both counts of declaration was without error if evidence sustained either count.—Yeats v. Moody, 175 So. 719, 128 Fla. 658.

(4) Judgment solely on evidence prior to filing of amended pleadings bringing in new parties held not erroneous where court prior to judgment ordered dismissal of new parties and no new issue was raised by amendment.—McCreary v. Falconer, 44 P.2d 303, 3 Cal.2d 335.

45. Tex.—Motley v. Tom Green County, Civ.App., 93 S.W.2d 768, reversed on other grounds Tom Green County v. Motley, 118 S.W. 2d 306, 132 Tex. 54—Blalock v. Jones, Civ.App., 1 S.W.2d 400, error dismissed.

46. Mich.—Refrigerating Equipment Co. v. Finch, 242 N.W. 217, 257 Mich. 623.

Tex.—Hood v. Robertson, Civ.App., 33 S.W.2d 882.

W.Va.—Board of Trustees of Lewis Prichard Charity Fund v. Mankin Inv. Co., 193 S.E. 805, 119 W.Va. 391.

Unlawful search and seizure

A civil judgment, in the procurement of which evidence obtained through unlawful search and seizure in violation of the Fourth Amendment to federal Constitution is used, is invalid.—Rogers v. U. S., C.C.A.R. I., 97 F.2d 691.

Evidence as to unpleaded matters

(1) Evidence not based on any pleadings is incompetent and will not support a judgment, even though admitted by court without objection. —Stone v. Boone, Tex.Civ.App., 160 S.W.2d 578, error refused.

(2) Evidence adduced on an issue not made by the pleadings will not support a judgment.—Mullinax v. Snorgrass, Tex.Civ.App., 33 S.W.2d 1080, error refused.

(3) Necessity of pleadings as well as evidence to support judgment see supra § 40.

Evidence which has been stricken will not sustain a judgment.—In re Jolly's Estate, 229 Ill.App. 508.

Miss.—Blizzard v. Fitzsimmons, 10 So.2d 343, 193 Miss. 484.

Existence of fact

If evidence raises only a surmise or suspicion of the existence of a fact sought to be established, a judgment will not be permitted to rest on such fact.—Shell Oil Co. v. Howth, 159 S.W.2d 483, 138 Tex. 357.

51. La.—Cali v. Cloverland Dairy Products Co., App., 21 So.2d 166.

55. Okl.—Bradley v. Little, 134 P.2d 126, 192 Okl. 121.

Function of jury

Trial court is under no duty to determine by its judgment truth or falsity of evidentiary facts, which is for jury incidentally as a means of determining its verdict.—Southern Pine Lumber Co. v. Whiteman, the evidence adduced;[56] but a valid judgment may not be predicated on evidence that cannot be true.[57]

The insufficiency of supporting evidence has in some instances been held to render a judgment void,[58] but in others it has been regarded as rendering the judgment merely erroneous but not void.[59] It has been held that a judgment is not rendered void by irregularities in the taking of proof,[60] or by perjured testimony.[61]

§ 45. Verdict and Findings

A valid judgment must be predicated on the decision, findings, or verdict of the trial court or jury.

The issues raised by the pleadings, whether of law or fact, must be determined in favor of one party or the other before judgment can be entered; there must be either decision or findings by the court or referee[62] or the verdict of a jury.[63] Where a case is tried to the court and a jury is called to

Total disability

Evidence that an insured was totally disabled within the meaning of a war risk insurance policy could not support a judgment on the policy where such evidence could not have been true in view of the fact that it was conclusively shown that during the period of alleged total disability insured continuously followed a substantially gainful occupation.—U. S. v. Perry, C.C.A.Ark., 55 F.2d 819.

58. La.—Fields v. McAdams, App., 15 So.2d 246.

Findings as equivalent to verdict

For the purposes of judgment, the trial court's findings of fact have the effect of a "verdict".—Watson v. Missouri-Kansas-Texas R. Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 357.

When findings unnecessary

Findings of fact by the court have been held unnecessary where there is a verdict.—Dye v. Russell, 40 N. W. 416, 24 Neb. 829.

Conclusions inconsistent

If findings support judgment, inconsistencies between conclusions are immaterial and do not vitiate judgment.—Klein Norton Co. v. Cohen, 290 P. 613, 107 Cal.App. 325.

Indispensable step

Where there was no waiver of a trial by jury, its verdict was an indispensable step in the proceedings, and trial court was without power to enter a final judgment in absence thereof.—Heath v. Moers, 199 S.E. 519, 171 Va. 397.

Approval of verdict

The trial court must approve a verdict before a judgment can be based on it.—Frakes v. Travelers Mut. Casualty Co., 84 P.2d 871, 148 Kan. 637.

make findings as to certain issues, judgment should be rendered on the basis of findings of the jury accepted by the court, plus findings of fact made by the court on other issues and conclusions of law based on all such findings.[64]

A valid judgment must rest on findings, express or implied, on all material issues.[65] The findings of the court[66] or the findings or verdict of the jury[67] must be of a character sufficient to support the judgment rendered, and ordinarily the latter may not be aided by intendment or reference to extrinsic facts.[68] Although it has been held that it must appear that there was a direct and affirmative finding on every issue of fact essential to recovery,[69] it has also been held that, where the court fails to make formal findings, every finding justified by the record and necessary to support the judgment will be implied,[70] and that a general judgment is deemed

Matter jurisdictional

Findings on issues other than those specifically found by jury in answer to special interrogatories being necessary to support judgment, matter held jurisdictional, findings not having been waived.—Central Loan & Investment Co. v. Loiseau, 239 N.W. 487, 59 S.D. 255.

Wis.—Witt v. Wonser, 219 N.W. 344, 195 Wis. 593.

Omnibus finding that material allegations in named paragraphs of defendant's affirmative defense were not proved was insufficient to support judgment.—Gordon v. Beck, 239 P. 309, 196 Cal. 768.

General verdict

(1) Judgment cannot be supported by jury's determination on isolated issues in answer to special interrogatories without general verdict.—Central Loan & Investment Co. v. Loiseau, 239 N.W. 487, 59 S.D. 255.

(2) In action on disability clause of group life and health policy, verdict for insured for total amount of his certificate held "general verdict" which could serve as proper basis for judgment.—Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. v. Goble, 72 S.W.2d 35, 254 Ky. 614.

Special verdict

Where special verdict contains no finding on vital issue of fact, concerning which testimony is conflicting, it will not support judgment for plaintiff.—Hintz v. Jackson, 198 N. W. 475, 51 N.D. 13.

Verdict requiring entry of judgment

Although jury need not in all cases answer all issues presented, before judgment can be entered for either party, the verdict must be such as to require the entry of a judgment.—Bowen Motor Coaches v. Young, Tex.Civ.App., 138 S.W.2d 145.

Where there was no finding on certain evidence, judgment could not be held to have been based thereon.—Willard v. Glenn-Colusa Irr. Dist., 258 P. 959, 201 Cal. 726.

Judgment on merits

Fact findings are made by court only on issues raised by pleadings and evidence produced on trial, and judgments on merits are entered only on findings so made, rulings on demurrer when pleading over is not served, or motion for judgment on pleadings, agreed case, or consent of party against whom it runs.—Angers v. Sabatinelli, 1 N.W.2d 765, 239 Wis. 664—Luebke v. City of Watertown, 284 N.W. 519, 230 Wis. 512.

Advisory verdict

Jury verdict, effect of which is advisory only, will not support judgment.—Central Loan & Investment Co. v. Loiseau, 239 N.W. 487, 59 S.D. 255.

Support by evidence

Unless jury's finding is supported by evidence, judgment should not be entered thereon.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Pruitt, Tex.Civ.App., 293 S.W. 627.

Judgment sufficiently supported by jury findings or verdict

Conclusion of ultimate fact

A statement in judgment or decree, entered after hearing conflicting evidence, may be regarded as conclusion of ultimate fact or at least of mixed law and fact, even though same allegation in pleading might be construed as conclusion of law.—Label v. Sullivan, 165 S.W.2d 639, 350 Mo. 286.

70. Mont.—Blaser v. Clinton Irr. Dist., 53 P.2d 1141, 100 Mont. 459.

to include a special finding on all issues necessary to sustain it.[71] While a valid judgment may not be based on findings or verdict as to an immaterial issue,[72] where the judgment otherwise finds sufficient support, the fact that some of the findings are immaterial or without the issues will not invalidate it.[73] The failure to find as to a particular issue of fact is immaterial where the fact is admitted.[74]

A judgment rendered without either verdict or findings is irregular and erroneous,[75] and has been held premature and void;[76] but the more generally accepted view is that such a judgment is merely voidable and is not absolutely void[77] and that failure of verdict and findings to support the judgment is a defect subject to waiver.[78] Since the power to decide includes the power to decide erroneously, a judgment is not void because of an erroneous finding of fact,[79] especially where such error was inadvertent and harmless and not determinative of the main issue.[80]

Decision in writing as basis for judgment. Ordinarily a judgment should be entered on the basis of a decision in writing,[81] and may not be predicated merely on the opinion,[82] oral direction,[83] or unsigned memorandum[84] of the court, or on an entry in the minutes of the clerk;[85] but absence of a decision in due form has been held not fatal to a judgment.[86]

E. CONFORMITY TO PRIOR PROCEEDINGS

§ 46. Conformity to Process

A judgment should conform to the process served, as, for example, with respect to parties and the amount of the recovery.

A judgment should conform to the writ or process served.[87] Accordingly, where process is directed to, and served on, a party as an individual, judgment may not be rendered against him in a representative capacity, and vice versa.[88] Likewise, process addressed to, and served on, an individual is not sufficient on which to base a judgment against a corporation.[89]

The amount of recovery must conform to, and is

§ 48. —— General Rules

A judgment should be supported by both the pleadings and the proofs, although in this connection substantial accordance is sufficient, and the pleadings are to be taken as a whole.

A court may not properly put on its record a judgment which is not a proper sequence to the pleadings,[95] at least without the consent of all persons affected.[96] It is a general rule that a recovery must be had, if at all, on the facts alleged in the pleadings; the judgment must conform to, and be supported by, the pleadings in the case.[97] It is likewise a general rule that facts proved but not pleaded will not support the judgment,[98] and this is true, even though such facts are found by verdict or finding.[99] An affirmative defense not pleaded is unavailable to support the judgment.[1]

A judgment must also be sustained by the evidence adduced,[2] in connection with facts admitted by the parties in the pleadings or otherwise,[3] and facts pleaded but not proved or admitted on the trial will not support a judgment,[4] although in this connection allegations not necessary to the state-

Unwarranted conclusion of law

A judgment cannot be based on a pleaded conclusion of law not warranted by the facts pleaded.—Hurst v. Crawford, Tex.Civ.App., 216 S.W. 284.

Elimination of aspect of bill

After complainant has been forced by demurrer to eliminate aspect of bill, he cannot be required to accept decree under that aspect.—Kelly v. Carmichael, 129 So. 81, 221 Ala. 371.

When rule inapplicable

"The rule that judgment must be in accordance with the allegations contained in the pleadings does not apply when the evidence, though admitted to prove these allegations, shows beyond dispute that a party is responsible for a wrong or has a right which is not alleged, and that further opportunity to defend would be futile and a source only of delay and possible injustice."—Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. v. Kevitt, 54 N.Y.S.2d 648, 650.

When reconventional demand unnecessary

Where a court is authorized to grant the relief prayed for either absolutely or on a condition, the granting of the relief only on condition is a mere refusal to grant plaintiff the full measure of relief prayed for, and no reconventional demand on the part of defendant is needed to authorize such judgment.—Francez v. Verified account

In an action based on an itemized account the correctness of which is duly verified, and under a statute providing that in the absence of a verified denial the account should be taken as true, it is not necessary to the validity of a judgment on the account, where the required denial has not been made, that other evidence be introduced.—Cusack v. judgment, inconsistent with his own allegations and admissions, cannot be rendered for a party.[12] If defendant admits liability for a particular sum, judgment should be rendered against him for at least such sum, and a judgment of nonsuit, dismissal, or the like is erroneous.[13] A judgment for a defendant who fails to answer a complaint stating a cause of action is erroneous, because the default admits the case alleged.[14] A judgment is void for inconsistency where it grants relief both to plaintiff and to defendant on inconsistent grounds.[15]

In determining whether or not the pleadings support the judgment, they must be taken as a whole,[16] and construed so as to support the judgment, if capable of such a construction.[17] Substantial accordance is sufficient;[18] and to upset a judgment for variance between it and the pleadings in a contested case, it has been held that there must be an entire abandonment of the very substance of the dispute to which defendant was summoned, and the substitution of another which he could not have anticipated, and which he had no opportunity to meet.[19] If defendant merely files an answer and defaults thereafter, a closer registry between pleading and judgment is exacted than after a contested trial.[20] The presumption is that the relief granted is authorized by the pleadings, and the burden is on him who attacks the judgment to show that it was not.[21]

§ 49. —— Limitation to Relief Sought by Pleadings

a. In general
b. Affirmative relief to defendant

a. In General

As a general rule the relief awarded should conform to that sought by the pleadings; but this rule does not always apply, particularly where there is a prayer for general relief or where the statutes have broadened the scope of permissible relief, and in many cases the court has power to grant any relief within the issues formed by the pleadings and justified by the evidence, regardless of the specific relief demanded.

Ordinarily, and in the absence of a statute to the contrary, the relief to be awarded by a judgment should be consistent with, and limited to, that sought

33 C.J. p 1143 note 63.

Legal effect of admitted facts

Where all the material facts are established by admissions in the pleadings, the judgment must be in accordance with the legal effect of such facts regardless of the testimony on other issues, unless by actual or implied consent the parties have tried the case on other substituted issues.—Reiff v. Mullholland, 62 N.E. 124, 65 Ohio St. 178—33 C. J. p 1143 note 65.

Indebtedness of plaintiff

(1) In action by borrowers against lender of money, where uncontroverted proof showed that plaintiffs were indebted to defendants in excess of their claim, entering judgment for plaintiff was error. —Brecht v. Bankers' Sec. Co., 133 S.E. 79, 101 W.Va. 533.

Pleadings of both parties

In determining the relief which may be accorded, it is proper to take into consideration the pleadings of both parties.—Buchanan v. Davis, Tex.Com.App., 60 S.W.2d 192 —Cavers v. Sioux Oil & Refining Co., Tex.Com.App., 49 S.W.2d 862—New Home Sewing Mach. Co. v. Withrow, Tex.Civ.App., 143 S.W.2d 971—Ormsby v. Ratcliff, Tex.Civ.App., 22 S.W. 2d 504, affirmed Ormsby v. Adverse interests between codefendants may be passed on, and a decree rendered between them grounded on the pleadings and proof between plaintiff and defendants and founded on and connected with the subject matter in litigation between plaintiff and one or more of defendants, even though no cross pleadings be filed, especially where the rights as between plaintiff and one of the defendants cannot be adjudicated without determining rights as between codefendants.—Gillam v. by the pleadings[22] or incidental thereto.[23] Where plaintiff has asked only for specific relief, or relief as to a specific subject matter, usually no more extensive or different relief may be accorded to him.[24] However, particularly under statutes or codes in effect so providing, the demand or prayer for relief does not always or necessarily determine or limit the relief which may be granted,[25] and in many cases the rule is stated more broadly to the effect that any relief fairly within the issues formed by the pleadings and justified by the evidence may be given, regardless of the specific relief asked or the form of the action.[26] Accordingly it has been held that, notwithstanding a pleading asks for the wrong relief, or for relief which cannot be granted, the court may grant other and appropriate relief.[27] A party is not deprived of all right to relief merely because he has sought more than he is entitled to, and judgment for less relief than demanded may be given when sustained by the pleadings and proof.[28]

A judgment which grants relief of a character not sought is not for that reason void;[29] at most it is erroneous.[30]

In contested cases, or cases in which an answer has been filed, the relief which may be granted is not limited to that demanded in the complaint or specifically prayed for, particularly under statutes in effect so providing;[31] the court may grant any relief which is consistent with the case made by the pleadings and proofs, and embraced within the issues.[32] The effect of a statute providing that, where defendant appears and answers, plaintiff shall

Amendments to prayer

(1) In a proper case the court will allow amendments to be made to the prayer in order to justify a judgment affording appropriate relief.—Burd v. Downing, 213 P. 287, 60 Cal.App. 493.

(2) It has also been held, however, that an amendment to the prayer of the petition is not a prerequisite to such relief.—Snehoda v. First Nat. Bank in Wichita, 224 P. 914, 115 Kan. 836.

Erroneous prayer for equitable relief

If complaint states facts showing cause of action at law, court will disregard prayer for equitable relief and give plaintiff appropriate remedy in law.—Welsh v. Markham, 210 N.W. 706, 191 Wis. 310.

Compliance with statutory requirements

Where the allegations of a complaint under statute are sufficient to satisfy the statutory requirements, it is immaterial that the prayer for relief is inappropriate.—Hamilton v. Hamilton, 139 N.Y.S. 1095, 78 Misc. 557.

Less interest than entire ownership

Appropriate pleading of entire ownership in property sued for will authorize recovery of a less interest, where warranted by the proof.—Gay v. Jackman, Tex.Com.App., 254 S.W. 927—51 C.J. p 270 note 38 [a].

However, it has also been held that a judgment in an action to determine adverse claims to vacant and unoccupied lands, awarding relief beyond the scope of the complaint, is not a mere irregularity, but extrajudicial and void.—Hurr v. Davis, 193 N.W. 943, 155 Minn. 456, rehearing denied 194 N.W. 379, 155 Minn. 456, certiorari denied 44 S.Ct. 36, 263 U.S. 709, 68 L.Ed. 518, and error dismissed 45 S.Ct. 227, 267 U.S. 572, 69 L.Ed. 794.

Unsupported portion

Where the pleadings do not warrant a decree or part of a decree entered, and the decree or such part of it is clearly and unmistakably beyond the scope of the pleadings, then the decree or such part of it is void and not merely erroneous.—Simmons v. Yoho, 115 S.E. 851, 92 W.Va. 703.

not be confined to the relief demanded is merely to relieve plaintiff from any technical objection that he has not prayed for the precise relief to which, on the trial, he may seem entitled; and the relief to be granted must still conform to, and be consistent with, the case made by the pleadings and proof.[33] A demurrer has been held not an answer within the meaning of such a statute;[34] but there is also authority to the contrary.[35] Defendant's election to stand on the sufficiency of his answer, after a demurrer thereto has been sustained, is not equivalent to withdrawal of the answer, with respect to whether or not relief may be granted exceeding that demanded by the complaint.[36]

Prayer for general relief. Where a prayer for general relief is added to the demand of specific relief, the court is not limited to the specific demand, but may grant, particularly under code practice, such other appropriate relief as may be consistent with the allegations and proofs and necessary to adjust fully the equities of the case,[37] at

"Issue"

Word "issue," as used in statute providing that court may grant plaintiff any relief embraced within issue, is broader than complaint, where answer enlarges the same by introducing new matter.—McAllister v. Union Indemnity Co., 42 P.2d 305, 2 Cal.2d 457.

Granting divorce on complaint asking separation

Even though husband's complaint asked only for separation and general relief, and no statute permits him to bring separation action, yet, where it alleged acts of cruelty entitling him to divorce, it was held sufficient for that purpose, on defendant answering.—Slettebak v. Specific performance in suit to quiet title

Prayer for general relief in petition to quiet title containing no allegation for affirmative equitable relief does not authorize judgment for specific performance.—Congregation B'Nai Abraham v. Arky, 20 S.W.2d 899, 323 Mo. 776.

Personal judgment in stockholder's representative action

"General relief" in a representative action by a stockholder does not comprehend a personal judgment in favor of stockholder against corporation based on debt or other liability either as part of his cause of action against corporation entitling him to sue as its representative or the corporation's cause of action against the wrongdoer.—Briggs v. Kennedy Mayonnaise Products, 297 N.W. 342, 209 Minn. 312.

Foreclosure of lien in tort action

42. Ill.—Condit v. Stevenson, 13 Ill. App. 417.

plaintiff would be permitted to amend at any time without costs.[43]

Alternative relief. A judgment for alternative relief is sometimes proper where demanded,[44] but it is not proper if not asked for in the pleadings.[45] Where relief on two counts is sought in the alternative, it has been held that judgment should not be rendered on both counts.[46]

b. Affirmative Relief to Defendant

In general, an answer which has demanded no affirmative relief, such as an answer setting up merely a defense, will not support a judgment granting affirmative relief to the defendant. On proper pleadings and proof, however, a defendant may have affirmative relief in accordance with that demanded by him.

It is a general rule that where the answer prays for no affirmative relief, defendant can have none, and a judgment granting affirmative relief in such cases is erroneous because not in conformity with the issues raised by the pleadings.[47] An answer which sets up merely a defense will not support a judgment giving defendant affirmative relief;[48] but the fact that pleadings are defensive in their nature does not mean that they may not also be used as a basis for affirmative relief, where the facts pleaded are sufficient to entitle the pleader to affirmative relief, and where there is a prayer for such relief.[49] An affirmative judgment for defendant is proper where it is justified by the pleadings and proof,[50] particularly under codes and practice acts provid-

Accounting
Defendant may be entitled to an accounting, notwithstanding the absence of a demand therefor in his pleading, where the circumstances warrant an accounting and defendant has been led to believe throughout the trial that an accounting would be had.—Pearson v. Juarez, 248 P. 278, 78 Cal.App. 122.

Damages
(1) In a proper case, damages may be awarded to defendant although he has not specifically prayed for such relief.

ing that the judgment may grant to defendant any affirmative relief to which he may be entitled.[51] Ordinarily a judgment granting defendant affirmative relief must be founded on, and be responsive to, his pleadings, and cannot rest on the pleading of some other party;[52] but a defendant may sometimes have affirmative relief against a codefendant notwithstanding he has served no pleading entitling him to such relief, where the facts justifying such relief are set forth in the complaint.[53]

In general, any affirmative relief to a defendant should be in conformity with that demanded by him.[54] The prayer for relief, however, does not necessarily determine the relief to which defendant is entitled,[55] and under some circumstances defendant's failure to ask for affirmative relief will not preclude final adjudication of the respective rights of the parties.[56]

§ 50. —— Limitation and Conformity to Issues

Judgments ordinarily must be responsive to the issues presented in the pleadings, and it has frequently been held that judgments beyond such issues are void. The issues may be broadened by consent of the parties, however, in which case the judgment may embrace the issues actually litigated.

Judgments must be responsive to the issues presented in the pleadings or litigated between the parties, and issues not so raised may not be determined.[57] Where there are several good pleas in

(2) Defendant's right to recover damages may be settled in same action in which plaintiff asserts right to damages against defendant, when both claims involve determination of same questions of fact and consideration of same evidence, whether or not cross action is involved.—Opple v. Ray, 195 N.E. 81, 208 Ind. 450.

Admission of allegations of complaint

In action by insured on policy containing provision that any loss was payable to mortgagee as his interest might appear, mortgagee, who was made party defendant and filed answer admitting allegations of complaint, was entitled to proportionate share of insurer's liability notwithstanding his failure to file affirmative pleading or prayer for affirmative relief, since judgment was bar to any further right mortgagee might assert.—Commercial Union Fire Ins. Failure to demur to or answer counterclaim

Plaintiff, although not having filed any demurrer or answer to counterclaim, could attack those portions of final decree granting relief on counterclaim beyond scope of the pleadings, since, even if counterclaim had been taken for confessed, it would not support a decree beyond scope of relief sought.—Medlinsky v. Premium Cut Beef Co., 57 N.E.2d 31, 317 Mass. 25.

bar to the whole cause of action, plaintiff cannot recover unless he succeeds on all the issues.[58] A judgment should not limit rights of the parties which are not involved in the action and which may arise or be interfered with in the future, especially when uncertainty or confusion would result;[59] and if, under the pleadings, the court is without jurisdiction to determine particular issues, it is without jurisdiction to reserve such issues for future determination.[60]

A judgment on issues not made by the pleadings is at least erroneous, and may be set aside or reversed in a proper proceeding for that purpose;[61] but many cases go further, and hold that judgments based on issues not made by the pleadings or litigated by the parties are coram non judice and void, at least in so far as they go beyond such issues,[62] on the theory that a court has no jurisdiction to pass on questions not submitted to it for decision.[63] If the excessive part of the judgment cannot be readily separated from that which is within the jurisdiction of the court by virtue of the pleadings and proof, the entire judgment has been held to be void.[64]

Issues broadened by consent. Parties may, if they so elect, depart from the issues made by the pleadings, and try other questions relating to the merits of the controversy by consent or acquiescence, and in such cases the judgment is regular and binding on them,[65] the court treating as having been made the amendment which ought to have been made conforming the pleadings to the proof,[66] notwithstanding no formal amendment of the pleadings has been filed;[67] but a mere agreement that a pleading shall be amended in a certain particular does not alter the issues until the amendment is in fact made.[68]

When an issue is tried which is not within the pleadings, no duty rests on the court to render a judgment thereon, and a refusal or failure to do so is not error.[69] Mere stipulations as to the facts of a case, or the evidence of facts, cannot make a case broader than it appears by the allegations of the pleadings, and do not entitle a party to any relief beyond that to which the averments entitle him.[70] Evidence which, although received without objection, has no legitimate relation to the issues which form the basis of the action, or is in absolute conflict with the cause of action which is set out in the complaint, may not be deemed to support a judgment at variance with the pleadings.[71]

Question within court's general jurisdiction

A judgment which determines questions not within the court's jurisdiction, because not in issue, is to that extent void, although the question decided may be within the general jurisdiction of the court.—Hallgren v. Williams, Neb., 20 N.W.2d 499—Petersen v. Dethlefs, 293 N.W. 155, 139 Neb. 572.

The judgment must correspond with the pleadings and proof with respect to the parties for and against whom it is rendered.[72] A judgment for plaintiff alone cannot be sustained where the complaint or proof shows that he is not the sole owner of the claim or property involved, but that others are joint owners thereof.[73] A judgment against a defendant concerning whom no allegations are made in the declaration or complaint, or against whom no relief or judgment is sought, ordinarily is unauthorized.[74] Where the complaint asks different relief as against the different defendants, or alleges only a partial liability on the part of each of them, there cannot be a general judgment against one or all of them for the entire claim or demand.[75] A judgment against a principal may be proper on allegations and proof of acts of his agent;[76] but such a judgment cannot be rendered in the absence of any proof of the alleged agent's authority.[77]

Under appropriate pleadings and prayers, relief

Impropriety of joint judgment

In an action against a bank, brought jointly by two persons for whom money had been deposited in trust, where a judgment for plaintiffs jointly would not accord with the proof, the fact that the bank at the trial made no objection to the joint action cannot enable the court to enter a judgment which the law does not warrant.—Ellison v. New Bedford Five Cents Sav. Bank, 130 Mass. 48.

Failure of codefendant to file counterclaim

Where only one of two codefendants has filed counterclaim, judgment for both defendants on counterclaim is error as to defendant who did not file any counterclaim.—C. I. T. Corporation v. Watkins, 181 S.E. 270, 208 N.C. 443.

"Heirs" as including "descendants"

A pleading seeking to bring in "heirs" of certain persons as a class was held sufficient to make decree binding on descendants.—Swoope v. Darrow, 188 So. 879, 237 Ala. 692.

Intervener

In suit to recover on contract where there was no plea of intervention by an assignee who claimed a sum to be due him from plaintiffs, judgment in favor of plaintiffs and ordering defendants to pay intervener and deduct the amount from that due plaintiffs is unsupported by pleading.—Home Ins. Co., New York, v. Privitt, Tex.Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 294, error dismissed.

Exemplary damages against principal or sureties

In an action against the principal and sureties on a bond, a judgment for exemplary damages against the principal only is not erroneous because the prayer asked such damages against principal and sureties, and the verdict was general, where such damages could not be had against the sureties.—Emerson v. Skidmore, 25 S.W. 671, 7 Tex.Civ. App. 641.

Municipal officials

Where owner of land taken by city brought action for value thereof against city officials in their official capacity, without attempting to state cause of action against them as individuals, and city entered litigation as plaintiff in consolidated condemnation proceeding, judgment against city and officers was held valid as against city, but void on face of judgment roll in so far as purported to be against individual officers.—City of Seminole v. Fields, 43 P.2d 64, 172 Okl. 167.

Judgment for or against one not party see supra § 28.

Judgment against firm

Where individuals of firm only were sued, and cause of action was not alleged, or relief sought, against firm, judgment against the firm and individuals as partners, as well as against individuals, was unauthorized.—Lingwiler v. Anderson, Tex. Civ.App., 270 S.W. 1052.

Husband's joinder in answer

Where defendant's husband joined in answering suit for injuries, it was held that judgment might be rendered against him, although no relief was asked against him by plaintiff. —Dickey v. Jackson, Tex.Civ.App., 293 S.W. 584, reversed on other grounds, Com.App., 1 S.W.2d 577.

75. Neb.—Trester v. Pike, 83 N.W. 676, 60 Neb. 510.
33 C.J. p 1155 note 34.

Relief sought only in alternative

Where judgment against a defendant is sought only in the event it is found that he was not authorized to represent a codefendant, and it is found that he had such authority, judgment on such cause of action cannot be rendered against both defendants.—Saner-Ragley Lumber Co. v. Spivey, Tex.Civ.App., 255 S.W. 193, judgment modified on other grounds Com.App., Spivey v. Saner-Ragley Lumber Co., 284 S.W. 210.

Judgment against single defendant held proper

A complaint alleging performance of services for defendant and others at their request, and an agreement of defendant to pay therefor, supports a judgment against him alone. —Delafield v. San Francisco & S. M. R. Co., 40 P. 958, 5 Cal.Unrep. 71.

may be granted to one defendant as against a codefendant;[78] but the court should not go beyond the pleadings to decree relief as between codefendants.[79]

The principle of idem sonans may be invoked to obviate a variance in the names of the parties,[80] and, where, on an inspection of the whole record, the identity of the parties named in the judgment and the pleading is clear, the apparent variance will be held to be a clerical misprision and immaterial, or at least amendable.[81] A variance may be waived.[82]

Ejectment. A judgment in ejectment must conform to the pleadings and proofs with respect to the parties involved.[83] This applies where the action is predicated on a joint demise,[84] and whether the action is the statutory or the common-law action of ejectment.[85] A judgment for all the plaintiffs cannot be given where the proof shows title in some,[86] or title in part of the premises in one;[87] and it has been held that, if the proof does not show a joint interest in all who join as plaintiffs, the action must fail as to all,[88] although it has also been held that this rule does not apply where an equitable defense has been filed.[89] In some jurisdictions, however, a failure to prove title as to some of the plaintiffs will not prevent a recovery by the others in whom title is shown.[90] A judgment for plaintiffs may be predicated on a declaration alleging that the lessors jointly and severally demised, and proof of a tenancy in common, there being nothing impracticable in joint and several demises of the same land.[91]

A judgment may be rendered for or against one or more or all codefendants, in so far as the issues, proof, and record may justify it.[92]

(2) Personal or Representative Capacity

Judgment for or against a party ordinarily must be in the capacity, personal or representative, in which he sues or is sued.

Generally the judgment should be for and against the parties in the capacity in which they sue and are sued.[93] Where an individual cause of action is alleged, but plaintiff describes himself as suing in a representative capacity, he may nevertheless recover in his individual right on proof of the individual cause of action alleged, the allegations as to his representative character being rejected as mere descriptio personæ.[94] Where, however, plaintiff alleges a cause of action accruing to him only in a representative capacity, and sues in such a capacity, proof of a cause of action belonging to him as an individual is a variance, amounting to a failure of

Absence of claim of adverse title
A decree was held void in so far as it awarded rights in land to some defendants as against other defendants, where they had not claimed any title adverse to each other.—Deming v. Nelson, 210 N.W. 726, 50 S.D. 484.

proof, and it has been held that he cannot recover.[95] Similarly, where plaintiff sues in his individual capacity and the proof shows a right to recover only in a representative capacity, it has been held that there is a fatal variance.[96] A defense good against plaintiff in his individual capacity is not necessarily a bar to a judgment for plaintiff in his representative capacity.[97]

A personal judgment against a defendant who is sued only in his official or representative capacity,[98] or a judgment against one in his representative capacity when he is sued only in his individual capacity,[99] is defective. Where the pleadings are ambiguous as to the capacity in which plaintiff sues, or defendant is sued, the theory on which the case was tried controls the judgment.[1]

Executors and administrators. It has been held that, if an executor or administrator sues as such, he cannot recover in his individual right;[2] but there are also cases in which an individual recovery by one who sued as executor or administrator has been regarded as permissible.[3] If a person sues individually, he cannot recover as executor or administrator.[4] If an action is brought against a person individually, judgment cannot be rendered against him as the personal representative of another.[5] Similarly, as a general rule, where one is sued as executor or administrator, no personal judgment may be rendered against him,[6] although there are cases in which it has been regarded as permissible to render a personal judgment against one so sued.[7]

A plaintiff cannot object to a decree because it was rendered against him in the name and capacity in which he sued.[8] Where a party is sued as personal representative, any judgment in his favor should be in his representative, rather than in his individual, capacity.[9]

b. Property Affected

A judgment affecting property should be limited to that described in the pleadings and proof, and, according to some authorities, a judgment affecting other property is void.

A judgment affecting property should be limited to the property described in the pleadings,[10] and judgments affecting other property have been held

Judgments held proper

(1) Where there was no question as to what land was in dispute and land was fully described in the decree covering land in controversy, decree was not erroneous because not in conformity with pleadings.—Arnd v. Harrington, 287 N.W. 292, 227 Iowa 43.

(2) In action to establish title to strip of land between fence and alleged true boundary line inside fence, a judgment embracing less land than that claimed in pleadings was proper, where land recovered was located precisely as contended for by plaintiffs' petition, except as respects width of strip.—Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. Owings, Tex.Civ.App., 128 S.W.2d 67.

(3) A judgment providing for the return of certain tires was held proper under pleadings dealing with the "equipment" of a certain gasoline station.—Haley v. Traeger, 268 P. 459, 92 Cal.App. 360.

(4) Where description of land in decree vesting title did not follow that in the bill, but included the tract in question and land could be ascertained, there was held to be a sufficient description.—Gaylor v. Gaylor, 1 Tenn.App. 645.

(5) Other cases.

to be void[11] although as to this there is also authority to the contrary.[12] It has been held that the fact that a description in a judgment fixing the boundaries of land involved in a litigation differed from the description in the pleadings was immaterial where there was evidence to support the description in the judgment.[13]

A judgment should also be supported by the proof as to the property involved,[14] and hence a judgment following a description in the complaint which is not supported by the evidence cannot stand.[15]

c. Quieting Title

Actions to quiet title are governed by the general rules with respect to conformity of the judgment with the pleadings and proofs, including the rules as to the granting of affirmative relief to a defendant.

The rule requiring the relief afforded by the judgment to conform to the case made out by the pleadings and proofs has been applied in actions to quiet title.[16] It is error to grant a decree quieting plaintiff's title on proof of facts showing merely a right to specific performance,[17] and, where the bill contains only statutory averments, relief cannot be granted on general principles of equity.[18] Under the broad provisions of some statutes, plaintiff may so frame his petition as to authorize either legal or equitable relief.[19]

Affirmative relief not authorized by the pleadings and proof cannot be granted to defendant,[20] and in some jurisdictions it has been held that the court cannot decree that defendant has the superior title where he files no cross complaint[21] and does not pray for such relief;[22] but in others it has been held that defendant's title may be declared superior if the facts justify it, although he files no cross complaint or otherwise asks for such relief.[23] If defendants set up equities and pray for judgment and for general relief, an award of affirmative

Concession by party

A judgment awarding plaintiff land to which he concedes he is making no claim, and to which defendant appears to have a better title, is erroneous.—Hecker v. Bleish, 3 S. W.2d 1008, 319 Mo. 149.

51 C.J. p 269 note 25 [a]-[g].

Jurisdictional facts

Although defendant's occupancy of the land was not alleged in the pleadings, it was nevertheless jurisdictional, and the court having found as a fact that defendant was in actual possession when the suit was commenced, the bill was properly dismissed.—Dolph v. Norton, 123 N. W. 13, 158 Mich. 417.

Taxes, penalties, and costs

In action for possession of, and to quiet title to, realty, portion of judgment allowing personal recovery against defendant for accumulated taxes, penalties, and costs, and decreeing lien against property, was held void where issue as to such part of judgment was not raised by pleadings or evidence.—Fuqua v. Watson, 46 P.2d 486, 172 Okl. 624.

Cancellation of deed as cloud on title

Where the clear purpose of a bill is to relieve plaintiff's land from the incubus of a mortgage foreclosure sale, allegations which show the invalidity of the sale as against plaintiff, coupled with a prayer for general relief, are sufficient to warrant cancellation of the deed as a cloud on title, although the special prayer was for redemption and reconveyance to the mortgagor.—Dixie Grain Co. v. Quinn, 61 So. 886, 181 Ala. 208.

Under statute authorizing determination of adverse claims

Where the complaint embraces every averment necessary to sustain an action to quiet title under the general provisions of the statute relating to such actions, a judgment quieting title is proper, although the action was brought under another statute authorizing an action to determine adverse claims by one in adverse possession of the property who has paid taxes thereon during a designated period.—Ernst v. Tiel, 197 P. 809, 51 Cal.App. 747.

Relief based on plaintiff's pleading

Where the statute authorizes the court to determine the title and interests of all the parties, and plaintiff's prayer asks that this be done, it is proper for the court, if title is found to be in defendant, so to determine, without any prayer on the latter's part.—Himmelberger-Harrison Lumber Co. v. Jones, 119 S.W. 366, 220 Mo. 190—51 C.J. p 276 note 34.

relief is proper, without a prayer for "affirmative relief" in those terms.[24]

d. Other Applications

The rules governing conformity of judgments with the pleadings, issues, and proofs have been applied in a great variety of cases, the propriety of the particular relief granted depending on all the facts and circumstances.

The rules with respect to the necessity that judgments conform to, and be sustained by, the pleadings and proofs, the relief sought, and the issues, have been applied in numerous cases in addition to those already considered; and, following such rules, the relief granted under the circumstances has been held proper in actions or judgments for or relating to accounts or accounting,[25] annulment of marriage,[26] antenuptial agreements,[27] attorney's fees,[28] bonds,[29] breach of marriage promise,[30] building contracts,[31] cancellation of instruments,[32] commissions,[33] deeds,[34] dower,[35] easements,[36] ejectment,[37] establishment or priority of liens,[38] executors and administrators,[39] foreclosure,[40] improvements,[41] in-

Fraud as "actual" or "constructive"

Where petition for cancellation of lease recited facts and prayed for a decree declaring the lease to be illegal and void because of fraud, and ordering cancellation thereof and for such other, further, and different relief as equity and justice might require, a holding that constructive fraud existed was within petition, although neither "actual" nor "constructive" was used in connection with charge of fraud.—Johnson v. Reformation

It has been held that reformation need not have been asked for specifically in the pleading to permit the court to enforce a contract as actually made, although not in accordance with a copy attacked as fraudulent.—Hornick v. Union Pac. R. Co., 118 P. 60, 85 Kan. 568, 38 L.R.A.,N.S., 826, Ann.Cas.1913A 208.

Okl.—Bishop v. Franks, 107 P.2d 358, 188 Okl. 196.

Profit from resale

Where, at the time a suit against a company and some of its stockholders for accounting was instituted, one defendant had not yet acquired a deed of trust to the corporation's property, and no supplemental bill was filed, it could not have been contemplated by the pleadings that the holder of the trust deed should be required to account for any profit from resale after foreclosure, and a judgment requiring him to so account was without the scope of the pleadings, and void.—Lewis v. School, Mo.App., 244 S.W. 90.

Personal judgment against corporate director

Where complaint by stockholders alleged that director failed to account for proceeds of stock and appropriated other money of corporation and prayed an accounting, personal judgment against director exceeded relief prayed for.—Angel v. Mellen, 285 P. 461, 43 Idaho 750.

Claim not referred to in complaint

In action for accounting by landowner on contract for building houses, judgment including amount based on claim not referred to in complaint could not be sustained.—Austin v. Harry E. Jones, Inc., 44 P. 2d 667, 6 Cal.App.2d 493.

Bar of future action

A recital in a judgment denying plaintiff's claim for forfeiture and cancellation of lease that it should not be a bar to any future action for damages or specific performance, being an adjudication of a matter not presented by the pleadings, is erroneous.—Masterson v. Amarillo Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 253 S.W. 908.

Money damages held improper

Where wife, prior to divorce, contracted with husband and executed deed of community property to him, and after divorce instituted action to annul contract and deed for fraud, a judgment awarding plaintiff money damages and directing defendant to pay plaintiff support money for child was void, as without the issues.—Stanley v. McKenzie, 240 P. 1033, 29 Ariz. 288.

Cancellation not sought

Where both parties to suit sought construction and specific performance of contract, and neither attacked its validity nor sought its cancellation, court erred in canceling it.—Kentucky & West Virginia Power Co. v. Gilliam, 276 S.W. 983, 210 Ky. 820.

Establishment and foreclosure of liens

In suit to cancel purported deed on ground it was in fact a mortgage, that part of judgment which fixed a tax lien and foreclosed it and foreclosed a vendor's lien was erroneous, where neither party sought the fixing of tax lien or foreclosure of tax lien and vendor's lien.—Duncan v. Green, Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 656, error dismissed.

Absence of interest in land

Where only issues before court were existence of alleged indebtedness and whether quitclaim deed was intended as mortgage, portion of judgment adjudging that plaintiff had no interest whatever in land was held void.—State ex rel. Shull v. Moore, 27 P.2d 1048, 167 Okl. 28.

Extent of interest foreclosed

In action to foreclose vendor's lien where only evidence of defendant's interest was in deed from plaintiff to defendant, judgment foreclosing an interest less than described in deed was error.—Smith v. Totton, Civ.App., 98 S.W.2d 1019, affirmed Totton v. Smith, 113 S.W.2d 517, 131 Tex. 219.

Vacation of judgment

In suit to enjoin enforcement of judgment, court's attempt to vacate judgment was held nugatory, since it was unauthorized by pleadings.—Baria v. Taylor, 57 S.W.2d 858.

Personal judgment; order of sale

In suit to restrain sale under trust deed, judgment against mortgagor personally and ordering sale was held not warranted under pleadings.—Farm & Home Savings & Loan Ass'n of Missouri v. Muhl, Tex.Civ. App., 37 S.W.2d 316, error refused.

Disability

Where an accident policy provides indemnity for partial and total disability, if insured sues for the indemnity payable for a total disability he cannot, in the same action, recover indemnity for a partial disability which succeeded his total disability.—Rayburn v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co., 54 S.E. 283, 141 N.C. 425.

Fraud

Where issue of fraud was irrelevant because not pleaded, finding thereon for insurer sued for premiums would not support judgment for insurer.—American Nat. Ins. Co. v. Villegas, Tex.Civ.App., 32 S.W.2d 1109.

Veatch v. Franklin, 98 P.2d 724, 163 Or. 500.

82. Tex.—St. Louis, B. & M. Ry. Co. v. Price, Civ.App., 244 S.W. 642, affirmed, Com.App., 269 S.W. 422.

83. Corporate nature of body

A judgment in quo warranto cannot be sustained where it is against respondents as officers of an unin-

ers,[84] recovery of purchase price of property,[85] replevin,[86] rescission,[87] services rendered,[88] specific performance,[89] statutory penalties,[90] taxes or assessments,[91] trespass,[92] trusts,[93] wages and penalties,[94] workmen's compensation,[95] and other matters.[96]

§ 52. —— Nature and Form of Action

In general the judgment is limited by the nature of the action; but in code states, where the common-law forms of pleading have been abolished, the form or name of the action does not control the relief which may be granted.

In general the scope of the judgment is limited by the nature or character of the action.[97] At corporated body and the issue raised by the pleadings is whether the relators are entitled to the offices in an incorporated body which are claimed and held by respondents. —Commonwealth v. Grim, 99 A. 156, 255 Pa. 40.

Tex.—Bancroft v. Brown, Civ.App., 283 S.W. 206—Holloway v. Miller, Civ.App., 272 S.W. 562.

Return of property

In an action for the balance due on the purchase price of property in which defendant asks only for damages, or for a return of payments made, and in which the only issue is whether there should be a money judgment in favor of one party against the other, a money judgment for defendant coupled with an adjudication that the property be returned to plaintiff is improper.—Cresci v. Gandy, 124 A. 68, 99 N.J. Law 417—Union Garage Co. v. Wilner, 120 A. 4, 98 N.J.Law 441.

Balance due seller

In seller's action for purchase price, verdict for buyer on his counterclaim for fraud was unwarranted, where, if utmost amount shown as damages were subtracted from price remaining unpaid, there would still be a remainder in seller's favor.—Gross v. Reiners, 124 A. 811, 100 Conn. 732.

Goods sold and delivered; indebitatus assumpsit

The fact that the declaration sought to recover for goods sold and delivered did not prevent recovery in indebitatus assumpsit, where it

common law a judgment must be warranted by the form of the action.[98] Thus it has been held that a judgment in debt is erroneous where the declaration is in assumpsit[99] or in case,[1] or in replevin;[2] and similarly that, where the declaration is in debt, a judgment in assumpsit[3] or in damages[4] is erroneous; but, by the practice of the majority of states, a judgment in damages on a declaration in debt will be good, the objection being merely technical,[5] and, vice versa, a judgment entered in debt instead of in damages is good.[6] On a declaration in trespass, a recovery in case has been permitted.[7]

In code states, the common-law forms of pleading having been abolished, it is the duty of the courts to give such judgment as the pleadings and evidence warrant, without regard to the form or name of the action.[8]

§ 53. —— Grounds of Action or Defense

As a general rule, a judgment for a plaintiff must be based on the cause of action which he has alleged, and not on some theory inconsistent with, or totally different from, that suggested in his pleading. Similarly, a defendant ordinarily must prevail according to the case made by his answer.

Relief to, or a recovery by, plaintiff must be based on, and justified by, facts alleged in his pleading.[9] Unless defendant, by his silence or conduct, has acquiesced in the trial of the new and different cause of action on which the judgment proceeded, as discussed supra § 50, a plaintiff ordinarily must recover, if at all, on the cause of action which he has alleged, and a judgment in his favor must be based on the theory or ground of liability on which in his pleadings he has placed his right to recover.[10]

Estoppel

Where a complaint failed to allege facts constituting an estoppel, a judgment on that ground cannot be upheld, whether a cause of action could or could not have been maintained, had it been pleaded.—Gibraltar Realty Co. v. Security Trust Co., 136 N.E. 636, 192 Ind. 502.

Public or private way

In a suit brought on the theory of the existence of a private way, judgment cannot be based on the theory that the road or way was a public one.

Utah.—Thornley Land & Livestock Co. v. Morgan Bros. Land & Livestock Co., 17 P.2d 826, 81 Utah 317.

Contract as oral or written

(1) Judgment on wholly written contract has no support in pleadings declaring on partly written contract. —C. A. Bryant Co. v. Hamlin Independent School Dist., Civ.App., 18 S. W.2d 750, certified questions answered 14 S.W.2d 53, 118 Tex. 255.

(2) In suit to recover for interference with contract, where plaintiff alleged a contract in writing, plaintiff was not entitled to relief for interference with an oral contract collateral to written contract.—Tompkins v. Sullivan, 48 N.E.2d 15, 313 Mass. 459.

Negligence; trespass

(1) Where the allegations and trial are based exclusively on the theory of negligence, recovery on a ground other than negligence is not permissible.

Nature of tenancy

Where plaintiffs alleged and trial proceeded on theory that defendants were hold-over tenants for one year, it was error to grant judgment for plaintiffs on ground that tenancy was from month to month and that proper notice of intention to quit

an inconsistent theory will not be permitted.[12] In some jurisdictions, however, a party is entitled to any relief appropriate to the facts alleged and proved, irrespective of the theory on which they may be alleged;[13] and the fact that a party has pleaded an erroneous theory does not bar him from recovering if the facts he has pleaded support a proper theory of recovery.[14]

Proof of a different cause of action from that alleged in the declaration or complaint amounts to a failure of proof, and is not a mere variance;[15] but, where the substantial facts creating the liability are alleged and proved, a recovery may be had, although they are alleged inaccurately in detail, because this does not amount to a change of theory or a recovery on grounds not alleged.[16] Where recovery is sought on several grounds, a judgment supported by one of the grounds is proper notwithstanding the failure to establish the other grounds of liability;[17] but in such case the judgment must be supported by all the elements of at least one of the different grounds of recovery.[18]

Ordinarily defendant must prevail, if at all, according to the case made by his answer;[19] but this had not been given.—McAuley v. Cresci, 19 N.Y.S.2d 221.

Recovery under different statutory provision

(1) Plaintiff cannot sue on one statute and sustain verdict justifiable only on different statute.—Batterton v. Pima County, 271 P. 720, 34 Ariz. 347.

(2) However, although facts proved did not make out breach of warranty under subdivision of statute on which plaintiff relied, but made out breach of warranty under another subdivision, plaintiff was held entitled to judgment.—Ryan v. Progressive-Grocery Stores, 175 N.E. 105, 255 N.Y. 338, 74 A.L.R. 339.

Retention of property

Buyer's complaint to recover price of property after rescission for breach of warranty and offer to return did not authorize judgment based on breach of warranty permitting buyer to keep the property. —Schmelzer v. Winegar, 216 N.Y.S. 507, 217 App.Div. 194.

Affirmance of contract

Where purchaser elected to affirm contract and sued for damages for breach, the court was without authority to render judgment for cancellation of deed and a return of the purchase price.—Freeman v. Anderson, Tex.Civ.App., 119 S.W.2d 1081.

Rescission; fraud

Decree for rescission of sale of stock was unauthorized where purchaser sued for damages for fraud. —Bondurant v. Raven Coal Co., Mo. App., 25 S.W.2d 566.

Actions on notes

(1) Judgment for plaintiff was not erroneous on ground that plaintiff declared on promissory note and proved defendant indebted on bills of exchange.—Ætna Inv. Corporation v. Barnes, Mo.App., 52 S.W.2d 221.

(2) Where complaint was based on note given for money loaned, contention that judgment was entered for money loaned, and hence was improper, was without merit.—Cassetta v. Baima, 288 P. 330, 106 Cal.App. 196.

is not unqualifiedly true,[20] and, where the burden of proof is on plaintiff, defendant is entitled to take advantage of a failure of proof, regardless of the pleadings.[21]

Tort or contract. A pleading sounding in tort will not support a judgment based on a contract,[22] and conversely, under a pleading on a cause of action sounding in contract, a recovery as for a tort is erroneous.[23] It has been held that these rules have not been changed by code provisions;[24] but it has also been held that, under statutes abolishing forms of action and requiring that merits only shall be considered, recovery may be had in contract, if the allegations and proof support such a right, although the declaration sounds in tort.[25] Where a pleading sets forth two causes of action, one in contract and the other in tort, and defendant has not requested a separation of the causes, plaintiff may recover on either one which he may prove,[26] although he may not recover on both.[27]

General and special assumpsit. Plaintiffs who sue on a special or express contract ordinarily cannot recover on an implied contract, such as a quantum meruit, and vice versa,[28] although in some cases such recovery has been permitted.[29] Where the declaration or complaint contains counts or allegations seeking recovery on an implied contract apart from the special contract, a recovery thereon may be had.[30] Under the common counts no recovery may be had for breach of a special contract.[31]

Legal or equitable. Under codes and practice acts it has frequently been made the duty of the court to grant such relief as the complaint and the proof thereunder show plaintiff entitled to receive, without any distinction between law and equity.[32] The relief granted, however, must nevertheless be consistent with the case made by the complaint.[33] If

Failure of consideration; fraud
Where defense pleaded in an action on contract was failure of consideration, but case was submitted to jury on theory of fraudulent representations whereby defendant was fraudulently induced to execute contract sued on, judgment for defendant could not stand.—Chamblin v. Enforcement of legal rights according to rules of law the complaint is framed solely for equitable relief, even under the code, where the same court administers both systems of law and equity, the party must maintain his equitable action on equitable grounds or fail, even though he may prove a good cause of action at law on the trial.[34] Averment of an equitable cause of action and proof of only a legal cause of action has been held to be a variance amounting to a failure of proof;[35] but, where an equitable cause of action is established, the judgment may award legal relief, as for example, by way of damages, in lieu of equitable relief which in the particular case is impracticable or inequitable.[36] Where the facts alleged will support either legal or equitable relief, or both,[37] or where, by acquiescence and failure to object, the issues have been broadened so as to include the legal cause of action,[38] a judgment on the legal cause of action is proper, although the equity fails. Where the complaint alleges only a cause of action at law, and the proof fails to establish the cause of action alleged, equitable relief ordinarily will not be awarded, although it appears that plaintiff would be entitled thereto on a properly framed complaint;[39] but equitable relief may be granted, although only legal relief is prayed, where both the allegations and the proofs show that plaintiff is entitled to equitable relief.[40]

§ 54. —— Amount of Recovery

a. In general
b. Interest

a. In General

The judgment must conform to the pleadings and proof with respect to the amount of the recovery, although a recovery for more than the sum demanded may be proper where permitted by statute, or where by consent of the parties the pleadings have been enlarged by the evidence. An excessive judgment, although erroneous and subject to correction, is not on that account void.

In amount, as in other respects, a judgment must conform to, and be supported by, the pleadings[41] and the proof.[42] A judgment for more than the Absence of issue limiting plaintiffs' interest

Where defendant had withdrawn an answer alleging as a pro tanto defense that the two plaintiffs were not the only heirs of the ancestor under whom they claimed, without reiterating that allegation in the amended answer, the court, on finding for plaintiffs, properly adjudged them to be the owners of the entire interest in the property involved, since there was no issue limiting their interest.—Asher v. Gibson, 248 S.W. 862, 198 Ky. 285.

In partition
(1) As a general rule plaintiff should not be awarded a greater share of the property than he claims. —Carr v. Langford, Civ.App., 144 S. W.2d 612, affirmed Langford v. Carr, 159 S.W.2d 107, 138 Tex. 330—47 C. J. p 430 note 66.

(2) However, the fact that complainant alleges himself to be entitled to a smaller interest in the lands than that to which he is really entitled under the facts alleged by him has been held to be no bar to a decree vesting in him his proper share. Erroneous basis of value
Judgment in amount based on price contended for by neither party to action for balance due on merchandise sold at price to be fixed on future date was erroneous, legal rights of parties and interest of public at large demanding finding on mount admitted or established to be due cannot tand.[43] Ordinarily a judgment cannot properly be endered for a greater sum, whether by way of debt or damages, than is claimed or demanded by plaintiff in his declaration or complaint,[44] plus, as discussed infra subdivision b of this section, interest in proper cases, and costs,[45] notwithstanding the evidence may prove a greater debt or a greater basis of value in keeping with contention of one side or other.—Maxwell Planting Co. v. A. P. Loveman & Co., 102 So. 45, 212 Ala. 228.

Rents or damages

(1) A judgment awarding rents or substantial damages in an action of ejectment should be based on testimony as to their value.—Hahn v. Cotton, 37 S.W. 919, 136 Mo. 216—19 C.J. p 1240 note 15.

Agreed valuation

Where the agreed valuation of loss of goods sustained by a shipper was a certain amount, it was error to enter judgment for a larger amount.—Lancaster v. Houghton, Tex.Civ.App., 249 S.W. 1103, error dismissed 45 S.Ct. 194, 266 U.S. 590, 69 L.Ed. 456.

Double indemnity

Where an insurance policy provides for the payment of a double indemnity for injuries sustained under specified conditions, the double indemnity cannot be recovered unless specially claimed in the complaint.—Crowder v. Continental Casualty Co., 91 S.W. 1016, 115 Mo.App. 535.

Cumulative recovery

(1) In a suit on a contract for cutting and loading timber, where plaintiffs alleged that they were to pay the expense out of their profits, a recovery of both profits and expenses was erroneous as cumulative.—Brunson v. Hamilton Ridge Lumber Corporation, 115 S.E. 624, 122 S. C. 436.

(2) In proceeding under writ of seizure, where judgment is taken for amount sued for with interest, and property seized was valued in judgment at such amount, rendering further judgment for damages for depreciation of property was error.—Willsford v. Meyer-Kiser Corporation, 104 So. 293, 139 Miss. 387.

45. Tex.—Christian v. Parmer County, Civ.App., 293 S.W. 234.
33 C.J. p 1166 note 3.

Absence of specific claim for costs

(1) The costs that are properly recovered as such in the judgment as an incident to the main adjudication are ordinarily not required to be specifically claimed in the pleadings.—State v. Barrs, 99 So. 668, 87 Fla. 168.

(2) A statutory allowance as costs may be included in the judgamount of damage than was alleged by plaintiff.[46] A judgment for more than the amount originally claimed or demanded, however, may be proper where by consent or without objection of the parties the pleadings are enlarged by the evidence and are deemed amended so as to conform to the testimony;[47] and, where the averment of the amount of damages is deemed immaterial or surplusage, the judgment may exceed the damages claimed.[48] Further, under some statutory provisions, where defendant has appeared and answered, the amount of the judgment may be greater than the sum demanded, should the case justify it.[49] A judgment which includes an item of damages not within the issues raised by the pleadings[50] or established by the evidence[51] is erroneous. Where a bill of particulars is filed, a recovery is in general limited by the amount therein specified.[52]

The validity of a judgment usually is not affected by the mere fact that recovery is for a sum less than the claim originally asserted.[53] Thus single damages are recoverable, although the declaration ment, although not claimed in the declaration.—Paddock v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 60 Mo.App. 328.

Costs held improper

(1) Plaintiff, in action to foreclose land contract, who prayed for possession and foreclosure of defendant's rights and for "such other and equitable relief as may be just and equitable," was held under statute not entitled to recover costs of defendant who put in appearance but made no defense.—Doolittle v. Highlands Sheep Co., 200 N.W. 381, 184 Wis. 625.

(2) In suit to set aside deed, court erred in taxing costs against defendant, although plaintiff recovered a money judgment, where such judgment was proved solely by concessions of defendant as a witness, no costs were incurred therein, no claim had been made for it in petition, and no dispute had existed between parties over it.—Dunning v. Benson, 204 N.W. 260, 200 Iowa 121.

Limitation of default judgment to amount demanded see infra § 214.

Amendment increasing amount

Where, in an action on a policy, plaintiff filed an amended petition increasing the original amount sued for, it was held not error to permit recovery in the increased amount, defendant having admitted that plaintiff's claim amounted to such sum.—Investors' Mortg. Co. v. Marine & Motor Ins. Co. of America, 99 So. 486, 155 La. 627.

Statutory double damages

In an action brought under a statute allowing double damages, where plaintiff alleges that he has been damaged in a certain amount for which he asks judgment and for all other and proper relief according to the statute, the court may render judgment for double the actual damages assessed by the jury, although there was no formal prayer in the complaint for double damages.—Carpenter v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 95 S. W. 985, 119 Mo.App. 204.

In California

(1) The supreme court has held that recovery in excess of the amount demanded in the complaint is unauthorized, although an answer has been filed.—Meisner v. McIntosh, 269 P. 612, 205 Cal. 11.

(2) However, there is some lower court authority holding that a judgment in excess of the amount demanded is not erroneous where an answer has been filed.—McKesson v. Hepp, 217 P. 802, 62 Cal.App. 619—Kimball v. Swenson, 196 P. 781, 51 Cal.App. 361.

(3) Amount erroneously demanded in cross complaint was held immaterial, where relief granted was consistent with law and embraced within issues.—Du Pont v. Allen, 294 P. 409, 110 Cal.App. 541.

Recovery for partial loss

Recovery may be had for a partial insurance loss, although the declaration claims for a total loss and there is no proof of an abandonment.—Watson v. Insurance Co. of North America, 4 Dall., Pa., 283, 1 L.Ed. 835.

Recovery pro tanto

or complaint improperly claims treble damages under a statute.[54] A judgment for less than the proof requires, however, is erroneous,[55] and, where plaintiff is entitled to the entire amount sued for or else to nothing at all, a judgment for a part only is erroneous.[56]

Ad damnum clause. According to some authorities, the amount of recovery is limited by the ad damnum clause of the pleading.[57] According to others, a judgment for the amount shown due by the declaration or petition may be given, although it is greater than the damages laid in the ad damnum clause proper.[58] Where the judgment is greater than the amount shown due by the pleading, it is erroneous, although within the amount laid in the ad damnum clause.[59]

Attorney's fees. An allowance of attorney's fees must be supported by the pleadings[60] and proof.[61] Even where an allowance for attorney's fees is proper, the allowance should not be in excess of the amount demanded or prayed,[62] and in any event, where attorney's fees are not involved in the action or embraced by the pleadings, the judgment should not award as such fees more than the amount required to be taxed as costs.[63]

Installment payments. In a suit on an obligation payable in installments, a judgment awarding recovery for installments falling due between the filing of the suit and the date of the judgment must be supported by the pleadings;[64] but, under appropriate pleadings, the inclusion of such installments in the judgment has been held proper.[65]

Set-off or counterclaim. In the absence of an agreement by the parties,[66] the court should not allow set-offs, credits, or deductions because of matters not pleaded or litigated.[67] The amount of a set-off or counterclaim asserted by defendant cannot exceed that set forth or claimed in his pleadings,[68] notwithstanding the proof shows that he is entitled to more.[69]

Effect of excessiveness; correction. A judgment which is merely excessive under the pleadings and proofs, although erroneous and liable to be reversed, is not on that account void,[70] and, where the excess is very small, the maxim de minimis non curat lex applies.[71] An excessive judgment may generally be corrected by modification either in the trial court or on appeal,[72] and usually the party recovering an excessive judgment is permitted to remit the excess and take a judgment for the proper amount.[73]

b. Interest

An allowance of interest should be supported by the pleadings and proof; but in some instances interest has been held allowable, although the complaint contained no prayer therefor and the judgment was thereby brought above the ad damnum clause.

In order that a party may be entitled to interest, he should make such a case by his pleadings and proof as calls for its allowance.[74] Where such a case is made out, however, an allowance of interest is proper;[75] and it has been held that, where interest is allowable, judgment therefor may be rendered, although interest is not demanded or prayed for in the complaint,[76] thereby bringing the judgment above the ad damnum clause.[77] A judgment allowing interest must be in conformity with the pleadings and proof with respect to the rate of interest[78] and the date from which it is to be computed.[79]

§ 55. Conformity to Verdict, Decision, and Findings in General

a. In general
b. Special verdict, decision, or findings

a. In General

A judgment must be supported by, and conform to, the verdict, decision, or findings in all substantial particulars.

It is a well-established principle of law, applicable to both cases tried by the court[80] and cases tried by a jury,[81] that the judgment must be supported by,[82] and conform to,[83] the verdict, decision, or findings in all substantial particulars. In accordance with this principle it has been held that, where the verdict grants alternative forms of relief, the judgment must make like provision.[84] So, where the verdict is joint, the judgment must be joint[85] unless plaintiff remits the damages as to one of defendants[86] or dismisses the action as to him,[87] or the court grants him a new trial;[88] and, where the verdict is several, the judgment must be several.[89]

As a qualification of the rule it may be stated that the judgment should conform to the real and substantial finding rather than to the literal form of expression of the verdict.[90] Where the finding reported could not possibly be arrived at without also finding another fact not expressed but necessarily included in the verdict, judgment can be rendered as though that fact had been positively found.[91] Superfluous matter in a verdict may be disregarded;[92] and, where the verdict or finding is on an immaterial issue[93] or an issue of law,[94] judgment need not, and should not, be rendered thereon. On the other hand, the validity of a judgment will not be affected by incorporating immaterial matters therein.[95]

One real exception to the rule that judgments must conform to the verdict or findings consists of cases where a judgment is rendered non obstante veredicto, discussed infra §§ 59–61. Another exception exists in cases where trial by jury is not a matter of right and the verdict or findings of a jury are merely advisory,[96] as in equity cases.[97]

Failure of the judgment to conform to the verdict has been held not to render the judgment void or inoperative,[98] and the proper remedy in such case is by a motion to modify the judgment,[99] or according to some authority,[1] but not other,[2] by appeal or writ of error.

After direction of a verdict, it has been held that the court may render the judgment demanded by the undisputed evidence, even though the directed verdict is insufficient to support the judgment.[3]

Conformity to conclusions of law. While it has been held that the trial court's conclusions of law must be predicated on, and find support in, the court's fact findings, and the judgment must follow the conclusions of law,[4] it has also been held that the judgment need not conform to findings or conclusions of law,[5] except where it is entered by the clerk on a decision without further judicial action by the court.[6]

Conformity to report of referee. If the report of a referee or master is accepted by the court, or sustained against exceptions, or judgment is entered thereon pursuant to statute, the judgment must conform to its findings and conclusions; to

Whenever the judgment is based on a special verdict, decision, or findings, they must be sufficiently comprehensive, certain, and consistent to sustain the judgment and justify it as a matter of law.

Whenever the judgment is based on a special verdict, decision, or findings, they must be sufficiently comprehensive, certain, and consistent to sustain the judgment and justify it as a matter of law.[8] As a general rule special findings cannot be aided by the evidence,[9] and the court cannot render a judgment on an issue submitted to the jury but not determined by their verdict,[10] no matter how clear and undisputed the evidence may be;[11] where the issues submitted to the jury are not determinative were against the undisputed proof or without evidence to support them.[15] The rule does not, however, require that judgment be rendered in accordance with immaterial findings, or findings on facts not within the issues raised by the pleadings;[16] nor does it require that no judgment be rendered unless the verdict contains a finding of all the facts on which it may be based.[17] On the contrary, the judgment may be based on the verdict rendered by the jury on the special issues submitted to it, together with the facts admitted in the pleadings, or established by the undisputed evidence,[18] and such facts as are incident to the issues on which the jury made findings which have support in the evidence.[19]

tion, as reasonably construed[23] in the light of the pleadings and evidence and settled principles of law.[24] The judgment must be rendered in favor of the party indicated by the verdict provided his pleadings are sufficient to sustain it.[25] A judgment must be for plaintiff on a finding in his favor,[26] and for defendant on a finding in his favor.[27] Where the finding is against all defendants, the judgment must be entered against all,[28] except those properly dismissed from the action after verdict,[29] and, where it is in favor of all defendants, the judgment likewise must be entered in favor of them all.[30]

Although there is also contrary authority,[31] it has been held that a verdict against one or more of several defendants authorizes the entry of a judgment in favor of defendants not mentioned in it,[32] and a verdict in favor of a defendant charged as primarily liable has been held to authorize a judgment in favor of defendants secondarily liable.[33] When the verdict is for plaintiff on one count only, a judgment for defendant on the other counts has been held proper.[34] In designating the parties the use of the singular for the plural or vice versa will not amount to a variance between the verdict and judgment, where it is evidently a mistake and does not cast obscurity on the decision,[35] but the use of the plural to designate all the parties on one side requires the entry of a judgment in favor of all such parties, and a judgment in favor of only one of them is erroneous.[36] An obvious misnomer in the verdict may be corrected in the judgment without constituting a variance.[37] So a party described in the pleadings as a corporation may be so described in the judgment, although the verdict fails to do so.[38]

§ 57. —— Amount

of a statute permitting the court to disregard the verdict or findings,[40] and a judgment for either a greater[41] or a smaller[42] amount than indicated by the verdict or findings, without the consent of the party adversely affected,[43] is erroneous unless there is a mere error in computation of the amount, and sufficient data is given from which the court may compute the correct amount,[44] or the pleadings and evidence are insufficient to support the verdict or findings,[45] or, according to some cases, where the jury have mistakenly failed to follow the instructions given them,[46] although as to this there is also authority to the contrary.[47] A small variance in amount between the verdict and the judgment may, however, be disregarded as immaterial.[48] Ordinarily a judgment for a specified amount cannot regularly be entered on a verdict which does not assess the amount;[49] but where the amount can be ascertained by mere computation, or is undisputed, it is not reversible error for the court to make the computation and to enter judgment on the verdict for the amount thus ascertained.[50]

Excessive verdict. Where the verdict is supported in some amount, it has been held that the court must enter judgment on the verdict, even though it considers the amount unjust or excessive.[51] It has also been held, however, that if the verdict is excessive and the excess is remitted, judgment for the residue may be entered on the verdict.[52]

torney's fees, on a verdict in favor of plaintiff for the principal and interest it has been held that it is not error for the court in rendering judgment to add the attorney's fees provided for in such obligation.[53]

§ 58. —— Interest

As a general rule the judgment must be supported by, and conform to, the verdict, decision, or findings with respect to the allowance of interest and the amount thereof.

As a general rule the judgment must be supported by, and conform to, the verdict, decision, or findings with respect to the allowance of interest and the amount thereof,[54] and if the jury do not allow interest in their verdict the court cannot allow it.[55] Also, where the date from which interest runs is a matter for the jury to determine, if the jury, while allowing interest, fail to fix the date from which it is to run the court cannot do so.[56] Interest may be allowed, however, on the verdict from the time of its return,[57] and, where statutory authority therefor exists, on the judgment, even though the verdict is silent thereon.[58]

The rule barring the inclusion of interest in the judgment where the verdict fails to allow it has been held to apply even where the issue of interest is not submitted to the jury.[59] It has been held, however, that where no issue as to interest is submitted to the jury and the right thereto exists as a matter of law, and there is no dispute as to the amount thereof, the court may allow interest in its judgment even though the verdict is silent.[60] Where there is no issue as to the date from which interest is to run, it has been held that the court in its judgment may fix such time in accordance with the rules of substantive law.[61]

Interest may be included in the judgment where the verdict or finding with regard to it is sufficiently certain and definite as to amount,[62] or if, without specifying the amount of the interest allowed, it contains data from which it can be calculated with certainty and precision;[63] but where the amount is not definite and certain,[64] and cannot be made certain,[65] the court is not authorized to render a judgment for interest. If the specification of interest is insufficient, a judgment for the principal amount found, without interest, is supported by the verdict.[66] Error in calculation of interest may generally be corrected by amendment or modification of the judgment in the trial court or on appeal.[67]

§ 59. Judgment Non Obstante Veredicto

A judgment non obstante veredicto is a judgment given for one party notwithstanding the finding of a verdict in favor of the other party, and a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto means a motion for judgment notwithstanding the entire verdict, the purpose being to avoid a new trial and to secure a final judgment in favor of the movant.

In its broadest sense a judgment non obstante veredicto is a judgment given for one party notwithstanding the finding of a verdict in favor of the other party.[68] A motion for judgment non obstante veredicto means a motion for judgment notwithstanding the entire verdict.[69] The purpose of the motion is to avoid a new trial and to secure a final judgment in favor of the movant.[70] The motion is wholly separate and distinct from a motion for a new trial,[71] and it has been distinguished from a motion in arrest of judgment.[72] Moreover it is not construable as a motion to amend the verdict.[73]

Although, as discussed infra §§ 60–61, the practice with respect to granting judgment non obstante veredicto is general and well settled, in a few jurisdictions it is narrowly limited in application.[74]

Distinction

"It is true that in some respects the two motions are similar. For example, both are directed only to material defects in the record. However, there are also important distinctions. The party filing a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict asks the court to do something more than merely to arrest the judgment. Such a motion requests the court to go farther and render judgment in plaintiff's favor notwithstanding the verdict which has been found against him. A party filing a motion in arrest of judgment does not ask the court for a judgment in his favor, but only asks that the judgment be arrested, and alleges that the party in whose favor the verdict was rendered is not entitled to the judgment of the court because of some insufficiency in the record proper."—First Nat. § 60. —— When and for Whom Granted

a. In General; Pleading as Basis for Judgment

At common law, and in the absence of statute providing otherwise, a judgment notwithstanding the verdict may be rendered when, and only when, the pleadings entitle the party against whom the verdict is rendered to a judgment and where the party against whom such judgment is rendered is precluded from recovery by some matter not subject to amendment, or which could not be supplied on a new trial.

Originally, at common law, a judgment non obstante veredicto could be entered only when the plea confessed the cause of action and set up matters in avoidance which were insufficient, although found true, to constitute either a defense or a bar to the action.[75] In such a case plaintiff was entitled to a judgment in his favor notwithstanding a verdict for defendant.[76] Thus a judgment non obstante veredicto at common law was merely one species of a judgment on the pleadings.[77] Some statutes expressly provide for the rendering of

v. Branch, Com.App., 267 S.W. 260—Thornton v. Athens Nat. Bank, Civ.App., 252 S.W. 278—Compton v. Skeeters, Civ.App., 250 S.W. 201—33 C.J. p 1178 note 11 [f].

(2) Court could, however, ignore jury's findings where under no view of pleadings and evidence was plaintiff entitled to recover.—Vogel v. Allen, 13 S.W.2d 340, 118 Tex. 196—Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. Connellee, Com.App., 11 S.W.2d 158, followed in Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. Akin, 11 S.W.2d 1113, and rehearing denied Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. Connellee, 14 S.W.2d 1020, and 20 S.W.2d 758—Spence v. National Life & Accident Ins. Co., Civ.App., 59 S.W.2d 212—Ellis County v. McKay, Civ.App., 56 S.W.2d 310—Sproles v. Rosen, Civ.App., 47 S.W.2d 331, affirmed 84 S.W.2d 1001, 126 Tex. 51—Bertrand v. Mutual Motor Co., Civ.App., 38 S.W.2d 417, error refused.

(3) Disregard of findings on immaterial issues was not violation of rule prohibiting rendition of judgment non obstante veredicto.—Klock v. Dowd, Com.App., 280 S.W. 194—Chaison v. Stark, Civ.App., 29 S.W.2d 500, reversed on other grounds Stark v. Chaison, Com.App., 50 S.W.2d 776—Atlas v. Byers, Civ.App., 21 S.W.2d 1080—Long v. McCoy, Civ.App., 294 S.W. 633, affirmed McCoy v. Long, Com.App., 15 S.W.2d 234, rehearing denied 17 S.W.2d 783—Yardley v. Houston Oil Co. of Texas, Civ.App., 288 S.W. 861—Sheek v. Texas Co., Civ.App., 286 S.W. 336—McGee v. Cage, Civ.App., 283 S.W. 283.

(4) Furthermore, rule prohibiting judgments non obstante veredicto was not violated by giving of summary instructions or withdrawing case from jury.—Adams v. Houston Nat. Bank, Com.App., 1 S.W.2d 878—Noble v. Empire Gas & Fuel Co., Civ.App., 20 S.W.2d 849, affirmed Empire Gas & Fuel Co. v. Noble, Com.App., 36 S.W.2d 451.

(5) However, the Texas practice has been modified by statute, as discussed infra § 60, and judgment notwithstanding the verdict is authorized in certain cases.

Cause of action arising prior to statute

The amended statute providing that when, on statements in the pleadings, or on the evidence received on the trial, one party is entitled by law to judgment in his favor, judgment shall be so rendered by the court, although a verdict has been found against him, determined the procedural rights of parties in an action filed after the statute's effective date, even though the cause of action arose prior to the effective date.—Miller v. Star Co., 15 N.E.2d 151, 57 Ohio App. 485.

Plaintiff's objection to legal sufficiency of denial in answer by motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict came too late, and the overruling of such motion by the trial court did not constitute error under statute authorizing judgment notwithstanding the verdict where, on statements in pleading, a party is entitled by law to judgment in his favor.—Shoemaker v. Standard Oil Co., 20 N.E.2d 520, 135 Ohio St. 262.

In Florida

(1) It has been held that granting of motions for judgments non obstante veredicto is governed by common-law principles and statute providing that appellate court reversing order granting new trial should direct final judgment to be entered for party who had obtained verdict, unless motion for judgment non obstante veredicto should be made and prevail, did not change grounds or scope of motions for judgments non obstante veredicto as they existed at time statute was adopted.—Dudley v. Harrison, McCready & Co., 173 So. 820, 127 Fla. 687, rehearing denied 174 So. 729, 128 Fla. 338.

(2) Where, however, action for injuries to child at railroad crossing was predicated on alleged negligence of railroad's employees and evidence showed that employees were not negligent, refusal to sustain defendant railroad's motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict for child was held reversible error.—Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Canady, 165 So. 629, 122 Fla. 447.

party against whom such judgment is rendered is precluded from recovery by some matter not subject to amendment, or which could not be supplied on a new trial,[82] and where the defect in the pleading was not cured by the verdict;[83] but under such circumstances it is proper to enter judgment for the party entitled notwithstanding the verdict against him.[84] A proceeding for a motion non obstante veredicto must be founded on substantial insufficiency of the pleading on which the verdict surely rested,[85] and the defect must be such that no cause of action or defense is stated in the pleading.[86]

When rendered for plaintiff. A judgment non obstante veredicto may be rendered for plaintiff where the issue determined for defendant is immaterial,[87] provided the case is not one calling for a repleader, within the rules discussed hereinafter in this subsection, and where the plea or answer sets up facts insufficient in law to constitute a defense,[88] or

Verdict responsive to pleadings

In ejectment action, where defendant entered plea of not guilty and special plea of adverse possession of part of premises, verdict for plaintiff as to part described in the special plea was responsive to the plea of general issue as limited by the second plea, and hence would not furnish basis for judgment non obstante veredicto on ground that verdict was on special plea only and that special plea was bad.—Wicker v. Williams, 189 So. 30, 137 Fla. 752.

Defects cured by adverse pleading

In Oklahoma

The trial court is without jurisdiction to enter judgment non obstante veredicto unless the party in whose favor such judgment is rendered would be entitled to judgment on the pleadings or the jury has returned special findings of fact contrary to the general verdict.—Garrett v. where on the whole record it appears that the right of the case is with plaintiff.[89] Where there is a good plea or answer filed, plaintiff is not, under common-law principles, entitled to a judgment non obstante veredicto.[90]

When rendered for defendant. A judgment non obstante veredicto may be rendered for defendant where plaintiff's pleadings are insufficient to support a judgment in his favor, as where the declaration states no cause of action,[91] and the defect is not cured by the answer,[92] or where plaintiff fails to reply to a good plea of new matter,[93] or where the verdict for plaintiff was surely on a count which did not state a substantial cause of action;[94] but it has been held that defendant is not entitled to judgment non obstante veredicto where a demurrer to the petition should have been sustained but was overruled.[95] Under the rule that a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict must be based on the pleadings, defendant is not entitled to such judgment where plaintiff's pleadings show a good cause of action in him, and avoid the defense pleaded.[96]

Repleader. A party is not entitled to a judgment non obstante veredicto in every case where the issue determined against him by the verdict is immaterial. Thus a plaintiff is entitled to judgment non obstante veredicto where the issue is immaterial or the plea bad only where a repleader is unnecessary to do justice between the parties.[97] A judgment non obstante veredicto is always on the merits, and therefore is never rendered except where it is clear that the defense is without merits in whatever form pleaded.[98] Such a judgment will

Subject to general demurrer

The statute authorizing trial court to render judgment notwithstanding the verdict was not intended to enable a defendant to have a judgment on the merits of a cause merely because plaintiff's pleading might be subject to general demurrer.—Citizens State Bank of Houston v. Giles, Tex.Civ.App., 145 S.W.2d 899, error dismissed.

(2) But, where question whether complaint stated facts sufficient to constitute cause of action was raised by objection to introduction of testimony, by motion for nonsuit, and by motion for directed verdict, court, as matter of practice, should have refused to entertain motion on same ground for judgment notwithstanding verdict.—Borg v. Reason for rule

"It is readily apparent that the trial court should not mislead the appellee [plaintiff] by overruling the demurrer to the petition as amended, thus holding it to be sufficient, and then sustain the motion for a verdict on the pleadings, thus holding it to be defective. This court is committed to the doctrine that in this situation the first error of the trial court will be corrected upon the appeal. Hence the judgment must be reversed, with direction that the demurrer to the petition as amended be sustained."—S. K. Jones Const. Co. v. Hendley, supra.

not be rendered where there is substantially a material issue or a good defense, although the pleading is technically defective.[99] If the finding is decisive of the merits, it cures the issue.[1] Where the pleading contains matters which, if well pleaded, might form a good bar or justification, the court will not give judgment non obstante veredicto, but will award a repleader.[2]

Basing motion on records of case. At common law and, in the absence of statutes providing otherwise, a judgment non obstante veredicto must be based solely on matters appearing on the record,[3] and has nothing to do with alleged procedural errors.[4] It cannot be granted on affidavit[5] but only on the face of the pleadings,[6] and, as shown infra subdivision b (1) of this section, the court may not look to the evidence in determining the motion.

Discretion of court. The granting of a judgment notwithstanding the verdict rests very much in the discretion of the court.[7]

Form and requisites of judgment. The judgment rendered in granting the motion should recite the filing of a proper motion, the giving of reasonable notice, that hearing was had, that the parties appeared in person or by attorney, the action of the court on the motion, and entry of judgment after its disposition.[8]

In the absence of statutes providing otherwise, a judgment notwithstanding the verdict must be granted on the record, and the court may not look to the evidence in determining a motion for such judgment; accordingly such a judgment cannot be rendered merely because the verdict is against the weight of the evidence. In some jurisdictions, however, such a judgment may

Trial by judge

Judge, having as trier of fact found for plaintiff, could not, although he subsequently changed his mind respecting weight of evidence, enter judgment for defendant, unless plaintiff was contributorily negligent as matter of law.—Evans v. Stewart, 157 A. 515, 103 Pa.Super. 549.

Correct practice

After receiving verdict, entering judgment notwithstanding the verdict, when the real ground of the judgment is that it is not supported by the evidence, is not strictly correct, since a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict admits the finding of the verdict to be true and the court on such motion grants judgment on grounds other than those decided by the jury. In such a situation the strictly proper practice is to move to set aside verdict because not supported by the evidence, and grant judgment on ground that motion for a directed verdict should have been granted, or, if no such motion was made, on ground that the evidence failed to support a cause of action.—Shumway v. Milwaukee Athletic Club, 20 N.W.2d 123, 247 Wis. 393.

Trial court's finding, notwithstanding verdict, held justified under evidence

La.—Lehon v. New Orleans Public Service, 123 So. 172, 10 La.App. 715.

After special verdict

(1) A judge may enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict after a special verdict, since such motion must be considered on the testimony prior to submission of the cause to jury.—Dzikowski v. Michigan Cent. R. R., 276 N.W. 470, 282 Mich. 337—In re Cotcher's Estate, 264 N. W. 325, 274 Mich. 154—Jacob v. Gratiot Central Market, 255 N.W. 331, 267 Mich. 262.

(2) So, where defendant moved for directed verdict, and, at plaintiff's request, case was submitted to jury with leave to defendant to move for judgment, if verdict should be otherwise than as would have been directed, and general verdict was returned for plaintiff and special findings were made favorable to plaintiff, defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was not improperly granted, on ground that the special findings were binding on defendant because the motion was directed only against the general verdict.—Jasper v. Wells, 144 P.2d 505, 173 Or. 114.

(3) The rule that motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict is usually a concession that special findings are supported by evidence, although applicable where motion is on ground that verdict was contrary to special answers, would not be applicable to contentions that evidence failed to establish defense and that judgment should be for plaintiff under the law, the evidence and the admitted facts.—Lewis v. Dodson, 100 P.2d 640, 151 Kan. 632.

Where evidence presented questions of fact, dismissal of complaint after rendition of verdict for plaintiff was error.—Sullivan v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 63 N. E.2d 76, 294 N.Y. 497.

In Arkansas

(1) After verdict has been entered, but before entry of judgment, if court finds that no testimony has been offered to sustain the verdict, and that no cause of action has been shown to exist, the court has jurisdiction so to declare and direct judgment which shall be entered.—Stanton v. Arkansas Democrat Co., 106 S.W.2d 584, 194 Ark. 135—33 C.J. p 1184 note 49.

(2) But plaintiff was held not en-

utes[13] which govern the entry of judgment notwithstanding the verdict,[14] and under some of which a judgment may be entered, notwithstanding the verdict, in favor of the party who was entitled to have a verdict directed in his favor;[15] but under such statutes judgment notwithstanding the verdict titled to judgment non obstante veredicto, although there was no testimony to sustain verdict for defendant, where verdict was not special, and case was not reserved by court for future judgment or consideration, and there was no statement in pleadings to justify court in entering judgment in favor of plaintiff, Crawford & M. Dig. §§ 6271, 6273, being inapplicable.—Jackson v. Carter, 278 S.W. 32, 169 Ark. 1154.

In Nebraska

Applying the rule that the trial court has the right and power to vacate, set aside, amend, or correct any judgments or orders made by it at the same term, it has been held that, where court overruled plaintiff's motion for directed verdict and submitted case to jury which returned verdict for defendant, and plaintiff filed motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict, court had jurisdiction at same term to sustain plaintiff's motion in part and enter judgment for plaintiff for a portion of amount claimed.—Leon v. Kitchen Bros. Hotel Co., 277 N.W. 823, 134 Neb. 137, 115 A.L.R. 1078.

In Oklahoma

(1) The court is not authorized to render a judgment notwithstanding the verdict because there is an entire lack of evidence to justify the verdict in favor of the prevailing party.—St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co. v. Eakins, 284 P. 866, 141 Okl. 256—Thompson v. Florence, 274 P. 671, 135 Okl. 116—St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co. v. Bell, 273 P. 243, 134 Okl. 251—Odom v. Cedar Rapids Sav. Bank, 244 P. 758, 114 Okl. 126—McAlester v. Bank of McAlester, 218 P. 839, 95 Okl. 193—Barnes v. Universal Tire Protector Co., 165 P. 176, 63 Okl. 292.

(2) There is also, however, some authority to the contrary.—Schafer v. Midland Hotel Co., 171 P. 337, 69 Okl. 201.

In Washington

(1) The trial court may enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict in favor of either party where it is warranted by the undisputed evidence.—Morris v. Chicago, M., St. P. & P. R. Co., 97 P.2d 119, 1 Wash.2d 587, opinion adhered to 100 P.2d 19, 1 Wash.2d 587—Bobst v. Hardisty, 91 P.2d 567, 199 Wash. 304.

(2) A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is properly granted where as a matter of law there is neither evidence nor reasonable inference from the evidence sustaining the verdict.—Richey & Gilbert Co. v. (3) A mere scintilla will not support verdict against such motion.—Kelly v. Drumheller, 272 P. 731, 150 Wash. 185.

(4) So, where there is no substantial evidence in support of the verdict, it is within the power of the court, notwithstanding the verdict, to direct a judgment in favor of any or all of the parties against whom the evidence fails.—Eyak River Packing Co. v. Huglen, 255 P. 123, 143 Wash. 229, affirmed 257 P. 638, 143 Wash. 229.

(5) A trial court, convinced after submission of supposed fact issues to jury and return of verdict, that there was no disputed fact question for jury, may not only grant motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict, but make findings in support of money judgment for moving party, if such judgment is proper under undisputed evidence.—W. T. Rawleigh Co. v. Graham, 103 P.2d 1076, 4 Wash.2d 407, 127 A.L.R. 596.

In Virginia

(1) Under the statute empowering the court to enter such final judgment as to it shall seem right and proper when the verdict of a jury in a civil action is set aside as contrary to the evidence, or without evidence to support it, if there is sufficient evidence before the court to decide the case on its merits, the trial court, in determining whether the jury's verdict should be set aside, need not consider evidence as on demurrer thereto.—Flannagan v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 146 S.E. 353, 152 Va. 38.

(2) Evidence and reasonable and proper inferences favorable to prevailing party, however, will be accepted as true.—Parsons v. Parker, 170 S.E. 1, 160 Va. 310—Bivens v. Manhattan for Hire Car Corporation, 159 S.E. 395, 156 Va. 483.

(3) Where there is nothing inherently incredible in testimony of witnesses which is sufficient to take case to jury, trial court will not substitute its view of case for jury and render a judgment notwithstanding the verdict.—Hoover v. J. P. Neff & Son, 31 S.E.2d 265, 183 Va. 56—Parsons v. Parker, 170 S.E. 1, 160 Va. 310.

(4) Power to enter judgment notwithstanding verdict depends on there being certain and sufficient evidence in case to decide it on its merits.—Dexter-Portland Cement Co. v. Acme Supply Co., 133 S.E. 788, 147 Va. 758.

(5) Evidence was held to warrant trial court in setting aside verdict as plainly contrary to evidence and entering judgment notwithstanding the verdict.—Noland v. Fowler, 18 S.E.2d 251, 179 Va. 19—Vandenbergh & Hitch v. Buckingham Apartment Corporation, 123 S.E. 561, 142 Va. 397.

Purpose of rule

The rule permitting judgment notwithstanding verdict when motion for directed verdict should have been sustained has for its purpose the giving of an opportunity to the trial court to correct its error in failing to sustain a motion for a directed verdict.—Friedman v. Colonial Oil Co., Iowa, 18 N.W.2d 196.

Incontrovertible physical facts rule

(1) Where physical facts are such that it is impossible for accident to have happened in manner claimed, judge may set aside verdict for plaintiff and order one for defendant.

(2) The rule applies only in clearest of cases and never where there are variable and doubtful estimates and where testimony of witnesses is needed in order to apply evidence to the issue.—Mautino v. Piercedale Supply Co., 13 A.2d 51, 338 Pa. 435.

(3) Testimony of plaintiff in automobile accident case as to respective location of vehicles before collision was held not to warrant judgment notwithstanding verdict, on ground of opposition to incontrovertible physical facts, in view of different testimony given by plaintiff's witnesses.—Hoff v. Tavani, 170 A. 384, 111 Pa.Super. 567.

Test of right to judgment notwithstanding verdict is whether, at close of trial, trial court should have given binding instructions.—Pfeiffer v. Kraske, 11 A.2d 555, 139 Pa.Super. 92—McDonough v. Borough of Munhall, 193 A. 326, 127 Pa.Super. 226, reversed on other grounds 200 A. 638, 331 Pa. 468—Hahn v. Anderson, 187 A. 450, 123 Pa.Super. 442, modified on other grounds 192 A. 489, 326 Pa. 463—Lessy v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 183 A. 657, 121 Pa.Super. 440—Ellsworth v. Husband, 181 A. 90, 119 Pa.Super. 245.

Failure to object to immaterial testimony

The fact that there was no objection made to certain immaterial testimony at the time it was given would not preclude the trial court from sustaining motion for judgment non obstante veredicto.—In re Rentfro's Estate, 79 P.2d 1042, 103 Colo. 400.

Procedure held regular

There was nothing irregular in trial court's procedure in receiving jury's attempt to answer three special issues of fact, in discharging jury, which had answered one of the inquiries with a report that the others could not be agreed on, and in then granting judgment non obstante veredicto in plaintiff's favor on ground that plaintiff's prior motion for peremptory instruction made at close of all evidence had been well taken and should have been granted instead of overruled, and judgment was not subject to objection that there had been a further trial of cause in the sense that additional evidence and argument had been heard by court subsequent to discharge of jury and that court had entered judgment on the verdict. —Hutchison v. East Texas Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 167 S.W.2d 205, error refused.

Power similar to that of appellate court

Power of trial court to render judgment non obstante veredicto is the same power exercised by appellate court when it reverses and renders a case, where trial court erroneously refuses a peremptory instruction.—Johnson v. Moody, Tex.Civ. App., 104 S.W.2d 583, error dismissed.

In Oklahoma

The court is not authorized to render a judgment notwithstanding the verdict because the evidence shows as a matter of law that the court should have directed a verdict in favor of the losing party.—St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co. v. Eakins, 284 P. 866, 141 Okl. 256—Thompson v. Florence, 274 P. 671, 135 Okl. 116—St. Louis-San Francisco Ry.

is not warranted merely because the trial court, in its discretion, ought to have granted a new trial.[16]

(2) Particular Matters Affecting Right to Remedy

(a) Motion for directed verdict as prerequisite to relief

(b) Sufficiency of evidence to raise jury question

(c) Other matters

(a) Motion for Directed Verdict as Prerequisite to Relief

Under some statutes it is prerequisite to a judgment notwithstanding the verdict that the moving party has moved to direct a verdict in his favor at the close of the testimony.

It is a prerequisite to a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, under some statutes, that the moving party has moved to direct a verdict in his favor at the close of the testimony,[17] but it has been held that the motion for a directed verdict need not be in correct technical form,[18] although a mere statement by counsel that he intended to ask for an instructed verdict[19] or that he thought a motion for

Plaintiffs' motion for a judgment notwithstanding verdict was properly granted despite plaintiffs' failure to move for a directed verdict on defendant's counterclaim since plaintiffs' motion for a directed verdict on his complaint automatically included the counterclaim pleaded by defendant as a defense in his answer, and there is no requirement that it be especially mentioned in a motion for a directed verdict made by plaintiff on his complaint.—Doyle v. McPherson, 97 P.2d 249, 36 Cal. App.2d 81.

Motion held sufficient

Cal.—In re Ross' Estate, 22 P.2d 22, 131 Cal.App. 635.

Proposition not raised

Where plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict pursuant to rule was based on a proposition not raised in plaintiff's motion for a directed verdict, situation was the same as though plaintiff had made no motion for a directed verdict and plaintiff had no right to the remedy.—Friedman v. Colonial Oil Co., Iowa, 18 N.W.2d 196.

Judgment held erroneous where record disclosed that no request for peremptory instruction was made.—Hall v. Barrett, Tex.Civ.App., 126 S.W.2d 1045.

(3) Motion for judgment for defendant, made after plaintiff rested, and followed by presentation of defendant's case, is not according to statute.—Updegrave v. Alex, 94 Pa. Super. 29.

(4) Procedure prescribed by statute respecting entry of judgment on whole record was not intended as substitute for nonsuit.—Updegrave v. Alex, supra.

a directed verdict would be in order[20] is not sufficient. There is no sufficient compliance with the statute where the motion for directed verdict was made, over objection of opposing counsel, after the jury had returned its verdict;[21] and the deficiency cannot be corrected by a nunc pro tunc order.[22] A requested instruction for a verdict and the refusal thereof are not equivalent to a motion for a directed verdict and an order denying the motion which, by statute, are made prerequisite to a judgment notwithstanding the verdict.[23]

(b) Sufficiency of Evidence to Raise Jury Question

A judgment notwithstanding the verdict will not be entered where the evidence raises an issue for the jury, as where there is evidence reasonably tending to support the verdict or where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence.

Test

Respecting sufficiency of evidence, test whether evidence supports verdict or requires granting judgment non obstante veredicto does not differ perceptibly.—Maylink v. Minnehaha Co-op. Oil Co., 291 N.W. 572, 67 S.D. 187—Wolff v. Stenger, 239 N.W. 181, 59 S.D. 231.

Verdict representing sum admittedly due

Refusal to enter judgment notwithstanding verdict for plaintiff was not error where part of amount of judgment for plaintiff was admitted by defendant to represent sum admittedly due.—Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh v. Hachmeister Lind Co., 181 A. 787, 320 Pa. 233.

In negligence action which was tried by judge without a jury, where testimony in the record might have supported a finding of negligence of defendant or a finding that plaintiff was contributorily negligent, court in banc was without authority to enter judgment non obstante veredicto in favor of plaintiff.—Moore v. W. J. Gilmore Drug Co., 200 A. 250, 131 Pa.Super. 349.

would be justified in granting a new trial notwithstanding it.[27] It has been held, however, that to deprive the court of the right to exercise the power to grant a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict there need not be an absence of conflict, but there must be a substantial conflict in the evidence,[28] and that the motion may be granted where the evidence is such that it is clearly insufficient to support the verdict.[29]

(c) Other Matters

A judgment notwithstanding the verdict will not be entered where a motion for a directed verdict was properly denied, or for a variance or failure of proof which may be remedied if a new trial is granted, or where it is not clear that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the merits, or because the verdict is tainted with prejudice or caprice.

A judgment notwithstanding the verdict will not ordinarily be entered where a motion for a directed verdict was properly denied,[30] although such a judgment may be granted where a directed verdict was properly denied because the grounds therefor were not sufficiently stated.[31] Furthermore, it has also been held that a motion for such a judgment may not be granted after the trial court erroneously denied a motion for a peremptory instruction,[32] although this rule does not apply where the court of its own motion entered a peremptory instruction and did not overrule a motion for a peremptory instruction.[33] A judgment notwithstanding the verdict will not be granted for a variance unless it appears that an amendment of the complaint cannot properly be made,[34] or for a failure of proof, where it reasonably appears that the defect in proof can be remedied if a new trial is granted,[35] or where it is not clear on the whole record that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law, on

Manner of raising question

Fact that defendant made a motion for nonsuit and later a motion for binding instructions, where neither contained any reference to variance, did not entitle defendant to raise question of variance for first time on motion for judgment non obstante veredicto, since such question must be specifically raised, either when evidence is offered, when motion for nonsuit is made, or point for binding instruction submitted.—Sipior v. the merits,[36] or where any other reason exists precluding a binding direction.[37] The moving party is not required to offer evidence in order to complain, by motion for judgment non obstante veredicto, of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict.[38] The fact that a verdict is tainted with prejudice or caprice does not authorize a trial court to substitute its fact findings for the tainted jury verdict and render judgment accordingly.[39]

(3) Scope of Inquiry in General

On a motion based on the evidence for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the only question presented is whether or not the evidence is sufficient to justify the verdict on any theory, and the scope of inquiry does not reach other matters.

Where the trial court in passing on a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict may consider the evidence, the scope of inquiry on such a motion does not reach a defect in the pleadings,[40] or the court's rulings on the admission and rejection of evidence,[41] or the manner and form in which issues

ere submitted,[42] or the question whether plaintiffs were persons authorized to bring the suit,[43] or questions not raised at the trial,[44] the only question presented being whether or not the evidence is sufficient to justify the verdict on any theory.[45] A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict has been held, in effect, to review the court's ruling in denying a motion for a directed verdict.[46] Under some statutes it has been held that the motion must be based on pleadings and evidence,[47] and not on arguments made by counsel to the jury.[48] The court does not determine questions of fact based on disputed evidence;[49] it merely reviews the whole case on the record and does subsequently what it would have been proper to do under a request for a binding direction.[50]

(4) Consideration of Evidence in Passing on Motion

Where, in passing on a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the trial court may consider the evidence, it may not weigh all the evidence of both sides or judge of the credibility of the witnesses, but must give to the successful party at the trial the benefit of every favorable fact and inference fairly deducible from the testimony, and accept the evidence tending to support the verdict as true.

Where, in passing on a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the court may consider the evidence, it is required to be governed by the rules which govern it in passing on a motion for a directed verdict;[51] such motions have the same effect,[52] and the power of the court is the same in both cases.[53] These motions present only a question of law as to whether or not, when all of the evidence is considered, together with all reasonable inferences from it in its aspect most favorable to the party against whom the motion is directed, there is a total failure or lack of evidence to prove any necessary element of his case;[54] and all reasonable

Impeachment of witness

(1) In passing on motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict for plaintiff, court had no right to pass on credibility of witnesses, to consider any purported impeachments, weight thereof, or weight of testimony.—Vieceli v. Cummings, 54 N.E.2d 717, 322 Ill.App. 559.

(2) A court is not justified in ignoring a verdict merely because witnesses for plaintiff may have made contradictory statements as to the cause of results established, or because experts testified that death could not have been caused as contended by plaintiff.—Kundiger v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 15 N.W.2d 487, 218 Minn. 273.

(3) However, the rule that explanatory, conflicting, or contradictory evidence must be excluded from consideration in passing on motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict does not mean that, where a witness contradicts himself on a material point, court must consider only that part of his testimony on that point which favors party for whom he testifies.—Fitch v. Thomson, 54 N.E.2d 628, 322 Ill.App. 703.

Uncorroborated testimony

In passing on motion for judgment non obstante veredicto, trial judge could not disregard witness' testimony merely because it was not corroborated.—Szidor v. Greek ıch evidence it should be inherently incredible;[57] nd evidence not in conflict with such evidence, and 'hich is not inherently incredible, will also be ac-epted as true.[58] The successful party at the trial ; not entitled to favorable inferences from a lack f testimony,[59] or from broad general statements 'hich are opposed by definite evidence from his wn witnesses.[60]

If there is in the record evidence which, stand-ng alone, tends to prove the material allegations of the pleadings of the party opposed to the motion, it should be denied, even though on the entire record the evidence may preponderate against the party in opposition to such motion, so that a verdict in his favor could not stand when tested by a motion for a new trial;[61] and no contradictory evidence of any kind will justify a judgment notwithstanding the verdict for plaintiff except uncontradicted evidence of facts consistent with every fact which his evidence tends to prove, but showing af-

Facts found by jury admitted

A motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict admits for purpose of motion the existence of facts found by jury and asserts that, taking verdict at its face, judgment should go the other way.—Wisconsin Tel. Co. v. Russell, 7 N.W.2d 825, 242 Wis. 247—Volland v. McGee, 294 N.W. 497, 236 Wis. 358, rehearing denied 295 N.W. 635, 236 Wis. 358.

Evidence admitted for special purpose

Where insurer denied liability on life policy on ground of insured's misrepresentation in application that he had not been attended by a physician during previous three years, denial of motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict for beneficiary on ground that proofs of death furnished by beneficiary proved falsity of representation was held not error, where proofs were offered and admitted specially and not as truth of matters therein asserted.—Fickes v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 184 A. 754, 321 Pa. 474.

Testimony of moving party's witness cannot be used as basis of judgment notwithstanding verdict.—Smith v. Penn Tp. Mut. Fire Ass'n of Lancaster County, 186 A. 130, 323 Pa. 93.

Evidence adduced by movant favorable to contestant

The party contesting a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is entitled to the benefit of any favorable evidence introduced by the moving party.

Wash.—Hurst v. Peterson, 64 P.2d 788, 189 Wash. 169.

Evidence of contestant unfavorable to him

On motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, even though contestant's evidence is in some respects unfavorable to him, he is not bound by unfavorable part thereof, but is entitled to have his case considered on basis of evidence which is most favorable to his position.—Moen v. Chestnut, 113 P.2d 1030, 9 Wash.2d 93.

57. Cal.—In re Hettermann's Estate, 119 P.2d 788, 48 Cal.App.2d 263.

Evidence that has no probative force may not be considered in passing on motion.—Knudson v. Knudson, 46 N.E.2d 1011, 382 Ill. 492.

Parts of evidence unbelievable

Where trial court finds that parts of plaintiff's testimony are wholly unbelievable, the court should grant new trial after verdict for plaintiff instead of judgment non obstante veredicto.—Szidor v. Greek Catholic Union of Russian Brotherhoods of U. S., 21 A.2d 104, 145 Pa.Super. 251.

firmatively a complete defense.[62] This requires consideration of the evidence, but precludes any examination of the weight of the evidence in order to determine its preponderance.[63] It is wholly immaterial on which side the weight of the evidence preponderates.[64]

In entering judgment non obstante veredicto, it has been held that the judgment must be entered on the evidence in the record as it existed at the close of the trial.[65] Under this rule the trial court may not on motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict eliminate evidence on the ground that it was improperly received at the trial and then dispose of the case on the basis of the diminished record;[66] neither may it insert offers of evidence which should have been admitted but were excluded,[67] or receive evidence on the hearing of the motion which was not offered at the trial.[68]

(5) Discretion of Court

Although there is also authority to the contrary, it has been held that the granting of a judgment notwithstanding the verdict rests very much in the discretion of the trial court.

Although there is authority holding that a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict involves no element of judicial discretion,[69] and may not be granted unless the court can say, as a matter of law, that there is neither evidence nor reasonable inference from the evidence to sustain the verdict,[70] it has also been held that the granting of such a judgment rests very much in the discretion of the court;[71] and accordingly the court is not bound to enter such judgment in every case in which it is later convinced it should have given binding instructions at the trial.[72] Although the court is under a duty to grant judgment notwithstanding the verdict when the right to such a judgment is clear,[73] judgment notwithstanding the verdict is to be granted cautiously,[74] and only when it clearly appears from the record that the party obtaining the verdict was not entitled thereto.[75] Where justice will be promoted thereby, a motion for such judgment may be denied, and the party remitted to his remedy by motion for a new trial.[76]

Under some statutes the court is authorized to disregard any special issue jury finding that has no support in the evidence and thus enter judgment notwithstanding a part of the verdict; but the right may be exercised only in the manner and under the circumstances prescribed by the statutes.

special issue jury findings is of a character similar to that of a motion for judgment notwithstanding the entire verdict;[79] it is a motion for judgment notwithstanding a part of the verdict,[80] and often is referred to as a motion for a judgment non obstante veredicto.[81]

d. On Point Reserved

Under the practice in some jurisdictions judgment notwithstanding the verdict may be entered according to the court's decision on a reserved point of law.

The practice prevails in some jurisdictions of taking a verdict subject to the decision of a reserved point of law by the court; the judgment is then entered for one party or the other according to the decision of the reserved point.[82] Where the verdict of the jury and the decision by the court of the point reserved are both in favor of plaintiff, the judgment should be entered for plaintiff on the verdict, and not on the point reserved.[83] Where the verdict is for plaintiff, and the reserved point is determined for defendant, the judgment is entered for defendant non obstante veredicto.[84] Where the verdict is for defendant, a judgment cannot be rendered for plaintiff, although the point reserved is determined in his favor, as in such case there is nothing to support the judgment,[85] and a fortiori defendant is entitled to judgment on the verdict where the point reserved is also determined in his favor.[86] Where it is uncertain whether the jury found their verdict on the facts relating to which the question of law was reserved or on other facts also submitted to them, a judgment non obstante veredicto may not be rendered.[87] A statute providing that, where a party requests a directed verdict, the court may reserve its decision and submit the case to the jury and then enter a judgment non obstante veredicto if the verdict is against the party making the request has no application where the verdict is for the party making the request, and an order granting a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto in such case is a nullity.[88]

Nature of questions reserved. The point reserved must be solely a question of law, and a question of fact or a mixed question of law and fact may not be reserved.[89] The question whether there is any evidence in the case to support a recovery is a question of law and may be reserved, but the question whether there is sufficient evidence to support a recovery where the evidence is conflicting may not be reserved.[90] The reservation may not be as to whether on the whole case plaintiff is entitled to recover.[91]

Sufficiency of reservation. The reservation of controlling legal questions should always be made

e. On Special Findings against General Verdict

A judgment on the special findings of a jury, but against their general verdict, is not really a judgment non obstante veredicto, although often inaccurately so called.

A judgment on the special findings of a jury, but against their general verdict, is not really a judgment non obstante veredicto, although often inaccurately so called. A motion for judgment non obstante veredicto is a motion for judgment on the pleadings without regard to the verdict; but a motion for a judgment on the special finding of the facts, notwithstanding the general verdict, has no reference whatever to the pleadings in the cause, and proceeds on the theory that the special finding of facts by the jury is so inconsistent with their general verdict that the former should control the latter and the court should give judgment accordingly.[94] The practice in respect of special findings is considered in the C.J.S. title Trial §§ 563, 564, also 64 C.J. p 1177 note 94 et seq.

f. In Particular Proceedings

The rules regulating the granting of motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict apply generally to proceedings in which issues were submitted to, and determined by, a jury.

The rules regulating the granting of motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict have been held to be applicable to probate proceedings tried before a jury[95] and to condemnation proceedings where a jury was demanded and not waived,[96] but they have been held not to apply to a case tried by the court without a jury[97] or in an equity suit with respect to a jury's verdict which is merely advisory,[98] although it has also been held that judgment in an equitable action submitted on the pleadings should go for the party entitled thereto by the pleadings notwithstanding the verdict against him,[99] and that the trial court has power to enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict in a law action where defendant invoked the equity powers of the court so that the jury's verdict was merely advisory.[1] Also the rule has been held inapplicable to issues submitted to, but not found by, the jury,[2] or where there was no verdict,[3] as where the court rendered judgment after the jury disagreed as to issues submitted to them and were discharged.[4] Where, in accordance with the rules stated supra subdivision a of this section, the motion is based wholly on defective pleadings, a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is inappropriate in a proceeding where no formal pleadings are required or had,[5] and a denial of the motion has been held not to be error in a case in which a general denial to allegations of a claim is interposed by operation of law.[6]

g. Amount of Verdict

A motion for judgment in a larger amount than the verdict is a motion non obstante veredicto and may be granted in some jurisdictions where under the pleadings and proof the plaintiff is entitled to the larger amount if entitled to recover at all; but the fact that the amount of the verdict is inadequate or excessive does not warrant judgment for the opposite party notwithstanding the verdict.

A motion for judgment in a larger amount than the verdict is a motion non obstante veredicto although not so designated.[7] At common law and under some statutes plaintiff who has recovered a verdict cannot have judgment non obstante veredicto for a greater amount.[8] Such a judgment has been held proper, however, where under the pleadings and proof plaintiff is entitled to the larger amount if he is entitled to recover at all,[9] but the court cannot render such judgment where plaintiff is not entitled under the pleadings and proof to recover the larger amount,[10] it being held that such judgment may be entered only where the evidence supporting it is uncontradicted and unimpeached so that a verdict could have been entered in the exact amount of the judgment.[11] Failure of the court to grant a new trial has been held to furnish no ground for entry of judgment for the amount of damages claimed notwithstanding a verdict for a smaller amount.[12]

The fact that a verdict is rendered for an amount much smaller than that to which the party is entitled, if entitled to recover at all, has been held not to be sufficient to entitle the opposite party to a judgment notwithstanding the verdict unless such party is entitled to a judgment on the pleadings without regard to such verdict.[13] The fact that the verdict is excessive does not warrant judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict.[14]

h. Party Entitled

At common law only the plaintiff could move for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, but under the prevailing modern practice either the plaintiff or the defendant may have such a judgment in a proper case.

At common law a judgment non obstante veredicto could be entered only on the application of plaintiff for judgment in his favor, and never in favor of defendant.[15] Where plaintiff's pleadings would not support a judgment on a verdict in his favor, defendant's sole remedy was by motion in arrest of judgment.[16] By virtue either of statute or relaxation of the early common-law rule, however, the generally prevailing rule now is that either plaintiff or defendant may have a judgment non obstante veredicto in a proper case.[17]

Joint defendants. Where there is a verdict against two or more joint defendants, it has been held that the court may enter a judgment notwithstanding the verdict in favor of one of them and refuse such judgment as to the others.[18]

i. Waiver and Estoppel

The right to move for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict may be waived.

The right to move for a judgment non obstante veredicto may be waived,[19] as by failing to assert it,[20] and it is waived where a material issue found by the verdict was litigated by acquiescence or consent, although not pleaded;[21] but it is not waived by failing to demur to an insufficient pleading,[22] by asking for a peremptory instruction,[23] by asking for a stay of proceedings after verdict,[24] or by the filing of a motion for a new trial.[25] Parties requesting submission of special issues are not estopped to urge judgment non obstante veredicto.[26]

(1) The court is not authorized to Alternative motion for new trial. The motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict does not take the place of a motion for a new trial,[32] although a party may make his motion in the alternative, for judgment notwithstanding the verdict or, in case that is denied, for a new trial.[33] A motion asking for a judgment non obstante veredicto and for a new trial cannot be granted in the same case and between the same parties, since they are mutually exclusive,[34] such a motion will be treated as though filed in the alternative.[35] The movant is entitled only to alternative relief,[36] and the action of the trial court in sustaining a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict after granting a new trial is erroneous,[37] for, where the trial court grants a new trial, the verdict ceases to exist and a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto cannot be granted.[38] Also, if there is no abuse of discretion in granting a new trial, it is not error to refuse judgment non obstante veredicto.[39] It has been held, however, that where, following judgment for plaintiff, defendants file a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and also a motion for a new trial, the trial court should pass on both motions.[40]

b. Time for Motion

A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict must be made within the time limited by statute, and should generally be made before entry of judgment on the verdict.

A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict must be made within the time specified by statute;[41] if the motion is not filed within such time, the verdict of the jury must stand.[42] The motion render a judgment notwithstanding the verdict unless its jurisdiction so to do is invoked by motion.—Henderson v. Soash, Civ.App., 157 S.W. 2d 161—Great American Indemnity Co. v. Finality of judgment

(1) Under some statutes an action is terminated when the time for an appeal from the judgment has expired, and the trial court has no authority thereafter to entertain a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict over the objection of the adverse party, unless the final character has been suspended by proceedings commenced within the time allowed by law for appeal from the judgment.—Bratberg v. Advance-Rumely Thresher Co., 238 N.W. 552, 61 N.D. 452, 78 A.L.R. 1338—Coughlin v. Ætna Life Ins. Co., 194 N.W. 661, 49 N.D. 948.

(2) The final character of a judgment is not suspended because a motion for a directed verdict is made on the trial of the cause.—Coughlin v. Ætna Life Ins. Co., supra.

Motion held timely as filed and served within two days after verdict within statutory requirement, where alternative motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict or new trial was filed the day following return of verdict and on the same day a copy of motion was mailed to opposing counsel who had returned to his home in another town, although opposing counsel did not accept service of motion until third day after verdict.—Mathers v. Stephens, 156 P.2d 227, 22 Wash.2d 364.

Subsequent term

(1) In action for personal injuries in which actual and punitive damages were sought, and jury returned verdict for punitive damages only and motion for new trial was marked "heard" by consent, court was without jurisdiction to grant motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict at subsequent term at which motion was made for first time.—Burns v. Babb, 3 S.E.2d 247, 190 S.C. 508.

(2) Date of rendition of judgment being that of entry at term succeeding trial term, motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict was held properly made at succeeding term.—State v. Scott, 247 P. 699, 35 Wyo. 108.

Time for setting aside verdict

Where plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict which found plaintiff guilty of negligence, was urged on ground that as a matter of law plaintiff was not guilty of negligence under evidence, the motion was, in effect, one to set aside verdict for insufficiency of evidence and, therefore, under statute, it could not be granted by trial court after expiration of statutory time for setting aside verdict.—Volland v. McGee, 294 N.W. 497, 236 Wis. 358, rehearing denied 295 N. W. 635, 236 Wis. 358.

42. Wash.—Corbaley v. Pierce may, of course, be made after verdict,[43] and must be made before entry of judgment on the verdict,[44] unless motion after entry of judgment on the verdict is authorized by statute[45] or a valid order of the trial court.[46] The right to be heard on the motion is not barred, however, by reason of a judgment having been inadvertently and prematurely entered,[47] the trial court being authorized to set aside such judgment for the purpose of considering the motion;[48] and it may be assumed where the motion was granted after judgment on the verdict that the former judgment was vacated.[49] The motion should be made before a motion for a new trial.[50] After the verdict has been set aside, a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto is too late.[51]

c. Notice of Motion and Hearing Thereon

Unless waived, reasonable and timely notice of the motion and hearing thereon must be given the adverse party, and the time for hearing must be set.

When required by mandatory statute, the adverse party must be given reasonable[52] and timely[53] notice of the motion and hearing thereon, and the time for hearing must be set;[54] but such notice may be waived by the parties by express agreement or conduct expressing waiver or acquiescence.[55] Failure to file a duly served notice of motion with the clerk until after the hearing of the motion does not affect the jurisdiction of the court to hear the mo-

What constitutes reasonable notice

Reasonable notice of filing of motion for judgment non obstante veredicto, required by statute, is not restricted to service of notice by sheriff, constable, or other person competent to testify, as provided elsewhere in statute, although service by such persons would be reasonable as a matter of law; and, where copy of motion for judgment non obstante veredicto was transmitted by mail, accepted by opposing parties who agreed to the date for hearing, appeared, and at no time questioned the sufficiency of notice prior to judgment, or that they should have been served in writing by the sheriff, as provided by statute, and who were fully prepared in time for the hearing and did not claim to have been injured, notice was reasonable within contemplation of statute.—Johnson v. d. Form and Requisites

A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict must sufficiently disclose its nature and apprise the court and the adverse party of the grounds therefor and state the reason why it should be granted.

Although no special form of motion or notice is required,[57] the motion should be in writing[58] and must sufficiently disclose its nature[59] and apprise the court and the adverse party of the grounds therefor and state the reason why the motion should be granted.[60] A motion to disregard special issue jury findings should designate the findings which the court is called on to disregard.[61] A motion which is too broad,[62] or which fails to point out clearly the alleged defect in the pleading, as required by statute,[63] may properly be denied. A motion filed by all defendants may be read in connection with, and aided by, a motion filed by one defendant where defendants are making a common defense and both motions are presented to the court at the same time.[64] The motion may be amended when authorized by the trial court in the exercise of its discretion.[65]

e. Hearing and Determination of Motion

The court should rule on a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict with reasonable promptness, and may, in its discretion, refuse to permit a continuance thereof. Statutory requirements as to procedure should be observed.

The court should rule on a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict with reasonable promptness[66] and before the expiration of the time for appeal;[67] but it has been held that the trial court does not lose jurisdiction to enter a judgment non obstante veredicto by its failure to make a decision on the motion until after the time limited by court rule.[68] The motion should be disposed of before a motion for a new trial.[69] It has been held that the motion may not be heard in vacation, in the absence of an agreement of the parties to that effect.[70] Refusal to permit a continuance of the motion is within the discretion of the trial judge.[71] When required by statute, the trial court should have all the evidence taken on the trial duly certified and enter such judgment as should have been entered on that evidence,[72] but irregularity in failing to have such evidence certified before entry of judgment has been held to be cured by subsequent certification, reargument, reconsideration, and court order affirming the original judgment.[73] On plain-

iff's motion for judgment non obstante veredicto, t has been held that the court will not consider the evidence and charges to the jury further than to ascertain whether it appears clearly from the entire case that the verdict was surely on an immaterial plea.[74] No motion to set aside the verdict is required before entry of judgment notwithstanding the verdict;[75] and particularly it is not necessary to set the verdict aside before rendering judgment contrary thereto when the case is submitted on special issues, since in such case the jury finds the facts only, and does not find a verdict for either party.[76] At common law the procedure was to enter the verdict on the record, and then to enter the judgment non obstante veredicto;[77] but a motion for judgment non obstante, although not specifically passed on, is disposed of by entry of judgment on the verdict[78] or by granting a new trial.[79] It has been held that the trial court has jurisdiction to prescribe conditions with reference to the granting or refusal to grant the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.[80] In an action based on negligence and breach of implied warranty, it has been held that the court is not authorized to sustain defendant's motion as to all negligence counts and overrule it on the question of implied warranty.[81]

III. FORM AND CONTENTS OF JUDGMENT, AND RELIEF AWARDED

§ 62. In General

a. Form and contents generally
b. Self-sufficiency
c. Language of judgment

a. Form and Contents Generally

Strict formality ordinarily is not essential to the validity of a judgment, and substantial compliance with statutory requirements is sufficient.

The form of a judgment ordinarily is regulated by the practice of the court in which the judgment is rendered,[82] and under the procedure of some courts a duty rests on the successful litigant to see that the judgment is sufficient in form and substance.[83]

To constitute a judgment there must be an express adjudication to that effect,[84] but, subject to the requirements of statute or court rule or practice, no particular form is required in a court proceeding to render its order a judgment,[85] provided the rights of the parties may be ascertained therefrom.[86]

Generally the sufficiency of a judgment rests in its substance rather than in its form,[87] and, although an informal judgment may be open to criticism,[88] strict formality ordinarily is not essential to the validity of a judgment, and, if the record entry is sufficient in substance, mere irregularity or want of technical form will not render it invalid.[89] Even where the form of a judgment is prescribed by statute, a departure from it is not necessarily fatal to the adjudication,[90] a substantial compliance with statutory provisions with respect to form being sufficient.[91]

A record is sufficient as a judgment provided it appears therefrom that it was intended as such,[92] and corresponds with the statutory definition of a judgment,[93] and provided it appears therefrom that it is a judicial determination or act[94] of a designated court[95] of a specified term,[96] and if the time, place, parties, matter in dispute, and the result are clearly stated, or may be certainly ascertained therefrom.[97] An entry lacking these essentials is a mere nullity.[98]

Adjudication of issues. To be sufficient as a judgment, the entry must show that the issues between the parties have been adjudicated,[99] and show with certainty the matters determined.[1]

Determining provisions in advance. Before an action is ready for judgment it is not proper to bind the court by an order granted on special motion requiring it to enter particular provisions in the judgment.[2] By virtue of statute or rule of

Summary judicial statements of rule

(1) If a writing claimed to be a judgment corresponds with the statutory definition of a judgment, if it appears to have been intended by some competent tribunal as the determination of the rights of the parties to an action, and if it shows in intelligent language the relief granted, its claim to confidence will not be lessened by want of technical form, or by the absence of language commonly deemed especially appropriate to formal judicial records.

Iowa.—Whittier v. Whittier, 23 N.W. 2d 435.

(2) Other statements see 33 C.J. p 1189 note 94.

Presumption as to place

A judgment which showed on its face that it was rendered in a designated court and that it was rendered, read, and signed in open court was not void because it did not state the place where court was held or where judgment was signed, since it would be presumed that the court was held at the place fixed therefor by law.—Smith v. Crescent Chevrolet Co., La.App., 1 So.2d 421.

Excerpts from minutes need not be inserted in judgment.—Gettys v. Town of Marion, 10 S.E.2d 799, 218 N.C. 266.

Sufficiency for review purposes

Decree should be framed so as to enable aggrieved party to prosecute, without hindrance, review of adverse provisions.—Ochoa v. McCush, 2 P.2d 357, 216 Cal. 426.

Insufficient entries

(1) A notation on municipal court record of case, "Motion for new trial overruled. Judgment rendered as per finding of" certain date, did not constitute "judgment" of such court. —Mesloh v. Home Furnace Co., Ohio App., 44 N.E.2d 379.

(2) Judge's act in signing journal entry without final determination of parties' rights does not constitute "judgment."—Abernathy v. Huston, 26 P.2d 939, 166 Okl. 184.

(3) Recital in clerk's minutes that court rendered judgment for defendants as per journal entry to be filed and transcribed into record does not constitute judgment.—News Dispatch Printing & Audit Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Carter County, 270 P. 2, 132 Okl. 216.

court, however, an interlocutory judgment may state the substance of the final judgment to which the party will be entitled,[3] the court not being confined to the interlocutory judgment, or foreclosed thereby, in directing final judgment.[4]

Inferior court judgments. A much smaller degree of technicality and formality is required in judgments of inferior courts than is exacted with respect to the judgments of courts of record,[5] and judgments of such courts are scrutinized with less severity.[6]

Order or memoranda for judgment. It must appear that that which is offered as the record of a judgment is really such, and not an order for a judgment or mere memoranda from which the judgment is to be drawn.[7] The question whether remarks made by the court at the conclusion of a trial or hearing constitute a decision on the matter before it, or a mere announcement or memorandum of the decision which the court contemplates making, depends on the intention of the court.[8] An oral statement of the court merely intended to acquaint the parties of views intended to be embodied in the judgment is not the pronouncement of a judgment,[9] and cannot affect the correctness or validity of the judgment as rendered.[10]

b. Self-Sufficiency

A judgment should be complete in itself.

A judgment should be complete in itself[11] and contain within its four corners the mandate of the court,[12] without extraneous references,[13] and leaving open no matters of description or designation out of which contention may arise as to the meaning.[14] It should not leave open any judicial question to be determined by others,[15] and must contain sufficient facts to enable the clerk to issue an execution thereon, by an inspection of its entry, without reference to other entries.[16] To be complete,

Where court, after taking case under advisement, sent counsel a statement containing a résumé of court's findings informing counsel what the findings and judgment would be, such statement was not a copy of a judgment.—Sloan v. Dunlap, Mo., 194 S.W.2d 32.

9. Mo.—Marsden v. Nipp, 30 S.W.2d 77, 325 Mo. 822.

Direction to reporter
(1) Court's remark, in action to remove county commissioner, ordering removal of defendant, and directing reporter to let record so show, together with statement that verdict would include costs, was held not to constitute judgment of removal on verdict, where verdict had not been returned, but was merely an indication of what it would be.—State v. Scott, 247 P. 699, 35 Wyo. 108.

(2) This is particularly true because it is not the reporter's duty to record judgments, and he has neither custody nor control of official court records in which judgments are recorded.—State v. Scott, supra.

Description of written instrument
Failure to describe written instrument referred to in judgment renders judgment nonenforceable with respect to such instrument.—In re Kauffman's Estate, 147 P.2d 11, 63 Cal.App.2d 655.

Memorandum decision
It is not good practice to attempt by reference to incorporate into the judgment parts of a memorandum decision.—Andreas v. Bates, 128 P. 2d 300, 14 Wash.2d 322.

Reference to master's report
A decree enjoining defendant from interfering with rights of plaintiffs as lot owners to use plot on lake as park, in so far as it purported to incorporate by reference a lengthy master's report, was improper.—Carroll v. Hinchley, 56 N.E.2d 608, 316 Mass. 724.

however, it has been held that the judgment need only identify the parties and set forth the relief granted,[17] provided it also appears therefrom to have been made by the court in whose records its entry is written.[18] It has also been held that every judgment of a court of justice must either be perfect in itself or capable of being made perfect by reference to the pleadings or to the papers on file in the case, or else to other pertinent entries on the court docket.[19]

c. Language of Judgment

Apart from statute, no particular form of words is necessary to constitute a judgment, although the English language ordinarily is required to be used.

Although it has been held that, as a matter of practice, established precedents with respect to the language of a judgment should be followed,[20] apart from statute no particular form of words is necessary to constitute a judgment,[21] provided the words used are such as to indicate a final determination of the rights of the parties and the relief granted or denied.[22] The word "recover" is not essential to the existence of a judgment,[23] but it is the appropriate and approved word to use.[24] A judgment for defendant may be sufficient although it fails to provide that defendant go without day.[25] The use of words in the past instead of the present tense in entering a judgment is wholly immaterial.[27]

By virtue of constitutional or statutory provisions, judgments ordinarily are required to be expressed in the English language.[27]

§ 63. What Law Governs

The form of a judgment is governed by the law of the state in which it is rendered.

The language and form of the record of a judgment are regulated by the law of the state and the practice of the court in which it is rendered.[29] Hence a record which is good in the court where rendered is sufficient in another court, although it would have been insufficient had it been rendered in the latter court.[30] The operation and effect of foreign judgments is discussed infra §§ 888–906.

§ 64. Necessity of Writing

As a general rule a judgment must be reduced to writing.

Although, as discussed infra § 102, a judgment is rendered and exists as such when it is orally announced from the bench, and before it has been reduced to writing and entered by the clerk, as a general rule a judgment must be reduced to writing,[31] and cannot exist merely in the memory of the officers of the court.[32] A statutory provision[33] or court rule[34] that judgments must be in writing is imperative, and a decision of the court, not reduced to writing or entered on the minutes, is not effective as a judgment.

§ 65. One or More Judgments in Same Case

Except as otherwise permitted by statute or rule of court, there can be only one final judgment in any one action.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary it is a general rule that there can be only one final judgment in any action[35] at law,[36] and that is the one which, in effect, ends the suit and finally determines the rights of the parties with relation to the matter in controversy.[37] The rule is followed no matter how many counts the complaint contains,[38] and even though there be separate hearings on different

Amendment to judgment

Where judgment disposed of plaintiff merely as individual, amendment disposing of him both personally and as trustee constituted part of first judgment, and did not create two separate judgments against plaintiff.—Rachford v. Builders' Lumber Co., Tex.Civ.App., 278 S.W. 225.

Piecemeal determination improper

(1) It is not presumed court will dispose of case piecemeal, by successive final judgments.—Los Angeles Auto Tractor Co. v. Superior Court within and for Los Angeles County, 271 P. 863, 94 Cal.App. 433.

(2) To attempt to adjudicate the rights of one party by a single judgment and those of the other by a separate judgment, when the controversy is between only two parties, and concerns only a single piece of property, is simply an attempt to dispose of the case piecemeal, which is not permissible.—Nicholson v. After judgment of nonsuit

Order granting defendant's motion for final judgment for plaintiff's failure to amend declaration within time, entered before case wherein plaintiff had been granted nonsuit was reinstated, was held invalid as judgment on merits when case was not before court.—Keith v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 145 So. 227, 164 Miss. 566.

Disposition by implication

Rule requiring only one "final judgment" to be rendered in any cause is met if parties and issues are disposed of by necessary implication.—Pfeifer v. Johnson, Tex. Civ.App., 70 S.W.2d 203.

Order noting notice of appeal was not a final judgment within rule.—Morris v. Hall, Tex.Civ.App., 248 S. W. 1100.

issues[39] or one trial and separate findings on the different issues.[40] The rule is particularly true where one judgment is all that is necessary to dispose of the entire controversy.[41] It follows as a necessary consequence of the general rule that, when a final judgment has once been entered, no second or different judgment may be rendered between the same parties and in the same suit, until the first shall have been vacated and set aside or reversed on appeal or error.[42] Where for any reason recovery of some amount is had by both parties, it has been held that the different amounts should be set off against each other and but one judgment rendered for the balance.[43] It has been held, however, to be the better practice, where the court has sustained a motion for a nonsuit and a motion for a directed verdict on a counterclaim, to Operation and effect of conflicting judgments see infra § 445.

(1) Reservation of power to enter future judgments was held error, since action must be concluded by single judgment.—Schwasnick v. Blandin, C.C.A.Vt., 65 F.2d 354.

(2) However, on equity principles, where trustees in 1911 sought judicial interpretation of will and an authorization to retain preferred stock belonging to trust estate and court granted such authority and retained jurisdiction of matter, supplemental judgment in 1915 authorizing exchange of preferred stock for common stock of another company was held binding on answering defendants.—In re Ferguson's Will, 258 N.W. 295, 193 Minn. 235.

First judgment void

(1) The entry of a void judgment has been held not to limit the jurisdiction of court to treat it as a nullity and proceed to enter a second judgment.—Parrish v. Ferriell, 186 S.W.2d 625, 299 Ky. 676—33 C.J. p 1193 note 37 [b].

(2) Before the second judgment can be considered valid it must appear that the first judgment was void.—Mullins v. Thomas, 150 S.W. 2d 83, 136 Tex. 215.

(3) Delay in filing the first judgment until date on which second judgment was filed was held not to prevent the second judgment from being a nullity.—Mullins v. Thomas, supra.

Additional judgment for costs cannot be entered after original judgment dismissing complaint without adjudication of costs.—Empire Produce Co. v. Ring, 232 N.Y.S. 82, 225 App.Div. 6.

Legal and equitable relief

(1) Where administratrix brought action based on fraud which had allegedly induced deceased stockholder to assign stock and a money judgment was entered on an additional count for equitable relief limited to a single recovery, such procedure was improper since, under the blended system of law and equity, only one money judgment was necessary.—Dellefield v. Blockdel Realty Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 128 F.2d 85.

(2) Other cases involving legal and equitable relief see 33 C.J. p 1193 note 37 [d].

Single adjudication of separate and distinct sums does not create separate and distinct judgment as to each sum.—C. T. C. Investment Co. v. Daniel Boone Coal Corporation, D.C.Ky., 58 F.2d 305.

Provision for enforcement

(1) In proceeding supplemental to execution, after entry of original decree, court was authorized to enter supplemental decree containing additional provisions for enforcing it.—Pappas v. Taylor, 244 P. 393, 138 Wash. 31.

(2) Provision for enforcement of judgment generally see infra § 82.

43. Tex.—General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Bodenheim, Civ.App., 37 S.W.2d 312.

33 C.J. p 1194 note 38.

Counterclaim

(1) Under some statutes a single judgment should be rendered where plaintiff prevails on case and defendant on counterclaim.—State ex rel. Duraflor Products Co. v. Pearcy, 29 S.W.2d 83, 325 Mo. 335.

(2) Under provisions of statutes providing that, where a counterclaim is established by "defendant" which is less than plaintiff's demand, plaintiff must have judgment for residue only, the word "defendant" means a single defendant.—Bandych v. Ross, 26 N.Y.S.2d 330.

Effect of cross action

(1) Cross action has been held not an ancillary proceeding but an independent suit in which a final judgment could be rendered without awaiting a decision in the original suit.—Adam v. Saenger, Tex.Civ. App., 101 S.W.2d 1046, reversed on other grounds 58 S.Ct. 454, 303 U. S. 59, 82 L.Ed. 649, rehearing denied 58 S.Ct. 640, 303 U.S. 666, 82 L.Ed. 1123, mandate conformed to Tex. Civ.App., 119 S.W.2d 687, certiorari denied Saenger v. Adam, 59 S.Ct. 332, 307 U.S. 628, 83 L.Ed. 1511.

(2) It has also been held, however, that but one judgment should be entered in an original and a cross suit.

enter the orders separately and not as a part of the judgment for defendant.[44]

The general rule has been held to have application only to parties to an action whose interests are identical,[45] and not to prevent the court from granting judgment to plaintiff in an action and postponing determination of claims between defendants which do not affect the rights of plaintiff.[46] The entry of an interlocutory decree followed by the entry of a decree rendering the former final does not violate the rule.[47]

Statutes or rules of court in a number of jurisdictions permit departure from the general rule,[48] as, for example, statutes, discussed supra § 36, which permit separate judgments to be entered as to different defendants. Under other statutes, where only part of a claim is controverted, or where defendant admits, or offers to allow judgment as to, part of the claim, judgment may be entered for such part, and subsequently another judgment may be entered for the amount found due, if any, on further litigation.[49] Where separate judgments are properly rendered in the same action, the fact that they are written on the same paper does not affect their validity.[50]

§ 66. Several Causes Tried Together

Where several causes are tried as one action, separate judgments in each may and should be entered.

Where several causes are tried and submitted together, it is not proper to render a general judgment, but separate judgments should be entered in the separate cases.[51] In a penal action to recover on several distinct offenses, judgment must be rendered separately on each specific offense.[52]

§ 67. Nature and Extent of Relief

At common law equitable relief cannot be awarded in an action at law. It is otherwise in jurisdictions in which law and equity are administered by the same courts, such courts having a broad discretion in the manner of granting relief and forming their decrees.

A court can render only such judgment in a case as does not transcend the extent and character of judgments which are applicable to the class of cases to which the case under consideration belongs.[53] However, the fact that relief of a particular sort has not been given previously is not conclusive that it should not be granted, although ordinarily it is highly persuasive to such effect.[54] The court cannot by its judgment give one of the parties a right which he did not otherwise have.[55]

As a general rule, specific or equitable relief cannot be recovered in an action at law under the common law or where law and equity are administered as separate systems of jurisprudence.[56] The sole remedy the court is competent to give is a judgment for money damages as a recompense for the injury suffered.[57] On the other hand, in jurisdictions in which the formal distinction between courts of law and equity has been abolished by code or practice, and in which the same court administers law and equity, a judgment may award such legal and equitable and specific relief as the case warrants.[58] In such jurisdictions the court possesses a broad discretion in the manner of granting relief and forming its decrees[59] in order to adapt the relief to the circumstances of the particular case.[60] It will administer such relief as the exigencies of the case demand[61] as of the close of the trial[62] or entry of the decree,[63] provided a sufficient foundation for the suit existed at the time when it was commenced.[64] The court will endeavor to dispose finally of the litigation so as to preclude further litigation between the parties on the same subject matter.[65]

Double relief illustrated

In an action for damages for breach of contract to furnish electric lighting facilities and for mandamus to compel performance of such contract, an award of damages based on a continuing and indefinite failure to perform and grant of mandamus without taking it into consideration in assessing damages, was erroneous as giving double relief.—Wichita Falls Electric Co. v. Huey, supra.

the subject of a suit to one of the parties to collect and distribute among the interested parties.[68]

Unenforceable judgments. A court will not render a judgment which cannot be enforced by any process known to law.[69]

Specification in judgment. The entry of a judgment must show the nature of the relief granted[70] or denied,[71] its extent,[72] and, as discussed infra § 75, the parties for and against whom it is rendered. A general judgment for defendant is not objectionable where there is no doubt that the judgment denies the relief sought.[73] It is improper, however, for the judgment to purport to grant relief as prayed for in the petition where damages were also prayed for but not granted.[74]

Prospective damages. A judgment in an action for damages reciting that plaintiff had been damaged in a specified amount is not objectionable as providing for prospective damages.[75]

§ 68. —— Amount of Recovery

The recovery of double damages is not favored.

The recovery of double damages is not favored.[76] The adding of interest to the amount of a verdict for plaintiff has been held not to be error where the court has reserved for itself the computation of interest.[77]

Designation of the amount of the recovery is considered infra §§ 76–79.

§ 69. —— Personal Judgment in Proceedings by Attachment or in Rem

A personal or general judgment cannot as a general rule be effectively rendered in a proceeding in rem, as by attachment, unless jurisdiction of the person has also been obtained by personal service or by an appearance.

Although some statutes contemplate the rendition of a judgment, personal in form, even where no jurisdiction has been obtained over defendant's person,[78] as a general rule, in a proceeding in rem in which the court's jurisdiction is founded solely on the presence of the particular thing involved in the suit, as by attachment, no personal judgment can be rendered against the owner or defendant beyond the property involved.[79] It has been held, however, that a personal or general judgment in such a case is not absolutely void,[80] but that it can have no effect further than to bind the property attached.[81]

Where jurisdiction acquired over person. Where the court has acquired jurisdiction over defendant's person by personal service or his voluntary appearance it is usually proper to render a personal judgment against him,[82] even though the writ of attachment issued in the case is bad.[83] If the parties are before the court, a decree in personam

§ 71. Recitals

a. In general
b. Jurisdictional recitals
c. Verdict and facts or findings

a. In General

A judgment does not reside in its recitals, and ordinarily need not recite on its face matters which appear from other parts of the judgment roll.

Mere recitals are not indispensable parts of judgments.[85] The judgment or decree does not reside in its recitals, but in the mandatory or decretal portion thereof,[86] which adjudicates and determines the issues in the case and defines and settles the rights and interests of the parties as far as they relate to the subject matter of the controversy.[87]

Matters which appear from other parts of the judgment roll need not be recited in the judgment itself.[88] Hence, while as discussed supra §§ 47–58, a judgment or decree must conform to the pleadings and findings in the case, if it does so conform a statement to that effect in the decree itself is not necessary,[89] nor need the judgment of a court of record recite on its face that it was rendered after due proof.[90] The validity of the judgment is not affected by recitals which precede the judgment.[91]

If reasons and rulings are required to be incorporated in the decree in the interest of clarity, they should be concisely set out.[92]

b. Jurisdictional Recitals

Except as statute or court rule may otherwise provide, the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction need not, as a general rule, contain a recital of the jurisdictional facts.

Except as statute or court rule may otherwise provide,[93] the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction is not, as a general rule, required to contain a recital of the jurisdictional facts,[94] and failure of such a judgment in an ordinary action at law to contain a recital of such facts does not vitiate the judgment,[95] nor does error in the recital

A law or decretal judgment, based on evidences of indebtedness specified in statute requiring person bringing suit thereon to allege or prove that such instruments have been assessed for taxation, is neither void nor voidable merely because it does not recite that statute has been complied with.—Crickmer v. Thomas, 200 S.E. 353, 120 W.Va. 769—Newhart v. Pennybacker, 200 S.E. 350, 120 W.Va. 774, concurring opinion 200 S.E. 754, 120 W.Va. 774.

Resort to record

(1) Where court had jurisdiction of subject matter and potential jurisdiction of parties, and judgment did not recite service of process, entire record could be looked to, to ascertain if actual jurisdiction had been acquired.—Johnson v. Cole, Tex.Civ.App., 138 S.W.2d 910, error refused.

(2) On question of validity of the judgment, recourse may be had to affidavits in judgment roll to determine whether showing made for or-of such facts have such effect.[96] It has been held that, where service of process on defendant was constructive only, the judgment should recite facts sufficient to show compliance with the statute.[97]

The necessity for a record showing of jurisdictional facts in courts of inferior or limited jurisdiction is discussed in Courts § 105.

c. Verdict and Facts or Findings

As a general rule a judgment need not incorporate in its recitals the verdict or findings of fact on which it is founded.

While a judgment ordinarily should refer to, and state the result of, the verdict, decision, or report which authorizes it,[98] in accordance with any statute or rule of court,[99] generally it is not necessary to go further and incorporate in the recitals of the judgment the verdict,[1] or the findings,[2] or the evidentiary facts.[3] It is sufficient if the facts essential to sustain the judgment are stated in the pleadings[4] and ascertained by the judgment.[5]

Mere findings or conclusions of law have been held to have no place in a judgment;[6] and, even where a statute requires findings and conclusions to be made, the better practice is to include them in a separate instrument.[7] A judgment and the findings, however, may be incorporated in the same instrument without affecting the validity of the judgment[8] where no separate findings or conclusions are requested or filed.[9]

While under code practice a recital of the facts in an equitable decree is usual and proper,[10] only the decretal part of the decree determines the rights

der of publication of summons was sufficient to confer jurisdiction on court.—Bell v. McDermoth, 246 P. 805, 198 Cal. 594.

Sufficiency of compliance

(1) Substantial compliance with the rules of civil procedure requiring the judgment to recite carefully the findings on which it is based has been held sufficient.—Doornbos v. Looney, supra.

(2) It has also been held that the fact that a judgment did not recite the findings on which it was based did not render judgment defective where the matter was not called to trial court's attention and trial court was not requested to file findings of fact or conclusions of law.—J. R. Phillips Inv. Co. v. Road Dist. No. 18 of Limestone County, Tex.Civ.App., 172 S.W.2d 707, error refused.

However, it has also been held that a judgment should specially recite the facts on which it is predicated.—De Santo v. De Nicola, 122 A. 708, 99 Conn. 717.

Judgment should contain nothing but a statement that the court has made its findings of fact and conclusions of law and then decree the relief to which the plaintiff is entitled.—City Bank Farmers' Trust Co. v. thereon,[19] and to enable a law officer to levy execution.[20] Where the record entry is wholly uncertain, repugnant, or contradictory, the judgment is at least erroneous, and it may be void.[21] An obscure judgment entry may, however, be construed with reference to the pleadings and record, and, where on the whole record its sense can be clearly ascertained, the judgment will be upheld.[22]

§ 73. Conditional Judgments

As a general rule, a judgment must not be conditioned on any contingency; but, in a number of instances, as where equitable relief is awarded, conditional judgments have been sustained.

A conditional judgment is one whose enforceability, or force, depends on the performance or nonperformance of certain acts to be done in the future by one of the parties,[23] as where a judgment is given for plaintiff, to be stricken out if defendant pays the amount named, or files a bond, within a certain time.[24]

Where a judgment contains a condition sure to happen, or alternatives, one or the other of which a party is bound to elect, the happening or election making the judgment absolutely certain and definite eliminates the condition.—Parish v. McConkie, 85 P.2d 1001, 84 Utah 396.
Perfection or acquisition of title
Where enforceability or validity of judgment is conditioned on plaintiff's perfecting or acquiring title to property, judgment is conditional.—Zintsmaster v. Werner, C.C.A.Pa., 41 F.2d 634.
Judgments held not conditional
(1) Permitting company to withdraw petition on understanding that it would abandon claim to money in hands of receiver was not erroneous as conditional judgment.—Killian v. Maiden Chair Co., 161 S.E. 546, 202 N.C. 23.
(2) Intimation of judge, in action for damages for diverting and polluting water, that he would reduce or set aside verdict, if defendant would agree to install sewerage disposal plant, did not constitute judgment, signed after announcement that defendant could not accept court's offer, conditional.—Cook v. Facts as of time of rendition controlling
(1) Judgments take their validity and binding force from court's action, based on facts existing at time of their rendition, not from what may happen in the future.—Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen v. Simmons, 79 S.W.2d 419, 190 Ark. 480.
(2) It would be an anomaly for the court to mould a judgment so as to make it binding only to the extent that some later judgment or verdict might determine.—Jarecky v. Arnold, 182 S.E. 66, 51 Ga.App. 954.
Interlocutory requirement of payment
Judgments containing interlocutory provisions, requiring payment of money and maturing before main decree can be reviewed, are not fa-

held that a conditional judgment is wholly void.[26] It has been said, however, that modern practice has relaxed this rule,[27] and in a number of cases conditional judgments have been rendered and sustained,[28] especially when there is an equitable phase of the action,[29] or where equitable relief is awarded,[30] or where it is necessary to protect the interests of defendant;[31] and a court has been held empowered to direct an entry of a judgment "secured by appeal" on such terms as it may deem fit.[32]

§ 74. Alternative Judgments

As a general rule a judgment should not be in the alternative, although under some circumstances, such as in actions for the specific recovery of property, an alternative judgment may be proper.

An alternative judgment is a judgment, for one thing or another, which does not specifically and in a definitive manner determine the rights of the parties,[33] as where it requires one of the parties to perform one or more alternative propositions.[34] As a general rule judgments cannot be in the alternative,[35] and it has been held that an alternative judgment is wholly void,[36] especially where further action of the court is necessary.[37] It has also been said, however, that modern practice has relaxed this rule,[38] and it has been held that, if the judg-vored, since they place the losing party at a great disadvantage.—Alamitos Land Co. v. Shell Oil Co., 17 P.2d 998, 217 Cal. 213—Ochoa v. McCush, 2 P.2d 357, 216 Cal. 426.

Statutory requirement as to form

Under a statute providing that the judgment shall conform to the pleadings, the nature of the case proved, and the verdict, and be so framed as to give the party all the relief to which he may be entitled in law or equity, a judgment, although conditional in form, is sufficient, if it is of such a nature that it may be determined therefrom definitely what rights and obligations pertain to the respective parties.—Peterson v. Overson, supra.

Subjection to rights of third person

Judgment for defendant, subject to rights of third person, not party to action, who has attached funds in plaintiff's hands, was not erroneous, since plaintiff need not pay judgment until such person's rights are adjudicated.—Ward v. Blair, 21 S.W. 2d 123, 231 Ky. 96.

§ 75. Designation of Parties

a. In general
b. Plaintiffs
c. Defendants
d. Names and misnomers

a. In General

A judgment must designate the parties for and against whom it is rendered; but it may be saved from uncertainty in this respect by reference to the caption, record, pleadings, or process.

A judgment must designate the parties for and against whom it is rendered, or it will be void for uncertainty;[41] and it has been said that the name of the person intended must appear by appellation or cognomen on the face of the judgment.[42] The designation of the parties should be made with sufficient certainty to enable the clerk to issue execution;[43] this may be done either by naming them correctly or by describing them in such terms as will identify them with certainty.[44]

The parties need not be designated by name in the judgment where the entry of judgment in connection with the record of the cause leaves no doubt as to the parties for or against whom it was rendered,[45] or if from the entire judgment roll it can be determined with sufficient certainty against whose property execution should issue.[46] Thus, as discussed in subdivisions b and c of this section, a judgment expressed to be merely for or against "plaintiff" or "defendant" will be sufficient if the names of the parties thus designated can be ascertained without ambiguity from the record. Reference may be made to the caption, record, pleadings, and process, in aid of the judgment, so as to eliminate uncertainty.[47]

The fact that a descriptive word or phrase is added to a party's name in a judgment neither affects the validity of the judgment nor changes the legal rights and relations which it engenders.[48]

in law or equity, a judgment, although alternative in form, is sufficient, where rights and obligations may be definitely determined therefrom.—Petersen v. Overson, supra.

b. Plaintiffs

Plaintiff must be designated in the judgment with sufficient certainty to permit identification. A judgment for or against "plaintiff," when there are several plaintiffs, or reciting "plaintiffs" when there is only one, is not void if the persons intended can otherwise be identified.

Plaintiff must be designated in the judgment with sufficient certainty to permit of his identification, or the judgment will be void.[49] A judgment expressed to be merely for or against "plaintiff" or "plaintiffs" is sufficient if the names of the parties thus designated can be ascertained without ambiguity from the record.[50] A judgment for or against "plaintiff," when there are several plaintiffs in the case, or one which describes the parties as "plaintiffs" when there is only one, will not be void if the record shows clearly, and without doubt, for and against whom the judgment was intended to run.[51] A judgment against "plaintiffs" is good against all the plaintiffs against whom it could have been properly rendered;[52] but, where there are two or more plaintiffs in the action, a judgment intended to apply to fewer than all must specify which one is, or which ones are, meant.[53]

A judgment in favor of the individual members of a firm as plaintiffs is not voided by the fact that the name of the firm is misstated therein.[54] Likewise, a judgment for plaintiffs in an action by a partnership is not void for failure to name the partners, their names not being in the petition;[55] nor does failure of a judgment on a claim bond to designate whether claimant is a partnership or a corporation render the judgment invalid.[56]

Representative capacity. Where the judgment is for or against a plaintiff in a representative capacity, that fact must be sufficiently indicated,[57] and judgment may properly be entered for or against him in his representative capacity.[58] If words added to plaintiff's name are merely descriptio personae, judgment may be entered for or against him individually.[59] In a suit by one plaintiff for the use of another, a judgment for defendant is a judgment against plaintiff of record only, and not against the use-plaintiff;[60] and a judgment in favor of a nominal plaintiff for the use of the estate of a named deceased will not be set aside on the ground that it does not show for whom it was rendered.[61]

Judgment in the name of a public official, acting for the use of the public, has been held not to be void merely because he ceased to hold office prior to the date on which judgment was rendered.[62]

Conformity of the judgment to the pleadings and proof with respect to the personal or representative capacity of the parties is discussed supra § 51.

c. Defendants

Mistakes or inaccuracies in designating the defendants will generally be treated as mere irregularities, not invalidating the judgment, where the persons intended can be clearly ascertained from the record.

director general of railroads, and who was neither director general nor agent of president, was held void.—U. S. ex rel. Rauch v. Davis, 8 F.2d 907, 56 App.D.C. 46, certiorari denied 46 S.Ct. 352, 270 U.S. 653, 70 L.Ed. 782.

Error in entry of judgment
The insertion of the names of the parties in the entry of the final judgment is unnecessary if there is enough in it to connect it with the other parts of the record in which the names are entered, so as to make the judgment a part of the record, and hence, if the clerk in making the entry errs in the name of plaintiff, it will be immaterial, and the judgment will be good.—Grimball v. Mississippi & A. R. Co., 11 Miss. 38.
Designation as heirs, descendants, or legatees
A judgment which describes the parties plaintiff as the heirs, descendants, or legatees of a person named is not void for uncertainty, although they are not named individually, if the record in the case shows who are meant; but otherwise such a judgment is void for uncertainty.—Parsons v. Spencer, 83 Ky. 305—33 C.J. p 1199 notes 89, 90.

62. Cal.—Weadon v. Shahen, 123 P. 2d 88, 50 Cal.App.2d 254.

It has been held not to be mandatory that a judgment specifically name defendants,[63] and failure to state their names has been held an irregularity that may be removed by proof.[64] Also, a judgment expressed to be merely for or against "defendant" or "defendants" is sufficient if the names of the parties thus designated can be ascertained without ambiguity from the record.[65] The erroneous entering up of a judgment against one of several defendants has been held a mere clerical misprision,[66] and a judgment for or against "defendant," where there are several, or one reciting "defendants," where there is only one, has been held not to be void, if the record as a whole shows clearly, and without doubt, for and against whom the judgment is intended to be rendered;[67] but in other cases a judgment against "the defendant," where there are several, has been held to be bad as to all for uncertainty.[68] Where there are two or more defendants, a judgment intended to apply to fewer than all must specify which one is, or which ones are, meant, and failure to do so will invalidate it,[69] except where the record shows which one of the several is meant.[70]

A judgment against "defendants" will be presumed to be against all the defendants against whom it could have been properly rendered,[71] that is, it will be limited to those defendants who have been served with process,[72] or who have appeared,[73] or against whom the verdict was found.[74] A judgment entered against a named defendant "et al.," and based on a decision directing judgment against the "defendant" without specifying which defendant was intended, is fatally defective.[75]

A statement that judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff sufficiently shows that it was rendered against the lone defendant,[76] and, where there are more than one defendant, such a judgment will be presumed to be against all the defendants.[77]

Representative capacity. Where the judgment is for or against a defendant in a representative capacity, that fact must be sufficiently indicated,[78] Conformity of the judgment to the pleadings and proof with respect to the personal or representative capacity of the parties is discussed supra § 51.

d. Names and Misnomers

As a general rule each party to a judgment should be designated therein by his full Christian name and surname. A judgment may be vitiated by a misnomer of the parties therein, which renders it uncertain.

As a general rule, each party to a judgment should be designated therein by both his true Christian name and surname in full.[79] A misnomer of the Christian name of a party may render the judgment erroneous,[80] but the use of an erroneous Christian name may not be fatal where there is no uncertainty as to the person intended.[81] Likewise,

Adjudication against defendant not mentioned

Where a judgment does not mention one of several defendants, but adjudges the subject matter of the controversy to others, and such defendant gets nothing, it is in effect a judgment against him.—Whitmire v. Powell, 125 S.W. 889, 103 Tex. 232.

Omitting name of cestui que trust

Judgment for principal defendant in suit to set aside deeds was not invalid for omitting name of minor defendant, for whom principal defendant was trustee.—Bushman v. Barlow, 15 S.W.2d 329, 321 Mo. 1052.

Designation as heirs, descendants, or legatees

A judgment which describes defendants as the heirs, descendants, or legatees of a person is not void for uncertainty, although they are not named individually, if the record in the case shows who are meant, but otherwise such a judgment is void for uncertainty.—Stevenson v. Flournoy, 13 S.W. 210, 89 Ky. 561, 11 Ky.L. 745—33 C.J. p 1199 notes 89, 90.

the omission of the Christian name of one of the parties may render the judgment erroneous,[82] but such an omission is not necessarily fatal where no uncertainty results therefrom.[83]

A judgment may be vitiated by a misnomer of the parties therein,[84] at least where the misnomer renders it uncertain,[85] unless the defect is waived,[86] or cured by other parts of the record.[87] A defendant who is sued by a wrong name, but with due service of process on him, who fails to plead the misnomer, and who suffers a judgment to be taken against him in such name, may be connected with the judgment by proper averments and will be bound by it.[88]

Assumed, fictitious, or trade names. Since, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Names § 9, also 45 C.J. p 376 note 4, in the absence of a statute to the contrary a person has a right to be known by any name he chooses, a judgment for or against a person in an assumed or trade name is valid.[89] Where defendant is equally well-known by two names, a judgment against him in either name is valid.[90] Since, as considered in the C.J.S, title Parties § 98, also 47 C.J. p 175 note 93, a party may usually be sued in a fictitious name if the correct name is unknown, and if the complaint is amended by inserting his true name when discovered, the judgment following it will be valid.[91]

Judgments against married women describing them by their husbands' initials or Christian names, preceded by the designation Mrs., have been sustained.[92]

Use of initials. Initials only in connection with the surname may be insufficient;[93] but the use of initials in lieu of the Christian name has been held to render the judgment merely irregular, and not void,[94] and such designation may be sufficient where the party, by habitually signing his name in that

Nonsuable entity

Where a judgment is recovered in the name of and only against a so-called defendant, which is a nonsuable entity, the judgment does not only not operate against its general manager, but is void.—May v. Clanton, 95 So. 30, 208 Ala. 588.

Doing business in name of another

Suit in which petition denominated defendant as "J. H. Taylor, Broker, a business owned and operated by R. E. Stinson," and in which citation was served on R. E. Stinson, against whom judgment was entered, was not a nullity, and R. E. Stinson could not escape binding effect of judgment because of such appellation.—Stinson v. King, Tex. Civ.App., 83 S.W.2d 398, error dismissed.

True owner

In order to secure a valid judgment against the true owner, when trading under an assumed name, it has been held that the pleadings should aver the name of the true owner, the proof should sustain the allegation, and judgment should be entered against defendant in his or its true name.—Leckie v. Seal, 170 S.E. 844, 161 Va. 215.

B., deceased, contention that judgment should not be entered for her for the reason that the evidence showed her name to be Ole Mae B., will be overruled.—Texas Power & Light Co. v. style, has made it his business name,[95] or if the defect is supplied by other parts of the record,[96] or if it appears that there is no other person of the same name and initials.[97]

Since, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Names § 4, also 45 C.J. p 369 note 35, the law recognizes only one Christian name, as a general rule the omission of a party's middle name or initial, or a mistake with regard thereto, is immaterial,[98] at least if the identity of the party intended is satisfactorily established and it is shown that he received proper notice of the action.[99]

§ 76. Designation of Amount

The amount of a judgment must be specified with certainty and should be expressed in words rather than in figures.

A judgment for money must specify with definiteness and certainty the amount for which it is rendered,[1] and should be so worded as to avoid the possibility of a double recovery;[2] there can be no judgment payable by installments.[3] It has been said that a judgment includes all amounts for which execution may properly issue.[4] A judgment for an amount left blank,[5] or otherwise wholly uncertain,[6] is at least erroneous, and according to a number of decisions such a judgment is void;[7] but according to other authority failure sufficiently to designate the amount renders the judgment merely irregular and erroneous, and not void.[8]

Form and sufficiency of designation generally. A judgment should state the precise amount for which it is rendered, and not leave it to be ascertained by calculation; but if such data are given that the amount may be ascertained with certainty the judgment will be upheld.[9] A judgment for a sum to be thereafter ascertained by a ministerial officer is erroneous[10] except where the reference is merely to calculate and state an amount already definitely fixed by the data given in the judgment.[11] It is sufficient if the sum recovered can be definitely ascertained by an inspection of the record,[12] but matter dehors the record cannot be considered.[13] The amount for which a judgment is rendered may be fixed by reference to the pleadings in the case[14] or to the verdict.[15]

A judgment may be for several sums separately, or in one gross sum aggregating all the items,[16] and a mere error in aggregating items may be disregarded as surplusage.[17] A judgment for one amount to be discharged by the payment of a larger amount is erroneous,[18] as is also, except in the case of penal bonds, a judgment for one amount to be discharged by a smaller amount.[19] Where judgment is recovered for compensatory and punitive damages, the court is not required to specify how much is for the one and how much for the other in the absence of a statute so requiring.[20]

Specifying denomination. In specifying the amount of recovery, a judgment should contain some word or character indicating the denomination of money intended.[21] Judgments for a numerical amount without any word or sign indicating what units of value are intended have been held erroneous[22] or void,[23] particularly in the case of judgments for taxes;[24] but in some states such judgments are upheld where it appears clearly from the record what was intended.[25]

Words and figures. The amount of a judgment should be expressed in words rather than figures,[26] as being less liable to alteration or mistake,[27] and it has been held insufficient and erroneous to enter the amount in figures;[28] but a judgment for a sum of money expressed only in figures has been held not void,[29] and according to some decisions not even erroneous.[30]

§ 77. —— Interest

Where interest is a separate part of the judgment, it should be stated with certainty; but if sufficient data are given for definite calculation, the judgment will be upheld.

Ordinarily interest due on the demand on which the action is brought should be calculated and the judgment rendered for the aggregate amount of the demand and interest,[31] and, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, the fact that this results in allowing compound interest has been held no objection;[32] but where the recovery of interest is by way of damages it has been held that the amounts of the debt and the interest shall be kept separate and apart and not be given in a lump sum in the judgment.[33] Where interest enters into a judgment as a separate part thereof, it must be stated with definiteness and certainty,[34] and while it has been held that the exact amount should be stated in the judgment in dollars and cents,[35] it has also been held that, if sufficient data are given for its calculation with certainty, the judgment will be upheld.[36] Thus it has been held sufficient if the amount of interest in the judgment can be definitely and certainly fixed by an inspection of the pleadings[37] or the record.[38]

Although it has been held that the rate of interest[39] and the time from which interest begins to run[40] must be expressly recited in the judgment, it has also been held, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, that a provision in the judgment for interest is not required,[41] and, therefore, ordinarily it is not necessary to state the rate of interest,[42] and, of course, provisions for interest in contravention of statute are erroneous.[43]

Where the judgment is to bear the same rate of interest as the debt on which it is founded, it is erroneous to fix any other rate of interest;[44] and usually it is necessary for the rate to be expressed in the judgment,[45] although the judgment may be aided by the record in this respect.[46]

Costs, when authorized, are a part of the judgment,[47] and judgment usually is given for a sum certain, with costs to be taxed, and the clerk subsequently taxes the costs and inserts them in the judgment, in a blank left for that purpose, or indorses them on the execution.[48] Failure to fill the

Two trials

Where, after a finding for plaintiff in an action in assumpsit, a new trial is granted by an appellate court and the case is again tried in the lower court within a year after the remittitur is filed, resulting in a verdict for defendant, it is not proper for defendant to enter judgment twice, once for costs on the ground that the judgment for plaintiff had been reversed, and the other time generally on the basis of the second trial, the latter judgment being sufficient to carry with it any and all costs allowed by the various statutes in favor of defendant.—Cockcroft v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 31 Pa.Dist. & Co. 159.

Trial and appellate courts

The statute providing for inclusion of costs in judgment has reference to judgments of both the trial and appellate courts.—Da Rouch v. District Court of Third Judicial Dist. in and for Salt Lake County, 79 P.2d 1006, 95 Utah 227, 116 A.L.R. 1147.

Judgment held sufficient

Judgment that defendant recover amount of detinue bond from plaintiff and his sureties, to be applied on costs, and all costs exceeding such amount from plaintiff, will support execution as to latter, even though costs are divided in amount.—Clifton v. Gay, 109 So. 168, 21 Ala.App. 412, certiorari denied 109 So. 170, 215 Ala. 22.

blank for costs does not affect the regularity of the judgment in other respects,[49] or, at least, it is only an irregularity, and does not render the judgment void or inoperative.[50] A judgment is unaffected by the taxation of costs until the actual entry of the costs therein.[51] In some jurisdictions the amount of the costs must be specified in the judgment,[52] and, where the space for the amount of costs is left blank, no judgment for costs is rendered.[53] It has been held correct to enter judgment for a specified amount, including costs,[54] or from which the other party's costs have been deducted.[55]

Where the right to costs is waived or lost,[56] or there is no court order or direction with regard thereto,[57] the clerk has been held to have no authority to insert them in the judgment. Judgment rendered for costs only has been held not a proper judgment,[58] especially where the space for the amount thereof is left blank.[59] Allowances granted by the judgment must be certain in amount.[60]

Allowances for fees of referees and stenographers requiring judicial action by the court become component parts of the judgment and must be embraced therein.[61]

Attorney's fees. It has been held that attorney's fees or commissions should be entered as a separate item and not included in the judgment for the principal obligation.[62] However, an attorney's fee or commission, stipulated for in the contract or obligation in suit is part of the principal debt, and may be incorporated in the judgment as a part of the recovery.[63]

§ 79. —— Medium of Payment

a. Domestic or foreign money
b. Coin or currency

a. Domestic or Foreign Money

A judgment should be rendered for domestic dollars and cents, and not for foreign money.

A judgment should be rendered for domestic dollars and cents, and not for foreign money.[64] Foreign currency is regarded merely as a commodity, and in an action on a demand due in foreign currency the judgment should be entered for its value in domestic money.[65]

for coined dollars or gold is erroneous.[66] Thus it has been held that, in actions for torts, judgments for damages cannot be for gold coin,[67] unless authorized by statute.[68] Where gold coin is lost or converted, it has been held in some cases that the judgment should be entered for gold dollars,[69] while in other cases it has been said that the judgment should be for the face or value of the gold coin in currency.[70]

Void or voidable. A judgment for gold or silver coin in a case where such a judgment is not authorized is irregular and erroneous, but it is not in any event void.[71]

Costs and interest. It has been held in several cases not involving express contracts, that, although judgment for the principal sum is properly rendered payable in gold, the judgment for costs must be rendered payable in currency;[72] but there is authority for the rule that, where a contract is made payable in a specific kind of money, the judgment enforcing it may enforce the payment of costs and interest in the kind of money mentioned in the contract, for the reason that costs and interest become a component part of the judgment.[73]

(2) Effect of Contract

Generally judgments in suits on contracts payable in coin should be entered for coined dollars.

In a number of early decisions the provision in a contract for payment in coin or a particular kind of coin was held to be of no effect, and contracts containing such provisions were held to amount to nothing more than contracts to pay the nominal value in any money which was a legal tender, and consequently the judgments to be entered thereon were required to be for money generally, without specifying the kind.[74] In other cases it was held that the judgment on a contract calling for gold or silver should be for the value of the coin in currency,[75] while in still other cases it was held that the judgment should be in the alternative, for the coin or its value in currency.[76]

Subsequently the validity of express contracts to pay coined dollars of a kind specified was sustained in the federal courts as not being within the legal tender acts, and the doctrine was established that such contracts can be satisfied only by the tender or payment of coined dollars of the kind specified, and that judgments in suits brought on such contracts should be entered for coined dollars and parts of dollars.[77] These decisions of the United States supreme court are controlling on the state courts, and in effect overrule all previous inconsistent decisions.[78] They have been followed in practically every state decision since rendered, and the rule is now well established.[79] The rule established by the foregoing cases, however, does not prevent the rendition of a judgment for the value of the coin in currency where the creditor consents to or seeks such recovery.[80]

Early statutes. Before the present established doctrine became settled by the decisions, it was specifically incorporated in the statutes of some of the states and decisions construing and applying such statutes are considered in 33 C.J. p 1208 note 4.

Coin or equivalent. It has been held that the judgment on a contract payable in coin or its equivalent in currency should be in the alternative, for coin or currency.[81] In other cases it has been held that the judgment should not be rendered in the alternative for coin or currency, but should be in currency for an amount equal to the face value plus the premium of the coin,[82] while in still other cases it has been held that the judgment should be for gold alone,[83] or simply for the amount of money found due without specifying the kind of money in which payment should be made.[84]

(3) Conformity to Pleadings, Issues, and Verdict

Judgments for a specific kind of coin must conform to the pleadings, verdict, and findings.

Judgments for a specific kind of coin must be supported by the case made by the pleadings.[85] Where the pleadings or process do not specify gold, a judgment by default or nil dicit for gold is erroneous,[86] but is regular and proper where supported by the declaration or complaint.[87] A coin judgment must likewise be sustained by the verdict or findings,[88] and, equally so, a general judgment.[89] Where the verdict is for gold or legal tender in the alternative, a judgment for legal tender only is not in accordance with the verdict.[90]

§ 80. Description of Property

A judgment affecting the title to property must describe it with sufficient certainty to identify it; the judgment may be aided by intendments and additional data drawn from the record.

Where a judgment affects the title to property, real or personal, the property must be described specifically and with certainty[91] to enable execution of the court's mandate;[92] an impossible,[93] wrong,[94] or uncertain[95] description, or the absence of a description,[96] renders the judgment erroneous or void. Ordinarily the judgment should follow the complaint in its description of the property involved,[97] but variances which do not affect the identity of the property are immaterial.[98] The description is sufficient where the property which is the subject of the judgment is described with sufficient certainty to identify it.[99]

The judgment may be aided by intendments and additional data drawn from the pleadings and oth-

The office of description in a judgment is to furnish means of identification of the land.—Greer v. Greer, Tex., 191 S.W.2d 848—Trout v. Grubbs, Tex.Civ.App., 1 S.W.2d 950, 951.

Test of uncertainty
"We do not see how a judgment can be pronounced a nullity for uncertainty of description unless the court can see that nothing is described. Those claiming under it must rely on the description, it is true, but whether or not the description is defective must be tested by rules of evidence ordinarily applied to the subject."—Newport v. Hatton, 231 P. 987, 996, 195 Cal. 132—McLean v. Ladewig, 37 P.2d 502, 504, 2 Cal.App.2d 21.

er parts of the record,[1] or even, in some cases, by extrinsic documentary evidence.[2] Words of misdescription may be rejected as surplusage, if the property is otherwise sufficiently identified.[3] A description of property in the judgment by a reference to the pleadings is sufficient[4] unless the reference introduces a new element of uncertainty[5] or the description referred to is itself insufficient.[6] Such a reference is to the amended complaint, if there is one.[7] A reference to the report of a commissioner for a description may be sufficient.[8] In some cases a description by reference has been held insufficient.[9]

A judgment should show with certainty the time of its rendition, but the omission of a date does not render it void.

A judgment should show with certainty the time of its rendition,[10] but need not specify the particular hour.[11] The omission of the date, however, is a mere irregularity, and will not render the judgment void.[12] A clerical error may be shown so as to support the judgment.[13] As appears infra § 113, the date may be fixed by reference to the record of proceedings in the case.

§ 82. Provisions for Enforcement

Ordinarily a judgment need not contain provisions for its enforcement, although their inclusion does not necessarily invalidate a judgment.

The office of a judgment is fully performed when it declares and adjudicates the existence or nonexistence of the liability sought to be established; it is not concerned with the means of enforcing the liability declared,[14] which are discussed infra §§ 585–591. Ordinarily a judgment need not order execution or other process provided by law for its enforcement,[15] although to do so does not necessarily render an otherwise valid judgment void[16] or erroneous;[17] and in some cases the clause with regard to enforcement may be disregarded as mere surplusage.[18]

A money judgment should be simply that one party or the other recover the amount awarded, without any direction as to how the money should be paid by the debtor or made by the officer;[19] after judgment the law, and not the court, directs what proceedings shall be had for the purpose of satisfying the amount adjudged to be due.[20] However, a judgment may be adapted to the proportionate liabilities of the several defendants in the action,[21] or may direct the order in which levy should be made on the properties of several parties defendant,[22] or, in the case of a debt payable by installments, the judgment may be so framed as to provide for its payment at successive periods, as the installments fall due,[23] or may order the payment of the amount presently due, with leave to plaintiff to take out executions for the succeeding installments.[24] Under some statutes, in cases where defendant is subject to arrest on execution, plaintiff is entitled to have the judgment state that fact as the basis for the issuance of a body execution,[25] which, as discussed in Executions § 417 b, may not otherwise lawfully issue; but even so it has been held improper to insert in the judgment a provision for the issuance of an execution against the person.[26]

Limitation to particular property. A general judgment should not limit its collection to particular property or funds[27] unless the contract of the parties contemplates such limitation.[28] Where, however, a judgment in rem or quasi in rem is involved, enforcement should be limited to the particular property in question;[29] where property is in custody of the court by attachment or garnishment, the judgment may provide for enforcement out of such property.[30]

Stay of execution. A judgment may provide that execution shall be stayed in a proper case.[31] A stay, furthermore, may be written into a judgment by operation of law.[32] However, where not within the power of the court to make, that part of a judgment staying execution has been held void.[33]

Waiver of statutory benefits. If the action is on a written obligation which waives the benefit of valuation or appraisement laws, the judgment may contain provisions giving effect to the waiver;[34] where, however, there was no statutory authorization of judgments prohibiting the stay of execution, a waiver of the stay laws has been disregarded by the court.[35]

Under codes and practice acts it may be proper to insert provisions or directions as to performance or enforcement of the judgment.[36]

same grounds.[37] It is not common practice to include words indicating that a judgment in an action at law is without prejudice, even though it is entered on a nonsuit or for some other reason is not conclusive of the merits of the case.[38]

The reservation of control over equity decrees for the purpose of enforcement is discussed in Equity § 616.

Surplusage in a judgment does not necessarily render it invalid.

Surplusage in a judgment, whether it consists of merely superfluous provisions or directions,[39] or of matters which follow as the legal consequences of the judgment, whether or not they are incorporated in it,[40] or of unauthorized provisions,[41] does not necessarily invalidate the judgment.

§ 85. Signing by Judge or Clerk

Except where statute or rule of court provides otherwise, ordinarily neither the judge nor the clerk of the court need sign a judgment.

While it has been held that a judgment need not be signed by the judge of the court rendering the judgment,[42] and that his failure to sign the judgment will not invalidate it,[43] it has also been held, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, that judgments must be signed by the judge,[44] provided the judgments are final judgments.[45] Although it has been held that the failure of the judge to sign a judgment will render the judgment invalid or of no effect,[46] some cases have held that statutes re-

Time of signing
(1) The failure of party, in whose favor court decides, to file formal written judgment within five days after decision, as required by court rule, does not deprive court of jurisdiction to sign judgment after such period, but merely requires such party to go back and comply with rule.—Cahn v. quiring a judge's signature are directory merely, and not mandatory, and that a failure to comply therewith will not render the judgment void.[47]

The absence of a signature may be cured by the signing of the judgment at a later date,[48] and, as between the parties, subsequent proceedings on such judgment are valid.[49]

Clerk's signature. In absence of specific provision therefor, by statute or rule of court, the signature of the clerk is not required.[50] It is required in some jurisdictions, however, that judgments shall be signed or attested by the clerk;[51] but the omission of the clerk to sign the judgment is a mere irregularity which may be corrected at any time, and does not render the judgment void.[52]

§ 86. Nonsuit or Judgment on Merits

Whether a judgment should be one of nonsuit or a judgment of dismissal without prejudice or whether the judgments should be one on the merits depends in general on whether the case has been tried and submitted on the merits.

The phrase "judgment of nonsuit" is frequently applied to the disposition of a case by nonsuit.[53] In general such a judgment decides nothing with respect to the merits of the claim on which action is brought,[54] whether or not the judgment contains a reservation of the right again to sue on the same cause of action,[55] and merely leaves the situation with respect to the cause of action involved as though no suit in that regard had ever been brought.[56] Accordingly, in general it is not proper, on the grant of a nonsuit, to enter a judgment on the merits.[57] So, where plaintiff fails to prove his case, or, in other words, where the court decides that he has given no evidence which would warrant a verdict or finding in his favor, in general the proper judgment to be entered is one of nonsuit,[58] and a judgment on the merits is improper 53. Mass.—Gill v. Stretton, 10 N.E. 2d 185, 298 Mass. 342.

Form and contents of judgment

(1) Where a nonsuit is allowed as a basis for a writ of error, a proper form of entry of judgment is "that the plaintiff being solemnly called came not, whereupon the plaintiff suffered a nonsuit; and it is therefore considered by the Court that the plaintiff take nothing by his writ and that the defendant go hence without day and recover of the plaintiff his costs."—Spiker v. Hester, 135 So. 502, 101 Fla. 288.

(2) Order reciting in court's minutes style and number of case followed with term "nonsuit" has been regarded as a valid judgment of nonsuit.—Keith v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 145 So. 227, 164 Miss. 566.

(3) Judgment of nonsuit need not adjudge costs, in view of statute providing that, in case of nonsuit, defendant shall recover costs.—Keith v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., supra.

Judgment with reservation proper

Judgment of nonsuit in an action for contract price of certain article, with reservation of right to sue on quantum meruit, was not error.—McCook v. Comegys, supra.

Accord and satisfaction

Where complaint alleged an oral contract and plaintiff testified that a settlement was arrived at, by terms of which plaintiff was to receive a certain sum, which was shortly thereafter paid, and plaintiff's attorney testified to an agreement which amounted to an accord and satisfaction, a nonsuit was granted on the merits rather than without prejudice.—Will v. where there has been no real consideration and determination, on the merits, of the issues involved.[59] However, a judgment of nonsuit is not the proper judgment and there should be a final judgment for defendant when defendant successfully controverts plaintiff's evidence, or proves that no such facts exist as are alleged by plaintiff,[60] or where plaintiff's evidence establishes that he has no right of action against defendant.[61]

In code practice, a judgment for defendant frequently takes the form of a dismissal of the action.[62] While the view has been taken that a judgment is contradictory in terms where it purports to determine the merits and also to dismiss the cause,[63] a judgment of dismissal expressly providing that the dismissal is on the merits usually is treated as a judgment on the merits, where the case was actually submitted and tried on the merits.[64] In general, a judgment of dismissal without prejudice is improper where the cause has been tried and submitted on the merits.[65] A dismissal based on findings of fact, made contrary to plaintiff's allegations, is a judgment on the merits.[66] So a judgment for defendant on a directed verdict may properly be a judgment on the merits.[67] Under various other circumstances, the propriety of a judgment of dismissal with prejudice has been recognized.[68]

Failure to amend pleading

Judgment rejecting plaintiff's demands was proper, where court found that accident to plaintiff could not have occurred as alleged and plaintiff had failed to change her position when opportunity was given to amend.—Phillips v. Shreveport Rys. Co., La.App., 163 So. 845.

Reconventional demand

(1) Where the issue with respect to a reconventional demand by defendant was fully litigated at the trial and evidence was adduced thereon by both parties, trial court should have made a definite decision disposing of the reconventional demand, instead of rendering judgment of nonsuit.—Cardino v. Scroggins, La.App., 185 So. 109.

After election

Where plaintiff, on being required at trial to elect between inconsistent causes of actions and remedies, was free to elect either to rescind contract or to sue for breach and elected to sue for rescission, judgment correctly dismissing complaint improperly contained provision that judgment was without prejudice to right to commence action for breach of contract, where plaintiff at time of election had knowledge of all facts with respect to defendants' conduct.—Scheuer v. 68. Plea of res judicata

(1) Where defendant's plea of res judicata lies, a judgment of dismissal with prejudice is proper.—Scofield v. Scofield, 3 P.2d 794, 89 Colo. 409.

(2) The view has been taken that, where plaintiff sought recovery on two contracts, one written and the other oral, and a plea of res judicata was properly sustained as to the written contract only, and it appeared that, with respect to the oral contract, the amount claimed was below the jurisdiction of the trial court, the judgment should have been a judgment of dismissal for want of jurisdictions, but that a judgment that plaintiff take nothing by his suit had the same effect.—Baronian v. Sealy Oil Mill & Mfg.

on the merits, a judgment on the merits is not proper,[69] as, for example, where there is a dismissal without any evidence having been offered and without the submission of any issues for determination.[70] Where a judgment of dismissal is granted merely for failure of plaintiff's evidence, in general it is not a judgment on the merits.[71] It has been held, however, that a judgment of dismissal with prejudice, instead of a judgment of nonsuit, may be proper where plaintiff has introduced all evidence that it is possible for him to offer,[72] and that it is permissible to render a judgment for defendant, on deciding the cause on the merits, notwithstanding defendant's motion for nonsuit made at the close of plaintiff's evidence has been denied and defendant has offered no evidence.[73] On dismissal of the action for failure of plaintiff's pleading to state a cause of action, it ordinarily is not proper to grant an affirmative judgment on the merits in favor of defendant.[74]

IV. ARREST OF JUDGMENT

§ 87. Nature of Remedy

Arrest of judgment is the staying of, or refusal to render, a judgment after verdict, for an intrinsic matter appearing on the face of the record, which would render the judgment, if given, erroneous or reversible.

Arrest of judgment is the act of staying a judgment, or refusing to render judgment, in actions at law after verdict, for some matter intrinsic, appearing on the face of the record, which would render the judgment, if given, erroneous or reversible.[75] Usually the purpose of a motion in arrest of judgment is to prevent the entry of judgment on the verdict because of some defect in the record proper.[76] The power to arrest judgment is inherent

Failure to remedy defective pleading

Judgment of dismissal with prejudice was proper, where pleadings in second action contained same defects which, in prior action, supreme court had pointed out but which plaintiff did not remedy.—Burson v. Adamson, 25 P.2d 723, 93 Colo. 301.

73. Reason for rule

In upholding judgment for defendant where plaintiff made the claim that he was entitled to judgment in view of defendant's failure to offer evidence after the motion for nonsuit was overruled, the court pointed out that, in ruling on a motion for nonsuit, all testimony introduced by plaintiff must be taken as true, whereas in deciding the case on the merits, no such rule prevails.—Price v. in courts of general common-law jurisdiction,[77] but in some jurisdictions the remedy by arrest of judgment no longer prevails in civil cases,[78] and the use of this remedy is sometimes regulated or restricted by statute or rules of court.[79]

Other motions or remedies compared and distinguished. A motion for a new trial differs from a motion in arrest of judgment in that the motion for a new trial is based on the facts and the rulings of the court, while the motion in arrest is based on the record,[80] and such motions are also distinguishable with respect to the purpose of each.[81] A motion for a venire de novo has been compared with, and distinguished from, a motion in arrest of judgment,[82] from a motion to set aside a judgment,[83] and also from an independent proceeding to annul a judgment for fraud.[84] A motion in arrest does not have the effect of a demurrer to the evidence.[85] A motion for judgment non obstante veredicto has been distinguished from a motion in arrest, as discussed supra § 59.

§ 88. Grounds of Arrest

In general, a judgment may be arrested only for errors and defects which are apparent on the face of the record and which are of a substantial nature.

As a general rule, judgment can be arrested only for errors or defects which are apparent on the face of the record[86] or because of some matter which properly should appear of record but does not.[87]

In Connecticut

(1) Strictly speaking, motions in arrest of judgment are for matters appearing on the record.—Pickens v. Miller, 177 A. 573, 119 Conn. 553—Greco v. Keenan, 161 A. 100, 115 Conn. 704—34 C.J. p 31 note 7 [c] (1).

(2) It has been stated that a motion, called a motion in arrest, lies to set aside the verdict for matters dehors the record.—Hamilton v. Pease, 38 Conn. 115—34 C.J. p 31 note 7 [c].

87. Ill.—Cella v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co., 75 N.E. 373, 217 Ill. 326.
34 C.J. p 31 note 8.

A judgment after verdict can be arrested only for substantial faults[88] and, where substantial justice has been done, and the reasons urged are purely technical, a motion in arrest will not be granted.[89] It is a general rule that judgment will not be arrested for mere matters of form,[90] clerical errors,[91] or defects which are cured by the verdict or by the finding of the court[92] or by the admissions of the adverse party,[93] or which have been waived by going to trial.[94] It has been stated broadly that, as a general rule, judgment cannot be arrested if it appears on the whole record for which party judgment should be given.[95]

In some jurisdictions the grounds for arrest of judgment are to a greater or less extent covered by statute and local rules.[96]

§ 89. —— Jurisdiction and Venue

Want of jurisdiction of the subject matter is ground for arrest of judgment.

A judgment may be arrested where the court had no jurisdiction,[97] provided the want of jurisdiction is apparent on the record.[98] In general, an objection based on alleged want of jurisdiction over the person of defendant is not available on a motion in arrest, where there has been a general appearance and pleading to the merits by him.[99] A wrong venue merely has been held not ground for arresting the judgment,[1] but, in an action against several defendants, only one of whom is a resident of the county in which the action is brought, where a verdict is returned against the nonresident defendants only, judgment against such defendants may and must be arrested.[2]

§ 90. —— Process

A fatal defect in the writ or process may be ground for arrest of judgment, but a mere irregularity, a clerical mistake, or a defect which is waived or cured by subsequent action, has been held not ground for arrest of judgment.

A fatal defect in the writ or process by which the suit is begun may be taken advantage of by motion in arrest,[3] but not a mere irregularity or clerical mistake in the process,[4] or such a defect as may be waived by appearance and submitting to trial[5] or such as is cured by the verdict[6] or judgment.[7] Failure duly to serve defendant with proc-

Defects before verdict

(1) Under the terms of some statutes a judgment may not be arrested for any defect in the record that is aided by the verdict or amendable as a matter of form.

Right to arrest not shown

In an action to establish and construe a will and to enjoin defendants from further contesting such will, which was an action of equitable jurisdiction and, in effect, an action to quiet title of plaintiffs as devisees and legatees, as well as an action to construe the will, it was held that, where it was necessary to determine heirship of certain parties in order to determine such parties' relation to the action, and their rights under the will, defendants and contestants were not entitled to have the judgment arrested because of the alleged want of jurisdiction of the court to determine heirship, especially where defendants were not harmed by such determination.—Sager v. ess may furnish ground for a motion of this kind[8] unless service of process is waived.[9]

§ 91. —— Parties

Motions in arrest of judgment based on misnomer, misjoinder, or nonjoinder of parties ordinarily will be denied.

Motions in arrest of judgment based on a defect,[10] such as a misjoinder,[11] misnomer,[12] or nonjoinder[13] of parties, ordinarily will be denied. Where misjoinder of parties, however, is apparent on the face of the record, it may be ground for arresting the judgment,[14] and a like rule applies where there is a nonjoinder of a necessary party.[15] As a general rule judgment may be arrested where the record shows that a joint owner or joint obligee or obligor has not been joined,[16] but, under some statutes, this may be a defect curable by verdict so as to warrant overruling a motion in arrest.[17]

Death of party. The death of one of several plaintiffs or defendants before judgment, being matter dehors the record, is not properly matter to be moved in arrest of judgment.[18]

§ 92. —— Pleadings in General

a. General considerations
b. Misjoinder of causes of action
c. Joinder of good and bad counts

a. General Considerations

Failure of plaintiff's pleading to allege facts essential to his cause of action may be ground for arrest of judgment.

Except where such defects are amendable, cured, or waived, as discussed infra this section, if a declaration or complaint entirely omits the allegation of facts essential to plaintiff's right of recovery, or plaintiff's title or cause of action appears from the declaration itself to be defective and bad in law, so that his pleadings could not support a judgment in his favor, the judgment may be arrested on motion of defendant,[19] even though the objection is

Joint liability
In suit on note against defendants jointly, where pleadings do not show joint liability on face, motion in arrest of judgment on joint verdict should be sustained.—Prosser v. Orlando Bank & Trust Co., 111 So. 516, 93 Fla. 177.

Action against married woman
Where the liability of a married woman is not shown in the pleadings, the defect may be taken advantage of by motion to arrest judgment.—Sheppard v. Kindle, 8 Humphr., Tenn., 80—30 C.J. p 1046, note 89.

made for the first time by the motion in arrest,[20] and, under some statutes, motions in arrest are predicated solely on defects in the pleading.[21] Judgment will not be arrested for any defect in the pleadings which would not have been fatal on general demurrer,[22] but not every defect available on demurrer will warrant arresting the judgment; greater strictness is shown on a motion of this kind than on a demurrer,[23] the motion being denied if the issue joined is such that the court can presume that the defects or omissions were supplied by proof at the trial.[24] The judgment cannot be arrested because the complaint fails to anticipate and negative defenses.[25] The question of the propriety of allowing an amendment to be made in the pleadings cannot be raised on motion in arrest.[26] Duplicity in the pleadings is not ground for arrest,[27] and mere error or irregularity with respect to filing or serving pleadings is not ground for arresting the judgment.[28] Taking issue on an immaterial allegation is not ground for arrest of judgment.[29]

Necessity and effect of demurrer. In some jurisdictions the fact that defendant does not demur to plaintiff's pleading does not necessarily preclude a motion in arrest based on defects in such pleading,[30] but in other jurisdictions, sometimes by virtue of statutory provision, judgment will not be arrested for any defect that should have been objected to by demurrer.[31] particularly if enough appears to show for whom the judgment should be rendered.[32] According to some cases, a motion in arrest of judgment will not be entertained after the overruling of a demurrer to the declaration,[33] at least where the motion is based on any exceptions which might have been considered on the demurrer,[34] and a fortiori matter which was objected to by demurrer and decided on cannot afterward be urged in arrest of judgment.[35] It has been held or recognized, however, that a motion in arrest may lie, even though the objection relied on was raised and decided on a prior demurrer,[36] or, at least, that the motion may lie where the defect on which it is based was not raised by the prior demurrer.[37]

(2) According to some cases, however, the objection that the declaration is so totally defective that it does not support the judgment or that the declaration does not state a cause of action may be availed of by a motion in arrest, even after a demurrer has been overruled and defendant has pleaded over.—Grimmer v. Friederich, 45 N.E. 498, 164 Ill. 245—Stearns v. Cope, 109 Ill. 340—Randall Dairy Co. v. Pevely Dairy Co., 274 Ill.App. 474.

(2) In some earlier cases, however, the view was taken that a motion in arrest would lie even though a prior demurrer had been overruled.—Stewart v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co., 2 N.E. 208, 103 Ind. 44—Newman v. Perrill, 73 Ind. 153.

Defects amendable, waived, or cured. If the defect in the pleadings is merely formal and therefore amendable, or such as may be waived by going to trial without objection, or consists only in a faulty or inartificial manner of setting out a title or cause of action or defense which appears to be good in law, it cannot be reached by motion in arrest.[38] A motion in arrest of judgment will not be granted because of any failure or defect in the pleadings which could have been amended, the amendments being considered as made for the purposes of the motion,[39] or for any defect or omission which may be considered as having been waived by defendant,[40] or cured by the plea or answer[41] or by the verdict or finding,[42] the general rule with regard to omissions being that although the petition may be defective, if it appears that the verdict could not have been given or judgment rendered without proof of the matter omitted to be stated, the defect will be cured or waived and the judgment will not be arrested.[43] According to some cases, however, if a fact essential to plaintiff's right of action is neither expressly stated nor necessarily implied from the facts which are stated, a verdict will not cure the defect, and judgment will be arrested.[44]

(2) A general averment of negligence in doing or omitting a particular act, unless it is too general to give defendants reasonable notice of negligence charged, is good as against a motion in arrest of judgment, since under those allegations facts constituting negligence may be shown.—Bates v. City of McComb, 179 So. 737, 181 Miss. 336.

(3) In an action for personal injuries based on alleged negligence of defendant a declaration which states facts fairly raising a question for decision by a jury on the existence of a duty, violation of that duty, injury to plaintiff because of that violation, and due care by plaintiff is a sufficient declaration as against a motion in arrest of judgment.—Paris v. East St. Louis Ry. Co., 275 Ill.App. 241.

Action of ejectment

Motion in arrest of judgment because the ejectment against the casual ejector was wrongfully entitled was overruled where the declaration to which the real defendant pleaded was properly entitled.—Huidekoper v. Burrus, Pa., 12 F.Cas.No.6,849, 1 Wash.C.C. 257.

b. Misjoinder of Causes of Action

Subject to various qualifications and limitations, a misjoinder of causes of action may be ground for arrest of judgment.

Subject to statutory provisions changing or qualifying the rule,[45] a misjoinder of counts or causes of action, with damages assessed entire, is ground for arresting the judgment,[46] but it is otherwise where one of the counts or causes so joined is stricken out or withdrawn from the jury,[47] or where the damages have been separately assessed on the several counts.[48] Where the verdict rests wholly on one count, the judgment will not be arrested for misjoinder of counts.[49] Under some statutes, where there are several causes of action stated in one count, the objection must be taken by demurrer or motion to strike, or it will be considered waived or cured by verdict and cannot be raised by motion in arrest of judgment.[50]

c. Joinder of Good and Bad Counts

Where a general verdict for the plaintiff is taken on several counts, judgment will not be arrested if there is a good count to which the verdict can be applied.

At common law, especially in various earlier cases, it has been held or recognized that, if a general verdict for plaintiff is taken on several counts in plaintiff's pleading, and one of the counts is fatally defective, the judgment will be arrested on motion, although other counts not subject to objection were covered by the verdict.[51] Under the rule now quite generally prevailing, however, either by virtue of statute or judicial decision, the judgment will not be arrested if there is one good count to which the verdict can be applied, that is, a motion in arrest will not prevail unless all the counts are so defective as not to have been cured by the verdict;[52] and a like rule applies where the case is tried before the court.[53]

§ 93. —— Variance

As a general rule a motion in arrest of judgment may not be based on the ground of an alleged variance.

As a general rule a motion in arrest of judgment may not be based on the ground of an alleged variance,[54] either where the variance is between the writ or præcipe and the declaration or complaint,[55] or between the declaration or complaint and the proof.[56] There apparently is authority for the view that the objection that a judgment does not conform to the verdict should be raised by a motion in arrest.[57]

§ 94. —— Jury

A judgment may be arrested on the ground that the jury was illegally constituted, but not, as a general rule, for objections with respect to qualification or competency of jurors.

A judgment may be arrested where the jury was illegally constituted,[58] but not, as a general rule, for objections to the qualification or competency of jurors[59] or because of the misconduct of a juror.[60] Where an issue of fact is tried by the court which regularly should have been tried by a jury, the judgment will be arrested unless the record shows that a jury was waived.[61]

In Connecticut, where so-called motions in arrest may be grounded on matters dehors the record, as discussed supra § 88, judgment may be arrested for the misconduct, disqualification, or incompetency of a juror,[62] provided the objecting party was ignorant of the matter relied on until after verdict, and therefore did not waive it by going on with the trial without objection.[63]

§ 95. —— Verdict and Findings

A motion in arrest of judgment is a proper method of raising objections based on defects in a verdict appearing on the face of the record; but such a motion does not reach defects or irregularities in the verdict which are merely formal or inconsequential.

In general a motion in arrest of judgment is a proper method of raising objections based on defects in a verdict appearing on the face of the record.[64] Such a motion does not, however, reach a merely formal or inconsequential defect or irregularity in the verdict;[65] but it will reach a verdict which appears from the record to be materially defective.[66] A motion in arrest may be based on the ground that the verdict is not responsive to the issues, or that it differs in a material respect from the pleadings and the issues formed thereon,[67] except where the part of the issue not found is immaterial or bad.[68] A motion in arrest of judgment lies where the verdict is rendered on an immaterial issue, not decisive of the merits of the cause,[69] or

Number of jurors

(1) If the case is tried in a court of record before a smaller number of jurors than the party is entitled to, and his consent does not expressly appear of record, he may take advantage of the objection by motion in arrest.—Ray v. Collins, Mo.App., 274 S.W. 1098—34 C.J. p 39 note 85 [a] (1).

Defendant not specifically named in verdict

The trial court's giving of peremptory direction to find for one of two defendants and jury's verdict for plaintiff disposed of all issues and parties, although such direction was not submitted to jury and verdict did not specifically name other defendant, where jury was instructed that verdict should be against latter defendant, if certain facts were found, so that court did not err in overruling such defendant's motion in arrest of judgment.—Newdiger v. Defect not appearing of record

In a case in which the rule stated in the text was recognized, it was held that a motion for an order setting aside and vacating verdict on ground that verdict was nullity, in that jury had not unanimously agreed thereon, if accorded status of motion in arrest of judgment, was properly denied, where alleged fault on which it was based did not appear on face of record.—Van Demark v. Issues raised by counterclaim

Motion in arrest of judgment on verdict finding issues for defendant, without disposing of issues raised by counterclaim, was properly granted.—Greco v. Keenan, 161 A. 100, 115 Conn. 704.

Several defendants

(1) Motion in arrest of judgment should have been granted where a verdict was for both defendants for the excess of one defendant's separate set-off against plaintiff's joint and several demand.—Cohen v. Karp, 122 A. 524, 143 Md. 208.

(2) Other cases see 34 C.J. p 40 note 96 [c].

Case not within rule

The chancellor did not err in overruling complainants' motion in arrest of judgment on the ground that verdict and judgment on issue submitted to jury were not responsive to the pleadings, where the question thus submitted was raised in complainants' bill and denied by the answer.—Adams v. Winnett, 156 S.W.2d 353, 25 Tenn.App. 276.

Inability to determine for whom judgment to be given

If an issue is so immaterial that the court cannot determine from the finding on it for which party judgment should be given, the judgment should be arrested.—Scott v. Freeport Motor Cas. Co. of Freeport, 58 N.E.2d 618, 324 Ill.App. 529, revers where the verdict is insufficient to sustain a judgment.[70] According to some cases, a general verdict on several counts or pleas properly joined, although erroneous in not specifying on which plea it is based, or in not stating that it is based on all the pleas, is not, in the absence of instructions to make separate findings, ground for arresting judgment.[71]

Failure to make findings where findings are necessary is ground for arresting the judgment,[72] but in some jurisdictions failure of the jury to find for defendant on common counts notwithstanding the court's direction so to find is not ground for arrest of judgment for plaintiff on another count.[73]

§ 96. —— Miscellaneous

Generally speaking, an error of law based on the interpretation of the record proper is ground for arrest of judgment, but ordinarily a matter of defense which might have been pleaded is not a basis for arrest.

Broadly speaking, any error of law based on interpretation of the record proper may be reached by motion in arrest.[74] The omission of steps proper or necessary to be taken before the trial, but which do not affect the jurisdiction of the court, in general afford no ground for a motion in arrest,[75] nor does the denial of a motion for a continuance, to which no exception was taken.[76] Constitutionality of the statute fixing the time for holding a term of court cannot be questioned by motion in arrest after verdict,[77] and a like rule has been applied with respect to the constitutionality of a statute creating the court where the question was first raised by the motion in arrest.[78] In some jurisdictions a discontinuance which is evidenced by the verdict may be reached by a motion in arrest.[79]

Defenses. Generally speaking, a judgment will not be arrested because of any matter which defendant might have pleaded and relied on as a defense to the action, whether by plea in bar[80] or in abatement,[81] except such as go to the jurisdiction, discussed supra § 89. In general, on a motion in arrest, defendant may not urge matters of defense which have been put in issue and have been passed on by the court and jury[82] or which do not appear on the face of the record.[83] Although, where the verdict is against plaintiff, a motion in arrest based on the alleged insufficiency of defendant's plea has been held not available to plaintiff,[84] under some statutes it has been held that a motion in arrest is available to plaintiff to test the sufficiency of a defense pleaded as affirmative matter.[85]

The premature commencement of the action[86] or the fact that the cause of action declared on accrued subsequent to the date of the writ[87] has been regarded as ground for a motion in arrest of judgment unless there is nothing in the record to show prematurity.[88]

Evidence. For the purpose of a motion in arrest, the record does not include the evidence taken at the trial, as discussed infra § 98, and it is no ground for arresting a judgment that there was error in the admission of evidence at the trial,[89] or that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict or findings.[90] The fact that a verdict was obtained by perjury is not ground for arrest of judgment, where such fact does not appear on the face of the record.[91]

Trial. A motion in arrest of judgment ordinarily cannot be based on any matters which took place at the trial of the cause, or on irregularities or failure to follow the rules of procedure in the conduct of such trial.[92]

§ 97. Motions in Arrest

a. General considerations
b. Time for moving and for deciding motion

a. General Considerations

Usually a motion in arrest of judgment is made by defendant. The motion ordinarily should set forth the specific grounds on which it is based.

While some statutes authorize either party to make a motion in arrest of judgment,[93] it is usually made by defendant.[94] The motion need not be made in writing[95] unless a statute or court rule so requires.[96] The motion should point out the specific grounds on which it is based,[97] although, according to some cases, this is not indispensable.[98] The motion is subject to amendment.[99] No pleading or written answer is required in opposition to the motion.[1]

The mere fact that the moving party denominates his motion a motion in arrest does not make it such a motion.[2] On the other hand, the fact that a motion is denominated a motion in arrest may be sufficient in connection with other supporting facts to show that the motion is one in arrest.[3] According to some cases, a motion by defendant in the form of a motion non obstante veredicto may be treated as a motion in arrest if it assigns grounds sufficient to arrest the judgment.[4] A verdict is subject to review by the trial court pending a ruling on a motion in arrest.[5]

Defect of record

In view of a statutory provision that either party may move in arrest of judgment for any defect not amendable which appears on the face of the record or pleadings, the overruling of a motion in arrest of judgment was not error where the motion complained of alleged errors committed on the trial, but not of any defect of record in the verdict and decree.—Anderson v. There can be only one motion in arrest of judgment as of right,[6] unless possibly one motion has been sustained, and thereafter further proceedings on the merits are had,[7] although the court may consider a second motion if it chooses to do so;[8] but such successive motions are not favored.[9]

b. Time for Moving and for Deciding Motion

A motion in arrest of judgment should be made after verdict and before judgment or within the time fixed by statute or rule of court.

The proper time for moving in arrest of judgment is after verdict or finding and before judgment thereon,[10] and at the same term of court,[11] or within the time fixed by statute or rule of court.[12] As a general rule the motion cannot be made after the end of the term of court at which the verdict was returned[13] or, under some statutes, at which the judgment was rendered.[14] Laches may bar the motion.[15] In some jurisdictions a motion in arrest may be sustained only after the verdict has been approved or after the time for making objections to the verdict has elapsed.[16] The trial court should rule on the motion with reasonable promptness and before the expiration of the time to appeal.[17]

It has been held or recognized that a timely motion in arrest of judgment may be made after a motion for a new trial and may be determined after the disposition of the motion for a new trial.[18] Since, however, an order for a new trial vacates the verdict, as shown in the C.J.S. title New Trial § 210, also 46 C.J. p 436 note 75, thereafter a motion in arrest is ineffective,[19] and there should not be a ruling on such motion.[20] According to some cases it is not the regular or correct practice to make a motion in arrest of judgment and a motion for a new trial at the same time,[21] but it has also been held that making two motions at the same time is not necessarily improper practice,[22] and, where the two motions are made at the same time, it is proper to determine them at the same time,[23] so that the order in which they may be considered by the court becomes immaterial,[24] although it is apparently the practice of some courts in such case to hear the motion in arrest first.[25] In some jurisdictions, where a motion in arrest and a motion for new trial are filed, neither has precedence over the other in any respect, so that they may both be overruled or granted, as the case may be, at one and the same time.[26]

Extending time for filing. A motion to extend the time for making a motion in arrest of judgment is a special motion which is subject to a rule of court providing that orders may not be made on special motions without notice.[27] An order, made while a motion for judgment was held in abeyance, extending the time in which a motion in arrest of judgment might be made has been regarded as a nullity on the ground that, when such order was made, there was no entry in the court journal to which the order could apply.[28]

§ 98. —— Hearing and Determination

A motion in arrest of judgment must be determined on the record proper, and extraneous matters will not be considered; every reasonable intendment and implication will obtain in favor of the pleadings.

A motion in arrest of judgment serves in some measure the office of a demurrer and ordinarily should be governed by the principles relating to a demurrer,[29] even when made after default; the default admits nothing except what is properly pleaded.[30] The motion must be determined on the record proper[31] and cannot be aided by extraneous matters; affidavits, evidence, or the judge's recollection of the course of the trial cannot be considered.[32]

Motions in arrest are not favored,[33] and the declaration, petition, or complaint is to be given the benefit of a liberal construction[34] to cure any ambiguity or looseness of description,[35] and every doubt is to be resolved in its favor.[36] Pleadings are given the benefit of every reasonable intendment and implication,[37] and the courts will go a long way in sustaining plaintiff's pleading as against a motion in arrest.[38] Also the verdict is to be given the benefit of every favorable intendment.[39] As a general rule it will be presumed after verdict that every material fact alleged in the declaration, or fairly inferable from what is alleged, was proved on the trial,[40] that the proof was confined to that part of the declaration which supported a recovery,[41] and that the verdict was for such damages as were recoverable under the declaration;[42] but it cannot be presumed that a cause of action was proved where none was stated, and where a material fact is omitted, which cannot be implied in, or inferred from, the finding of those which are stated, the verdict will not cover the defect.[43]

Granting or denying a motion for the continuance of the hearing of a motion in arrest is within the sound discretion of the trial judge.[44] The ruling of the court should be decisive, and responsive to the motion.[45] If several defendants join in the motion, in general it must be sustained or overruled as to all.[46] Where the judgment is not an entirety, it may be arrested in part.[47]

According to some cases, entry of judgment operates as an overruling of the motion, as discussed infra § 115.

§ 99. —— Operation and Effect of Arrest

An amendment, new trial, venire de novo, or repleader may be permitted after the grant of a motion in arrest of judgment.

The granting of a motion in arrest of judgment at common law has been held to prevent the entry of a final judgment in the cause, unless it is made conditional on an amendment or such other action as will remove the cause of arrest,[48] and to operate as a discontinuance and dismissal of defendant.[49] However, it has also been held that the granting of the motion does not terminate the case,[50] and that an amendment, new trial, venire de novo, or repleader may be granted,[51] notwithstanding the order in arrest is unconditional.[52] Furthermore it has been held or recognized that, where judgment has been arrested, and plaintiff feels himself aggrieved and wishes to test the decision of the court thereon, he may move for a judgment against himself which will be ordered as a matter of course, on which he may bring his writ of error.[53]

It has been held that, whether or not the judgment was properly arrested, the arrest stands as the

V. RENDITION, ENTRY, RECORD, AND DOCKETING

Entry not included in rendition

To render judgment is to return or give judgment; and it cannot be said that the phrase, in any of its forms, includes the idea of making a written entry or record of a judgment. —State ex rel. Bernard v. Geckler, 189 N.E. 842, 98 Ind.App. 436.

Exercise of discretion

Rendition of judgment involves exercise of discretion as to its terms, while entry of judgment is ministerial function.—Lasby v. Burgess, 18 P.2d 1104, 93 Mont. 349.

Rendition of judgment is an independent fact, distinct in point of time from entry of judgment in minutes of court, and from order of court on motion for new trial.—Kittrell v. Fuller, Tex.Civ.App., 281 S. W. 575.

Separate acts

Rendition and entry of a judgment are separate acts and different in their nature.—Wallace Grain & Supply Co. v. Cary, 24 N.E.2d 907, 303 discussed infra § 106, is the ministerial act of spreading it at large upon the record. On its rendition, and without entry, a judgment is final, valid, and enforceable, as between the parties,[59] in the absence of any statute to the contrary,[60] although for many purposes, as is discussed infra § 107, entry of the judgment is also essential.

§ 101. —— Authority and Duty of Court

Where the cause has been heard and determined and the case is ripe for judgment, it is the duty of the court to render judgment.

Where the cause has been heard and determined and the case is ripe for judgment, it is the duty of the court to render judgment,[61] and performance of this duty may be compelled by mandamus, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Mandamus § 97, also 38 C.J. p 634 note 43–p 636 note 68. It has also been held that a court has no discretion to refuse to give judgment declaring a right properly pleaded and well established by the evidence,[62] since, where good grounds exist for granting relief, judgment is given to the party entitled thereto as a matter of right and not of grace.[63] Where a case is submitted to the jury on special issues, judgment must usually be rendered on the verdict returned,[64] although the court in the exercise of its discretion may set aside a verdict without first rendering judgment.[65] Where the court tries the case without a jury and finds facts entitling one of the parties to a judgment, he has the right to have such a judgment rendered and it is error to refuse it.[66] Similarly it is error for a judge to refuse to enter judgment in accordance with his decision on a question of law, unless the entry thereof is discretionary for some recognized reason.[67] The authority and duty of the court to render judgment may also arise by reason of the confession, default, consent, offer, or admission of the parties, discussed infra §§ 134–218, or the report of a referee before whom the cause was tried, discussed infra § 105.

The court may not render judgment in violation of a prescribed mode of procedure, as against proper and timely objection;[68] and statutory procedure, made a condition precedent to the exercise of judicial power, is mandatory, governing the court's power to render a judgment.[69] Statutes providing that the clerk shall enter each day's proceedings in the order-book of the court and that the judge shall sign them have been held not to limit the jurisdiction of the court to render a judgment but merely to prescribe the manner in which it shall be recorded.[70]

Who may render judgment. Since the rendition of a judgment is a judicial act of the court, as discussed supra § 100, as a general rule it must be performed as such by the judge or magistrate who holds or presides in such court, and not by a ministerial officer of the court.[71] Thus, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, the decision must be rendered by the judge and not by the clerk of the court, in order to constitute it a judgment.[72] In some jurisdictions, however, as discussed in Clerks of Courts § 36, the clerks of certain courts possess statutory authority to exercise designated judicial powers, and under such statutes judgments rendered by clerks have all the force and effect of judgments rendered by the judge;[73] but this authority does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to render judgments in such cases since the authority of the clerk is concurrent with, and additional to, that of the judge.[74]

§ 102. —— Mode and Sufficiency

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a judgment is rendered when it is orally announced by the court, or where a general verdict is returned and recorded, or where a special verdict or findings are returned, by the announcement of the decision and its entry in the minutes.

Statutory provisions with respect to the mode and sufficiency of rendering judgment are controlling.[75] Generally, a judgment is rendered and exists as such when it is orally announced from the bench, and before it has been reduced to writing and entered by the clerk.[76] The custom, however, of drawing a formal judgment and having the judge sign it is usually observed,[77] particularly where it contains special provisions requiring settlement by the court unless agreed on by the parties;[78] but, unless required by statute or rule of court,[79] a formal writing is unnecessary.[80] Settlement on no-

Perusal by judge or counsel
To prevent error, a trial judge should either peruse a decree drawn by counsel or have it done by opposing counsel, and then direct its entry by a notation thereon signed by him.—Vanderpool v. Stewart, 279 S.W. 645, 212 Ky. 378.

Duty of counsel
(1) The duty of preparing orders and decrees in conformity with judicial determinations rests on counsel.—Parmly v. Parmly, 1 A.2d 646, 16 N.J.Misc. 447, affirmed 5 A.2d 789, 125 N.J.Eq. 545.

(2) Entry on docket by trial court was held not to constitute "rendition of judgment" precluding trial court from entering judgment at a subsequent term, where at time of making entry question arose as to what judgment should be and court directed counsel to prepare decree but instructed clerk not to enter it in order book until further directed.—Doty v. Failure to file judgment
The failure of party, in whose favor court decides, to file formal written judgment within five days after decision, as required by court rule, does not deprive court of jurisdiction to render or sign judgment after such period, but merely requires such party to go back and comply with rule.—Cahn v. An entry in minute book ordering that cause be dismissed is real judgment of dismissal, and subsequent formal judgment is mere memorial or record thereof, irrespective of judge's signature thereto.—E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Federal Mut. Liability Ins. Co., 71 P.2d 599, 22 Cal.App. 2d 548.

Entry on back of petition was held to evidence final disposition of cause.—O'Connell v. Remington, 128 A. 710, 102 Conn. 401.

tice is not required unless specially directed.[81] The return and recording of a general verdict under the direction of the court are generally a sufficient rendition of judgment; no further action on the part of the court is necessary,[82] and, as discussed infra § 108, it is the ministerial duty of the clerk to enter the proper judgment on the verdict. Where a special verdict or special findings are returned, the announcement of the decision in open court and its entry in the minutes constitute the rendition of the judgment.[83]

Notice of rendition of judgment is unnecessary[84] except where required by statute.[85] The purpose of notice required by a statute before rendition of judgment, in a case wherein judgment is not rendered at the hearing, but taken under advisement, is to give an opportunity to attorneys to make objections and exceptions to the decision.[86] The notice must be given by the court,[87] which has authority to direct the manner of service not inconsistent with existing rules made by paramount rule making authority.[88] Where this power has not been exercised, it has been held that the statute regarding service of a notice of a hearing of any kind rather than the statute relating to the service of pleadings and papers is applicable.[89]

§ 103. —— Reading in Open Court

In some jurisdictions it is required that all judgments be read and signed in open court, but failure to comply with this requirement does not invalidate the judgment.

In some jurisdictions it is required that all entries of judgment shall be read in open court before being signed by the judge.[90] It is not necessary for the judgment to recite that it was read in open court,[91] but that fact must appear affirmatively somewhere on the record,[92] although it has been held that, in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, it will be presumed in support of the judgment that this requirement has been observed.[93] Failure to comply with this requirement, however, does not invalidate the judgment,[94] but merely holds it in abeyance until it is read and signed and made executory;[95] and a judgment not read and signed may be made final and definitive by its voluntary execution by the parties.[96]

§ 104. —— Application and Order for Judgment

Unless required by statute no special application and order for judgment are necessary, but such a motion is not improper and may be necessary where the judgment is not a matter of course, and in the absence of statute no notice of such a motion is required. The order for judgment should direct the clerk to enter a judgment in the form and terms specified.

At common law, it was necessary to enter a rule nisi for judgment on the verdict, so as to afford an opportunity to move for a new trial or in arrest.[97] Usually no special application and order for judgment are now necessary,[98] unless required by statute,[99] the judgment being rendered and entered as a matter of course on the verdict or decision.[1] It is the duty of the court to give judgment on the verdict or decision without a motion for that purpose,[2] even in the case of a special verdict or special findings.[3] A formal motion for judgment, however, even if not necessary, is not improper,[4] particularly where it is to be entered on a special verdict or special findings,[5] and, where the judgment is not a matter of course, an application or motion therefor may be necessary.[6] Both parties may present motions for judgment on the findings in a case submitted on special issues.[7] The party desiring to show cause why judgment should not be entered should do so on the hearing of the motion for judgment.[8]

Notice of application or motion. Unless required by statute, no notice of application for judgment is necessary,[9] and it is not error for the court to sign a judgment or decree without notice to the parties.[10] An application for judgment is not a motion within statutes prescribing the notice to be given on a motion.[11] Where, however, a motion for judgment is necessary, notice thereof is usually required to be given to the opposite party,[12] although failure or insufficiency of the notice will not vitiate a judgment otherwise regular, to which the moving party was clearly entitled,[13] and, of course, notice may be waived by the party entitled thereto.[14]

Determination of application or motion. Error prior to verdict is sufficient ground for denial of a motion for judgment on the verdict;[15] and, where the record does not show a rendition of a verdict, a judge, not in office at the time of the supposed proceedings, may properly deny a motion for judgment on the verdict.[16] The refusal of the court to order judgment on special jury findings which are in irreconcilable conflict, in effect, sets the verdict aside.[17] A motion for judgment on special findings and a motion for a new trial differ both as to content and relief sought.[18] A motion for a new trial does not waive a pending motion for judgment on the verdict,[19] or concede the right of the opposite party to a judgment on the verdict, unless a new trial is granted.[20] Under some statutes a trial court has no power to render judgment on a jury's special verdict until a pending motion for a new trial has been passed on and overruled.[21]

Order for judgment. The application for judgment, if successful, should be followed by an order of court directing the clerk to enter a judgment in the form and terms specified,[22] taking in every phase of the case that is ripe for judgment,[23] and a mere expression of the court's opinion that a designated party is entitled to recover is not sufficient.[24] It has been held that the order for judgment does not become final until signed by the judge,[25] but according to other authority the signature of the judge to the order is unnecessary.[26]

§ 105. —— On Report of Referee

Under some statutes the report of the referee directing judgment constitutes the decision and judgment of the court, and it is the ministerial duty of the clerk to enter judgment precisely in accordance with the directions of the report; but, in the absence of statute or in cases not within the scope of the statutory authority, application to the court for judgment on the report must be made.

A reference is a mode of trial authorized in some cases, and a judgment rendered on a report of a referee is equally valid as when founded on a verdict or a decision of the court,[27] although it has also been held that, in the absence of statutory authority, a judgment must be rendered on the decision of the court or the verdict of a jury, and cannot be based on the report of a referee,[28] and that in any case a judgment cannot be rendered on the report of a referee where the referee is not given authority to hear and determine the issues but is simply required to take proof of all the material facts and to report them to the court with his opinion thereon.[29]

Under some statutes, where a reference of the whole case to a referee to hear and determine is authorized, the report of the referee directing judgment for one party or the other constitutes the decision and judgment of the court,[30] and it is the

Judge's findings as order

Where, after an order of judgment for defendant was reversed, case was heard on same "statement of agreed facts," judge's finding for plaintiff and assessing damages of one dollar would be regarded as an order for judgment.—King Features Syndicate v. Cape Cod Broadcasting Co., Mass., 64 N.E.2d 925.

Statute prohibiting actual entry of judgment until pending exceptions are disposed of is inapplicable to order for judgment pending exceptions to refusal to recommit auditor's reports.—Treblas v. New York Life Ins. Co., 196 N.E. 908, 291 Mass. 138.

Special verdict

(1) Findings of referee have effect of special verdicts if they are sustained by trial court, and, if so sustained, they are binding if there is any substantial evidence to support them.—City of St. Louis v. Parker-Washington Co., 196 S.W. 767, 271 Mo. 229, certiorari denied 38 S.Ct. 11, 245 U.S. 651, 62 L.Ed. 531—Reinecke v. Jod, 56 Mo. 386.

(2) Statute providing that on confirmation of the report judgment may be entered thereon as on a special verdict does not apply where the court does not confirm the report, but sustains exceptions thereto and makes independent findings.—State ex rel. Kimbrell v. People's Ice Storage & Fuel Co., 151 S.W. 101, 246 Mo. 168.

If the report is lost, judgment may be rendered on a copy of it.—Little v. Gardner, 5 N.H. 415, 22 Am.D. 468.

Form of action immaterial

Where a cause is tried by a referee, judgment must be rendered according to the facts reported, regardless of the form of action, if the court can allow an amendment to the declaration which will adapt it to the facts.—Camp v. Barber, 88 A. 812, 87 Vt. 235, Ann.Cas.1917A 451.

(2) In actions not referrable under statute, if the parties refer the cause to referees by stipulation, and if the submission provides that a judgment may be entered on the report or award, and judgment is entered accordingly, the parties are concluded by their agreement, and cannot be heard to allege that the reference and judgment were not warranted by law.—Green v. Patchin, N.Y., 13 Wend. 293, 295—Yates v. Russell, N. Y., 17 Johns. 461—Monroe Bank v. Widner, N.Y., 11 Paige 529, 43 Am. D. 768.

General reference

Where a reference is general, findings in report of referees form sufficient basis to support the judgment of the court.—Blalock v. Dunger, 272 P. 1048, 205 Cal. 782—Board of Education of San Francisco United ministerial duty of the clerk to enter the appropriate judgment thereon without confirmation or further directions by the court,[31] and without notice,[32] unless notice is required by law,[33] precisely as in the case of a general verdict by a jury, or the decision of the court in a case tried without a jury, as discussed supra § 102. In form, the judgment is to be entered as though pronounced by the court[34] and must be precisely in accordance with the directions of the report, as discussed supra § 55.

If the report does not sufficiently direct the particular form and terms of the judgment to be entered, the court has power to supply the deficiency,[35] provided the referee has made findings adequate for final judgment,[36] and application must be made to the court to frame or settle the judgment to be entered,[37] because the clerk cannot act judicially,[38] and, as discussed supra § 101, the rendition of a judgment is a judicial act which usually must be performed by a judicial officer of the court. In such cases a judgment entered by the clerk on the report without direction of the court is wholly void, and not merely irregular.[39]

The practice of entering judgment as of course by the clerk on the report of a referee is limited to the cases in which it is authorized by statute, and is subject to all statutory exceptions, qualifications, and provisions.[40] In the absence of statute authorizing the entry of judgment by the clerk on the report of a referee, or in cases not within the scope of the statutory authority, the proper practice is to make application to the court for judgment on the report, on such notice as may be required, after exceptions and objections to the report have been passed on, and the report has been confirmed.[41] Thereupon the court properly pronounces judgment on the report.[42] In the absence of statutory authority therefor the referee has no power to render judgment.[43] After confirmation, errors of the referee cannot be considered in opposition to a motion for judgment on the report, the only remedy for such errors being an application to set aside the report and for a new trial.[44] The judgment framed or settled by the court must be the one directed in the report of the referee; the court has no power or authority to give directions which require the entry of a judgment substantially different from

Supplemental report
In action for damages, where case was referred to an auditor whose findings of fact were to be final, and auditor's ultimate finding for defendant in supplemental report was not vitiated by any error of law appearing on face of supplemental report or on as much of original report as was not superseded by supplemental report, the ultimate finding was conclusive that plaintiff did not prove that it had a cause of action, and hence ordering judgment for defendant was proper, although auditor's original report found that plaintiff could recover.—Old Mill Point Club v. § 106. Entry Generally

a. General statement
b. What constitutes entry

a. General Statement

Entry of judgment is the ministerial or clerical act of spreading the judgment at large on the record as distinguished from the judicial act of giving or pronouncing judgment.

Although it has been said that courts act judicially in entering their judgments,[47] the great weight of authority is that the entry of judgment is a ministerial or clerical act,[48] required to be done by the clerk of the court, as discussed infra § 108, and consists of placing a judgment previously rendered on the record,[49] by which enduring evidence of the judicial act is afforded.[50] While the term "entry of judgment" is sometimes used in a general sense so as to include rendition of judgment,[51] it is most often used in a more limited and precise sense as meaning the ministerial act of spreading the judgment at large on the record as distinguished from the judicial act of giving or pronouncing judgment.[52] There must be a compliance with statutes or rules of court regulating the entry of judgments.[53]

b. What Constitutes Entry

A judgment is entered when it is spread at large on the record, and under some statutes not until then, but under other statutes it has been held entered when a properly formulated entry is delivered to the clerk to be entered, although it is not actually transcribed on the record.

A judgment is entered when it is spread at large on the record,[54] and under some statutes not until then.[55] Until judgment forms signed by the judge and filed with the clerk are recorded, they are nothing more than directions to the clerk to enter judgment in the form specified; until such direction is obeyed, the judgment is not entered.[56] A fortiori, the filing of a mere memorandum, or the making of a skeleton entry in the minutes, giving the terms of the judgment directed, does not constitute entry of the judgment.[57] Under some statutes, however, a judgment is entered when a signed copy of it is delivered to the clerk and filed by him, although not actually transcribed on the record,[58] or when the judgment is duly signed and filed by the clerk.[59] So it has been held that a judgment is in law entered, at least for some purposes, at the time a proper entry thereof is formulated and given to the clerk to be entered of record.[60]

Although as between the parties a duly rendered judgment may be valid and effective without entry, and its enforcement does not always depend on its entry, the statutes generally require judgments to be entered and for many purposes they are not complete, perfect, and effective until this is done.

As a general rule, the decisions of all courts must be preserved in writing in some record provided for that purpose.[61] Where a statute so requires, judgments should be entered,[62] and for many purposes a judgment is not complete, perfect, and effective until it has been duly entered.[63] Thus it has been broadly held that judgments take effect only from the date of entry,[64] and that there is no judgment until it is entered of record.[65]

Entry of a judgment is generally required for the purpose of initiating the right to take an appeal, or to sue out a writ of error to review such judgment, and of limiting the time within which such right may be exercised, as discussed in Appeal and Error § 445, or within which the judgment may be enforced, as considered infra §§ 854, 871, or for the creation of a judgment lien, as discussed infra § 466. A judgment is not final, in the sense that it cannot be withdrawn or changed by the court, until it has been entered;[66] on entry, it passes beyond control of the court, except to vacate or modify it in accordance with the usual rules.[67] After a judgment has been duly rendered, a direction to the clerk to withhold the journal entry from record does not vacate, open, or modify it.[68] In order that a judgment may be admitted as evidence in another action, it is necessary that it should first have been entered of record.[69] Entry of the judgment is also necessary to authorize the clerk to make up the judgment roll, and to docket the judgment, as discussed infra §§ 123, 126.

As between the parties, a judgment duly rendered may be valid and effective, although not entered, that is, the neglect or failure of the clerk to make a proper entry of the judgment, or his defective or

b. Of parties

a. Of Clerk

In entering judgments the clerk acts merely as an agent to write out and place on the record those judgments which he is authorized and required by law to enter, and, except where statutes provide otherwise, he may not enter judgment without formal judicial rendition or specific direction of the court.

In entering judgments, the clerk acts in a purely ministerial capacity, and exercises no judicial functions;[72] he acts merely as an agent to write out and place on the record judgments which he is authorized and directed by law to enter.[73] Provided the cause is ripe for entry of judgment, and there is no stay or order to the contrary, the clerk is authorized, and it is his ministerial duty, to enter on the record all judgments rendered by the court,[74] and certain judgments authorized by statute in specified

Entry in vacation see infra § 114.

Several judgment

Under a statute providing that, when a several judgment is proper, the court in its discretion may render judgment against one or more defendants, leaving the action to proceed against the others, the discretion is a judicial one, to be exercised by the court and not by the clerk.—Trans-Pacific Trading Co. v. Patsy Frock & Romper Co., 209 P. 357, 189 Cal. 509.

(2) Where record failed to disclose that clerk notified parties of court's determination to reserve decision in accordance with the statutory mandate, judgment and subsequent judgment vacating prior judgment were invalid, and hence aggrieved party might apply to court for entry of judgment as of such date subsequent to application as court might determine.—Steinhauser v. Friedman, 170 A. 630, 12 N.J.Misc. 167.

Surrender of obligation

(1) The purpose of a statute prohibiting the entry of judgment on a written obligation unless the obligation is surrendered to the clerk is to retire the instrument from circulation.—Jensen v. Martinsen, 291 N.W. 422, 228 Iowa 307.

(2) Clerk was authorized to enter judgment where there was substantial compliance with such a statute. —Selby v. McDonald, 259 N.W. 485, 219 Iowa 828.

cases where judicial action is not necessary, such as judgments by confession, default, consent, offer, or admission, as discussed infra §§ 161, 176, 183, 185, 205. Such authority extends only to the entering of the judgment exactly as it was rendered by the court, without addition, diminution or change of any kind;[75] and a judgment entered by a clerk who had no authority to enter it at all, or to enter it in the form in which it was entered, is void.[76]

Where an application and order for judgment are necessary, as considered supra § 104, the clerk has no authority to enter judgment until an order for judgment has been made, whereupon it becomes his duty to enter judgment in accordance with such order.[77] In some states statutes prescribing the procedure on the coming in of a verdict in a trial by jury expressly make it the duty of the clerk to enter a judgment in conformity with the verdict, unless a different direction is given by the court, or it is otherwise specially prescribed by law.[78] Such entry is theoretically in accordance with the direction of the court,[79] although in actual practice the entry is usually made by the clerk without any specific direction of the court to that effect.[80] Such statutes have been held to apply only to legal actions, where the verdict, if accepted by the court, disposes of the whole case, and the appropriate judgment follows as a matter of course; the statute has no application to equitable actions, where the court must specifically declare the nature of the judgment to be entered.[81] Also, where a special verdict or special findings are returned, the clerk has no authority to enter a judgment thereon; the court must first render the proper judgment on the facts found, as a judicial act.[82]

In cases tried by the court, a decision accompanied by directions for entry of the proper judgment is sufficient to authorize entry by the clerk of the judgment directed;[83] but a general decision or finding not embodying such specific directions is not a rendition of judgment and the clerk is not authorized to enter judgment thereon until the court has judicially declared what judgment shall be entered.[84] Some statutes provide that the clerk shall enter all judgments under the direction of the judge.[85]

Entry of judgment on noncompliance with conditional order. Under the practice of some courts the clerk has power to enter a judgment under a conditional order of the court, on proof of a noncompliance with the condition.[86] However, an order of the court declaring that judgment will be entered unless one party complies with certain conditions within a specified time has been held not to authorize judgment by the clerk.[87]

b. Of Parties

Ordinarily it is the right and duty of the successful party to cause judgment to be entered, and, should he neglect this duty, the unsuccessful party may obtain an order directing him to do so.

No one is entitled to have a judgment entered until it has been rendered.[88] The party in whose favor a verdict is found will ordinarily be entitled to the entry of a judgment on it, after the time allowed to move in arrest or for a new trial, unless exceptions or points of law have been reserved for the decision of the court.[89] Ordinarily it is the duty of the successful party to cause the judgment to be entered,[90] and to see that it is entered correctly.[91] Where the successful party fails to enter judgment, the unsuccessful party may obtain an order directing him to do so,[92] or the court may, in its discretion, direct that, unless judgment is so entered within a time specified, the defeated party may enter it.[93] The exercise of such discretion is not reviewable on appeal.[94]

§ 109. —— Sufficiency and Contents; Defects and Irregularities

The journal entry of judgment should show the court, the term, and the date of entry, and the judgment as entered should conform to, and be supported by, the judgment actually rendered, although a clerical error, misdescription, irregularity, omission, or other defect not going to the jurisdiction of the court ordinarily will not vitiate the judgment.

As a general rule, the journal entry of judgment should show the court, the term, and the date of entry,[95] and the judgment as entered should conform to, and be supported by, the judgment actually rendered.[96] In the entry or record of a judgment, a clerical error, misdescription, irregularity, omission, or other defect not going to the jurisdiction of the court will not vitiate the judgment or give it an effect which it would not have had if correctly entered,[97] provided there is enough in

Direction for entry
Where judgment was one for the recovery of money only, any formal written judgment settled and signed by the trial judge was mere "surplusage," and, where record clearly showed the intention of trial judge to render judgment on verdict, court's attempt to follow rule no longer in force should be construed as direction to enter judgment for money only.—Southwestern Freight Lines v. Shafer, 111 P.2d 625, 57 Ariz. 111.
Limitation on authority of clerk

the entry or record to constitute a judgment.[98] Such irregularities may be waived by the adverse party.[99] A judgment entry showing alterations, interlineations, or erasures is not necessarily void, particularly in the absence of suspicious circumstances or where such alterations, interlineations, or erasures are explained by other parts of the record.[1] It is sometimes provided by statute that informality in entering a judgment, or in making up the record, shall not in any way impair or affect the judgment.[2]

A judgment should be entered as of the date, or as part of the proceedings, of the day on which it was rendered,[3] notwithstanding the entry is not actually made until after that date;[4] but the time at which the record is actually made should appear.[5]

§ 110. —— Book or Place of Entry

Entry must be made in the book of record designated by statute, but failure to do so will not impair the validity and operation of the judgment as between the parties.

As a general rule, entry of a judgment must be made in the judgment book, journal, or other designated book of record,[6] in accordance with the statutory provisions in that respect.[7] Where the clerk is directed by law to keep certain books for the entry of judgments, or to record judgments in a book specially designated by statute for that purpose, or to enter different kinds of judgments or decrees in different books, and deviates from the course prescribed, the validity and operation of the judgment are not impaired thereby as between the parties,[8] although it may be otherwise as to third persons who are misled, or who fail to receive the notice which a proper entry would have afforded them,[9] and as discussed infra § 465, entry in the wrong book may prevent the judgment from becoming a lien.

Statutes providing separate books for different classes of entries have been held to be directory only, and a judgment entered in any of the books of record of the court is valid.[10] Under a statutory requirement that judgments shall be entered in a "judgment book," separate books are not required for the entry of judgments in legal and equitable actions.[11] Separate unbound sheets of paper may constitute a judgment book within the meaning of the statute;[12] but an entry in books which are not books of record is insufficient.[13] The judgment "docket," as discussed infra § 127, is not the judgment book in which judgments are required to be entered.[14] The calendar of the judge or trial docket is not a record of the court, and an entry therein does not constitute an entry of judgment.[15]

§ 111. —— Signature of Record

The failure of the judge to sign the record as directed by statute has been held not to make the judgment a nullity, although there is also authority to the contrary.

While the minutes or records of courts are generally required to be authenticated by the signature of the judge, as discussed in Courts § 226, it has generally been held that the failure of the judge to sign the record as directed by statute does not make the judgment a nullity, and that it is at most irregular and erroneous, but not void,[16] although it has also been held that no judgment has any force in the absence of an official signing of the order book by the judge.[17]

§ 112. —— Notice of Entry

Notice of rendition or entry of judgment is not essential to its validity or regularity unless made so by statute or rule of court.

As a general rule, notice of the entry of a judgment is not essential to its validity and regularity,[18]

(1) Special judge may at any time after entering judgment sign record, and, if he refuses to do so, may be mandated.—Cadwell v. Teany, 157 N.E. 51, 199 Ind. 634, certiorari denied Cadwell v. Teaney, 48 S.Ct. 601, 277 U.S. 605, 72 L.Ed. 1011.

Presiding judge or his successor

It is essential to the validity of a judgment that it shall be entered on the order book provided for the purpose and signed by the presiding judge or his successor.—Gorman v. Lusk, 134 S.W.2d 593, 280 Ky. 692.

Time and place of signing

(1) A special judge who directed the entry of a judgment and signed the order book in a county outside the district in which the cause was pending has the authority to direct entry of judgment "nunc pro tunc," or to ratify the unauthorized entry by the clerk and sign the order book in the county in which the cause was pending, or elsewhere in the district.—Gross' Adm'x v. Couch, 166 S.W.2d 879, 292 Ky. 304.

(2) Where quarterly court's record showed that judgment had been rendered, but judge failed to sign it, and present judge signed judgment nunc pro tunc, it became valid judgment effective from date it was rendered, and all steps taken in effort to enforce it were validated.—Hoffman v. Shuey, 2 S.W.2d 1049, 223 Ky. 70, 58 A.L.R. 842.

(3) The fact that judge signed all orders entered at subsequent term of circuit court, relative to a case, did not validate unsigned judgment entered on order book at preceding term.—Second Nat. Bank of Paintsville v. Blair, 186 S.W.2d 796, 299 Ky. 650.

(4) On the other hand, it has also been held that, where presiding judge did not sign minutes either during or on last day of regular term and minutes were not signed until last day of second extension of term, final judgment shown on minute book to have been rendered during regular term was invalid and case remained on docket as a pending and untried case.—Jackson v. Gordon, 11 So.2d 901, 194 Miss. 268.

In absence of law or agreement requiring it, proceeding to judgment without notice is not fraud.—Davis v. Cox, Tex.Civ.App., 4 S.W.2d 1008, error dismissed.

Court rule held inapplicable

A court rule requiring all "papers filed in a cause" to be served on attorney for adverse party or party himself did not use quoted words as embracing the judgment pronounced by court, and hence did not require service of copy of judgment on anyone.—Jones v. Thompson, Or., 164 P.2d 718.

unless made so by statute[19] or rule of court,[20] although notice may be required for certain purposes, such as to limit the time for appeal or writ of error, as considered in Appeal and Error § 447. Since parties are not charged with notice of entry of judgment prior to the term to which the cause has been definitely continued,[21] the entry of judgment without notice prior to that term is premature.[22]

Where notice is required, it must be sufficient to comply with the statute,[23] and it has been held that it may be served by mail;[24] but the notice has been held to be ineffectual where it is filed before the entry of judgment.[25] The parties may waive their right to notice.[26]

a. In general

b. Prematurity

c. Delay

d. Judgment on report of referee

e. Date of judgment

a. In General

In some jurisdictions, judgment may and should be entered immediately on the filing of the decision or the return of the verdict.

As a general rule, a judgment should be rendered at the time appointed therefor.[27] The time of entering judgment is a matter of practice within the discretion of the court.[28] The entry of judgment immediately or forthwith on the filing of a decision or the return of a verdict is contemplated by the statutes or practice in some jurisdictions;[29] and in

Notice held sufficient

(1) Notice indorsed on copy of judgment informing defendants that such judgment was entered by within named court was sufficient.—Murphy v. Hitchcock, supra.

(2) Notice that plaintiff would at specified time and place move named judge of circuit court to enter in designated case a judgment, a copy of which was attached to notice, which notice was served on counsel of record for defendant two days before date specified for entry of judgment satisfied statutory requirements as to notice of entry of judgment at term time or in vacation at any place within district.—Parrish v. Ferriell, 136 S.W.2d 625, 299 Ky. 676.

(3) Where record showed only that service of notice of entry of judgment took place on the day on which judgment was entered and did not disclose the hour at which either event took place, notice of entry of judgment was shown not to have been served prematurely, where the substantial rights of the parties were not affected.—Kahn v. Statute of limited application

A statute providing that, when trial by jury has been had, judgment shall be entered by the clerk immediately in conformity with the verdict does not apply where the court withdraws the case from the jury.—Barth v. Harris, 168 P. 401, 95 Wash. 166.

Construction of "forthwith"

(1) The word "forthwith," as used in such statutes, has been construed to mean "instanter."—Hull v. Mallory, 14 N.W. 374, 56 Wis. 355.

(2) According to the weight of authority, however, the word, as used in such statutes, means "in a reasonable time."—Sluga v. Walker, 81 N.W. 282, 9 N.D. 103—26 C.J. p 1000 note 80 [a]—34 C.J. p 64 note 61 [a] (1).

(3) Under the latter construction, where a verdict was returned between noon and one o'clock P. M. on Saturday, while the justice was hearing another case, a rendition of judgment thereon on the Monday morning following was in due time.—Sorenson v. Swenson, 56 N.W. 650, 55 Minn. 58, 43 Am.S.R. 472.

Immediate rendition and subsequent entry

In some jurisdictions, in cases tried before a jury, when the jury returns its verdict, the rendition of judgment on the verdict, consisting of an entry by the trial judge on the trial docket of a memorandum of the verdict and judgment, follows as a matter of course; but the minutes of the court evidencing the judgment may be, and usually are, written at a future time and dated as of date of rendition of judgment.—Mt. Vernon-Woodberry such jurisdictions the court has authority,[30] or the clerk has a duty,[31] to enter the judgment, and the successful party is entitled to have the judgment entered[32] at such time, provided the verdict or decision disposes of the case,[33] and there is no stay of proceedings,[34] or direction to the contrary by the court.[35] Even in such jurisdictions, however, a judgment entered at a later date is not necessarily invalid, as discussed infra subdivision c (1) of this section. Some statutes contemplate the entry of judgment immediately following the denial of a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.[36]

A statute, supplementary to other statutes,[37] and intended to speed up the disposition of cases,[38] which authorizes a judge of a court, not of continuous session, to enter, on reasonable notice to the parties, a judgment in any proceeding wherein a trial by jury is not required, is of limited effect.[39] A rule of civil procedure, adopted under statutory authority, and providing for entry of judgment by the clerk forthwith on receipt by him of the court's direction to enter judgment for money only, or that there be no recovery, is accorded effect when applicable.[40]

Validity of judgment rendered on legal holiday see Holidays § 5 d. Validity of judgment entered on Sunday see the C.J.S. title Sundays § 53, also 60 C.J. p 1146 note 57–p 1147 note 70.

b. Prematurity

A judgment is premature when it is rendered or entered before the case is ripe for final judgment. A judgment so rendered or entered has been held improper and erroneous, but not void.

It is improper and erroneous to render or enter judgment prematurely,[41] this being true where judgment is rendered or entered before the case is ripe for final judgment, because of proceedings remaining to be taken or matters remaining to be determined before the judgment can be put in its final shape,[42] or where there is a violation of a statute prohibiting the entry of judgment until a certain time after the commencement of the action, or the reception of the verdict, or the filing of the decision, or until the lapse of a term or terms.[43] However, the mere premature entry of a judgment is not a jurisdictional defect,[44] and, therefore, does not avoid the judgment,[45] but at most makes it irregular and voidable,[46] and the prematurity may be waived.[47] According to some authorities, a judgment rendered before the appearance term is a mere nullity;[48] but it has also been held that a judgment entered before the succeeding term at which the case is triable is merely erroneous.[49]

There are cases in which judgments are claimed to be premature, but are held not to be so.[50] A judgment on a verdict disposes, ipso facto, of a motion to set aside the verdict.[51]

Prior to last day of term. In states wherein, as discussed infra subdivision e of this section, a judgment ordinarily is regarded as rendered on the last day of the term, the court or presiding justice may, notwithstanding the general rule, enter, or order the entry of, judgment at any time after the decision and during the term.[52]

Prior to determination of costs. There is authority both for the view that judgment should not be entered until all costs are taxed and properly adjusted[53] and for the view that, costs being merely incident to judgment, a controversy over disbursements should not delay entry of judgment.[54]

c. Delay

(1) In general
(2) Expiration of trial term
(3) Expiration of judge's term of office

(1) In General

Statutes limiting the time for entering judgment are directory only, and a failure to comply therewith does not invalidate a judgment subsequently entered. Except in a few states, a like conclusion is reached as to constitutional or statutory provisions limiting the time for rendering judgment.

Where the constitution or a statute requires rendition of the judgment within a limited time, it has been held that the court loses authority over the case at the expiration of that time, so that a judgment thereafter rendered is void for want of jurisdiction,[55] as in the case of a failure of the judge to comply with a statutory direction to render his decision within a certain number of days after the case is submitted to him.[56] However, it has also been held that compliance with provisions of this kind is not jurisdictional,[57] that such a provision is merely directory,[58] and that disregard thereof renders the judgment at most irregular and erroneous, but not void,[59] and that, being for the benefit of the parties, it may be waived by them.[60] In the absence of such constitutional or statutory directions the court has authority to take a case under advisement for a reasonable length of time before rendering its decision,[61] and, while it is under a duty to decide a case within a reasonable time after submission,[62] it has jurisdiction to render a decision at whatever time it reaches a conclusion.[63]

Entry of a judgment, considered as a ministerial act, may be made after the time fixed by statute for rendition of a judgment.[64] Statutes relating to the time of entry have been considered as directory,[65] so that the validity of a judgment subsequently entered is not affected by failure to comply with the statute.[66] Judgment may be entered on a verdict or decision at any time thereafter,[67] and it is the right of a party to have a judgment so entered unless the lapse of time is unreasonably great,[68] or unless some independent right has intervened,[69] or the adverse party has suffered damage or lost a right by reason of the delay,[70] so long as the court has not lost jurisdiction of the case.[71] Mere delay does not work a loss of jurisdiction to render or enter a judgment.[72] The presumption of payment arising under the statute of limitations from expiration of the statutory period relates only to the remedy by action, and does not prevent entry of judgment on a decision or verdict after expiration of the statutory time.[73]

Duly constituted court as essential to the validity and regularity of a judgment is discussed supra §§ 15–17.

A rule of court requiring a judgment to be filed or formally written out at, or within, a prescribed time, or forbidding the rendition of judgment, over objection, within a designated number of days of the close of the term, has been held to have the force of law,[74] and should be complied with,[75] provided it is in effect at the time,[76] is applicable,[77] and has not been waived,[78] but disregard thereof has been held not to make the judgment void.[79]

After adjournment. The entry of an order adjourning court sine die does not prevent the entry of judgment on a subsequent day in the period during which the court, by virtue of statute, remains open for the transaction of business.[80] Under a statute expressly so providing, judgment on a verdict may be entered within a prescribed number of days after adjournment of court.[81]

After death of party. If the court renders a judgment during the lifetime of a party, the clerk may perform the ministerial act of entering it and recording it after his death.[82]

Death of a party as affecting the validity of a judgment generally is discussed supra § 29.

(2) Expiration of Trial Term

A judgment may not be invalid because it is not rendered or entered until after the expiration of the trial term.

Where regular terms are provided by law, judgments may properly be rendered only during such terms.[83] While there is authority holding that a judgment rendered after the expiration of the term is void,[84] it has also been indicated that such a judgment is not wholly void, but only irregular or erroneous.[85] It has been held that, where the parties expressly[86] or impliedly[87] consent, a judgment may be rendered after expiration of the term; but,

Absence of prior legal judgment

Where parties by stipulation removed the record of a cause from one district to another, and after decision at trial the record was returned by the clerk without authority to the first county, and on memorandum thereon judgment was entered, and on certiorari it was determined that it was entered without authority, on recovery of the record by the trial district, the court did not lose jurisdiction to enter judgment on its decision nine months thereafter.—Morley v. Term divided into sessions

Where a term of court is divided into sessions, the judgment must be rendered according to statute at the same session in which case is tried or the next succeeding one.—Whitaker v. Cannon Mills Co., Conn., 45 A. 2d 120.

Entry

It has been held that, if a judgment is ordered and its terms prescribed by the court during a term, it is a judgment rendered in term time, although the entry thereof is not in fact prepared and transcribed on the journal until after the close of the term.—Iliff v. After expiration of term in which case is tried, court ordinarily lacks jurisdiction to proceed further with case, and any judgment it renders is void.—Foley v. George A. Douglas & Bro., 185 A. 70, 121 Conn. 377.

Absence of order extending term

A judgment, rendered on jury's verdict at second term after that at which trial began and verdict was returned, was unauthorized, in absence of order extending term.—British General Ins. Co. v. Ripy, 106 S.W.2d 1047, 130 Tex. 101.

87. Conn.—Whitaker v. Cannon Mills Co., 45 A.2d 120.

where such judgments are deemed absolutely void, consent cannot confer jurisdiction.[88] It has been held that a valid judgment may be rendered at a subsequent term under some circumstances,[89] as where the court takes a case under advisement to the next succeeding term.[90]

Entry. Although, in some states, or under some statutes, a judgment is a nullity unless entered on the records of the court during the term at which it was rendered,[91] it has been held that a judgment may not be invalid because it is entered after the trial term,[92] as where it is entered at a succeeding term[93] and no final judgment has been previously rendered[94] or entered.[95] Also, where the clerk failed to perform his ministerial duty of entering on the record the judgment on a verdict or decision, the judgment may be entered at a subsequent term,[96] it being permissible for the court at such term to direct entry of the judgment,[97] or the duty may be performed by the clerk at his own instance at any time,[98] except in some jurisdictions wherein the clerk has no authority to enter a judgment after the term without the consent or order of the court,[99] or without the consent or agreement of the adverse party and without statutory notice.[1]

Where a judgment has been continued by curia advisare vult, and is not given until the term succeeding that at which the verdict was rendered, the judgment must not only be signed, but must be entered, as of such succeeding term.[2] Under a court rule, a judgment awarded after the expiration of a term at which it was ripe for judgment must be entered as of the last day of that term.[3]

Waiver

(1) Lack of jurisdiction of court to render judgment after expiration of term next succeeding term at which trial was commenced does not pertain to subject matter but to the parties, and hence may be waived.—Whitaker v. Cannon Mills Co., Conn., 45 A.2d 120.

(2) Defendant who filed pleadings and participated in further hearing after expiration of time allowed by statute for rendering judgment waived statutory requirement, and hence could not claim that judgment was invalid for lack of jurisdiction.—Whitaker v. Cannon Mills Co., supra.

(3) Expiration of Judge's Term of Office

A judgment entered after the expiration of the term of office of the judge who rendered it may be valid where there was a valid rendition thereof prior to the expiration of the judge's term of office.

Where a judgment was actually rendered before the expiration of the term of office of the judge trying the case, it is immaterial that it was not entered of record until afterward, the judicial act being the rendition of the judgment, and its entry being merely ministerial.[4] However, a valid decision cannot be entered after the expiration of the judge's term,[5] and the invalidity of the decision is not affected by the fact that it is ordered filed by his successor and is filed,[6] and a judgment rendered in vacation cannot be made binding by entry after death of the judge, by direction of his successor.[7] Under a statute prohibiting the rendition or entry of judgment until the filing of a decision, a judgment is invalid where the decision and judgment pursuant thereto, although signed before, were not filed until after, the expiration of the judge's term of office.[8]

d. Judgment on Report of Referee

The time for rendition or entry of, or making a motion for, judgment on the report of a referee varies under the statutes or practice of particular states.

Statutes limiting the time within which a motion for judgment on a referee's report may be made have been held to be mandatory, and the court cannot extend the time.[9] In some states, the successful party is entitled to judgment at once on the report of a referee,[10] but, under the practice of a particular state, judgment on the report of referees is, in the absence of exception filed to the report, entered as a matter of course at the term succeeding their appointment;[11] and, under a statute providing that judgment shall not be entered on the report until a certain number of days have elapsed, a judgment entered within that time is irregular,[12] although not void.[13] A judgment not rendered until nine days after a motion to modify findings of the referee has been held not premature.[14]

e. Date of Judgment

As a general rule a judgment takes effect from the day it is actually rendered or entered.

By the common law, followed in some of the states, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, all judgments rendered at a given term of court are presumed to have been rendered on the first day of that term,[15] and at the earliest possible hour of that day when, according to the course of the court, it might have been rendered;[16] but this rule is inapplicable in a case where judgment could not have been rendered on the first day of the term.[17] In other states a judgment is regarded as rendered on the last day of the term unless the contrary is shown.[18] In still another state, under statutes and

Rule of court

(1) Under a rule of court, where a cause was ripe for judgment at a certain term, but no judgment was entered at any time during the term, a judgment entered after the term is to be regarded as entered as of the last day of the term.—U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation v. Atlantic Corporation, C.C.A.Mass., 16 F.2d 27.

(2) A rule of court, providing that "where judgment shall be omitted to be entered upon a verdict it shall be considered as entered on the last day of the term," can have no application to verdicts incapable of supporting judgments.—Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Steel Car Forge Co., Pa., 149 F. 182, 79 C.C.A. 130.

rules of court directing the clerk to enter, on a certain day in each week, judgments in civil actions and proceedings ripe for judgment, a case goes to judgment automatically on the first judgment day after it becomes ripe for judgment,[19] and, in view of the law, the judgment is rendered when it ought to be entered,[20] even though the clerk fails to enter the judgment on that date.[21]

In a majority of states, however, the date of a judgment is the day on which it is actually rendered[22] or entered;[23] and may be fixed by reference to the record of the proceedings in the case,[24] or extrinsic evidence may be given of the day on which the judgment was rendered.[25] Under, and in accordance with, the majority rule, a judgment is deemed to be rendered on the date when it is ordered[26] or pronounced[27] by the court, or when the trial judge in open court declares his decision of law on the matters in issue,[28] or when a formal order granting a motion for judgment on the verdict is signed,[29] or, in the absence of contrary indication, when the clerk certifies that he has received the judgment for record.[30] It may be dated back to the time when the court directed judgment to be entered,[31] but is not valid if postdated, at least, not until the arrival of the day named.[32] A judgment filed out of office hours with the clerk is considered as legally and properly filed in his office at the hour legally fixed for the opening of his office on the following business day.[33]

Time of rendition or entry as fixing time for appeal is discussed in Appeal and Error § 445.

§ 114. —— In Vacation

Unless authorized by statute, a judgment rendered during vacation is void. A judgment properly rendered generally may be entered by the clerk in vacation.

Unless authorized by statute,[34] a judgment rendered during vacation is void for want of jurisdiction.[35] Some statutes conferring judicial powers

Conversely, lack of ripeness for judgment prevents the case from going to judgment automatically.—Barton v. City of Cambridge, Mass., 61 N.E.2d 330—Krinsky v. Stevens Coal Sales Co., 36 N.E.2d 411, 309 Mass. 528—Lynn Gas & Electric Co. v. Creditors' Nat. Clearing House, 130 N.E. 111, 237 Mass. 505—Hosmer v. Hoitt, 36 N.E. 835, 161 Mass. 173—Norcross v. Ripeness for judgment

(1) A case is ripe for judgment within contemplation of such provisions when, under last entry, case seems to have been brought to final determination and everything seems to have been done that ought to be done before the entry of a final adjudication on the rights of the parties.—Home Finance Trust v. In Georgia

The judges of the superior court cannot exercise any power out of term time, unless the authority to do so is expressly granted by law, or an order has been taken in term conferring authority to render a judgment in vacation.—Sammons v. Nabers, 197 S.E. 284, 186 Ga. 161—33 C.J. p 1068 note 89 [d].

on judges in vacation have been held unconstitutional.[36]

In some jurisdictions where the rendition of judgments in vacation is not authorized, judgments rendered at such a time have been held void, although the parties had expressly consented to such rendition.[37] Under some statutes, however, where the parties to the action consent, a judgment may be rendered during vacation.[38] Where this is the case, a judgment so rendered by consent is not only binding on the parties, but is valid even as to third persons in the absence of proof of fraud or collusion.[39]

Entry. A judgment entered in vacation by a court or judge has been held a nullity[40] unless its entry at such time by the court or judge is authorized by statute,[41] the power, if any, of a court or judge to enter judgment in vacation being purely statutory.[42] A contention that the court was without jurisdiction to enter judgment in vacation is without merit where the record does not disclose that the judgment was entered in vacation.[43]

In a majority of jurisdictions, a judgment properly rendered may be entered by the clerk in vacation,[44] provided the clerk does not act merely from his own recollection, but is guided by some memoranda, such as the minutes and docket entries of the court's proceeding.[45] However, a judgment neither rendered by the court nor pronounced by law attempted to be entered by the clerk in vacation is void[46] as being an attempted exercise of judicial powers by a ministerial officer.[47] In some jurisdictions, the clerk has no power or authority to enter a judgment in vacation,[48] although duly pronounced by the court in term time,[49] even at the express direction of the judge,[50] or even in cases where there is a docket memorandum sufficient to authorize a judgment nunc pro tunc at a subsequent term.[51]

§ 115. —— Pendency of Motion for New Trial or in Arrest

After verdict, it is regular in some jurisdictions, and irregular in others, to enter judgment before expiration of the time for applying for a new trial or pending disposition of a timely motion for a new trial. A motion in arrest of judgment should be disposed of before rendition of judgment.

At common law,[52] and under the statutes or practice of some jurisdictions,[53] a judgment after verdict should not be entered before expiration of the time within which a motion for a new trial may be made, and, if it is signed or entered before the expiration of such time,[54] or pending disposition of a timely motion for a new trial,[55] it is irregular, but not void.[56] In other jurisdictions, a judgment entered pending a motion for a new trial, or before expiration of the time within which such a motion may be made, is in all respects regular, valid, and in accordance with the customary practice.[57] Necessarily, a judgment before disposition of a timely motion for a new trial is at most a mere judgment nisi and is not final until the motion is overruled.[58]

Where a motion for a new trial has been entered on the docket and a time fixed for filing a report of the evidence, on failure to file the report of evidence, the case may be stricken from the law docket, and judgment entered on the verdict.[59] Also, where judgment has been withheld pending a motion for a new trial, judgment may be entered up immediately on overruling of the motion;[60] but the court, having granted a new trial, cannot rescind the order and render judgment on the verdict at a subsequent term.[61] When an order is entered dispensing with the necessity of a motion for a new trial, the defeated party may not postpone the final determination of the cause by filing such motion.[62]

A motion in arrest of judgment should be disposed of before rendition of judgment,[63] but failure to do so is harmless error where the motion is ill-founded,[64] and entry of judgment has been held to be, ipso facto, a disposition of the motion.[65]

§ 116. —— Stay of Proceedings

A motion to stay the entry of judgment may and should be denied where the stay is not authorized or warranted.

Where, apart from a motion for a stay of proceedings, the case is ripe for judgment, such motion is in effect a motion to stay the entry of judgment.[66] Unauthorized opposition to a motion to stay the entry of judgment is not a sufficient ground for granting the motion;[67] and under some statutes a stay of entry of judgment on a verdict until determination of an appeal from an order denying a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is not authorized[68] where the case is not reserved for further argument or consideration and the verdict is not defective.[69] It is irregular to render a judgment while an order staying proceedings in the case remains unrevoked and unexpired, but the judgment is not for that reason void.[70]

§ 117. Nunc pro Tunc Entry

The object and office of a nunc pro tunc entry of a judgment are to exhibit correctly on the record a judgment previously rendered and not carried into the record or not properly and adequately recorded.

In connection with judgments, the object or purpose, and office, function, or province, of a nunc pro tunc entry are to make the record speak the truth[71] by recording or correctly evidencing an act done[72] or judgment rendered[73] by the court at a former time and not carried into the record, or not properly or adequately recorded.[74] It is not the object, office, or province of such an entry to alter a judgment actually rendered,[75] or to correct an erroneous decision or judgment;[76] and, generally speaking, the object or office of the entry is only to supply matters of evidence or to correct clerical mispris-sions,[77] and not to supply omitted judicial action;[78] but, as discussed infra § 118, there are some situations in which a judgment may be rendered, as well as entered, nunc pro tunc.

Mere delay in the entry of a judgment as of the day of its rendition does not make the entry nunc pro tunc where it does not purport to be a nunc pro tunc entry and it is made before the close of the term.[79] Indeed, it has been held that, where a statute contemplates that judgments will not be written by the clerk during the term of court at which they are rendered, a judgment rendered on a certain date, and properly entered in the minutes of the court on that date, is in no sense a nunc pro tunc judgment because it is not formally written in the record by the clerk until several months thereafter.[80] However, it has also been held that, where the prevailing party was entitled to have the judgment entered when a motion for new trial was denied, the judgment entered at a subsequent term becomes by operation of law a judgment nunc pro tunc as of the date of the denying of the motion for new trial, if the order denying the motion was entered in term time.[81]

§ 118. —— Power to Order and Grounds Therefor in General

a. General considerations
b. State of proceedings
c. Death of party or dissolution of corporation

a. General Considerations

All courts of record possess inherent power to direct the entry of judgment nunc pro tunc in proper cases; and, subject to certain considerations, the exercise of this power rests largely in the sound discretion of the court.

There is an inherent common-law power in the courts, independent of any statute, to cause the en-

Where judgment was tendered by defendant at February term, but court reserved judgment and counsel agreed that judgment might be signed at later date, judgment signed at May term was judgment nunc pro tunc by consent and related back to February term.—Sutton v. Davis, 171 S.E. 738, 205 N.C. 464.

try of judgments nunc pro tunc[82] in proper cases[83] and in furtherance of justice.[84] This power belongs to all courts of record,[85] and includes appellate courts as discussed in Appeal and Error § 1956, as well as trial courts.[86] However, such power must be exercised by the court;[87] it does not appertain to the clerk of a court, who has no authority to enter a judgment nunc pro tunc without an order of court to that effect.[88]

Where the court is without jurisdiction to amend the minutes on the judge's docket nunc pro tunc, it is likewise without jurisdiction to order a judgment nunc pro tunc in conformity with an amended minute entry.[89] The court may not, by a nunc pro tunc judgment, grant relief neither sought nor given in the original suit,[90] nor may it, in entering such judgment, alter the record so as to show, contrary to the truth, that certain facts existed on a particular date.[91] A purported nunc pro tunc entry of judgment is erroneous where it fails to disclose the ground on which the court acts or what the entry is intended to correct.[92]

(1) A special judge, who directed the entry of a judgment and signed the order book in a county outside the district in which the cause was pending, has the authority to direct entry of judgment "nunc pro tunc" or to ratify the unauthorized entry by the clerk and sign the order book in the county in which the cause was pending, or elsewhere in the district. —Gross' Adm'x v. Couch, 166 S.W.2d 879, 292 Ky. 304.

(2) The successor of a special judge who rendered a judgment but failed to sign the order book could validate the judgment by entry of a signed nunc pro tunc order.—Gorman v. Lusk, 134 S.W.2d 598, 280 Ky. 692.

92. Ohio.—Herman v. Ohio Finance Co., 32 N.E.2d 28, 66 Ohio App. 164.

The power of the court to enter judgment nunc pro tunc should be used sparingly[93] and only when the right of the moving party to ask it is clear;[94] relief by entry nunc pro tunc will not be granted where the failure to enter the judgment at the proper time was due to the party's own carelessness or negligence.[95] Since the object of allowing entries nunc pro tunc is the furtherance of justice, a judgment ordinarily will not be directed to be entered nunc pro tunc unless it is shown that some injury or injustice will result from a refusal to do so,[96] and particularly not to enable one party to gain an advantage over the other party to which he would not have been entitled at the proper time for entering the judgment.[97]

So too such an entry will not be allowed where it will prejudice the rights of third persons who are without notice of the original rendition of the judgment;[98] and, as a general rule, the entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc will be made only on such conditions, express or implied, as will preserve the rights of third persons who have no notice.[99] However, it does not lie in the mouth of a party to object on the ground that third persons will be affected;[1] and, an entry nunc pro tunc, within the power of the court to direct, is not erroneous where a party to the action is not prejudiced or deprived of any legal right[2] and intervening rights are not disturbed thereby.[3] A void judgment should not be entered nunc pro tunc.[4] Subject to the foregoing considerations, a motion for entry of judgment nunc pro tunc ordinarily is addressed very largely to the sound discretion of the court,[5] and should be granted or refused as justice may require in view of the circumstances of the particular case.[6]

b. State of Proceedings

A judgment can be entered nunc pro tunc only in a case which was ripe for judgment at the date to which the judgment is to relate back. A judgment may, if justice so requires, be both rendered and entered nunc pro tunc.

The power to enter a judgment nunc pro tunc can be exercised only in a case where the cause was ripe for judgment at the date to which the judgment is to relate back, that is, where the case was in such a condition at that date that a final judgment could have been then entered immediately.[7]

Prior rendition of judgment. In the exercise of its continuing power over its records, and its unquestioned authority to make them speak the truth,[8] a court may order the entry nunc pro tunc of a judgment which has been actually rendered, but has not been entered on the record, in consequence of any accident or mistake, or the neglect or omission of the clerk,[9] where the fact of rendition is satisfactorily established,[10] the position of the parties has not changed,[11] and no intervening rights will be prejudiced.[12] In certain classes of cases[13] a judgment nunc pro tunc presupposes a judgment actually rendered at the proper time, but not entered,[14] and it is a general rule that a judgment nunc pro tunc cannot regularly be entered unless such judgment has been in fact previously rendered.[15]

Restriction to judicial action actually taken

The power of a court to enter a judgment nunc pro tunc is restricted to placing in the record evidence of judicial action which has been actually taken.

Ky.—Benton v. King, 250 S.W. 1002, 199 Ky. 307.

Ohio.—Herman v. Ohio Finance Co., 32 N.E.2d 28, 66 Ohio App. 164.

Nunc pro tunc entry at subsequent term

(1) The entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc at a subsequent term is not authorized unless, in fact, the judgment was rendered at a previous term.

There are other cases, however, in which a judgment may be both rendered and entered nunc pro tunc,[16] an exception to the general rule, equally well established, being that a judgment may be both rendered and entered nunc pro tunc where the delay was caused solely by the court itself, or by the process of the law,[17] and not by the fault of the prevailing party.[18] Stated more fully, the rule respecting delay caused by the court is that, whenever delay in entering a judgment is caused by the action of the court, as in holding the case under advisement, judgment nunc pro tunc will be allowed as of the time when the party would otherwise have been entitled to it, if justice requires it.[19] The occasion for the application of this rule arises most frequently where a party dies pending the delay, discussed infra subdivision c of this section, but other circumstances may justify and require rendition and entry nunc pro tunc.[20] Judgment on a general verdict may be rendered[21] or entered[22] nunc pro tunc.

The subsequent amendment or correction, in respect of either clerical or judicial errors, of a judgment which has been both rendered and entered is discussed infra §§ 236–264.

c. Death of Party or Dissolution of Corporation

A judgment may be entered nunc pro tunc as of a date anterior to the death of a party or the dissolution of a corporation which was a party where the case had been tried and was ripe for judgment at the time of such death or dissolution.

If judgment on a verdict is delayed by a motion in arrest of judgment, or for a new trial, or other proceeding, or if a case tried by the court is held under advisement, or delayed by exceptions, and meanwhile one of the parties dies, the court may enter judgment nunc pro tunc as of a time when the party was still alive,[23] such as of the date of

(3) The refusal of a trial judge to enter a written judgment nunc pro tunc, conformably to an oral announcement rendered at a previous term, will not be reversed, since such oral announcement does not constitute a judgment.—Foy v. McCrary, 121 S.E. 804, 157 Ga. 461.

submission,[24] the date of the finding,[25] or the date of the order for judgment;[26] but it is essential to the entry of judgment nunc pro tunc as of a date anterior to the death of a party that the cause shall have been ripe for judgment at the time of death of the party,[27] that the delay shall not have been due to the fault of the prevailing party,[28] that innocent third persons acquiring rights since the death of the party will not be injured,[29] and that the personal representative of decedent shall have been substituted as a party.[30] While it has been held that this practice does not extend to cases of tort which do not survive,[31] the better opinion is that it is immaterial whether or not the cause of action would survive; in either case the judgment may be rendered nunc pro tunc.[32]

Dissolution of corporation. Where a corporation is a party, and it is dissolved, or its charter expires, after the action has been tried and the case taken under advisement by the court, the judgment may be entered, nunc pro tunc, as of a time prior to such dissolution.[33]

§ 119. —— Time of Entry

Lapse of time ordinarily does not affect the exercise by the court of its power to direct the entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc.

In the absence of statutory limitations[34] the right, authority, power, or jurisdiction of the court to direct entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc is not lost or barred by lapse of time, but may be exercised at any time,[35] unless intervening rights are affect-

a. In general
b. Notice of application
c. Evidence

a. In General

An order for the entry of judgment nunc pro tunc may be made by the court on its own motion or on a motion or other proper request or application by a party or interested person.

The entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc may be ordered by the court on its own motion[44] or on a proper request or application,[45] such as a motion,[46] made by a party[47] or any interested person,[48] in the court of original jurisdiction.[49] Persons who are not parties to the judgment are not necessary parties to the proceeding,[50] and they will not be permitted to intervene for the purpose of questioning the correctness of the judgment.[51] Formal pleadings are unnecessary and inappropriate.[52] The sufficiency of the motion cannot be tested by demurrer or motion to strike out;[53] but a demurrer to an answer to the motion is properly sustained where the answer is defective and subject to demurrer.[54]

The motion should be determined in a summary manner.[55] The case, according to the decisions

Hearing
(1) The hearing of the motion may be had in chambers and in a county different from that in which the verdict was obtained.—Chapman v. Chatooga Oil Mill Co., 96 S.E. 579, 22 Ga.App. 446.

(2) In a case where a hearing was held, it was said that the court has power to enter a judgment nunc pro tunc without a hearing, if no records are changed and no different judgment is entered.—Jones v. Sun Oil Co., Civ.App., 145 S.W.2d 615, reversed on other grounds 153 S.W.2d 571, 137 Tex. 353.

on the question, is not to be retried,[56] and no inquiry will be permitted into the merits of the original action or the facts already established by the judgment.[57] In so far as the judgment is concerned, the court may properly inquire only as to whether any judgment was pronounced or rendered,[58] and, if it was, what judgment was, rather than what judgment might or ought to have been, rendered,[59] and whether it was omitted from the record.[60] The court is not called on to construe the judgment, but only to enter of record such judgment as was formerly rendered and not entered of record as rendered.[61] Furthermore, the court is without authority to set aside the judgment or prevent its enforcement, even though it is erroneous as a matter of law.[62]

b. Notice of Application

The practice varies in different jurisdictions as to requiring the giving of notice of an application for entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc.

In some jurisdictions a judgment may be entered nunc pro tunc without notice[63] where the motion is based on matters of record, which cannot be disputed by the opposite party,[64] or where no different judgment is entered.[65] However, where it becomes necessary to look beyond the record, and hear other evidence, notice must be given to the adverse party,[66] and the customary practice in a number of jurisdictions is to require the giving of notice of all applications for entry of judgment nunc pro tunc.[67] It has been held that a judgment nunc pro tunc directed without notice to anyone is not void;[68] but it has also been held that such a judgment entered at a subsequent term is invalid.[69]

c. Evidence

An order for entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc may be authorized or justified by record evidence; and, according to the generally accepted rule, it must be based on some entry, note, or memorandum in the records or quasi records of the court.

In order that a judgment may be entered nunc pro tunc, it is necessary that there be evidence that a judgment was actually rendered,[70] except, of course, cases where the judgment may be both rendered and entered nunc pro tunc.[71] Record evi-

(3) In another case, however, one of the grounds on which the entry nunc pro tunc of a judgment was held erroneous was the absence of an order setting the motion for hearing at a future date.—Merrick v. Merrick, 71 S.W.2d 4, 254 Ky. 145.

Submission to jury

Supplying formality

Where a judgment for plaintiffs entered by prothonotary at plaintiffs' request was vulnerable to attack because trial court, in overruling defendant's motion for judgment non obstante veredicto, failed to certify the evidence and direct that judgment be entered for plaintiffs, and thereafter plaintiffs applied for a rule to show cause why judgment should not be stricken and a valid one entered nunc pro tunc, trial court, in passing on plaintiffs' application, was not reviewing the original order but was supplying a required formality and it was not required to consider the evidence or rehear the merits.—Balch v. Shick, 24 A.2d 548, 147 Pa.Super. 273.

71. Okl.—Corpus Juris quoted in McQuiston v. Tyler, 97 P.2d 552, 554, 186 Okl. 315.

dence may be sufficient to authorize or justify the entry of judgment nunc pro tunc;[72] and, according to the generally accepted rule, the evidence to justify the entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc must be record evidence, that is, some entry, note, or memorandum from the records or quasi records of the court, which shows in itself, without the aid of parol evidence, that the alleged judgment was rendered.[73] However, according to some authorities, an entry nunc pro tunc may be ordered on any evidence that is sufficient and satisfactory, whether it is parol or otherwise.[74] Other authorities have held that, when the fact that a judgment was formerly rendered is established by record evidence, it is proper to admit parol proof for the purpose of showing its date, character, and terms, and the relief granted.[75]

Great caution will be exercised in basing a nunc pro tunc entry on parol evidence.[76] Parol evidence is admissible to establish extrinsic facts sufficient to defeat the application.[77] Both parties are bound by a decision of the trier of facts resolving a conflict in the testimony as to matters alleged in opposition to the entry.[78]

An order for nunc pro tunc entry of a judgment need not set out the evidence on which it is based.[79] The presumption is that such an order made at a subsequent term was based on competent evidence.[80]

§ 121. —— Operation and Effect

Except as to the rights of third persons, a valid judgment which is properly entered nunc pro tunc is retrospective and has the same force and effect as though it had been entered at the time when the judgment was originally rendered.

cures proceedings which otherwise would be defective and irregular for want of a proper entry of judgment to sustain them.[82] A nunc pro tunc entry of record is competent evidence of the facts which it recites,[83] it is conclusive on any other court in which the record is offered in evidence,[84] and it cannot be impeached collaterally, as discussed infra § 402.

The effects of an entry nunc pro tunc, however, will be confined to the rights and interests of the original parties, and it will not be allowed to prejudice the intervening rights of third persons without notice.[85] Also, where a judgment is void, it is not validated by a nunc pro tunc entry,[86] and the court's approval of such entry is of no effect.[87] The court may not, by a declaration of retroactive effect, make a judgment take effect as of a date when the case was not ready for judgment;[88] a judgment which, by the order for its entry, is shown to have been rendered on the date stated therein, cannot, by a subsequent provision of the order, be made to take effect as of an earlier date;[89] and a direction of a judgment nunc pro tunc becomes of no effect when the court, in rendering the judgment, dates the judgment as of the day it is filed.[90] A final judgment which has been entered is not affected by a subsequent attempt to enter a different judgment nunc pro tunc.[91] It has been held that a judgment is not effective as of the date to which it expressly relates back if such effectiveness would deny to any proper party the right of review by a higher court.[92]

§ 122. Judgment Roll or Record

The filing of a judgment roll or record consisting of a more or less formal account of the proceedings is generally required by the statutes in the various jurisdictions.

The ancient common-law method of perpetuating judgments was by engrossing the proceedings on parchment, which was called the judgment roll, and constituted the record and the only evidence of the judgment.[93] This practice has been largely, if not entirely, discontinued and other methods have been adopted in the various jurisdictions.[94] Under some statutes a formal judgment roll is required to be made up by attaching together, and filing with the clerk, the necessary papers.[95] Under others a judgment record, which is substantially equivalent to a judgment roll, is required to be made up by copying the proceedings with more or less detail into books kept for that purpose.[96] In some jurisdictions neither a judgment roll nor a formal judgment record is required, and the record of the judgment consists of the filed papers supplemented by the entries made by the clerk.[97] Even very informal memoranda by the clerks have in some instances been deemed sufficient as the record of a judgment;[98] and, for some purposes at least, the clerk's files and minutes have been held to constitute the record until such time as the record is fully extended or the judgment roll made up.[99]

The validity of a judgment does not depend on making up the formal judgment roll or judgment record,[1] although this may be necessary for certain purposes, such as to enable the judgment to be regularly docketed, as discussed infra § 126, so as to become a lien, as discussed infra § 463, or to support an execution, as discussed in Executions § 9, or to limit the time for an appeal or writ of error, as considered in Appeal and Error § 445. The term "judgment roll" is strictly applicable only to civil cases,[2] although the term has been applied to the record in a criminal prosecution.[3] In probate proceedings there is, strictly speaking, no judgment roll,[4] but whenever proceedings are so akin to a civil action as to necessitate the papers which are declared by a statute to constitute the judgment roll in a civil action, they may be held to constitute the judgment roll for the purpose of appeal.[5]

§ 123. —— Time of Making and Filing

Generally the clerk is required to make up the judgment roll immediately after entry of the judgment.

Under most statutes the clerk is required to make up the judgment roll immediately after the entry of the judgment.[6] Until the judgment is entered in accordance with the rules discussed supra §§ 106–112, there is no authority to make and file a judgment roll.[7]

§ 124. —— By Whom Made and Filed

The duty of making and filing the judgment roll usually rests on the clerk, but the attorney for the successful party may, and under some statutes must, prepare the judgment roll for the clerk to file.

Although the making and filing of the judgment roll is usually made the duty of the clerk,[8] in actual practice it is generally made up by the attorney of the successful party.[9] Under some statutes it is the duty of such attorney to prepare and furnish the judgment roll to the clerk,[10] except that the clerk must attach thereto necessary original papers on file;[11] but the clerk may, at his option, make up the entire judgment roll.[12] In the absence of statute so requiring, the successful party cannot be compelled to furnish a judgment roll.[13] In any event, when properly made up, the judgment roll must be filed by the clerk.[14]

§ 125. —— Contents and Sufficiency

a. In general
b. Particular matters
c. Amendment of the roll
d. Signature

a. In General

In general the judgment roll or record properly includes all papers necessary to support the judgment or specified by statute, and any matters involving the merits of the action and necessarily affecting the judgment.

The record proper, or technical record, corresponds with the common-law judgment roll,[15] and a judgment roll should contain only such papers as constitute a part of that record.[16] Unless a particular matter is in its nature a proper matter of record in the case, it cannot be made such by being inserted in, and attested as part of, the record, or judgment roll, by the clerk.[17] In a general sense, all the files and minutes of the court are often spoken of, in modern times, as records of courts, and this use of the term tends to lead to a confusion of ideas.[18] The record is said to be a memorial or history of the proceedings in a cause,[19] but this is not to be taken to mean that such record necessarily or usually embraces all the proceedings, for there are many proceedings during the progress of a case of which no minute or record is made.[20]

Generally speaking, it may be said that the judgment roll or record properly comprises all the proceedings on which the judgment is founded and to which, as matter of record, it necessarily refers.[21] It includes all papers necessary to support the judgment[22] or specified by the statute,[23] and generally any matters involving the merits of the action and necessarily affecting the judgment,[24] but not interlocutory rulings or the proceedings on collateral or incidental issues in the case[25] unless made part of the record by bill of exceptions which, as appears infra subdivision b of this section, constitutes a part of the judgment roll or record, or by order of court.[26] Where the statute specifies the contents of the judgment roll, matters not specified form no part of it, and need not,[27] and should not,[28] be included. On the other hand, failure to include all the necessary or proper papers does not affect the validity of the judgment.[29]

Record held sufficient

Where county court's record showed on its face a petition stating a cause of action, a waiver of summons, and a voluntary appearance by defendant, recital that evidence was heard, and a judgment against defendant, record was sufficient to show jurisdictional facts.—Wallace v. Peterson, 284 N.W. 866, 136 Neb. 39.

A placita for the term at which judgment was entered is sufficient to show the legal organization of the court.—Calbreath v. Beckwith, 260 Ill.App. 7—Leafgreen v. Leafgreen, 127 Ill.App. 184.

Errors of law committed by court of general jurisdiction in exercising jurisdiction over subject matter submitted to court by constitution or statutes are not reflected in judgment roll.—Chicago, R. Motion to strike

The unsuccessful party may move to strike out irrelevant papers, but he should specify the papers claimed to be unnecessarily included in the judgment roll and point out wherein they were improperly included. —Peters v. Berkeley, 219 N.Y.S. 709, 219 App.Div. 261.

29. N.Y.—Decker v. Dutcher, 231 N. Y.S. 397, 156 Misc. 488, reversed on other grounds 239 N.Y.S. 553, 247 App.Div. 689.

a judgment roll is sufficient,[30] but necessary[31]. Provisions regulating the mode of making up and filing a judgment roll have been deemed merely directory.[32] A defective judgment roll is not a nullity,[33] nor does it invalidate the judgment, which continues to be supported by the usual presumptions.[34] A variance between an order as entered in his minutes by the clerk and such order as drawn up and inserted in the judgment roll is, it has been held, a matter of mere irregularity.[35] Failure to fasten the proper papers together, as required by statute, does not prevent such papers from constituting the judgment roll.[36] Ordinarily copies may be used in lieu of original papers in making up judgment rolls.[37]

b. Particular Matters

Whether or not a particular matter is a proper or necessary part of the judgment roll or record depends on statutory requirements and whether or not it is necessary to support the judgment.

Whether or not a particular matter is a proper or necessary part of the judgment roll or record depends on statutory provisions and on whether or not such matter is necessary to support the judgment.[38]

Process, proof of service, and appearance. The writ, summons, or original process,[39] together with the necessary indorsement thereon,[40] and proof of service,[41] are proper and necessary parts of the judgment roll or record, at least where there is a default for want of an appearance or answer.[42] Proof of service of process, however, need not appear in the roll or record where defendant entered a general appearance in the action, or pleaded to the declaration or complaint,[43] or, it has been held, where the judgment contains a recital of due service.[44] Where the service is by publication, neither the affidavit nor the order for publication is a part of the judgment roll or record,[45] and their absence, therefore, does not show invalidity of the judgment

(9) Other matters.—Malaquias v. Novo, 188 P.2d 729, 59 Cal.App.2d 225—34 C.J. p 89 note 86 [b].

Notice of controverting affidavit

Failure of record to contain copy of service on defendant of notice of affidavit controverting his plea of privilege was not fatal to judgment overruling plea of privilege where judgment disclosed that trial court found that attorney appeared for defendant at hearing on plea of privilege.—Thomas v. 34 C.J. p 85 note 80.

Amended complaint

Judgment roll must disclose that amended complaint was served or service thereof was waived, where judgment was by default.—Griffith v. Montana Wheat Growers' Ass'n, 244 P. 277, 75 Mont. 466.

43. N.Y.—Issem v. Slater, 27 N.Y. S.2d 871, 262 App.Div. 59, reargument denied 29 N.Y.S.2d 505, 262 App.Div. 834, appeal dismissed 37 N.E.2d 144, 286 N.Y. 703.
34 C.J. p 85 note 82.

Acceptance of service

Where defendant's acceptance of service is relied on, record must show that court ascertained by proof that defendant had accepted service of summons and when.—Williams v. Chase Nat. Bank of New York, 174 So. 783, 234 Ala. 238—Kent v. Kent, 139 So. 240, 224 Ala. 183.

on the face of the judgment roll;[46] and even if inserted, they could not be considered.[47] Where the judgment recites that service was proper, proof of mailing copies of the petition and notice of publication to defendant is not a necessary part of the roll or record.[48] The affidavit of publication of the writ or summons is a necessary part of the roll or record,[49] and some cases hold that the affidavit and order for publication must also be included as constituting part of the proof of service of process.[50] A formal appearance filed in the action is a part of the record;[51] but, when not included in the statutory enumerations of matters forming part of the judgment roll, a notice of appearance has been held to be not a part of such roll.[52]

Pleadings. Both under express statutory provision and in the absence thereof, the pleadings in the case, or copies thereof, are a proper and necessary part of the judgment roll or record.[53] Thus the declaration, petition, or complaint,[54] and the plea or answer,[55] or demurrer,[56] and a replication or reply,[57] are parts of the record proper and should be included in the judgment roll. It has been held, however, that the omission of a pleading, while an irregularity, will not vitiate the judgment or execution.[58] Where defendant does not answer or otherwise plead to the declaration but makes default, that fact must appear.[59] Pleadings which have been withdrawn[60] or superseded by amended pleadings[61] need not be included in the roll or record, and if improperly incorporated therein may be stricken out on motion.[62] It is not necessary to include in the judgment roll the answer of a defendant as to whom the action was discontinued.[63]

Bill of particulars. It is only where a bill of particulars involves the merits, or of necessity affects the judgment, that it should be made part of the judgment roll.[64]

Evidence. In common-law cases, the evidence, including papers acted on only as a matter of evidence, unless made so by bill of exceptions or some substitute therefor, forms no part of the record.[65]

Orders. Unless they involve the merits of the action and necessarily affect the judgment, or are expressly provided for by statute, orders entered in the cause are not properly a part of the judgment roll or record,[66] although they may be made part of the record by direction of the court.[67]

34 C.J. p 87 note 15.

The verdict, decision, findings, or report on which the judgment is founded, is a proper and necessary part of the judgment roll or record,[68] but in a number of instances exceptions have been made to this rule.[69] Where defendant in an action has appeared and issue has been joined, it must appear from the judgment roll how that issue has been disposed of so as to authorize the court to proceed to judgment.[70]

A bill of exceptions constitutes a part of the judgment roll or record in most jurisdictions;[71] but it is otherwise under some statutes.[72] Where the statute so provides, if judgment is taken after a trial the judgment roll must contain "the exceptions or case then on file."[73]

Judgment. The judgment roll or record must contain, of course, a copy of the final judgment,[74] and also a copy of any interlocutory judgment rendered in the cause,[75] unless, by amendment of pleadings or otherwise, the interlocutory judgment has been superseded or become functus officio.[76]

Costs. Papers used on taxation of costs do not constitute any part of the judgment roll or record.[77]

Appeal papers and subsequent proceedings. Under a statute so providing, if a judgment of affirmance is rendered on appeal to a designated appellate court, the judgment roll consists of a copy of the judgment annexed to the papers on which the appeal was heard.[78]

c. Amendment of the Roll

The judgment roll may be corrected by amendment or by the addition of proper papers.

All papers incorporated into the judgment roll and required to form part of it may be detached by the clerk, and any amendments made which are necessary to make it conform with accuracy to the proceedings that have been had.[79] If necessary or proper papers are omitted in the judgment roll, such papers may be added.[80]

d. Signature

Failure of the clerk to sign the judgment as required is at most an irregularity which does not affect the validity of the judgment and is subject to correction.

Although the clerk of the court should attest the judgment roll or entry by his signature, his failure to do so is at most an irregularity, and does not affect the validity of the judgment.[81] It is a clerical error[82] which the court may and should allow to be corrected at any time nunc pro tunc.[83] Under some statutes, signing of the roll by the clerk is not required.[84]

§ 126. Docketing

In most jurisdictions the clerk is required to docket the judgment by making the proper entries in a book alphabetically arranged, so that interested third persons may have official notice of the judgment.

The docket of a judgment is a brief writing or statement of the judgment made from the record or roll, kept by the clerk in a book alphabetically arranged, pursuant to statutory requirements.[85] As in case of entry of a judgment, discussed supra § 106, the docketing of a judgment is a ministerial act to be performed by the clerk,[86] and necessarily implies the preëxistence of a judgment to be docketed.[87]

It is the duty of the clerk or prothonotary of the court to docket the judgment by entering it in the proper book.[88] It is, however, the duty of the plaintiff or judgment creditor to see that his judgment is properly docketed.[89] The docket is no part of the record of the court,[90] and hence does not import verity,[91] as in the case of the judgment roll or record proper, discussed infra § 132; a docket notation may not be used to supply a deficiency in the record of the court.[92]

Purpose and necessity. The judgment docket is intended to afford to interested persons official notice of the existence of judgments.[93] As discussed infra § 463, in some states judgments are required to be docketed in order that they may attach as liens, and, in some jurisdictions, as discussed in Executions § 9, docketing is a prerequisite to the issuance of an execution. The failure to docket the judgment, however, does not destroy it, or deprive it of the usual consequences of a judgment,[94] and erroneous or false entries made by the clerk do not conclude the parties, or impair the validity of the judgment.[95] An undocketed judgment is valid and conclusive as between the parties[96] and may be relied on as an estoppel.[97]

Time of docketing. The test of the right to docket a judgment is the right to issue execution on it immediately,[98] but it is not necessary that a judgment should be presently payable in order to permit of being docketed.[99] As a general rule, a judgment cannot regularly be docketed until it has been entered and the judgment roll filed.[1] The docketing without a preceding entry in the judgment book is of no avail, even though a judgment roll has been filed with what purports to be a copy of a judgment in it.[2] For some purposes a judgment may be docketed nunc pro tunc,[3] although, of course, not so as to prejudice the rights of innocent third persons.[4] Since docketing is a ministerial, as distinguished from a judicial, act, a judgment may be docketed on a nonjuridical day.[5]

Sufficiency of entry. In determining the sufficiency of a docket entry, the whole entry must be considered, and if from the whole, the amount and date of the judgment, the parties to it, and the court in which it was rendered, appear, the entry will be held sufficient.[6] Substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient.[7]

§ 127. —— Book or Place of Entry

A judgment is docketed in a judgment docket or "docket book," which is separate and distinct from the "judgment book" in which judgments are "entered."

A judgment, in order to be docketed, must be entered in the book kept for that purpose, and usually known as the judgment docket or "docket book,"[8] which is a separate and distinct book from that known as the "judgment book,"[9] in which, as appears supra § 110, judgments are required to be entered.

§ 128. —— Index

In addition to docketing, an index of judgments is generally required.

It is usually required that, in addition to the docket of judgments, there shall be an index thereof,[10] and, as discussed infra § 464, substantial compliance with such requirement is generally held necessary to constitute the judgment a lien as against third persons.

§ 129. Filing Transcript

a. In another county or district
b. In superior court

a. In Another County or District

A transcript of a judgment rendered in one county may be filed in another county, but the court to which the judgment is thus transferred has no power over it except to enforce it.

For certain limited purposes, such as lien, execution, and revival, judgments rendered in one county may be in effect transferred to another county or counties by the filing of a transcript of the record of such judgment in such counties, in accordance with statutory provisions.[11] A transcript thus entered in another county does not become a judgment of the court to which it is transferred, but only a quasi judgment for certain limited purposes, such as lien, execution, and revival.[12] The merits

"Judgment docket" defined
A list of the judgments entered in a given court, methodically kept by the clerk or other proper officer, open to public inspection and intended to afford official notice to interested parties of the existence or lien of judgments.—Black L.D.

"Docket book" defined
A docket book is a public record prescribed by statute for the express purpose, among other things, of receiving the entry of judgments.—Beuerlein v. Hodges, 10 N.Y.S. 505, 506.

"Docket entry" distinguished
The term "docket entry" as used in statute has been held to refer to the entries in the minute book or docket that the clerk is required, by statute, to keep, and not the entries in a judgment docket book which the clerk was not required to keep, but which might properly be kept, if the judge so ordered, as a convenient index of the judgment debtors.—Funk v. Manner of indexing
(1) "It is the county clerk's duty to provide books, ruled in columns, convenient for making the entries under the initial letter of the surname, only, of the judgment debtor. . . . It is the practice, however, to provide books with columns appropriate to the entry of judgments in accordance with the initial letter of the given names as well as the surnames of judgment debtors. While this is not required by law, if the county clerk undertakes to do it, he must use reasonable care to index such given name in its proper column so that no one may be misled thereby. Nevertheless a judgment entered in accordance with the requirements of the statute is a sufficient and legal judgment though the given name of the judgment debtor may not appear in the proper column."—Cole v. Vincent, 242 N.Y.S. 644, 647, 229 App.Div. 520.

or validity of a judgment thus transferred cannot be inquired into by the court to which it is taken; it is there only for purposes of enforcement and satisfaction.[13] If it is desired to enter the judgment in a third county, it must be done by transcript from the original judgment, not from the transcript entered in the second county.[14] Generally a judgment must have been docketed or recorded in the county where rendered, in order to be entitled to be filed or docketed in another county.[15]

It is the duty of the clerk of the county where the judgment was rendered, on request and payment of fees, to furnish a transcript containing all the facts necessary to make a perfect docket of the judgment,[16] and the clerk of the county in which such transcript is presented must file it and docket the judgment.[17] The transcript will not be vitiated by mere clerical errors,[18] but there must be compliance with statutory requirements,[19] and the transcript must be sufficiently full to give reasonably certain and definite information to subsequent purchasers or lienors.[20]

b. In Superior Court

(1) In general
(2) Operation and effect

(1) In General

In many jurisdictions, subject to statutory requirements and limitations as to the mode and time of doing so, a transcript of a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace or other inferior court may be filed and docketed in a superior court.

By statute in many jurisdictions, and subject to the statutory requirements and limitations, a transcript of a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace or other inferior court may be filed and docketed in the office of the clerk of a superior court.[21] If the statute contemplates the filing of a complete transcript of the justice's record, it is not satisfied by a mere abstract of the judgment;[22] but other-

Suit to restrain execution

The circuit court of the county in which the transcript of a judgment of the circuit court of another county was filed, and in which the circuit clerk issued execution, had jurisdiction in action by judgment debtor to restrain execution, as against contention that circuit court of such county had no jurisdiction to enjoin or stay proceedings on judgment of circuit court of another county, since, when transcript of judgment was filed with clerk of circuit court of county in which action was brought, it became, at least for purposes of execution, a judgment in such county.—Brick v. What constitutes filing

Where certified transcript of judgment was mailed to circuit court clerk of another county for filing, but clerk did not file or return transcript but wrote plaintiff's attorney that filing fee was five dollars, and requested attorney to take care of fee as soon as possible, and attorney immediately mailed clerk five dollars, which was received by clerk two days after first letter from plaintiff's attorney and clerk then indorsed transcript as "filed," transcript was not filed until so indorsed; hence during the intervening two days transcript was not "constructive notice" to assignees of oil and gas leases from judgment debtor.—Oil Well Supply Co. v. Transcript held sufficient

Where transcript of judgment of justice of peace was so vague and ambiguous as to leave doubt whether judgment bore interest at six or eight per cent, it should be treated as containing no recital with respect to interest, and subject to legal statutory rate.—Filbert v. wise the transcript is sufficient if it shows all the essential elements of a judgment,[23] and particularly the jurisdiction of the inferior court,[24] the date of the judgment,[25] the names of the parties,[26] and the amount of the recovery.[27] It has been held that several judgments may be embraced in one transcript, and that it is not necessary to certify each judgment separately.[28] Only the judgment debtor may complain of inefficiency or irregularity in the filing of the transcript; a stranger to the action has no right to do so.[29]

Certificate and authentication. It is necessary that the transcript should be certified as correct by the justice or other court from which it is taken, and authenticated in accordance with the directions of the statute.[30]

Time for filing. Subject to any statutory restriction of the time within which the transcript of the judgment of an inferior court may be filed in a superior court,[31] it may be done at any time during the effective life of the judgment.[32] As a general rule it is necessary that there should be a judgment actually rendered and still in force,[33] which has not become dormant[34] or barred by the statute of limitations,[35] and is not so old as to be invalidated by the presumption of payment after twenty years.[36] It has been held that the transcript may be filed before the time to appeal from the judgment has expired,[37] or after an appeal is pending,[38] except in some jurisdictions, where the transcript may not be filed after an appeal has been taken.[39]

Affidavit of creditor. The effect of some statutes is to require the judgment creditor, on filing a transcript from a justice or other inferior court, to make and file an affidavit of the amount remaining due and unpaid on the judgment, or that the judgment is due and unpaid, and that it cannot be satisfied from the goods and chattels of the debtor; this requirement is jurisdictional and the affidavit is indispensable.[40]

(2) Operation and Effect

Transferring a judgment by transcript from an inferior to a superior court makes it the judgment of the latter for purposes of enforcement and with respect to remedies by direct attack; but the power of the superior court extends only to the transcribed judgment and the lower court retains some control over its own judgment.

In a strict sense, the transfer of a judgment from an inferior court to a superior court by the filing of a transcript or abstract does not actually make the judgment a judgment of the higher court.[41] It is generally held, however, that a transferred judgment becomes to all intents and purposes a judgment of the superior court,[42] at least for the pur-

Mere statutory judgment
The filing of a transcript in the county clerk's office does not make a judgment of the justice's court or any inferior court a judgment rendered by the county court, but only a statutory judgment of such court; such judgment continues to be not a judgment of a court of record.—Dieffenbach v. pose of enforcement,[43] and with respect to remedies by direct attack;[44] and the higher court may thereafter issue process on it,[45] modify it, or grant other relief against it,[46] vacate it, or strike it off the docket for cause shown.[47] Such power is limited to the transcript judgment and record in the superior court; the superior court cannot open or vacate the judgment of the inferior court,[48] and, while it has been held that the filing of the transcript divests the lower court of all jurisdiction over the case and the judgment,[49] so that no further proceedings for the enforcement of the judgment may be taken therein,[50] nevertheless the inferior court does retain some control of its judgment,[51] including the power to modify[52] or vacate[53] it, notwithstanding the prior filing of a transcript of it in a superior court. A void or invalid judgment of an inferior court cannot be validated by the filing of a transcript thereof in a superior court.[54]

Alleging substance of lost record
A motion alleging the names of the parties to a judgment, the court in which and the date when it was rendered, the amount thereof, that it was rendered on a described bond, and that the record of the judgment was destroyed by fire sufficiently alleges the substance of the destroyed record.—Spears v. Work, 29 Ind. 502.
Notice
Lost or destroyed judgments may be restored or proved at common law, but in every such case the opposite party should be notified, in order that he may appear for his own pro-

restored,[57] there is authority that a void judgment should not be restored;[58] and it has been held that in a proceeding to restore a destroyed judgment it may be shown that there was a good defense to the original action and that defendant was deprived of the opportunity of asserting it without fault of his own and by reason of plaintiff's fraud.[59] Under some statutes in such a proceeding the judgment debtor may set forth any new matters arising subsequent to the judgment which operate in whole or in part to extinguish or set it aside.[60] An application to supply a lost record cannot be made the means of getting on the record a judgment or decree which never was entered there, or of completing a record imperfectly entered.[61] To establish a destroyed judgment, the burden of proof is on the party claiming under it,[62] and the evidence must be clear and convincing.[63]

§ 132. Verity and Conclusiveness of Record

The judgment roll or record proper imports absolute verity and is conclusive evidence of its contents, but such records are not evidence, except as between the parties and their privies, of the facts recited therein.

Although the judgment record is occasionally said to be presumptively true,[64] the authorities are almost universally agreed that the judgment roll, or record proper, is of such uncontrollable credit and verity as to admit of no averment, plea, or proof to the contrary; it is conclusive evidence of the facts which it recites and cannot be contradicted[65] in a collateral proceeding.[66] Under the doctrine of res judicata, discussed infra § 592 et seq., only parties and privies are bound by a judgment as an adjudication, but no one, whether or not a party or a privy, may impeach the record of a judgment considered simply as a record.[67] Thus the actual rendition and existence of a judgment are conclusively shown by the record as against the whole world.[68] Beyond this, records are not evidence of the facts recited, except as between the parties or their privies.[69] A question as to a matter of record must be tried by the record itself if in existence.[70] If the record is of the same court, the trial is on inspection by the court,[71] and it is error to submit the question to a jury.[72] The rule that record imports absolute verity is subject to the qualifications that one portion of a record may be limited, explained, or qualified by another portion thereof,[73]

tection.—George v. Middough, 62 Mo. 549.

Restoration of whole record

It is not sufficient to restore a part only of the lost record, such as the final judgment, but the restoration must be of the whole record, including the summons, pleadings, etc., as the court can determine the legal effect of a judgment only from an inspection of the whole record.—Vail v. Iglehart, 69 Ill. 332.

Right to apply

Allegations that petitioner is described in a judgment, sought to be restored on record, as the person in whose favor it was rendered, sufficiently show his interest and right to maintain the proceeding to restore the record, and express allegations that failure to restore the record will result in damage to the petitioner is not necessary.—Russell v. and that extraneous evidence is admissible to point out and correct a clerical mistake in the record.[74]

§ 133. Record as Notice

As a general rule the record of a judgment properly entered and docketed is notice of that which it contains or recites, as well as of facts fairly inferable from its recitals.

Although there is authority to the contrary,[75] the general rule is that the record of a judgment properly entered and docketed is notice of that which it contains or recites,[76] as well as of such facts as may be fairly inferred from its recitals,[77] to the parties,[78] their privies,[79] and to third persons.[80] The notice is prospective and not retrospective.[81] Unless there is compliance with the statutory requirements as to the record or docketing, it will be ineffectual as notice,[82] but substantial compliance is sufficient, and mere irregularities do not affect its operation as notice.[83]

VI. JUDGMENT BY CONFESSION

A. IN GENERAL

§ 134. Definition, Nature, and Distinctions

Judgment by confession is a method of securing the entry of judgment on the debtor's or obligor's confession and acknowledgment of his liability, without the formalities of an ordinary proceeding.

The phrase "judgment by confession" or "confession of judgment" has a popular as well as a technical signification.[84] As popularly understood, it signifies an acknowledgment of indebtedness, on which it is contemplated that a judgment may and will be rendered;[85] the entry of a judgment on the admission or confession of a debtor or obligor without the formality, time, or expense involved in an ordinary proceeding.[86] It is not a plea,[87] but is an affirmative act, consented to by defendant in person, or by his attorney, with the leave of the court,[88] and is essentially a voluntary act;[89] it is a voluntary submission to the jurisdiction of the court, giving by consent and without the service of process what could otherwise be obtained by summons and complaint, and other formal proceedings,[90] and hence an admission in answer in inter-

A judgment disclosing on its face that it is based on oral testimony of witnesses sworn and examined in open court is not a judgment by confession, despite defendant's acknowledgment of service and offer to confess in a stated sum indorsed on the summons.—Smith Perry Electric Co. v. The confession of a judgment is but one of the ways and processes by which a person may be sued.—Commonwealth ex rel. Bradford County v. Lynch, 23 A.2d 77, 146 Pa.Super. 469—O'Hara v. Manley, 12 A.2d 820, 140 Pa.Super. 39—Aid Soc. of Congregation of Shomo Habrith v. Fogelman, Pa.Com.Pl., 35 Berks Co.L.J. 178.

rogatories is not a confession of judgment since such an admission is not a voluntary act.[91] A judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense is not a judgment by confession.[92]

Judgment by consent distinguished. A judgment by consent is distinguished from a judgment by confession, in that its special characteristic is the settlement between the parties of the terms, amount, or conditions of the judgment to be rendered;[93] the first presupposes an agreement of the parties as a basis for it, and the latter an act of defendant alone.[94] They also differ in that the court exercises a certain amount of supervision over the entry of judgments by confession, and equitable jurisdiction over their subsequent status.[95]

Judgment by default distinguished. The terms "judgment by default" and "judgment by confession" are not synonymous.[96] A judgment by confession is one in which defendant confesses his liability, whereas a judgment by default is one which results from the fact that defendant either has no defense to make, or does not appear to make it.[97] In effect, however, a judgment by default is equivalent to a judgment on confession,[98] and plaintiff may waive a judgment by default and substitute a judgment by confession.[99]

§ 135. Classes

Judgments by confession are valid at common law.

Judgments by confession are recognized at common law,[1] and such judgments have been held to be constitutional.[2]

Confession of judgment after action is brought and confession without action are discussed in the sections immediately following.

§ 136. —— Confession after Action Brought

a. In general
b. By cognovit actionem
c. By confession relicta verificatione

a. In General

Judgments by confession after action brought fall into two classes, judgments by cognovit actionem and judgments by confession relicta verificatione.

Judgments by confession after action brought are divided into two classes, the one a judgment by cognovit actionem and the other a judgment by confession relicta verificatione.[3] In either of these cases the judgment must be tested by rules and principles known to the common law, and is not governed by the statutes authorizing the confession of judgments without action, so that if good at common law it is not impeachable for the lack of an affidavit, statement of the origin of the indebtedness, or other supports required by those statutes.[4]

b. By Cognovit Actionem

(1) In general
(2) Requisites and sufficiency of cognovit

(1) In General

At common law and under statutes declaratory of the common law, a judgment by cognovit actionem is a judgment entered on the defendant's acknowledgment and confession of the justness of plaintiff's cause of action, such confession being made after service of process and before entry of a plea.

At common law, and under statutes declaratory of the common law, in the case of a judgment by cognovit actionem, defendant after service of process, instead of entering a plea, acknowledges and confesses that plaintiff's cause of action is just and rightful;[5] and such a judgment may be entered by cognovit under a warrant of attorney to confess judgment,[6] the warrant in such case being the means by which the power to confess judgment is given the attorney, and the cognovit the instrument by which the confession is made.[7] In modern code practice, the only method of obtaining a judgment by confession is the one authorized by statute,[8] and a judgment by cognovit entered solely by authority of a warrant of attorney to confess judgment has been held to be void.[9] As discussed in the C.J.S. title Pleading § 433, also 49 C.J. p 676 notes 84–90, an answer admitting or confessing the cause of action pleaded in the complaint is authorized, and will support a judgment on the pleadings; but such judgment on the pleadings is not a "judgment by confession," except in a loose sense of the term.[10] A cognovit may be good as an admission in pais.[11] Under some statutes a cognovit provision incorporated in a bond, note, or other instrument evidencing the debt or obligation is valid and enforceable.[12]

Conditional cognovit. Entry of a valid judgment may be made dependent on the compliance with certain conditions mentioned in the cognovit,[13] such as that judgment shall not be entered until a later term,[14] although it has been held that in such a case judgment may be entered at the present term with a stay of execution until the prescribed time has elapsed.[15]

(2) Requisites and Sufficiency of Cognovit

The cognovit must sufficiently show confession of the justice of the claim and consent to the entry of judgment, must be certain as to the amount, and must be properly signed.

The cognovit must contain sufficient to show a confession of the justice of plaintiff's claim and that defendant, either expressly or impliedly, consents to the entry of judgment thereof,[16] must be certain and specific as to the amount confessed,[17] and must be signed by, or in the name of, the attorney.[18] A judgment by confession is not affected by the fact that the cognovit was prepared before the

"Narr and cognovit"

(1) The "narr and cognovit law" authorizes judgment on notes by attorney's confession that amount thereof, together with interest and costs, constitutes legal and just claim; "narr" is an abbreviation of the Latin word, "narratio," which means the complaint or petition, and "cognovit" is also Latin, meaning that defendant has confessed judgment and the justice of the claim.—Dyer v. Johnson, Tex.Civ.App., 19 S.W.2d 421, stating Illinois law, error dismissed.

(2) The only difference between "judgment on narr and cognovit" and one in suit brought by summons is that in former, summons is unnecessary because maker of note authorizes appearance and waives summons.—Schwartz v. Schwartz, 8 N.E.2d 668, 366 Ill. 247, 112 A.L.R. 325.

A "statement of confession," or "cognovit," oftentimes referred to as a "power of attorney," or simply as a "power," is the written authority of the debtor and his direction to the clerk of the district court, or justice of the peace, to enter judgment against debtor as stated therein.—Blott v. Distinction stated

"We think it clear that in this state the distinction between a judgment on cognovit actionem and what is colloquially called a 'confessed judgment' is that in the former case an action has been begun in invitum by the issue of process at the very least . . . and in the latter case, i. e., 'confession of judgment,' and subject to the statute in that regard, judgment is entered on bond and warrant without process."—Fortune Building & Loan Ass'n v. cause of action accrued, where the judgment is not entered until after accrual.[19]

The caption of a cognovit is not an essential part, and if defective may be treated as surplusage.[20]

c. By Confession Relicta Verificatione

A confession relicta verificatione occurs where a defendant withdraws or abandons a plea which has already been made in the action, and confesses the justness of the plaintiff's cause of action.

In the case of a confession relicta verificatione, defendant, after pleading and before trial, both confesses plaintiff's cause of action and withdraws or abandons his plea or other allegation, whereupon judgment is entered against him without proceeding to trial.[21] Where such a confession is properly made, it is the duty of the court to render judgment on it.[22] Where the parties appear and defendant withdraws his plea, and plaintiff proves his cause of action and a judgment is thereupon rendered in his favor, it is a judgment on proof of the cause of action made to the court and not a judgment on confession.[23]

Retraction of confession. Where such confession is made by defendant through a mistake of fact as to the contents of the pleadings he may, on discovery of his error, retract his confession at any time before it has been recorded.[24]

§ 137. —— Confession without Action

Under appropriate statutory provisions, a judgment by confession may be entered without any action or suit having been instituted against the confessor; but such practice is unknown at common law.

Under some statutes provision is made for the entry of a judgment by confession without the institution of an action or suit against the one so confessing.[25] These statutes have no application to judgments by confession made after action has been brought and process has been regularly served.[26] In the absence of such a statute, a confession of judgment cannot be entered before the commencement of an action,[27] confession of judgment without an action being unknown at common law.[28]

§ 138. Debts or Claims for Which Judgment May Be Confessed

In order to be valid, a confession of judgment must be for a debt which is justly due or to become due.

A judgment by confession cannot be entered in any case where a statute prescribes a different and exclusive form of proceeding;[29] and, where a statute prescribes the debts or claims on which a judgment by confession may be entered, in order to be valid the judgment must be based on an obligation falling within the purview of the statute.[30] The confession must be for a debt which is justly due or to become due;[31] but although the debt should be a legal one, this does not mean that the demand must be one against which the debtor could set up no defenses in an action at law brought to recover such demand.[32] Thus it is no objection to a confessed judgment that the claim for which it is given is barred by the debtor's discharge in bankruptcy,[33] and even though a part of the claim on which the judgment is confessed is founded only on a moral obligation, such as an oral assumption of indebtedness, which under the statute of frauds would not be enforceable at law, the judgment is nevertheless good.[34]

Claim barred by limitation. If the claim is an honest one, it is no objection to a confessed judgment that the claim for which it is given would be barred by the statute of limitations,[35] since, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Limitations of Actions §

24, also 37 C.J. p 721 note 15–p 722 note 38, defendant is not obliged to interpose the statute, but has the right to waive such defense.

§ 139. —— Debts Not Matured

Whether judgment may be confessed for a debt not yet matured depends on the language of the statute or constitutional provision under which such judgment is sought.

Where a statute provides that a confession of judgment may be for a debt due or to become due, judgment may be confessed on a debt or obligation which is existing but is not yet payable or not yet matured.[36] Where, however, the statutes provide that a judgment may be confessed for a debt justly due and owing, the debt must be one which is actually existing and due at the time the confession of judgment is made.[37] The same is true where a constitutional provision prohibits the confession of judgment by any document under private signature executed before the maturity of the obligation sued on.[38]

§ 140. —— Contingent Liabilities

Judgment may be confessed to secure against contingent liabilities only in jurisdictions in which judgment may be confessed for debts not yet matured.

Where judgment may be confessed for debts due or to become due, as discussed supra § 139, a judgment may be confessed for the purpose of securing plaintiff against a future contingent liability;[39] and some statutes have made express provision for such judgments.[40] Where, however, a confession can be only for an existing debt, judgment cannot be confessed to secure against contingent liabilities.[41]

§ 141. —— Future Advances

A judgment by confession to secure future advances is valid in jurisdictions in which judgment may be confessed for an obligation not yet due.

In those jurisdictions where judgment may be confessed for an obligation not yet due, discussed supra § 139, a judgment by confession may be made to secure future advances and liabilities agreed to be made to the debtor to the extent of the amount or the judgment,[42] where this arrangement forms a part of the original agreement between the parties.[43] Such a judgment cannot, as against third persons, cover new and distinct engagements subsequently entered into by the parties, and not included within the original agreement;[44] and it has been held that it will not cover advances made or responsibilities incurred, after a subsequent judgment has intervened.[45] Where the creditor gives out a statement of the amount then due, to enable the debtor to borrow from another, he is estopped to claim beyond that amount.[46]

§ 142. —— For Tort

At common law a judgment on a tort claim may be entered by cognovit after action brought; it cannot be entered without action under statute, unless expressly permitted by the statute.

A judgment by confession for a claim arising out of a tort, at common law, could be entered by cognovit after action was commenced,[47] but could not be entered on a bond and warrant of attorney, without process.[48] Unless included in the provisions of the statute, it cannot be entered under a statute which provides for confessions of judgment without action.[49]

§ 143. Who May Confess Judgment

A confession of judgment may be made only by the defendant himself or some person duly authorized to act for him in that behalf.

thorized to act for him in that behalf,[51] as by a warrant or power of attorney, as discussed infra § 152 et seq. Defendant will not be bound by an unauthorized confession of judgment made by another on his behalf,[52] unless he ratifies it.[53] It is immaterial to the validity of the judgment that defendant confessing it is an officer of the court in which it is entered; a judgment against himself may be confessed by the clerk[54] or by the judge of the court.[55]

The authority of particular representatives to confess judgment for another is treated in appropriate places in this work; thus for a discussion of confession of judgment by an agent generally see Agency § 117, by an attorney see Attorney and Client § 86, by a corporation see Corporations § 1341 b, by an executor or administrator see Executors and Administrators §§ 149, 794, by a guardian see Guardian and Ward § 182, by a married woman see Husband and Wife §§ 448, 552, by an officer or agent of a corporation see Corporations § 1067, and by a partner see the C.J.S. title Partnership § 165, also 47 C.J. p 880 note 70–p 881 note 95.

§ 144. —— Joint or Several Debtors or Defendants

One of several joint debtors may confess judgment for himself alone; but, if he attempts without authority to confess for himself and others, the confession of judgment is void as to the others although valid as to him.

A judgment by confession against joint debtors or joint defendants must be joined in or authorized by all of the debtors or defendants, and one joint debtor or joint defendant cannot confess judgment, so as to make it binding on a codebtor or codefendant who does not properly authorize or join in the confession.[56] One joint debtor or joint defendant, however, may confess judgment for himself alone,[57] provided he is not induced to do so by any improper motive, or by any intent to injure or embarrass his codefendants;[58] but his confessed judgment will remain interlocutory until the trial and determination of the issues as to the other defendants.[59] Although a confession of judgment by one only, for himself and others, is void as to the ones who do not join therein, and a joint judgment cannot be entered on it,[60] it has been held valid and enforceable as to the one making the confession.[61]

Several liability. Where two or more persons are severally liable for the same debt, they may make several confessions of judgment,[62] but, as discussed infra § 164, a joint judgment cannot be entered against them on their separate confessions.

§ 145. In Whose Favor Confessed

A judgment may be confessed in favor of any person who is the legal owner of the debt or claim in question.

A judgment may be confessed in favor of any person who is the legal owner of the debt or claim in question,[63] such as an assignee or trustee for the benefit of various creditors;[64] and may be confessed in favor of the state as creditor as well as an individual.[65]

B. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF CONFESSION GENERALLY

§ 146. In General

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, any admission of the plaintiff's claim that leaves no issue to be tried is sufficient to constitute a confession of judgment.

65. N.C.—State v. Love, 23 N.C. 264.

Unless required by statute, no particular form is necessary to a confession of judgment; any admission of the claim that leaves no issue to be tried is sufficient.[66] In order to authorize an immediate judgment thereon the confession must be absolute and unconditional;[67] but it may be made conditional, and in that case it can be enforced only on compliance with the conditions or in accordance therewith.[68] It is no objection that several different debts to the same creditor are included in the one confession[69] or that it is given to one person as trustee for numerous small creditors, all the debts being justly due.[70] It has been held to be essential that defendant confess, or authorize his attorney to confess for him, such judgment as plaintiff would be entitled to recover in the event of a successful termination of similar adverse proceedings.[71]

Good faith. A confession of judgment must be made in good faith;[72] if it is fictitious and fraudulent, and does not affect the relation of the parties, it cannot have the effect of a confession of judgment.[73]

§ 147. Compliance with Statutory Provisions Generally

Statutes providing for the confession of judgments otherwise than at common law are to be strictly construed and there must be a strict compliance with such statutes.

The subject of confession of judgments is now to a great extent regulated by statute, and where these statutes provide for the confession of judgments without action, or make regulations otherwise than according to the course of the common law, they are to be strictly construed, and a strict compliance with their provisions must be shown in order to sustain the judgment,[74] but, where there has been strict compliance with the statute, nothing further is necessary to support the judgment.[75] Thus there must be a strict compliance with a statutory provision that the confession of judgment must be signed by the party making it and by witnesses[76] or that the debtor shall appear in person and confess the judgment.[77] Where, however, the statutory provision is merely declaratory of the common law, only a substantial compliance therewith is required;[78] and where the statute provides for a proceeding in a court having general common-law jurisdiction, but does not give the details and particulars of the proceeding, these may be pursued according to the principles of the common law.[79] It has also been held that, where a trial court has jurisdiction and authority to give the relief granted, and where without the filing of an answer the parties appear in court and agree as to what the judgment should be, the judgment is not void even though there has not been a full compliance with all the statutory requirements as to the confession of judgments.[80] Under some statutes judgments in amicable actions are not statutory,[81] and the statutes relating to judgments entered by the prothonotary, discussed infra § 154 f, are inapplicable to judgments confessed in amicable actions in which plaintiff and defendant appear by counsel.[82]

§ 148. Consent or Ratification of Creditor

A confession of judgment is not binding on the plaintiff unless he consents to it or ratifies it.

In order that a confession of judgment may be binding on the plaintiff, it is essential that he, either expressly or impliedly, assent thereto;[83] if it is made without his request, knowledge, or consent, and entered at the instance of the debtor alone, it will have no validity unless the creditor ratifies or accepts it.[84] The validity of the judgment dates only from such acceptance, and therefore it will not affect the priority of other creditors who came in between the entry of the judgment and its acceptance.[85] Where plaintiff would, under no circumstances, be entitled to any judgment different from that which defendant offers to confess, which offer he rejects, it has been held that the action may be dismissed.[86]

Manner of consent or acceptance. The creditor's consent to, or acceptance of, the judgment, if not express, may be implied from the circumstances of his dealing with it,[87] as from the fact that he attempts to enforce it.[88] In the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, the creditor's consent may be presumed from the record[89] or from the fact that the judgment confessed operates to his benefit,[90] but the creditor's mere silence or failure to object on being informed of the judgment does not amount to an acceptance of it, although it is admissible as evidence tending to prove his acceptance.[91] The knowledge and consent of the creditor's attorney, in whose hands he has placed the matter, is sufficient to make it binding on the creditor.[92]

§ 149. Process, Appearance, and Pleading

The requirements as to process, appearance, and pleading in the case of a confession after action is instituted are discussed infra § 150, and in the case of a confession without action infra § 151.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 150. —— Confession after Action

A judgment of confession after action is instituted must be based on the service of process on, or an appearance by, the defendant.

It is essential to the validity of a confession of judgment after action brought that process should have been regularly served on defendant, or service accepted by him, or that an appearance should have been entered by him in person or by a duly authorized attorney for him,[93] and that there should be

Subsequent process

Where plaintiff failed within statutory time to file bill pursuant to process executed on defendant, but later filed bill and matured suit on new process subsequently issued, and returned, executed on same defend-an appearance by plaintiff, or at least his consent to the entry of judgment;[94] and although a declaration or some statement of plaintiff's claim should generally be filed, before or at the same time as the confession,[95] in some jurisdictions, where a writ is properly issued, the confession may be founded thereon and a formal declaration is not necessary.[96] It has also been held that, where defendant has agreed to the commencement of an amicable action and the confession of judgment therein, the method in which the action is commenced is immaterial.[97]

§ 151. —— Confession without Action

Process, appearance, or pleading is generally not required where a confession of judgment is made without action.

In case of a confession without action, it is not necessary that any process should be issued or served on defendant, or any appearance entered by or for him other than the appearance for the purpose of confessing the judgment,[98] but, where the statute requires defendant to appear personally in court and confess judgment, a valid judgment cannot be confessed without such appearance.[99]

As a general rule it is not essential to such a confession that a declaration or complaint should be filed,[1] and, if a declaration is filed, it is immaterial whether or not it will stand the test of technical principles.[2] On the other hand, under some statutes if the confession is made under a warrant of attorney without defendant personally appearing, a declaration,[3] which under some statutes should be duly verified,[4] must be filed.

C. UNDER WARRANT OR POWER OF ATTORNEY

§ 152. In General

Subject to statutory exceptions, a judgment by confession may generally be entered on a warrant or power of attorney.

In most jurisdictions a judgment by confession may be entered on a written authority, called a warrant or power of attorney, by which the debtor empowers an attorney to enter an appearance for him, waive process, and confess judgment against him for a designated amount,[5] and such practice is not regarded as being against public policy,[6] except in a few jurisdictions.[7] The power to confess ant, decree pro confesso taken against defendant on his failure to appear, decree will not be disturbed on bill of review for manner in which suit was instituted and prosecuted.—Watkins v. Watkins, 129 S.E. 395, 99 W.Va. 495.

judgment by warrant of attorney comes from the common law,[8] and is governed thereby except in so far as the old rules of the common law have been modified by statute and the decisions of the courts of last resort.[9]

The legislature has the power to determine what judgments may be entered on warrants or powers of attorney.[10] Thus, under some statutes, a judgment by confession may not be entered on a power of attorney in the case of certain obligations,[11] whereas under others only in the case of certain specified obligations may a judgment by confession be entered on the authority of a power of attorney.[12]

Nature of power. In its infancy such a warrant of attorney was purely a question of practice,[13] which prevailed in many, if not most, of the older states from an early day,[14] but in later times it has assumed the role of security for debt.[15]

What law governs. As a general rule the validity and effect of a power of attorney to confess judgment are governed by the law of the place where the power is given[16] although defendant is a resident of another state at the time the power is executed.[17] On the other hand, it has been held that the validity and effect of such a power are governed by the law of the place of performance[18] or the law of the jurisdiction where the judgment is

Ascertainment of sum due

The statutes pertaining to cognovit provisions of negotiable instruments disclose a legislative intent only to void provisions giving power of attorney with authority to confess judgment on such instruments for a sum of money to be ascertained in a manner other than by action of court on a hearing after proper service of process.—Ritchey v. Gerard 152 P.2d 894, 48 N.M. 452.

Validity of obligation

The cognovit feature of a mortgage note does not preclude recovery on mortgage, where mortgagee does not rely on note or cognovit feature thereof.—Peoples Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Pora, 9 N.E.2d 83, 212 Ind. 468, 111 A.L.R. 1402.

Statute held valid

A statute authorizing a judgment on a warrant of attorney only on a bond or note did not deprive a seller, entering into conditional sale contract after enactment and construction of statute, of its property without due process of law or unreasonably deprive seller of the right to contract.—Chippewa Valley Securities Co. v. Herbst, 278 N.W. 872, 227 Wis. 422.

Conditional sale contract

(1) A judgment on warrant of attorney contained in conditional sale contract was entered without authority and was void, in view of statute authorizing a judgment on a warrant of attorney only on a bond or note.—Chippewa Valley Securities Co. v. (2) Whether attachment of note to conditional sales contract takes it out of the definition of a note and the statutes providing for judgment by cognovit depends on parties' intention as manifested by entire written agreement; note providing for judgment by cognovit and separated from conditional sales contract by perforated line was held subject to judgment by cognovit where parties contemplated the note's negotiation, discount, renewal, or extension independently of conditional sales contract.—Shawano Finance Corporation v. entered.[19] If the power is valid where given, generally it will be recognized in another state,[20] although it is invalid under the laws of the latter state;[21] but if it is invalid where given it is invalid in another state.[22] Where the warrant is made in one state for use in another, the law of the latter state has been held to govern as far as the use and effect of the warrant therein are concerned,[23] except that such law cannot enlarge the authority conferred by the warrant so as to bind the grantor of the power, in his own state, to terms not contained in the warrant to which he did not consent and with knowledge of which he was not charged.[24]

A warrant of attorney must be executed according to the requirements of the law in force when the judgment is taken, and not when the power was given.[25]

§ 153. Requisites and Sufficiency of Warrant or Power

A warrant or power of attorney to confess judgment should contain a clear grant of authority and should specify the amount for which judgment is to be confessed.

A warrant of attorney to confess judgment should conform to the requirements of the statute, if any, in force at the time;[26] but, in the absence of specific statutory directions, no particular form of words is necessary, if it contains the essentials of a good power and clearly states its purpose.[27] In any event it should contain a grant of the authority, in clear and intelligible terms;[28] and, unless it is accompanied by a declaration or sworn statement or other evidence of the indebtedness, it should clearly and definitely set out or describe the nature of the liability for which the judgment is to be rendered,[29] and should either clearly state the amount for which judgment is to be confessed or state facts and figures from which the amount can be definitely ascertained,[30] and it is invalid if it authorizes a judgment for an indefinite or unliqui-

Two species of judgments

"There are at least two species of judgments that can be obtained by confession upon warrants of attorney. One is the ordinary judgment, where the obligation is to pay a specific sum determinable from the instrument, and judgment is entered for the amount so determined. Another species is a judgment for a condition other than the payment of money, or where judgment is entered for a penalty."—Rhoads v. Mitchell, Del.Super., 47 A.2d 174, 179.

dated amount[31] or if the amount due cannot be ascertained from the face of the instrument.[32]

Execution. A warrant or power of attorney to confess judgment should be in writing,[33] and must be signed by all the persons against whom the judgment is to be entered;[34] and, where it is annexed to the obligation to be confessed, both the obligation and the warrant of attorney must be signed by the same person.[35] Under some statutes it must also be attested by witnesses.[36] In the absence of a statute to the contrary,[37] the warrant need not be under seal.[38]

Time of execution. It is not necessary that the warrant of attorney should be given at the same time with the note, bond, or other evidence of debt.[39] At common law, a warrant of attorney to confess judgment may be executed before the bringing of the action in which the judgment is to be confessed,[40] but under some statutes a power of attorney to confess judgment, made before action brought, is void;[41] but such a statute does not invalidate a warrant of attorney given after the suit has commenced.[42]

Executing power as part of obligation. Under some statutes the warrant or power of attorney to confess judgment must be conferred by some proper instrument distinct from that containing the evidence of the debt or obligation for which the judgment is confessed.[43] In the absence of such a statutory restriction the warrant or power of attorney may be attached to, or incorporated in, the note, bond, or other obligation,[44] and for purposes of construction they are to be regarded as one instrument.[45] A power of attorney to confess judgment may be incorporated in, or attached to, a promissory note, the condition being the nonpayment of

Purpose
A statute invalidating contract giving power of attorney with authority to confess judgment on instrument is intended to prevent judgment from being taken without service of process and by virtue of power of attorney executed in advance, but is not intended to enable person to escape payment of honest debt.—Peoples Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Pora, 9 N.E.2d 83, 212 Ind. 468, 111 A.L.R. 1402.

Statute is penal and must be construed strictly.—Simpson v. Fuller, 51 N.E.2d 870, 114 Ind.App. 583.

N.M.—Hot Springs Nat. Bank v. Kenney, 48 P.2d 1029, 39 N.M. 428.

Negotiability not affected
Statute requiring instrument authorizing attorney to confess judgment to be distinct from instrument evidencing demand was not repealed by enactment of negotiable instruments law declaring that provision authorizing confession of judgment should not render instrument nonnegotiable, since such statutory provisions were not conflicting.—Keyes v. Peterson, 260 N.W. 518, 194 Minn. 361.

Confession incomplete without reference to note
Where instrument authorizing confession of judgment made note a part thereof by referring to "the foregoing note" and "said note" without which note the authorization had no meaning, because it did not state amount for which attorney was authorized to confess judgment, judgment entered by confession thereunder was void, since the authorization of confession was not "distinct instrument" as required by statute.—Keyes v. Peterson, 260 N.W. 518, 194 Minn. 361.

the note at maturity, the instrument being then commonly called a "judgment note."[46]

Omission or insertion of words; blanks. Where the meaning of the power can be ascertained from a consideration of the entire writing, the omission of words meant to be inserted, or the insertion of words evidently not intended, will not be permitted to defeat the intention of the parties.[47] In accordance with this principle, blanks in a warrant or power of attorney do not destroy its validity if enough remains to make it effective as a power, and if they do not render the instrument so ambiguous that its meaning cannot be determined.[48]

Filing. It is generally required, as essential to the jurisdiction of the court to enter the judgment, that the warrant of attorney shall be filed as a part of the record in the office of the clerk of the court in which the judgment is entered,[49] and no valid judgment can be entered until it is so filed.[50] It is not necessary that the original warrant be filed; the filing of a copy thereof is sufficient,[51] but a mere statement that the power was proved is not sufficient.[52] If the warrant is filed in the proper office before the perfecting of the judgment, the validity of the judgment is not affected by the fact that it is not properly placed on the file[53] or that the clerk neglects to indorse the filing on the warrant.[54]

a. In General

A warrant or power of attorney to confess judgment must be strictly construed and the authority conferred must be strictly pursued.

As a general rule a warrant or power of attorney to confess judgment is to be construed according to the rules which apply to other written contracts.[55] Such a warrant should be strictly con-

Authority to fill blanks

(1) Where a power of attorney to confess judgment contains a blank, the execution of the instrument and delivery thereof in such condition is authority to the holder to fill in the blank.—White v. Alward, 35 Ill.App. 195.

(2) In warrant of attorney to confess judgment, blank may be filled in by court, where it is clear what unintentionally omitted words were supposed to be.—William B. Rambo Building & Loan Ass'n v. Dragone, 156 A. 311, 305 Pa. 24.

(3) Delivery of an instrument with a space for the amount left blank is grant of authority to plaintiff to fill the blank with the amount due at the time when he desires to enter judgment.—International Advertising Syndicate v. Quaker Silk Mills, 8 Pa.Dist. & Co. 23, 18 Berks Co.L.J. 65.

Production of original

While there might be some question as to the validity of a judgment if it were confessed on a copy of warrant of attorney, and on demand of defendant or the court the original instrument were not produced, there can be no question as to the validity of the judgment after the original has been filed with the court.—Commonwealth v. Conflict between written and printed portions

Where a printed blank is used, written portions therein will have greater weight in interpreting the instrument than the printed, if the two portions are not harmonious.—

strued[56] against the party in whose favor it is given,[57] and the authority thereby conferred must be strictly pursued, and cannot be extended by implication or inference beyond the limits expressed in the instrument.[58] A substantial departure from the authority conferred will render the confession void,[59] but this rule has its reasonable limitations, and must not be applied with such strictness as to defeat the obvious intention of the parties and make the power inoperative.[60]

As waiver or release. As a general rule a warrant or power of attorney by its own terms either includes, or operates as, a waiver of process,[61] and authorizes a judgment to be confessed in accordance with the power without notice to the grantor.[62] Where the warrant of attorney expressly waives or releases all errors which intervene in the entering of a judgment, it operates to waive or release all errors in the warrant and in the proceedings thereunder,[63] except such as go to the lack

American Express Co. v. Pinckney, 29 Ill. 392—34 C.J. p 107 note 35.

Where wording of warrant is clear, resort may not be had to any other part of note for purpose of construing the warrant; but where warrant is subject to construction the whole instrument will be looked to in order to glean its meaning.—Irwin v. Rawling, Mo.App., 141 S.W.2d 223.

Perforated document

Where conditional sales contract and bond and warrant were printed on the same sheet of paper with a line of perforations between them to facilitate physical separation, the two instruments were separate contracts and any obligation under the contract of conditional sale to resell in order to lay the foundation of a suit for deficiency thereunder was irrelevant to the definite and unconditional obligation to pay according to the terms of the bond.—Fidelity Acceptance Corporation v. Alloway, 23 A.2d 294, 127 N.J.Law 450.

Modification agreement

Original written lease and separate instrument reducing monthly rental but providing that all other terms, etc., of lease should remain in full effect must be considered together and fact that they were separate instruments did not preclude entry of judgment by confession under power of attorney contained in original lease for rent computed under modification agreement.—Davidson v. Damages; rent

Lease provision authorizing lessor to confess judgment for damages for breach of covenants did not authorize confession of judgment for rent for balance of term payable in advance.—General Realty Co. v. Gold, 142 A. 279, 293 Pa. 260.

of jurisdiction in the court to enter the judgment[64] or lack of power under the warrant to confess the judgment;[65] and it has been held that such a stipulation in a power of attorney is not abrogated by the opening of the judgment for the purpose of allowing defendant to present a defense.[66]

b. For Whom Judgment May Be Entered

Judgment may be confessed only in favor of the person specified in the warrant, who may be the holder or assignee of the obligation the warrant was given to secure.

The warrant of attorney should name or describe with reasonable certainty the person in whose favor the judgment is to be entered,[67] and judgment can be confessed in favor only of the person named or who, from a construction of the whole instrument, it is evident it was the intention that judgment should be confessed.[68]

Where a warrant of attorney attached to a bond or note authorizes a confession of judgment in favor of the assignee or holder thereof, the warrant is regarded as security and authorizes a confession of judgment in favor of one to whom the bond or note has been transferred, and who is the holder thereof at the time judgment is confessed,[69] although the note is not negotiable;[70] and a judgment confessed in favor of one who at the time is not the holder of the note is void.[71] Where the warrant does not specify the person in whose favor judgment may be confessed, it has been held that it authorizes the confession of a judgment in favor of the assignee or other legal holder of the bond,

Agent
(1) Lease entered into by agent as lessor authorizing confession of judgment against lessee permits judgment in name of agent to use of owner of premises.—Boggs v. Levin, 146 A. 533, 297 Pa. 131.
(2) Where lease described lessor as agent and provided further that term "lessor" should include owner, and authorized owner to proceed in its own name to confess judgment, corporation not named in lease, but averring that it was true owner, was entitled to enter confession of judgment in its name.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Associated Auctioneers, 177 A. 483, 117 Pa.Super. 242.
Heirs
Where there was nothing in lease authorizing warrant of attorney to confess judgment for rent, except in favor of the lessor, lessor's heirs could not, in the name of the lessor's administrators, exercise the warrant of attorney to confess judgment, since a warrant to confess a money judgment is not a "covenant that runs with the land," because it does not directly concern or touch the land.—Hogsett v. Lutrario, 13 A.2d 902, 140 Pa.Super. 419.

Assignment for benefit of creditors
Where note authorizing confession of judgment was transferred by payee to trustee pursuant to a deed of trust for benefit of payee's creditors, trustee stood in place of payee, and legal situation of parties with regard to note was same as though payee had entered judgment by confession on note against makers.—Foland v. note, or obligation, at the time of confession;[72] but it has also been held that such a power of attorney is not negotiable, and that, when the bond or note is transferred, the power becomes invalid and inoperative.[73]

A warrant of attorney to confess judgment authorizes a confession in favor of the executor or administrator of the beneficiary of the power,[74] or of his legal representative, such as his trustee.[75]

c. Against Whom Judgment May Be Entered

Judgment may be confessed under a warrant of attorney against such persons only as the terms of the warrant authorize.

Judgment may be confessed, under a warrant of attorney, against such persons only as the terms of the warrant authorize[76] and who join in the execution of the warrant.[77] A power of attorney to confess judgment is not available against one who signs it, or the obligation secured, not as maker, but only in the character of a surety[78] or guarantor,[79] unless the terms of the warrant so provide.[80]

In case of joint debtors, who jointly execute the power of attorney, a judgment may be confessed thereon only against all the makers,[81] and not

Proof of authority

Power to confess judgment for voluntary association or assignees did not authorize recovery of judgment by individuals describing themselves as "trustees" of voluntary association, but not establishing right to exercise power.—Wells v. George W. Durst Chevrolet Co., 173 N.E. 92, 341 Ill. 108.

34 C.J. p 109 note 61.

Lessee's successor or assignee

(1) Assignee's agreement to perform lease was held not to authorize lessor to enter judgment by confession against assignee under warrant in original lease.—Ansley v. George Coal Mining Company, 88 Pa.Super. 40.

(2) Original lessee was a proper party against whom judgment by confession should have been entered in amicable action of ejectment pursuant to warrant of attorney contained in written lease even though lessee's assignee, who was not a party to lease and had signed no warrant of attorney, was in actual physical possession of the premises, regardless of whether such assignee of lease be considered an assignee or subtenant.—Kait v. Execution through agent

Under statute, the prothonotary of a court of record may look beyond the instrument in which judgment is confessed and enter judgment against the person or persons who executed the instrument, and that does not mean that he may enter judgment only against persons who signed the instrument, but partners and principals whose agents have signed for them are included.—Jamestown Banking Co. v. Conneaut Lake Dock & Dredge Co., 14 A.2d 325, 339 Pa. 26.

Execution by corporation official

(1) A warrant of attorney in a note signed by corporation and by its president in his official capacity only, which authorized confession of judgment on note "against the undersigned," did not apply to president so as to make him individually liable, although his name appeared on back of note.—Dover Motors Corporation v. North & South Motor Lines, 198 A. 592, 8 W.W.Harr., Del., 467.

(2) A judgment by confession on corporate note which was signed on face thereof by corporation's president and was indorsed by the president personally, was not void because power of attorney did not authorize a confession of judgment against president under his contract of guaranty, where note contained warrant of attorney expressly authorizing entry of judgment against "makers, endorsers and guarantors," and by special contract of indorsement president not only became "a party to" but also adopted, agreed to accept, guaranteed, and assumed all terms, conditions and waivers "contained in the note on the reverse side hereof."—National Builders Bank of Chicago v. Joint maker or indorser

A warrant of attorney for confession of judgment contained in nonnegotiable note was binding on person whose name was signed on the back in blank, since status of such person was that of a joint maker notwithstanding position of signature.—Iglehart v. Farmers Nat. Bank of Annapolis, Md., 197 A. 133, 117 A.L.R. 667, affirmed 200 A. 833, 117 A.L.R. 672.

80. Md.—Johnson v. Phillips, 122 A. 7, 143 Md. 16.

Where indorser assented to all terms and conditions of note, provision in note for confession of judgment was applicable to both maker and indorser.—Rhoads v. National Bank of Cockeysville, 190 A. 750, 172 Md. 123.

81. Ill.—Duggan v. Kupitz, 22 N.E. 2d 392, 301 Ill.App. 230—Dulsky v. Lerner, 223 Ill.App. 228.

Judgment on a partnership note signed in the firm name may properly be confessed against the firm and also against the members of the firm individually.—Brumbaugh v. Brumbaugh, 16 Pa.Dist. & Co. 281.

Waiver

Parties executing note, authorizing entry of judgment thereon after default, in consideration of loan to corporation by payee, who joined in execution thereof, waived objection to being sued jointly with payee, who was also plaintiff.—Koenig v. Curran's Restaurant & Baking Co., 159 A. 553, 306 Pa. 345.

against one alone;[82] and in case of the death of one of them judgment cannot be confessed against the survivors.[83] Where the obligation and warrant of attorney are joint and several, a joint judgment may be confessed against all the makers[84] or the survivors of them,[85] or a several judgment may be confessed against each maker.[86] A joint judgment cannot be confessed or entered on separate warrants.[87]

d. Place of Exercising Power

Unless restricted by the terms of the warrant, the authority to confess judgment may be exercised in a county or state other than that in which it is executed.

The power granted in a power of attorney to confess judgment may be exercised in a county or state other than that in which it is executed, where it is not restricted in this respect,[88] especially where it authorizes judgment thereon "in any court of record;"[89] but, where it is apparent from the face of the warrant that it is to be used only in a certain state, it cannot be used in another state.[90]

e. Time and Conditions for Exercising Power

A warrant or power of attorney to confess judgment can be exercised only at the time and on the occurrence of the conditions specified.

A judgment by confession under a warrant of attorney can be taken or entered only at such time as is authorized by the terms of the warrant,[91] and on the occurrence of the conditions specified in the warrant, such as defendant's default on the obligation the warrant was given to secure.[92] Where the warrant is without limit of time it has been

After banking hours

Where the power is to confess judgment immediately on default, on a note payable at a certain bank on a certain day, judgment may be entered after banking hours on the held that there is no necessity to await the maturity of the obligation before the entry of judgment,[93] although execution cannot issue until there has been a default in payment,[94] especially where the power contains a provision to that effect;[95] but it has also been held that judgment cannot be confessed under such a power before the maturity of the obligation.[96] If the warrant authorizes a confession "at any term" of court, judgment may be entered at the present term.[97] It has been held that power to confess judgment on a debt or claim not yet due must be given in clear and precise terms,[98] but there is also authority holding that judgment may be entered on a judgment note prior to maturity unless there is a restrictive provision.[99]

In many jurisdictions it has been held that a judgment cannot be confessed on a warrant of attorney executed more than a specified time before, unless an affidavit is filed showing that the maker is alive and that some portion of the debt is still due, and a rule of court, or order of a judge in vacation, is obtained granting leave to enter judgment;[1] and in some jurisdictions, after twenty years without judgment being entered, it will be presumed that the warrant of attorney has been revoked;[2] but it has been held that this rule does not apply where the power is coupled with an interest and supported by a consideration, and is necessary to effectuate the security to which it is attached.[3] Moreover, the rule referred to does not go to the question of the power but to the regularity of the execution of it;[4] it is a rule of presumption which, like other presumptions, may be rebutted.[5] day named.—Osborn v. Rogers, 20 N. E. 365, 112 N.Y. 573.

Place for demand

A lease provision authorizing the confession of a judgment in ejectment for default in payment of rent is available, where the lease does not provide a place at which the rent is payable, only if the landlord makes demand for the precise rent due, on the very day on which it becomes due, and on the most notorious place in the land.—Shapiro v. Malarkey, 122 A. 341, 278 Pa. 78, 29 A.L.R. 1358.

Failure of purchasers of land to pay taxes was held not to authorize confession of judgment, as default in payment of principal or interest.—Hurley v. Henton, 142 A. 271, 293 Pa. 289.

Demand note

Demand note containing warrant of attorney to confess judgment, stipulating that judgment should not be entered except in default of payment, authorized entry of judgment only after demand followed by default in payment and on averment of such demand and default, but demand note which did not require that judgment be entered only after default in payment of note could be entered in judgment before default, since entry of judgment is demand.—P. Minnig Co. v. Carter, 173 A. 726, 113 Pa.Super. 231.

Default by lessee

Where lessees, under a lease providing that in case the property became subject to levy the whole rent should be payable, delivered automobile to lessor for repairs, and while in lessor's possession it was seized in replevin by third persons claiming right to possession paramount to the lessor, and assignee of the lease obtained possession of the automobile and entered judgment against defendants by confession, alleging the seizure in replevin as default under the lease, the assignee's right to enter judgment must be founded on a default by lessee, and not on acts or default by lessor, and, the lessee not being in default, assignee cannot confess judgment against him.—Ferris Motors Corporation v. Lebegern, 120 A. 894, 276 Pa. 395.

Separate contracts

Where it appeared that conditional sales contract covering automobile was assigned to obligee of bond and warrant, although the automobile was repossessed by the assignee, apparently at the instance of the buyer, and there was nothing to show that the automobile had been resold, the assignee could confess judgment on the bond and warrant in view of the fact that the two instruments were separate contracts.—Fidelity Acceptance Corporation v. In vacation. A warrant for the confession of judgment "as of any term," does not authorize judgment to be entered up in vacation;[6] and it has been held that a warrant to confess judgment in any court of record does not authorize a confession of judgment before a clerk in vacation,[7] but if the warrant is indefinite as to the time, or does not refer to the terms of the court, the judgment may be confessed in vacation as well as in term time.[8]

f. Who May Exercise Power

A warrant or power of attorney to confess judgment can generally be exercised only by the person authorized in the warrant.

The authority of a person confessing a judgment for another must appear on the record;[9] and a warrant of attorney to confess judgment should regularly designate, either by name or description, the person who is authorized to make the confession of judgment,[10] and only the person so designated or described can do so.[11] Under a statute so providing, however, a prothonotary may enter a judgment by confession on the instrument containing the warrant without the necessity of an attorney appearing for defendant,[12] but such a statute does not prevent a judgment being confessed in the usual way by the person empowered under the warrant.[13] The person designated as attorney in the power of attorney need not be the person to whom the claim or obligation confessed runs,[14] nor is it necessary that he should be an attorney at law,[15] nor is it necessary that a particular attorney be named or described; the warrant may run to "any attorney" of a particular court or to "any attorney of any court of record,"[16] or to any attorney selected by the creditor[17] or to any prothonotary or clerk;[18] and it has been held that in such a case defendant has no standing to be first heard before entry of judgment.[19] Where the power runs to any attorney, it may be exercised by two persons, acting jointly or as partners, both being attorneys of the court,[20] or by the payee of the note, being an attorney, in favor of the holder to whom he has transferred it.[21]

g. Debt or Claim for Which Judgment May Be Confessed

Judgment may be confessed only for the debt, liability, or claim authorized by the warrant or power of attorney.

The judgment may be confessed only for the debt, liability, or claim set forth or described in the warrant or accompanying obligation;[22] and for such amount only, and not for any greater or smaller amount than that specified in the warrant or in the note or other obligation which it secures;[23] but, where a judgment entered under a power of attorney is erroneously confessed for an excessive amount, it is void only as to the excess, and not in toto,[24] unless such excess is the result of fraud.[25] A judgment entered on a bond and warrant of attorney is not void, but voidable only, where the warrant authorizes a confession of judgment for the sum mentioned in the condition of the bond and the judgment is entered for the amount of the penalty,[26] or where the warrant is general, and judgment is entered for a specified sum, without referring to the bond,[27] or where the warrant authorizes judgment for the amount of the penalty, and judgment is entered for the amount of the real debt;[28] and if in such case the record shows on its face the amount of the penalty, and the amount owing is not denied, and there is no other defense, the court will permit the record to be amended so as to conform to the proper practice.[29]

Where the warrant authorizes the confession of judgment for "such amount as may be found due" on the obligation secured, judgment may be entered for the amount actually due;[30] but the power of the attorney is not complete until the amount due has been adjusted.[31] Where the provisions of the power are severable, and judgment only for an ascertained amount is confessed, such judgment is not invalid for the reason that the power of attorney provides also for the confession of judgment for an unliquidated amount.[32]

Interest and costs. Where the warrant authorizes it, the judgment may include interest[33] and costs.[34]

Attorney's fees. It is generally held that a warrant of attorney to confess judgment may contain a stipulation for the payment of attorney's fees,[35] and a judgment entered on such warrant not only may, but should, include proper attorney's fees,[36] except where the fees have not been earned.[37] A stipulation in the warrant for such a fee rests on a valid consideration and is not fraudulent as to other creditors, and the amount specified should be allowed,[38] unless it is clearly excessive or unreasonable, in which case the judgment is voidable as against other creditors, at least to the extent of such fee.[39] If the amount is not fixed, but the stipulation is for a "reasonable attorney's fee," it is for the court to determine what is a reasonable fee under the circumstances;[40] and hence if the attorney fixes the amount of his fee and confesses judgment for the whole amount, without the intervention of the court, the judgment is void.[41] It has been held that the court will allow only a reasonable fee, even though there is a stipulation for a greater amount.[42]

§ 155. Second Confession under Same Power

A warrant or power of attorney to confess judgment is generally exhausted by its exercise, and a second judgment cannot be entered by virtue of the same power.

As a general rule a power of attorney to confess judgment is exhausted by one valid confession, and a second judgment cannot be entered by virtue of the same power.[43] Where a judgment by confession is open or vacated in order to permit defendant to defend the claim on the merits, it has been held that plaintiff cannot proceed under the warrant of attorney to confess judgment.[44] Where the first judgment is vacated or reversed for error, it has been held that the attorney may, under the same power, confess a correct judgment, his power not being exhausted by the first act;[45] but there is also authority to the contrary,[46] it being held that, for errors in the entry of the first judgment or for the correction of clerical mistakes, application should be made to the court to correct such judgment so as to make it conform to the facts, and not to enter a new judgment.[47] It has also been held that, where a judgment by confession is entered in one county, a second judgment on the same warrant in another county is not absolutely void, but the person entering the second judgment will be answerable for the consequences.[48]

§ 156. Revocation and Defeasance

A warrant of attorney to confess judgment is revocable at the will of the grantor, except where it is supported by a valuable consideration or is coupled with an interest in the subject matter. Such a warrant may be revoked by the death of the grantor, and it is generally held that it cannot be exercised after the debt is barred by limitations.

A power of attorney to confess judgment, like other powers of attorney, is revocable at the will of the grantor,[49] except where it is supported by a valuable consideration,[50] or is coupled with an interest in the subject matter,[51] or is given as a security or to render a security effectual.[52] Such a warrant, however, is terminated by the payment or extinguishment of the debt intended to be secured.[53]

Claim barred by limitations. Although, as discussed supra § 138, defendant himself may confess judgment on a claim which has been barred by the statute of limitations, it has generally been held that a power of attorney to confess judgment cannot be exercised after the debt or claim is thus barred;[54] but there is also authority to the contrary.[55]

Effect of alteration. Where a power of attorney is materially altered while in the hands of the payee, without any explanation thereof, the alteration will be presumed to have been made with the consent of the holder, and will render the power void;[56] but the mere filling of blanks which apparently were intended to be filled is not such an alteration as will invalidate the warrant.[57]

Death of parties. As a general rule, a judgment by confession cannot be entered on a warrant of attorney, after the death of the grantor.[58] This rule, however, does not apply where the judgment entered on such warrant can be made good by relation,[59] as where the grantor dies during a vacation; at common law a judgment may be entered against him during the same vacation as of the preceding term,[60] or, if he dies during the term, it may be entered as of the term in which he dies.[61]

Insanity or incompetency of the grantor does not revoke a warrant or power to confess judgment.[62]

§ 157. Confession under Void or Lost Warrant

A judgment entered on a void warrant or power of attorney to confess judgment is void.

A judgment by confession must be authorized by the warrant on which it is based.[63] A judgment is a nullity which is confessed under a power of attorney which is void or does not conform to mandatory statutory requirements,[64] as where the judgment is confessed on a note and warrant of attorney which have been forged[65] or fraudulently obtained.[66] However, it has also been held that the judgment is not void although the letter of attorney is void.[67]

Confession on lost warrant. A judgment may be entered on a note and warrant of attorney duly executed, but which has been lost or stolen.[68]

D. STATEMENT OF INDEBTEDNESS

§ 158. Nature and Necessity

Under statutes so providing, a person confessing judgment, without action, is required to file a written statement designating the amount for which the judgment is to be entered, and stating concisely the facts out of which the indebtedness arose, and authorizing entry of judgment therefor.

Under statutes so providing, a person confessing a judgment, without action, is required to file a written statement[69] signed and verified, as discussed infra § 159, designating the amount for which the judgment is to be entered, and stating concisely the facts out of which the indebtedness arose,[70] and authorizing the entry of judgment therefor.[71] Such statutes have been held to apply, however, only in case of a confession of judgment without action; and they are not applicable where a suit has been begun, process served or waived and a declaration filed, and defendant then confesses judgment.[72]

§ 159. Requisites and Sufficiency

a. In general
b. Degree of certainty in general
c. Allegation of amount of debt
d. Allegation that debt is "justly due"
e. Signature
f. Verification
g. Amendment of defective statement
h. Particular applications of rules

a. In General

The statement of indebtedness required to accompany a confession of judgment is sufficient if it fairly and substantially complies with the statutory requirements therefor.

Generally speaking, the statement of indebtedness required by statute in many jurisdictions to accompany a confession of judgment, as discussed supra § 158, is sufficient if it fairly and substantially complies with the statutory requirements therefor.[73] Technical accuracy in the description of the liability or cause of action is not required.[74] A statement is sufficient if it sets out the facts out of which the debt for which judgment is confessed arose;[75] and, if it is otherwise sufficiently regular and specific, it is not invalid merely because the time when the debt arose is not definitely stated,[76] or is omitted entirely.[77] A statement, however, which does not allege the fact of indebtedness, either directly or by necessary implication, will not support a judgment by confession.[78]

Referring to schedule. The statement may refer for particulars to a schedule annexed, but in that case the schedule must contain all the necessary facts.[79] A failure to annex the schedule referred to does not invalidate the judgment where the statement is sufficient without the schedule.[80]

Partial insufficiency. A statement will not be held insufficient in toto merely because a severable part of it is insufficient.[81]

b. Degree of Certainty in General

The statement of indebtedness required to support a confession of judgment should be so precise, in stating the debt or the facts out of which the debt arose, as to apprise all persons interested of the nature and consideration of the debt and enable them to inquire into the transaction, but it need not be as precise as a bill of particulars.

The statement of indebtedness required to support a confession of judgment should be so precise and particular, in stating the debt or the facts out of which the debt arose, as to apprise all persons interested of the nature and consideration of the debt,[82] and give assurance that the consideration is fair and honest,[83] the degree of particularity required depending, to a large extent, on the circumstances of each particular case.[84] It is not required that the statement should set forth sufficient of the transaction out of which the indebtedness arose to enable other creditors to form an opinion from the facts stated as to the integrity of the debt, or in confessing the judgment;[85] but it is sufficient if it states enough of the facts to identify the transaction and enable creditors and others interested to inquire into the transaction and investigate the bona fides of the judgment.[86] It has been variously stated that the statement is sufficient if it states the transaction creating the indebtedness concisely, and in terms which will make known to the ordinary understanding the manner in which the indebtedness arose;[87] or if it indicates the facts out of which the indebtedness arose, with reasonable certainty,[88] or with certainty to a common intent;[89] or if it complies with the requirement of a statement of facts in a complaint,[90] or so fixes the consideration of the judgment as to prevent the parties from shifting it;[91] and that a statement as general as the common counts in a declaration is not sufficient;[92] but that a statement as precise as a bill of particulars is not required.[93] It has been said that the statement of facts should be so definite that affiant would be exposed to punishment for perjury in case of any misstatement.[94]

c. Allegation of Amount of Debt

The statement must set forth explicitly the amount of the debt for which judgment is confessed, indicating how much, if any, is due for interest.

The statement must set forth explicitly the amount of the debt for which the judgment is confessed,[95] indicating how much, if any, is due for interest.[96] It has been held, however, that it need not set out in precise terms that the indebtedness was for the precise sum for which the judgment is confessed, where such fact is made to appear by the statement;[97] and a mere discrepancy in an item, which is the result of a clerical error, does not render the statement invalid.[98]

d. Allegation That Debt Is "Justly Due"

Under statutes so providing, the statement must show that the sum confessed is justly due, or to become due.

Under some statutes, the statement, in addition to setting forth the facts on which the indebtedness arose, must also show that the sum confessed is justly due, or to become due.[99] It has been held, however, that this does not require the confession to state in terms that the sum for which the judgment is confessed is justly due or to become due, if such fact appears from the other facts set forth;[1] and, where the statement sets forth facts showing a just debt and the amount thereof, it need not in terms negative that it has been paid or otherwise discharged.[2] It has been held that no statement need be made that the controversy is real and the proceedings are in good faith.[3]

e. Signature

Generally, the statement on which a judgment by confession is entered must be signed by the debtor in person.

It is generally required that the statement on which a judgment by confession is entered must be signed by the debtor or defendant in person,[4] and a signature by his attorney is not sufficient.[5] Signing the affidavit verifying the statement is, however, a sufficient signing of the statement itself, especially if they are on the same page or sheet.[6] Where the confession of judgment is against two or more persons, the statement must be signed by each of the persons against whom it authorizes the entry of judgment.[7]

f. Verification

Generally, the person making the statement of indebtedness must swear positively to the truth of the facts stated as far as they are within his own knowledge.

It is usually required by statute that the statement of indebtedness be sworn to by the party making it,[8] and such requirement has been held to be jurisdictional and mandatory.[9] He must swear, not merely that he believes the statement to be true, but positively to the truth of the facts as far as they are within his own knowledge.[10] This affidavit may be made before any duly qualified officer,[11] such as a notary public;[12] and may be made in a county other than that in which the judgment is rendered on the confession.[13] The jurat of the officer taking the affidavit should be in due form,[14] but a formal defect therein will not so far invalidate the judgment as to lay it open to collateral attack.[15] As between the parties, a confession of judgment is not avoided by the want of a seal to the notary's certificate to the affidavit.[16] Such a verification cannot be made by plaintiff's attorney under a power of attorney to confess judgment.[17]

Amendment. An unverified statement for judgment by confession or a defective verification of such statement is amendable.[18]

g. Amendment of Defective Statement

The court may, in its discretion, allow a defective statement of indebtedness to be amended on such terms as appear just.

The court may, in its discretion, allow a defective statement of indebtedness to be amended on such terms as appear just,[19] but, as a general rule, such amendment will not be allowed where it will affect the rights of subsequent judgment creditors which may have attached in the meantime,[20] especially where they have begun proceedings to avoid the judgment by confession.[21] It has been held, however, that such amendment may be allowed as against subsequent judgment creditors who have not sought to vacate the judgment.[22]

h. Particular Applications of Rules

The general rules governing the requisites and sufficiency of the statement of indebtedness required to accompany a confession of judgment have been applied to various types of indebtedness.

For loans and advances. A statement which sets forth facts showing that the indebtedness accrued for "borrowed money," or for "money loaned" or "advanced" to the debtor, sufficiently states the facts out of which the indebtedness arose,[24] provided there is no uncertainty as to the amount due.[25] It has generally been held sufficient to allege that the money was loaned or advanced to defendant within a certain year or years, or at divers times after a specified day,[26] or from time to time,[27] or on or about a day named.[28] A statement has been held insufficient which does not state the aggregate amount of the loans, the date or how much of the amount is for interest, and how much is for principal, and does not give any data from which the amounts of the principal and interest may be ascertained.[29]

For goods sold and delivered. In some jurisdictions a statement for a confession of judgment on an account of goods sold need not contain a minute description of the articles sold, but is sufficient if it is declared to be for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered.[30] In other jurisdictions, however, the statement is required to describe the kind, quantity, and price of the goods sold and delivered.[31] It is not necessary that the statement shall allege, in terms, that the goods were purchased by defendant from plaintiff; it is sufficient if the words used plainly import that fact.[32] The statement need not describe the exact time of the sale or sales; it is sufficient if it contains merely an approximate description of the period at or within which the sales took place,[33] such as during a certain month,[34] or since a certain day,[35] or during a certain year,[36] or within a certain number of years.[37]

On bills and notes. A statement in a confession of judgment which sets forth as the basis of the judgment merely the execution of a bill or note by defendant to plaintiff is not sufficient;[38] it should describe the consideration for the bill or note or should set forth the facts out of which the indebtedness arose for which it was given.[39] Thus the statement should set out the amount for which the note was given,[40] and, where it was given for "goods sold and delivered," or for "goods, wares, and merchandise," it should set out details as to the date, amount, and subject of the sale or sales.[41] It is not sufficient to state that the note was given

23. Balance of account

(1) Where there have been numerous dealings between the parties, the statement will be sufficient if it sets forth an adjustment of accounts, with exact particulars of the balance found due and defendant's agreement or liability to pay it.—Critten v. Vredenburgh, 45 N.E. 952, 151 N.Y. 536—34 C.J. p 115 note 76.

(2) It has been held, however, that the statement should allege any payments made and how such balance was ascertained.

N.C.—Farmers' Bank of Clayton v. McCullers, 160 S.E. 494, 201 N.C. 440.

Contingent liability

(1) Where the confession is to secure a contingent liability, the statement must set out concisely the facts constituting the liability.—Farmers' Bank of Clayton v. McCullers, supra—34 C.J. p 115 note 74.

(2) It must also show that the sum confessed does not exceed the liability.—Farmers' Bank of Clayton v. McCullers, supra—34 C.J. p 115 note 75.

Statements held sufficient

(1) Generally.—Keller v. Greenstone, 2 N.Y.S.2d 977, 253 App.Div. 573.

(2) A statement is sufficient which sets forth that the judgment is confessed to secure plaintiff for a debt due or to become due on his indorsement, as the surety of defendant and for his benefit, of a certain note or notes fully described in all essential particulars.—Dow v. Platner, 16 N.Y. 562—34 C.J. p 117 note 17.

for a balance due on a settlement of accounts,[42] unless the nature of the dealing out of which the account arose is described.[43] It is not necessary, however, that the statement should give all the circumstances relating to the debt or should exclude all possible circumstances which may affect the integrity of the debt.[44]

It is sufficient to state that the note was given for "money loaned" to defendant, or "money borrowed" by him, if the amount and time of the loan are given, and the sum is alleged to be justly due;[45] the terms of the loan are not required to be stated.[46] Indeed, it has been held that failure to state the time of the loan does not impair the sufficiency of the statement.[47] It is presumed that the loan was made to one person only, and it is not necessary for the statement to negative the making of the loan to more than one person.[48] It is also presumed that only one sum was loaned, and that it is due.[49]

E. PROCEDURE IN OBTAINING OR ENTERING JUDGMENT

§ 160. In General

Generally speaking, a judgment by confession may be entered only in conformity with the terms of the cognovit, and with valid statutes and rules of practice governing the manner, method, and conditions of entry.

Generally speaking, a judgment by confession may be entered only in conformity with the terms of the cognovit,[50] and with valid statutes[51] and rules of practice[52] governing the manner, method, and conditions of entry. In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, such judgment may be entered without the intervention of a jury,[53] or the direct adjudication of the court or order of a judge.[54] It may be entered without a declaration,[55] or præcipe,[56] or on the præcipe of plaintiff's attorney.[57] Indeed, it may be entered on the mere oral request of plaintiff or of anyone acting for him.[58] Under statutes so providing, judgment cannot be entered without a certificate signed by the judgment creditor, or his duly authorized attorney or agent, setting forth the precise address of the creditor;[59] or without filing in the county clerk's office a writ-

§ 161. Jurisdiction and Authority

a. In general
b. Authority of nonjudicial officers

a. In General

It is essential to the validity of a judgment by confession that the court have jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the parties, the court which has jurisdiction in a particular case being dependent on local practice or statutes.

Although, as discussed supra § 160, judgment by confession may be entered without the direct adjudication of the court or the order of a judge, the judgment when entered is the judicial act of the court, as discussed infra § 168, and it is essential to the validity of such judgment that the court have jurisdiction of the subject matter[62] and of the parties,[63] and a judgment entered in a court which does not have jurisdiction of the subject matter,[64] or of the parties,[65] is void. A valid confession of judgment,[66] or warrant of attorney authorizing an appearance for the purpose of confessing judgment and an appearance thereunder,[67] is sufficient, however, to give the court jurisdiction of the person of defendant.

The court which has jurisdiction in a particular case depends on the local practice or statutes.[68] In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, the entry of a judgment by confession has been held to be within the jurisdiction of courts of general jurisdiction.[69] Under some statutes, a judgment by confession may be rendered only in a court which has jurisdiction in the county or district where defendant resides,[70] or where the obligation was executed,[71] and, under a statute so providing, a judgment entered by any court in any other county or district has no force or validity.[72] It has been held,

Mandatory or directory

Placing on record with judgment address of creditor is mandatory, while manner of its appearance is directory.—Delbert v. Rhodes, 140 A. 515, 517, 291 Pa. 550—Silverstein v. Cohen, 12 Pa.Dist. & Co. 218, 21 North.Co. 377—C. Trevor Dunham, Inc. v. Miller, 10 Pa.Dist. & Co. 118, 23 Sch.Leg.Rec. 167.

The prothonotary or his deputy may be the agent of the judgment creditor for the purpose of certifying the latter's address, and it will be assumed that he signed the certificate as the creditor's agent.—Weisbrod & Hess Brewing Co. v. Braverman, 149 A. 198, 299 Pa. 173.

Sufficiency of address

(1) Information sufficiently definite to enable taxing authorities to locate taxable person is substantial compliance with such statute.—New Amsterdam Building & Loan Ass'n v. Moyerman, 95 Pa.Super. 47.

(2) It is not necessary to give the street address.—Weisbrod & Hess Brewing Co. v. Braverman, 149 A. 198, 299 Pa. 173—New Amsterdam Building & Loan Ass'n v. Moyerman, supra—Beltonen v. Gruca & Cozel, 94 Pa.Super. 32.

(3) The designation of ward meets requirements of statute.—Beltonen v. Gruca & Cozel, supra.

72. Ill.—Rixmann v. Witwer, App.,

however, that such statutes,[73] and similar statutes not in terms limited to judgments by confession,[74] do not limit the jurisdiction of courts of general jurisdiction over the subject matter of judgments by confession, but merely provide the method by which the court may obtain jurisdiction over the person and specify the venue in which a defendant may be sued, and objections founded thereon may be waived,[75] if not raised at the earliest possible moment.[76] Where the judgment is confessed in a court of limited or inferior jurisdiction, its jurisdiction must appear on the face of the proceedings, and the record must show that there has been a compliance with all statutory requirements.[77]

The consent of parties cannot confer jurisdiction over the subject matter,[78] but, where the subject matter is within the jurisdiction of the court, a judgment entered on confession without excepting to the jurisdiction of the person has been held to be valid.[79]

b. Authority of Nonjudicial Officers

Under some statutes, the prothonotary, register, or clerk of the court may enter judgment by confession, on the filing in his office of the necessary papers, without any action by the judge, but in so doing he acts merely in a ministerial capacity and must follow closely the forms provided by law for the exercise of the power conferred on him.

Under some statutes, the prothonotary, register, or clerk of the court may enter a judgment by confession, on the filing in his office of the necessary papers, without any action by the judge,[80] and, as discussed supra § 154 f, without the agency of an attorney. The clerk's act in entering the judgment is not judicial, but merely ministerial,[81] and, when he is presented with what purport to be the necessary papers, it has been held that he cannot question their validity or sufficiency,[82] but must enter judgment thereon.[83] He must follow closely the forms provided by law for the exercise of the power conferred on him;[84] and any directions of the statute as to the conditions on which he may enter the judgment must be strictly observed.[85] His power may be exercised only where the confession is complete and unconditional.[86] In entering judgment he must follow the papers filed,[87] and cannot insert any stipulation in the judgment which is not authorized by the warrant or confession.[88]

For or against himself. Where a clerk of court is empowered to take and enter confessed judgments, he may, in the absence of fraud, enter such a judgment in his own favor[89] or against himself, as discussed supra § 143.

§ 162. Necessity and Sufficiency of Proof

a. In general
b. Proof of authority

a. In General

As a general rule, a confession of judgment dispenses with the necessity of proving the plaintiff's cause of action, except to the extent that by statute he is required to furnish proof of certain facts or to the extent that the right to enter judgment depends on a condition or contingency, the occurrence of which is not disclosed by the papers.

As a general rule, a confession of judgment dispenses with the necessity of proving plaintiff's cause of action,[92] except to the extent that the right to enter judgment depends on a condition or contingency, the occurrence of which is not disclosed by the papers, in which case the occurrence of such condition or contingency must be averred and shown by affidavit or other legal proof, before the judgment may be entered.[93] An affidavit, unless specially required by statute, is not necessary if other legal proof is produced.[94] Where required by statute, however, a judgment by confession must be supported by an affidavit containing all facts required by the statute to be embodied therein.[95] Thus, under a statute so providing, a judgment by confession must be supported by an affidavit stating the amount due or to become due,[96] or the true consideration of the bond or other obligation on which the judgment is confessed,[97] or a sufficient cause of action which may be the subject of a judgment by confession.[98]

b. Proof of Authority

Under some statutes and rules of practice, where a confession of judgment is made under a power of attorney, proof of due execution of the power is necessary before entry of judgment, and proof thereof by affidavit is generally sufficient.

Under some statutes and rules of practice, where the confession is made under a power of attorney, it is necessary that proof shall be made of the due execution of the warrant or power before the judgment by confession is entered,[99] at least where the judgment is entered in vacation by the clerk of the court.[1] As a general rule, an affidavit showing the execution of a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, filed with the warrant, is sufficient proof of its execution.[2] It has been held that, where the record recites that the execution of the power was duly proved, this will be sufficient on error brought, although no affidavit was filed.[3]

Record. It has been held that the fact that the execution of the power was properly proved before the confession of the judgment must appear on the record,[4] at least when it is confessed in vacation before the clerk,[5] and evidence aliunde the record is inadmissible to prove a valid affidavit.[6] Other authorities, however, have held that the judgment is sufficient if it recites the power, without reciting its contents or that it was proved.[7]

§ 163. —— Affidavit as to Bona Fides of Confession

Under statutes so providing, the warrant of attorney or statement of indebtedness must be accompanied by an affidavit that the debt is "justly due and owing" or "justly due or to become due" and that the judgment is not confessed for the purpose of defrauding the debtor's creditors, but it is not necessary that the affidavit be in the precise form used in the statute, substantial compliance being sufficient.

To evidence the good faith of the transaction and prevent fraud, it is commonly required by statute that the warrant of attorney or statement of indebtedness shall be accompanied by an affidavit that the debt is "justly due and owing" or "justly due or to become due," and that the judgment is not confessed for the purpose of defrauding the debtor's creditors.[8] Under some of these statutes, plaintiff, that is, the party taking the judgment by confession,[9] or his attorney or agent,[10] must make such affidavit. Under other statutes, defendant or debtor, that is, the party confessing, must make the affidavit.[11] It has been held, however, that such an affidavit, by plaintiff, is not necessary where defendant appears under process and files an answer admitting the debt and consenting to the judgment.[12]

Sufficiency It is not essential that the required affidavit of bona fides, whether made by plaintiff or by defendant, should be in the precise form of words used in the statute; it is sufficient if it substantially complies with the statutory requirement.[13] Where a complaint is filed fully describing the cause of action, it is not necessary that the affidavit should describe it;[14] nor is it necessary to state the amount due, in the affidavit, where the complaint states such amount and affiant swears that the facts alleged in the complaint are true to his knowledge.[15] The affidavit need not deny in specific terms that the debt has been paid, released, barred, or discharged.[16]

§ 164. Nature, Form, and Requisites of Judgment in General

A judgment rendered on the confession of a debtor, except in so far as its form and requisites are governed by special statutory requirements, need not be in any special form, but it should follow closely the cognovit or confession.

A judgment rendered on the confession of a debtor or defendant, except in so far as its form and requisites are governed by special statutory requirements,[17] need not be in any special form, as its sufficiency must be tested by its substance rather than by its form.[18] It should, however, follow closely the cognovit or confession,[19] should express the particular debt or obligation for which it is given,[20] and should include any special conditions or stipulations contained therein,[21] except such as constitute no part of the judgment.[22] The mere filing or recording of a statement or confession of judgment in the clerk's office is not a "judgment,"[23] especially where the filing is done at a time when by law such office is not open for the transaction of business.[24]

Surplusage. The presence in the judgment of merely superfluous provisions or directions, or of matters which follow as the legal consequence of the judgment whether or not they are incorporated in it, may generally be disregarded as surplusage.[25]

Parties. A judgment by confession must designate the parties for and against whom it is rendered with reasonable certainty, or it will be void for uncertainty.[26] The judgment must follow the confession in describing the parties in favor of whom,[27] or against whom,[28] it is confessed. Where several defendants confess judgment severally, a separate judgment should be entered against each,[29] and a joint judgment may not be entered against them.[30] On the other hand, in case of joint debtors or joint defendants, it has been held that a joint judgment must be entered against them all,[31] and that, if in such case plaintiff accepts the confession of one of the defendants and takes judgment against him separately, the action is thereby discontinued as to the other defendants.[32]

After assignment. A statute requiring actions to be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest has been held to require, after the underlying obligation has been assigned, that the judgment be confessed in the name of the assignee.[33]

Entry of one judgment on several powers of attorney. Where several powers of attorney are given to confess judgment on several debts in favor of and against the same parties, it is both competent and proper for the court to consolidate them and enter a single judgment.[34]

Election. Generally, where the terms of the confession authorize the entry of two distinct forms of judgment embracing different forms of relief for the redress of a given wrong or the enforcement of a given right, and these forms of judgment or relief are based on inconsistent theories, the creditor's election to enter the one form of judgment precludes entry of the other.[35]

Signature. Under a statute so providing, the judgment must be signed by a judge or court commissioner,[36] unless the statute is merely directory.[37]

Alterations. After the judgment has been entered and completed, no alterations changing its character in any way, whether by addition or otherwise, may be made without leave of the court.[38]

Nature of judgment. A judgment entered on the confession of defendant is in general final and not interlocutory,[39] and, if the right to enter the judgment or to issue execution on it depends on the happening of a contingency, the court should determine the matter by a final judgment.[40]

§ 165. Entry of Judgment

a. In general
b. Form and contents of record

a. In General

Generally, a confession of judgment does not have the effect of a judgment, at least as against other creditors, until it is entered by the clerk in the proper book or record of the court.

As a general rule, in order that a confession of judgment may have the validity and effect of a judgment, at least as against other creditors, it must be entered by the clerk in the proper book or record of the court,[41] as it is the record entry, and not the confession, that constitutes the judgment,[42] although there are decisions to the effect that the clerk's failure to enter the judgment of record as directed by statute does not invalidate the judgment.[43] The clerk may be constrained to perform his duty in this respect by a rule or motion,[44] and mere irregularities in entering or in failing to enter the judgment may be corrected by an entry made nunc pro tunc,[45] unless the defects are jurisdictional, in which case the judgment cannot be sustained, even though it should appear that the amount of the judgment was justly due.[46] Under some statutes, where judgment is confessed on a statement of indebtedness, the clerk of the court must indorse the judgment on the statement filed with him, and enter it in the judgment book.[47] It has been held,

however, that the clerk's failure to make such indorsement does not affect the validity of a judgment which the entry on the judgment docket shows was rendered by the court.[48]

Restoration of record. Where the record of a judgment by confession has been lost or destroyed, it may be restored on proper application stating in substance the contents of the missing record.[49]

b. Form and Contents of Record

The record of a judgment by confession should show all the facts necessary to support the judgment, but it need not include matters of evidence or other details which do not affect the jurisdiction of the court.

The record of a judgment by confession should show all the facts necessary to support the judgment.[50] The warrant or power of attorney authorizing a confession of judgment should be filed as a part of the record, as discussed supra § 153, and the record should show that the execution of the warrant or power of attorney was duly proved, as discussed supra § 162 b, but it has been held that it need not appear on the record that the bond and warrant were produced at the time of entering the judgment;[51] nor need the record include matters of evidence or other details which do not affect the jurisdiction of the court.[52] In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, it has been held that the note, bond, or other evidence of the debt need not be filed with the confession.[53] Where the judgment is entered as collateral security for an existing indebtedness, or as security for future advances, the substance of the agreement, or at least a reference thereto, should be inserted by the clerk in his memorandum.[54]

b. In vacation

a. In General

Generally speaking, a judgment by confession may be entered at such time, and only such time, as is authorized by law and by the terms of the confession.

Generally speaking, a judgment by confession may be entered at such time, and only such time, as is authorized by the terms of the confession,[55] and by the statutes and local rules of practice.[56] In the absence of statute providing otherwise, the judgment need not be entered at any particular time after the confession and statement are made.[57] Where a statement is presented to the clerk with a request to enter and docket a judgment by confession thereon, it is his duty to comply promptly with the request.[58]

Until "regularly sued out and docketed"

(1) Under a statute so providing, a judgment by confession cannot be entered up unless and until the cause has been regularly sued out and docketed as in other cases.—Thomas v. Bloodworth, 160 S.E. 709, 44 Ga. App. 44.

(2) Judgment is not "entered up" within the meaning of such statute until filed in court.—Thomas v. Bloodworth, supra.

(3) Although judgment may be made and entered on the petition before the petition is filed, and may be filed with the petition, it has been held that it is thereby entered up simultaneously with the filing of the petition and not after the case has been regularly sued out and docketed.—Thomas v. Bloodworth, supra.

Forthwith or without delay

(1) A statutory requirement that judgments by confession shall be entered on the docket forthwith has been held to mean that such entry shall be made within a reasonable time.—Burchett v. Casady, 18 Iowa 342—34 C.J. p 125 note 64.

34 C.J. p 125 note 62.

58. Minn.—Whelan v. Reynolds, 112 N.W. 223, 101 Minn. 290.

A judgment by confession in an action already pending cannot properly be entered before the filing of the agreement to confess judgment, where there is such an agreement,[59] or according to some authorities,[60] but not others,[61] before the return term of the writ, or before the court has disposed of the issues raised by an answer challenging plaintiff's right to recover.[62]

Death of parties. Although, as discussed supra § 156, as a general rule a judgment by confession cannot be entered on a warrant of attorney after the death of the grantor, where the judgment confessed is not to be entered until the happening of a contingency, it has been held that the death of defendant after the happening of such contingency does not prevent the mere formal entry of the judgment.[63] In the absence of statute, a confession of judgment in a pending suit, after the death of plaintiff and before substitution of his representative, has been held void, both as regards the representatives of plaintiff and any third person who may be collaterally interested in the payment of the same.[64] Under a statute so providing, however, judgment may be entered on a cognovit at any time within two terms, notwithstanding the death of plaintiff, or of one of several plaintiffs, in the meantime.[65]

Relation back. The rule, as discussed supra § 113, that judgments of a court of record relate back to the term in which they are rendered applies to judgments by confession.[66] It has been held that a judgment on a warrant received by the clerk at his residence after office hours may be docketed the next day as of the day when received.[67]

Under a number of statutes authorizing a confession of judgment, judgment may be entered either in term time or in vacation, and may be entered in vacation by the clerk of the court without an order or other direction of the judge.

Under a number of statutes authorizing a confession of judgment, the judgment confessed may be entered either in term time or in vacation,[68] and may be entered in vacation by the clerk of the court without an order or other direction from the court or judge;[69] and under some statutes, during vacation, the judgment must be entered by the clerk and cannot be entered by the judge.[70] The act of the clerk in such a case is the "entering" rather than the "rendering" of a judgment;[71] but the judgment when entered becomes the judgment of the court and not the judgment of the clerk.[72] As such an entry of judgment is a statutory proceeding in derogation of the common law, it is not valid unless there is a strict compliance with the requirements of the law authorizing it;[73] and such compliance must appear on the face of the record.[74] Where such requirements have been complied with, the clerk's authority to enter the confession is derived solely from the statute, and specific authority directed to him as clerk to make the entry is not required.[75]

What vacation includes. A vacation within the meaning of this rule includes the morning of the first day of the term of court, before the hour for the opening of court,[76] and also includes the period of an adjournment of court for several days or weeks during the term;[77] but not the period between adjournment on one day and the convening of court on the next,[78] or the period pending a stay of proceedings.[79]

Confirmation or approval. Where the statute requires an office confession of judgment to be confirmed by the court, its incidents as a judgment have been held not to attach until the date of such confirmation.[80] It has been held, however, that a requirement that a judgment entered by the clerk in vacation shall be approved at the next term is merely directory, and that a failure to make such approval will not avoid the judgment.[81]

Relation back. It has been held that a judgment confessed in vacation and then entered up by consent as of the preceding term is void, and cannot be validated by any subsequent act of defendant;[82] but there is also authority to the contrary.[83]

§ 167. Amount of Judgment

A judgment by confession should be entered for the amount confessed, and only for such amount, and, where the confession does not determine the extent of the recovery, and it is not ascertainable by mere calculation, it must be liquidated by the court, and not by the clerk.

A judgment by confession should be entered for the amount confessed, and only for such amount,[84] and, as discussed supra § 154, where it is entered under a warrant of attorney, it must be for such an amount only as is authorized by the warrant. It has been held, however, that on confession of judgment in a pending action, if plaintiff's demand is in the nature of a debt, the amount of which may be ascertained by calculation, it is sufficient to enter judgment generally, which, in contemplation of law, is for the amount laid in the declaration.[85] A general acknowledgment of indebtedness will not authorize the entry of judgment for a specific sum.[86] If the judgment entered is for a greater sum than that actually confessed or due, unless the excess was fraudulently included,[87] the judgment is void only as to the excess and not in toto;[88] and the irregularity may be cured by plaintiff remitting the excess.[89] It has been held, however, that a false statement as to the amount due contained in the confession of judgment renders the judgment void, even though such statement is not intentional and is made without intent to defraud.[90]

Certainty of amount. Judgment may not be entered for an indefinite or unliquidated claim or amount.[91]

Interest. The judgment may include interest on plaintiff's demand, if, and only if, that is warranted by the terms of the confession.[92] The fact that judgment is confessed for a greater rate of interest than is allowed by the debt or claim on which the confession is made will not, in the absence of fraud, vitiate the judgment,[93] but it may be corrected so as to allow the proper rate.[94]

Costs and attorney's fees. A judgment by confession may ordinarily include an allowance for plaintiff's costs,[95] except such as are incurred unnecessarily.[96] The judgment may also include a reasonable allowance for plaintiff's attorney's fees, if that is authorized by the terms of the warrant, as discussed supra § 154, or confession,[97] and is not contrary to statute.[98] Where defendant confesses judgment in a sum below the jurisdiction of the court, and judgment is rendered on the confession, it has been held that he is not entitled to recover costs.[99]

Liquidation by court or clerk. Where the confession of judgment does not determine the extent of the recovery, and it is not ascertainable by mere calculation, it must be liquidated by the court,[1] on a writ of inquiry,[2] and not by the clerk or prothonotary,[3] who may, it has been held, enter judgment only for the amount which appears to be due from the face of the instrument.[4] If, however, the amount of recovery is simply a matter of calculation, this may be done by the clerk;[5] and it has been held that this is a duty which he must perform without unnecessary delay.[6]

F. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF JUDGMENT

§ 168. In General

A judgment by confession is the act of the court, and until it is reversed or set aside, it has all the qualities, incidents, and attributes of a judgment on a verdict.

Although a judgment by confession may be entered without a direct adjudication of the court or order of a judge, as discussed supra § 160, such judgment whether entered on a warrant of attorney, or on a cognovit, is the act of the court, and until it is reversed or set aside, it has all the qualities, incidents, and attributes of a judgment on a verdict.[7] It is conclusive, as between the parties

Effect on other remedies. A judgment by confession has been held not to preclude the creditor from pursuing other remedies for the collection of the same debt or claim,[14] or of such portion thereof as is not satisfied by an execution on the judgment.[15]

§ 169. As Release or Waiver of Defects

A judgment by confession operates as a release or waiver of formal errors or defects in the proceedings, but neither the judgment itself, nor an express release of errors, will operate to release errors of substance.

A judgment by confession operates as a release or waiver of formal errors or defects in the proceedings,[16] such as of defects or omissions in the declaration;[17] and the debtor may by clear and appropriate language contained in the cognovit or warrant of attorney expressly release all procedural errors,[18] and in such a case the confession of the judgment is of itself an operative release, and no formal plea of release is necessary.[19] On the other hand, neither the judgment itself nor such express release operates to release or waive errors of substance,[20] such as a want of jurisdiction,[21] or lack of authority to confess the judgment.[22]

§ 170. Presumptions Supporting Judgment

A judgment on confession entered in a court having jurisdiction, is supported by the same presumptions, with respect to matters essential to its validity, as a judgment in a contested action, at least where it is entered in term time.

A judgment on confession, entered in a court having jurisdiction, is supported by the same presumptions with respect to the regularity of the proceedings, the sufficiency of the pleadings and evidence, and other matters essential to its validity, as a judgment in a contested action,[23] at least where the judgment is entered in term time.[24] It has been held, however, that such presumptions do not apply to judgments entered in vacation.[25] Where the right to enter the judgment depended on the contingency that defendant violated his contract, the law will not presume that he has done so.[26]

§ 171. Validity

According to some decisions, a judgment by confession is absolutely void if the proceedings in confessing or entering the judgment do not conform to statutory requirements, but, according to other decisions, such a judgment is merely voidable.

According to some decisions a judgment by confession is absolutely void, if the proceedings in confessing or entering the judgment do not conform to statutory requirements.[27] According to other decisions, however, the judgment is not absolutely void, but is voidable only.[28] Thus failure to file a proper affidavit of default according to some decisions renders the judgment void,[29] while, according to other authority, it is merely voidable.[30] In any case, under a statute so providing, failure on the part of the clerk to perform any of the duties imposed on him by statute does not impair the validity of the judgment or the lien thereof.[31] If the confession of judgment is void, it is not sufficient consideration to support a mortgage made to secure its payment.[32]

Defective statement. Compliance with a statute requiring a statement of the facts out of which the indebtedness arose to be filed with a confession of judgment, as discussed supra § 158, has been held to be essential to confer jurisdiction on the court and to insure validity of the judgment,[33] and failure to comply therewith has been held to render the judgment void.[34] However, according to other authority, the fact that the statement is defective or insufficient, while not a mere irregularity,[35] will not render the judgment absolutely void.[36] It is valid as between the parties,[37] and void, or voidable, only as to interested third persons.[38] According to some authorities, as discussed infra § 433, such judgment cannot be collaterally attacked, but must be called in question in a direct proceeding for that purpose;[39] and plaintiff may sustain his judgment by proving that it is fair, and not fraudulent or collusive, and warranted by the facts actually existing, although such facts were not included in the statement.[40]

Failure to file affidavit of bona fides. A failure to file the required affidavit as to the bona fides of the confession, as discussed supra § 163, or the filing of one which is not in substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute, renders the judgment by confession, not absolutely void, but voidable only as to other creditors;[41] it is valid as between the parties thereto.[42]

Fraud. A judgment by confession entered by the creditor without the knowledge or consent of the debtor after the debt had been paid fully has been held fraudulent and void.[43] If the judgment is confessed for the purpose of defrauding creditors or other third persons, it is invalid as to them;[44] but it cannot be attacked by creditors or other interested persons merely because it is fraudulent as against the debtor, if it is not fraudulent as to them;[45] and, although it is fraudulent as against creditors, if no fraud or deception is practiced on the debtor, it is binding as between the original parties.[46]

Forgery. A judgment by confession based on a forgery has been held to be a nullity.[47]

§ 172. Estoppel to Deny Validity

A defendant confessing judgment is estopped, in the absence of fraud, to question the validity of the confession on account of irregularities to which he did not object, and if, after the entry of judgment, he ratifies or acquiesces in it, he is estopped to deny the authority on which it was confessed or otherwise to impeach its validity.

A defendant confessing judgment is estopped, in the absence of fraud, to question the validity of the confession on account of irregularities to which he did not object,[48] or to dispute any facts set forth in the confession[49] or accompanying statement,[50] or to set up any claims or defenses which might have been presented in opposition to plaintiff's action,[51] and if, after the entry of the judgment, defendant ratifies or accepts it, or acquiesces in it, he is estopped to deny the authority on which it was confessed or otherwise to impeach its validity.[52] Estoppel cannot, however, be invoked so as to preclude attack on a judgment obtained in violation of a prohibitory law.[53]

35. Insufficiency is not imperfect pleading, or due to negligence of party or his attorney by which adverse party has not been prejudiced, within statute providing that judgment cannot be affected by such imperfections.—Johnston v. VII. JUDGMENT ON CONSENT, OFFER, OR ADMISSION

A judgment by consent is in substance a contract of record made by the parties and approved by the court, and is to be distinguished from a judgment by confession or on default.

A judgment by consent of the parties is a judgment the provisions and terms of which are settled and agreed to by the parties to the action in which it is entered, and which is entered of record by the consent and sanction of the court;[54] it may be more briefly defined as a contract of the parties acknowledged in open court and ordered to be recorded,[55] an agreement of the parties entered of record with the approval of a court of competent jurisdiction,[56] or a solemn contract or judgment of the parties put on file with the sanction and permission of the court.[57] A consent judgment is not a judicial determination of any litigated right,[58] and it is not the judgment of the court, except in the sense that the court allows it to go upon the record and have the force and effect of a judgment;[59] it is merely the act of the parties consented to by the court.[60]

Consent to entry of judgment implies that the terms and conditions have been agreed on and consent thereto given in open court or by stipulation,[61] and the court has no power to supply terms, provisions, or essential details not previously agreed to by the parties.[62] It has been held, however, that the fact that a judgment is entered by consent of the parties does not deprive it of its judicial character or efficacy.[63]

Judicial act

While a consent judgment is based on agreement of the parties rather than a finding of facts by the court, it is something more than a mere authentication or recording of the agreement; it is a judicial act involving a determination by the court that it is equitable and in the public interest.—U. S. v. Radio Corporation of America, D.C.Del., 46 F.Supp. 654, appeal dismissed 63 S.Ct. 851, 318 U.S. 796, 87 L.Ed. 1161.

Judgment of court

Distinctions. A judgment by consent is to be distinguished from one rendered on an adjudication actually made by the court after due consideration and investigation, as following verdict or findings in an adverse proceeding,[64] and such a judgment will not become a judgment by consent even though the parties may have superadded their consent to the adjudication of the court.[65] It is similar to a judgment after trial on the merits in that it is binding on the parties, but differs therefrom in that it is not appealable and can be vacated only in certain circumstances for fraud or want of consent.[66] A judgment by consent is to be distinguished from a judgment by default, its special characteristic being the settlement between the parties of the terms, amount, or conditions of the judgment to be rendered,[67] and is also to be distinguished from a judgment by confession discussed supra § 134. Termination of an action by entry of agreement for judgment for "neither party" constitutes a final disposition of the action, but no judgment may be rendered thereon by the court.[68]

§ 174. —— Right and Authority to Consent

a. In general
b. Who may and must consent

a. In General

Within limitations imposed by positive requirements of law, the parties may agree to any disposition of a pending action and the court may and should render judgment accordingly.

Within limitations imposed by positive requirements of law,[69] any disposition of a pending action, not illegal, may be fairly agreed to by the parties, and when so agreed, it is the duty of the court to permit such disposition and to enter judgment accordingly, which judgment will be given effect between the parties and their privies.[70] The court

(1) By recital in order that there had been an agreement on figures.—960 Park Ave. Co. v. Anderson, D.C. N.Y., 22 F.Supp. 138.

(2) Where suit to set aside oil and gas lease covering allotted acreage of full-blood restricted Creek Indian was consolidated with suit by defendants therein to quiet title to lease, and thereafter parties made written compromise agreement, and court, after examination of issues, rendered judgment approving such agreement and quieting defendant's title, the judgment was not a "consent decree" but a valid "final decree," barring subsequent action by deceased Indian's administrator to set aside the lease and for an accounting because of Indian's incompetency.—Spencer v. Gypsy Oil Co., C.C.A.Okl., 142 F.2d 935, certiorari denied 65 S.Ct. 439, 323 U.S. 798, 89 L.Ed. 636.

Decree resting on evidence

Where trial court's recitation in decree entered in quiet title action against county purported to rest decree on evidence, and not on consent of parties, the decree would not be construed as a "consent decree," especially where there was no showing of fraud or collusion between prosecuting attorney representing county and the plaintiff in procuring the decree.—Harter v. King County, 119 P.2d 919, 11 Wash.2d 533.

Where an order form for judgment by default is prepared by counsel for plaintiff, presented to attorney for defendant, the abbreviation "O. K." indorsed on the back thereof, followed by the signatures of the attorneys for both parties and entered without any notation of consent on the face of the record, and there is no appearance of defendant noted, the judgment is a judgment by default, and not a consent judgment.—Bank of Gauley v. Implied power of court does not inquire into the merits or equities of the case; the only questions to be determined by it are whether the parties are capable of binding themselves by consent and whether they have actually done so.[71] The judgment agreed on must be one within the general jurisdiction of the court to render,[72] and such as is warranted by law,[73] for if the court is without authority the parties cannot confer it.[74]

Pleadings, proof, etc. Since consent to a judgment has been held to cure all errors not going to the jurisdiction of the court,[75] where the court has acquired jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the parties, a judgment by consent without the service or filing of a declaration or complaint has been held valid.[76] There is authority for the view that a judgment by consent may be entered and given effect as to any matters of which the court has general jurisdiction, without regard to the pleadings,[77] and even though the pleadings do not support it.[78] Thus it has been held that the rule that a judgment on matters outside the issues raised by the pleadings is a nullity does not apply to judgments entered by consent,[79] and that a consent judgment going beyond the pleadings is erroneous but not void.[80] On the other hand, it has been held that consent will not support a judgment on a declaration or complaint which fails to state a cause of action,[81] or a judgment on matters entirely without the scope of the pleadings,[82] such as a judgment on a cause of action other than that stated in the pleadings[83] or a judgment for an amount in excess of the amount alleged to be due,[84] and that a judgment rendered outside the issues made by the pleadings is void although entered by consent.[85] In any

Set-off

Stipulation, on which case was reported, that, if verdict for defendant was sustained, judgment for defendant should be entered for amount claimed in set-off, was binding on parties and became law of the case.—Adams v. Grundy & Co., 152 N.E. 379, 256 Mass. 246.

After default

It has been held that a party may in good faith sign a written consent that a money judgment be entered against him even after his default has been entered in the case.—Tracey v. Blood, 3 P.2d 263, 78 Utah 385.

Reasons for judgment

It has been said that the will of the parties stands as sufficient reason for the judgment so that the law will not inquire into the reasons therefor.—Board of Education of Sampson County v. Board of Com'rs of Sampson County, 134 S.E. 852, 192 N.C. 274.

event, before a judgment additional or foreign to the subject matter of the suit can be upheld as a judgment by consent, it must very plainly appear that the parties intended such an effect, and their agreement should never be enlarged beyond the clear import of the terms they have used.[86] The agreement of the parties has also been held to obviate the necessity for a hearing except for the purpose of determining the fact or validity of the agreement and ordering judgment accordingly.[87] So it has been held not required that there be proof[88] or a verdict or findings.[89]

b. Who May and Must Consent

Judgment by consent may be rendered only on consent of all parties interested and to be bound, or their duly authorized agents.

The power of the court to render a judgment by consent is dependent on the existence of the consent of the parties at the time the agreement receives the sanction of the court or is rendered and promulgated as a judgment.[90] The consent to the judgment must be given by all the parties thereto,[91] and the judgment is not binding as to a nonconsenting party,[92] as in the case of a party for whom consent was given by one lacking authority to act for him.[93] Consent may be given by the parties personally,[94] or by their legal representatives,[95] or by other duly authorized agents.[96]

§ 175. —— Sufficiency of Consent or Agreement

Consent to judgment may be made in writing, or it may be made orally if in open court, and it should be clear, specific, and complete. Withdrawal of consent prior to judgment may sometimes be permitted.

Consent to judgment must be made by or on behalf of the parties in open court or by documentary evidence of legal sufficiency.[97] If the agreement or consent is made in open court, it may be made orally;[98] otherwise it should be in writing,[99] and should be filed.[1] It has, however, been held that a judgment may be entered on an oral agreement made out of court when necessary to prevent injustice to one party.[2] The consent should be so clear and specific in terms that no mistake can arise respecting the concurrence of the parties,[3] and it should be complete[4] and unqualified.[5]

It is within the jurisdiction of the court to determine the fact and the sufficiency of such consent.[6] A party's consent to a judgment is shown by the fact that he causes the judgment to be entered up;[7] but consent cannot be shown by oral statements to the judge out of court[8] or by a mere statement of counsel that he has no objection to the entry of the judgment.[9] A stipulation for judgment is a consent to the entry of judgment,[10] but a stipulation which is merely a consent that the pleadings may be amended, and is not an admission of the correctness of the allegations, is not a proper basis for a judgment.[11]

Withdrawal or expiration of consent. It has been held that the consent may be withdrawn at any time prior to entry of judgment,[12] and that it is within the discretion of the court, on motion of one of the parties, to withhold the agreed judgment and grant a further trial.[13] However, a consent given prior to the adjustment of the issues in the controversy may be assumed to continue by the failure to withdraw or to protest.[14] Generally, consent to the entry of judgment expires after the creditor's remedy becomes barred by limitations.[15]

An order for entry of a consent judgment is a judicial act in the sense that it requires the court to examine the record to determine its authority, but is ministerial in the sense that it is predicated on the agreement of the parties. A consent judgment should be entered in the proper book or record and may be entered at any time stipulated by the parties and permitted by statute.

While an order for entry of a consent judgment is a judicial act in the sense that it requires the court to examine the record to determine its authority,[16] the court also acts ministerially in the sense that its power to enter judgment depends on the agreement or consent of the parties.[17] So, where the parties have lawfully agreed, the actual entry of judgment is a mere ministerial act,[18] unless the case is one in which defendant has the right to be heard as to the nature or terms of the judgment to be entered.[19] In the absence of knowledge of an assignment affecting the rights of third persons, the court has the right to journalize a settlement entry,[20] and sureties on an undertaking on appeal are not entitled to notice of entry of a judgment against them to which they have in legal contemplation consented.[21] On the other hand, sureties on a replevin bond of plaintiff, seizing certain property, have been held not bound by a judgment for debt entered in defendant's favor on stipulation of the parties without notice to the sureties.[22]

Place and time of entry. A judgment by consent must be entered in the proper book or record,[23] and within the time, if any, specified by statute,[24] but not before commencement of the term at which the cause is returnable.[25] Where the entry of judgment by agreement depends on the rendition of a final judgment in another action, it cannot be entered pending a motion for a new trial in such other action.[26] Within such limitations it may be stated generally that a judgment by consent may be entered at the time specified in the stipulation or agreement,[27] and at any stage of the proceedings, as before the expiration of defendant's time for pleading;[28] and, with defendant's consent, judgment may be entered at the term in which he enters his appearance.[29] If the agreement so provides, the judgment may be entered immediately on the happening of a contingency.[30] While a judgment by consent may in a proper case be entered nunc pro tunc,[31] it may not be so entered where no authority existed to enter it in the first instance.[32]

§ 177. —— Form and Sufficiency of Judgment

Ordinarily a judgment by consent should show the consent on its face, and should conform to the terms agreed on by the parties; but such judgment will not be regarded as void on its face unless it shows lack of jurisdiction of the court to render it.

In addition to the general features common to all judgments,[33] a consent judgment, ordinarily should recite or show on its face that it is entered by the agreement or consent of the parties;[34] but such a showing is not indispensable and the agree-

(2) Where resolution of county board of education selecting school site authorized judgment in pending litigation with county commissioners on approval of resolution by latter, such judgment, by operation of law, became consent judgment without

ment may be shown by any other evidence consistent with the record,[35] and a consent judgment has been held not void on its face unless it shows a want of jurisdiction.[36] A recital that evidence was heard is unnecessary since the consent obviates the necessity of hearing any evidence,[37] as is discussed supra § 174. The judgment entered must conform to the terms agreed on by the parties,[38] and the court has no power to add conditions or provisions on which the parties have not agreed.[39] Thus the amount of the judgment must be that fixed by the agreement of the parties;[40] if it is entered for more, it may be set aside as to the excess.[41] If there are several defendants and all consent, judgment must be entered against all of them.[42] The mere fact that a document is signed by defendant, consenting to entry of judgment against him, is not of itself a judgment.[43]

§ 178. —— Construction, Operation, and Effect

A judgment by consent ordinarily has the force and effect of a contract and is so construed, although it also partakes of the nature of a judgment and will be upheld and enforced as such. Consent to the judgment waives all nonjurisdictional defects.

Since a judgment by consent is regarded as a contract between the parties,[44] it must be construed the same as any other contract.[45] Its operation and signatures of counsel.—Board of Education of Sampson County v. Board of Com'rs of Sampson County, 134 S.E. 852, 192 N.C. 274.

(2) Judgment in replevin rendered "by consent of plaintiff and defendants in this case," providing for recovery by plaintiff from "defendants and" named persons, "sureties upon the replevin bond," held not void on its face, as against contention that sureties' consent to judgment is not shown.—Starling v. Decretal aspects

An agreed judgment, in so far as purely decretal aspects are con-

an ordinary judgment,[51] and in other respects it may be accorded less force.[52] Although the judgment is in the nature of a contract between the parties, the court retains power to see that its provisions are duly carried out.[53] In the absence of fraud or mistake a consent judgment is valid and binding, as such, as between the parties thereto and their privies.[54] The judgment is not invalidated by a subsequent failure to perform a condition on which the consent was based,[55] or by the fact that it obligates the parties to do that which they could not make a valid contract to do;[56] and unless it is vacated or set aside in the manner provided for by law[57] it stands as a final disposition of the rights of the parties thereto.[58]

In the absence of fraud, after the agreement has been made and a judgment entered thereon, the consent of one of the parties cannot be withdrawn,[59] and he is not entitled to a jury trial to fix the amount of damages.[60] A consent judgment may be inquired into and held void for fraud practiced on one of the parties[61] or against other creditors of defendant;[62] and is not valid unless entered in a court which might lawfully have rendered the same judgment in a contested case.[63] Where several defendants are brought into court, a judgment by cerned, has the same effect as though rendered by court after trial of issues, "decretal" meaning granting or denying of remedy sought.—State v. Reagan County Purchasing Co., Tex. Civ.App., 186 S.W.2d 128, error refused.

agreement as to one only is a dismissal as to the others,[64] and separate judgments against defendants who are jointly and severally liable limit plaintiff's claim against one defendant to the amount of the judgment against such defendant.[65]

A second judgment cannot be entered on an agreement or consent of the parties without vacating a prior judgment which has been entered thereon.[66]

As waiver of defects or irregularities. A judgment by consent or agreement operates as a waiver of all defects or irregularities in the process, pleadings, or other proceedings previous to the rendition of the judgment,[67] except such as involve the jurisdiction of the court.[68] It is a sufficient waiver of trial by jury.[69]

§ 179. Offer

A judgment entered on offer and acceptance may be a judgment by consent, or a judgment on the pleadings if the offer is contained in a pleading.

Apart from proceedings under statutes specifically authorizing the entry of judgment on an offer of judgment made by defendant, a judgment entered pursuant to a properly manifested offer and acceptance is a judgment by consent, such as has been considered supra §§ 173–178, or, if the offer is contained in a pleading, there may be a judgment on the pleadings.[70] Such an offer must be accepted on the terms and conditions on which it is made,[71] and before the offer is properly withdrawn or the time for accepting it has expired.[72] Entry of a judgment of confession in a pending action, without consent of the adverse party, and against the refusal of the court to sanction it, is a nullity.[73]

Under statutory provisions. Offer of judgment is a method provided by statute in some states, whereby a defendant may offer to allow plaintiff to take judgment against him for a specified amount, or to a specified effect, with costs up to that time, and thus exonerate himself from liability for future costs in case plaintiff persists in his action and fails to recover a judgment more favorable to him than that offered.[74] It is a modern substitute for the common-law cognovit,[75] and is a species of judgment by confession.[76] Statutes of this class are remedial and should be liberally construed, so as to support the judgment,[77] but a judgment entered on an offer of judgment can be supported only in cases falling within, and on compliance with, the terms of the statute.[78] Such statutes do not prevent defendant from denying liability in whole or in part on instruments made the basis of a suit against him, or prevent his tendering into court the amount he owes plaintiff, or impose on him the duty of bringing plaintiff into court to accept or refuse his tender.[79] Where defendant in his answer admitted an amount due but claimed a set-off, with an offer to confess judgment for the balance, judgment for the amount confessed instead of the full amount is error in the absence of any proof of the set-off.[80]

§ 180. —— Authority to Offer

The offer on which a valid judgment is entered must have been made by the defendant or by his authority.

In order to support a judgment, the offer on which it was entered must have been made by defendant or by his authority.[81] In the absence of statutory authority one joint debtor or partner has no power to make an offer in behalf of his joint debtor or copartner.[82] Under joint debtor acts it has been broadly held that there is no statutory authority allowing one joint debtor or partner to make an offer in behalf of his joint debtor or copartner,[83] although there is also authority to the effect that one defendant, a joint debtor, served with process, may, by an offer of judgment bind his codefendant not served, as to joint property.[84]

§ 181. —— Form and Sufficiency of Offer

An offer of judgment must conform to statutory requirements and ordinarily must be formally made in open court.

In order to support a judgment, the offer must conform to statutory requirements.[85] Under some statutes an offer of judgment is required to be made in court,[86] and it has been held that the offer must be made by serving or filing a formal written offer,[87] signed by the party or his attorney.[88] The offer must be such that plaintiff may immediately enter judgment on it;[89] it must be unconditional[90] and leave no fact to be determined in order to authorize the judgment.[91] Under some statutes judgment can be entered pursuant thereto only when the offer was made after action brought and while it is pending;[92] and it has been suggested that obtaining judgment on offer should not be permitted to be used as a means of avoiding or evading compliance with the statutory safeguards thrown around judgments by confession.[93] Another view, however, is that courts cannot enforce a preference between different statutory ways of obtaining judgments, and that a judgment which is free from fraud and regular under the statute pursuant to which it was entered must be supported, although it would be irregular or unauthorized if dependent on the provisions of some other statute.[94]

The offer may be for the full amount claimed; it need not be for a smaller amount offered in compromise of the claim.[95] An offer contained in an answer has been deemed a good and sufficient statutory offer.[96] Other courts, however, hold that substantially similar statutes contemplate a separate independent offer of judgment, and that it cannot properly be embodied in the answer or other pleading.[97] Judgments on admissions or confessions made in the answer are governed by different statutes and considerations.[98] The court can in no event direct a verdict for defendant where, in his answer, he offered to permit judgment in plaintiff's favor in an amount specified.[99] An insufficient offer, not made in conformity with the statute, will not put plaintiff to his election to accept or reject it,[1] and, if plaintiff does accept and enter judgment thereon, such judgment is unauthorized and irregular, and should be vacated.[2] In a proper case the court may allow defendant to amend his offer.[3]

§ 182. —— Acceptance or Rejection, and Withdrawal of Offer

An offer of judgment must be accepted within the period and in the manner prescribed by statute.

Defendant is not bound by an offer to allow judgment for the sum or relief specified unless the offer is accepted within the time limited by statute[4] or fixed by the court.[5] If not accepted within the time prescribed, the offer is deemed withdrawn,[6] and cannot be considered by the court or jury[7] or allowed in any way to affect the judgment,[8] except as to costs, as is discussed in Costs §§ 76–87. An offer not accepted in time will not support a judgment,[9] and after expiration of the statutory period plaintiff is not entitled to accept the offer and to have judgment entered thereon,[10] particularly not after trial.[11] A statutory offer of judgment is not a tender which must be kept good and may be accepted at any time,[12] and differs from an offer set up in the answer, which may operate as an admission or confession of judgment.[13]

The offer as made and authorized by statute must be unconditionally accepted, without reservation,[14] in the manner prescribed by the statute, as by filing or serving a written notice of acceptance,[15] or by an oral acceptance in open court in the presence of defendant.[16] Entry of judgment on an offer without a formal acceptance, however, has been held to be merely an irregularity not affecting the validity of the judgment,[17] and, where there was no written acceptance of the offer, entry of judgment has been deemed the equivalent of a due acceptance.[18]

An express rejection is unnecessary; no affirmative action on the part of plaintiff is required unless he elects to accept the offer.[19] While it has been broadly stated that a statutory offer of judgment may be withdrawn prior to acceptance,[20] and it seems that the court has power to allow a defendant to withdraw an offer made under a mistake,[21] it has been held that plaintiff is entitled to the whole of the time limited within which to accept the offer, and defendant cannot deprive him of this right by withdrawing the offer before plaintiff's right to act on it has expired.[22] Until the offer has been rejected, or the time for accepting it has expired, defendant can take no step in the action adverse to plaintiff which is inconsistent with giving effect to the offer, if plaintiff shall accept it.[23]

23. N.Y.—U. S. Mortgage & Trust

Once plaintiff has made his election either to accept or to reject the offer, his election is binding,[24] and, after expressly refusing the offer, plaintiff cannot thereafter withdraw the refusal and accept the offer, over defendant's objection, although the time limit has not expired.[25] Where the case goes to trial before expiration of the time for acceptance, and before any action on the offer by plaintiff, it has been held under different statutes that the offer becomes ineffectual for any purpose,[26] that the offer cannot be accepted,[27] and that plaintiff in effect elects not to accept;[28] but it has also been held that the offer may be accepted during the progress of the trial.[29] Where plaintiff rejects both a preaction tender of a stated amount in settlement of his claim, and also an offer of judgment in the same amount, but on the trial plaintiff introduces no evidence to show that more is due, judgment is properly rendered for only the amount tendered and offered.[30]

Where, after the making of an offer of judgment, plaintiff amends his complaint by omitting some of the causes of action and reducing the recovery sought, the offer ceases to be binding or conclusive on either party, and becomes for all purposes nugatory.[31] Where, however, an amendment to a complaint is one of form only, and the cause of action and the recovery sought remain the same, an offer of judgment theretofore made in the action remains binding on the parties, notwithstanding such amendment.[32]

Ordinarily on due acceptance of the offer and compliance with statutory requirements the plaintiff is entitled to have judgment entered without trial. The judgment must conform to the terms of the tender or offer.

On proper acceptance of an offer of judgment, and on compliance with all statutory requirements, plaintiff is entitled to have judgment entered, in accordance with the offer, without a trial.[33] Generally such entry may be made without application to the court, by the clerk acting ministerially,[34] unless the offer and acceptance are made in a case of the class where application to the court is required to be made.[35] If plaintiff neglects to enter judgment after accepting the offer, judgment may be entered on application of defendant.[36] Where for any reason an application to the court is necessary when an offer to allow judgment has been made, the party receiving the offer may go to the court and ask and obtain on the offer such final directions as are necessary to give effect to the offer and perfect a judgment thereon.[37] As the clerk acts ministerially, he must follow closely the directions of the statute or the judgment will be unauthorized and void.[38] Judgment may be entered before the return term of the writ.[39] Proof of service of the summons need not be filed.[40] The judgment as entered must conform to the offer accepted.[41]

§ 184. —— Construction, Operation, and Effect

An offer of judgment and its acceptance are to be construed as a contract, and the judgment entered thereon is to be given effect in fixing the rights of the parties as of the date on which the offer was made; entry of judgment disposes of the issues tendered by the pleadings and operates to terminate the action.

An offer of judgment and its acceptance constitute a contract,[42] and together with the judgment entered thereon are to be construed and given effect according to the state of the pleadings at the time the offer was made.[43] The rights of the parties are fixed as of that date,[44] and no further inquiry as to the relation of the parties is permissible.[45] A counterclaim thereafter filed or served cannot be considered or given effect,[46] and, on the other hand, the cause of action set up in such counterclaim is not barred by the judgment, but may be recovered in a subsequent action,[47] although acceptance of the offer was made after the counterclaim was pleaded.[48]

The action is terminated by entry of the judgment[49] and the court has no power to permit plaintiff to enter judgment on the offer and to continue the action for the recovery of the balance of his claim.[50] An acceptance of an offer of judgment disposes of the issues tendered by the pleadings,[51] and a judgment on a general offer concludes plaintiff from bringing a new action for any part of the claim embraced in the complaint, and which might have been litigated in the former action.[52] Under joint debtor acts a judgment may be entered on an offer of judgment made by one of several joint debtors without affecting or barring the remedy against the other debtors.[53]

§ 185. Admission in Pleading

a. In general

b. Admission of part of demand

c. Set-off or counterclaim

a. In General

Judgment may be entered for either the plaintiff or the defendant on a clear and unequivocal admission of liability in the pleadings of the opposing party. In a proper case, under some practice, judgment may be entered by the clerk of court or prothonotary.

Where defendant in his pleadings admits liability on the cause of action set up against him, plaintiff is entitled to have judgment entered in accordance with such admission,[54] provided the admission is distinct, unequivocal, and unconditional,[55] and it is clear that no issue of fact is to be tried[56] and no serious question of law is to be argued.[57] Such judgment may be entered on motion,[58] without a trial on the merits,[59] without evidence in support of the admission,[60] and without regard to which party makes the motion;[61] and defendant cannot introduce evidence which contradicts the admissions in his answer.[62] It is the duty of the court to render judgment for plaintiff in accordance with such admission, regardless of an adverse verdict;[63] and it is error to enter judgment for defendant.[64] Such an admission, however, admits only the traversable allegations of the declaration, and the amount of the debt or damages confessed,[65] and no greater sum can be recovered without further proof.[66]

Admission by plaintiff. Where plaintiff in his pleading admits liability to defendant, and offers to pay it, judgment may be entered thereon in favor of defendant,[67] or at least credit, to the amount of such admission, should be given defendant in entering judgment for plaintiff.[68]

Entry of judgment by clerk or prothonotary. Under statutes authorizing plaintiff to take judgment for the amount admitted to be due by the affidavit of defense, it has been held that in a proper case the judgment may be entered by the prothonotary,[69] and the prothonotary's authority may extend to entry of judgment on an admission of part of the demand.[70] Under statutory provisions authorizing the clerk of court to enter judgment on default, the clerk may not enter judgment where the defendant admits the allegations of the complaint but there is no default,[71] nor may judgment on the basis of admissions in the answer be entered before expiration of the time to amend.[72]

b. Admission of Part of Demand

Where the defendant's pleadings admit part of the plaintiff's claim to be due, the plaintiff may have judgment for the amount so admitted; at common law he may not then sue for the balance. but under some statutes he may have a judgment or order for the amount admitted and then proceed to trial for the balance.

Generally, if defendant's answer admits the justice of a portion of plaintiff's demand, the latter is entitled to judgment for at least the amount so admitted to be due, and a judgment for less, or a judgment for defendant is erroneous.[73] At common law and in the absence of statute or court rule to the contrary, plaintiff has no right to enter judgment for the part admitted, and then to proceed to trial for the balance of his claim;[74] but by statute in many jurisdictions judgment may be entered before trial for the part admitted and a trial had for the part disputed.[75] Under this class of statutes two judgments may be rendered in the same case, both for plaintiff, or one for plaintiff and one for defendant, according to the result of the trial of the controverted portion of plaintiff's claim.[76] Where defendant has admitted a part of the claim to be due, and then proceeds under different statutory provisions to offer to confess judgment on condition that the judgment be in full of the demands against him, such offer does not affect the right of plaintiff to have judgment entered for the part admitted in accordance with the first mentioned statutory provisions;[77] but the offer, if refused by plaintiff, does not defeat the defendant's right to contest the entire claim.[78]

Under other statutes an "order," as distinguished from a "judgment," may be entered requiring defendant to satisfy the part of plaintiff's claim which he has admitted,[79] or an order may be entered re-

Erroneous motion for judgment
Where the proper motion is one for an "order" directing payment of the portion of the claim admitted, the fact that plaintiff falls into a technical error by moving for "judgment" for such part will not preclude the court from granting an "order" binding on defendant to pay the portion admitted to be due.—Phenix

quiring the defendant to pay the amount into court,[80] without prejudice to a continuation of the action as to the remaining issues, which order may be enforced by the court as it enforces a judgment or provisional remedy.[81] In its discretion, under some statutes, the court may refuse to enter judgment for the part admitted in advance of the final judgment on the whole case,[82] and an order may be entered which merely declares that plaintiff's claim shall be deemed established as to the part admitted, the action allowed to proceed as to the remainder of the claim, and, on termination of such action, the judgment then entered including, in addition to any matters determined in the action, the amount of plaintiff's claim that was admitted.[83]

To entitle plaintiff to such a preliminary judgment or order under the statutes, the admission must be unconditional,[84] and amount to a plain, explicit, and unequivocal admission that a definite sum or portion of the relief sought is due to plaintiff,[85] although it is not necessary to specify the particular items of plaintiff's claim or account which are admitted;[86] and, where defendant in his answer unequivocally admits that he owes a portion of the claim, it has been held that he may not by offering to pay such portion only on condition that it be accepted as full payment of the entire claim defeat plaintiff's right to have an order directing defendant to pay the part unequivocally admitted to be due.[87] The remedy is stringent and should be applied with proper caution.[88] The judgment must be strictly confined to the amount clearly and fairly admitted to be due.[89] Failure to deny is a sufficient admission under some statutes.[90] In a case where the cause of action is on an entire demand, and the whole claim is disputed, the statute does not apply, and if, as a result of error, or for other reason, a judgment is entered for a smaller amount than plaintiff claims, this, while the judgment remains in force, is a full settlement of the whole claim of plaintiff on such cause of action.[91]

c. Set-Off or Counterclaim

The plaintiff or the defendant may be entitled to judgment as to that portion of a claim admitted by the other where the defendant has filed a counterclaim or its equivalent.

Where defendant pleads a set-off or counterclaim, but no other answer or defense, it is an admission of his liability for so much of plaintiff's demand as is in excess of the alleged set-off or counterclaim, and for that excess plaintiff may be entitled, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, to take judgment,[92] and the action may be continued for trial of the counterclaim.[93] However, where the counterclaim pleaded is sufficient, if sustained, to extinguish the whole of plaintiff's claim, an admission of part of it, as of one or more of several causes of action joined in the complaint, does not entitle plaintiff to judgment for the part admitted in advance of the trial and final judgment.[94] Defendant is entitled to judgment on his counterclaim to the extent of items admitted by plaintiff.[95]

§ 186. Submission on Agreed Statement of Facts

Under some statutes, the court may render judgment in a case submitted on agreed facts, but the judgment must be in accordance with the facts agreed on.

Under statutes so providing, where the parties agree as to the facts and submit the case to the court for determination on such facts, the court may enter judgment on the case so submitted.[96] So,

Sum deposited in court

Where, in a suit by plaintiff broker against trustees and defendant broker for commissions, the trustees deposit a certain sum in court, conceding their liability for that much and relinquishing all rights thereto, and where plaintiff's pleadings claim only a portion of such sum, on defendant broker's cross motion for partial judgment on the pleadings order should be entered awarding him the difference between the total sum deposited and the amount claimed by plaintiff.—Traub v. where a case is called for trial and certain matters are admitted in court so as to settle controverted questions well pleaded, it is not erroneous for the court to render judgment on such admissions.[97]

Where the case is submitted on an agreed statement of facts, the court should enter judgment in accordance with the facts agreed on,[98] and the judgment must be based on such agreed facts.[99]

VIII. JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT

A. IN GENERAL

§ 187. What Constitutes Judgment by Default

In a strict sense a default judgment is one taken against a defendant who, having been duly summoned in an action, fails to enter an appearance in time; but the term is now usually applied where default occurs after appearance as well as before, although such judgments are also designated "nil dicit."

Broadly speaking, a judgment goes by default whenever, between the commencement of the suit and its anticipated decision in court, either of the parties omits to pursue, in the regular method, the ordinary measures of prosecution or defense.[1] However, as will be seen, this doctrine is most often applied to defaults on the part of defendant; and, strictly speaking, a "judgment by default" is one taken against a defendant when, having been duly summoned or cited in an action, he fails to enter an appearance at the proper time.[2] In this strict sense the term is not properly applied to a judgment rendered where a defendant, after appearance and plea, withdraws his plea and abandons his defense,[3] unless he stipulates that a judgment by default may be entered;[4] nor is it properly applied where defendant fails to plead within the time limited after the overruling of his demurrer.[5] Nevertheless, the term "judgment by default" is now generally applied to a default made after an appearance as well as before,[6] and may be entered where defendant fails to answer or plead within the time allowed him for that purpose, as discussed infra § 199, or fails to appear on Conclusiveness and effect of stipulated facts generally see C.J.S. title Stipulations § 18, also 60 C.J. p 83 note 66–p 84 note 77.

Judgment or decision in controversies submitted to court without action see C.J.S. title Submission of Controversies § 15, also 60 C.J. p 687 notes 77–89.

Judicial act

In giving judgment on a legal obligation which the court finds to be established by stipulated facts, the court performs a judicial act.—Pope v. U. S., Ct.Cl., 65 S.Ct. 16, 323 U.S. 1, 89 L.Ed. 3.

Facts in complaint and affidavits

Where the parties in legal effect agree to submit the case on the facts appearing from the complaint and affidavits submitted on the return to an order to show cause, the court may enter judgment as on an agreed case under the statute.—Luebke v. City of Watertown, 284 N.W. 519, 230 Wis. 512.

Defendant not party to agreement

In action to remove a cloud on the title to land, a judgment by default against defendants for failure to answer was error, where judgment was rendered on an agreed statement of facts to which defendants were not parties, and the defendants did not consent to signing judgment out of term and out of the district.—Merritt v. Inscoe, 193 S.E. 714, 212 N.C. 526.

Exceptions properly overruled

Where parties agreed as to the facts and that the decision of the superior court should be final, an exception by defendant to findings for plaintiff must be overruled.—Belknap County v. City of Laconia, 116 A. 434, 80 N.H. 251.

Particular judgment upheld

Where plaintiff, suing on replevin redelivery bond, admitted when case was called for trial that tender of property had been made shortly after rendition of judgment requiring surrender of property, and there was no contention that property, while retained, depreciated in value, judgment for plaintiff for amount of costs remaining due, but not for value of property, held proper.—Delco Light Frigidaire Co. v. the trial, as discussed infra § 198, or otherwise fails to take some step required by some rule of practice or some rule of court.[7]

Where issues of fact have been joined, a judgment thereon, although defendant does not appear at the trial, is not a judgment by default;[8] but, where there has been a proper default, the taking of ex parte proof on which to base a judgment does not make the judgment other than one by default.[9] A judgment is not by default where defendant appears, files a demurrer, is present at the final hearing, and joins in submitting the cause to the court,[10] or where, after defendant's request for an adjournment is denied, he remains in court and takes part in the trial by interposing objections to questions and cross-examining witnesses.[11]

Judgment nil dicit. Nil dicit is generally the technical form of judgment to be rendered where defendant has entered a general appearance, but has failed to plead,[12] or where, having pleaded, his plea has been stricken out[13] or is withdrawn or abandoned and no further defense is made,[14] or where he elects to stand on a plea to which a demurrer has been sustained,[15] or where a plea in the nature of a motion, such as a plea of privilege, is sustained, and on transfer defendant thereafter files no other pleadings.[16] However, although some distinctions have been noted,[17] there is no material distinction, either at common law or under the statutes, between a judgment by nil dicit and a judgment by default in effect, operation, and the principles applicable thereto; and the term "judgment by default" is now usually applied to cases which, technically speaking, are judgments by nil dicit.[18] Even though the rendition of a judgment by default after the appearance of defendant when a judgment by nil dicit should have been entered, or of a judgment by nil dicit when it should have been by default, is technically erroneous, it is regarded as a mere informality or irregularity, and not a reversible error.[19]

Purpose

(1) The purpose of the entry of a "default" is to speed the cause by preventing a dilatory defendant from impeding plaintiff in the establishment of his claim, but it is not intended to furnish an advantage to plaintiff so that a defense may be defeated or a judgment reached without the difficulty that arises from a contest by defendant.—Coggin v. Barfield, 8 So.2d 9, 150 Fla. 551.

(2) The purpose of law regarding judgments by default is not to coerce defendants into answering suits, but only to provide method by which plaintiffs may obtain relief to which they are actually entitled when defendants do not answer.—Russo v. Aucoin, La.App., 7 So.2d 744.

Waiver of objections

A "judgment nihil dicit" imports waiver of all objections to service and return of process and of mere irregularities of form in stating cause of action and incidental facts, and admits cause of action stated in petition, and submission to such judgment is an abandonment of every defense known or which ordinary diligence could have disclosed.—O'Quinn v. 34 C.J. p 148 note 22 [a].

Deemed confession of action

"Judgment nihil dicit" amounts to confession of cause of action and carries with it more strongly than judgment by default, admission of justice thereof.—Evans v. McNeill, Tex.Civ.App., 41 S.W.2d 268, error dismissed—Howe v. Central State Bank of Coleman, Tex.Civ.App., 297 S.W. 692.

19. Ill.—Mann v. Brown, 105 N.E. 328, 263 Ill. 394.
34 C.J. p 148 note 24.

Where defendant puts in his plea and issue is joined, and he then fails to appear at the trial, nil dicit is not the proper form of judgment to be entered, for he is not in default for want of an answer.[20] At common law there is also a form called judgment by "non sum informatus," which is rendered where, instead of pleading, defendant's attorney declares that he "is not informed" of any answer or defense to be made.[21]

Non prosequitur. Where plaintiff refuses or fails, without a sufficient excuse therefor, to take in due time any of those steps in the proceedings that he is required to take, in some jurisdictions a judgment of non prosequitur or non pros. may be taken against him,[22] although, as appears in Dismissal and Nonsuit § 65, such circumstances generally warrant a judgment of dismissal for want of prosecution. The judgment of non pros. is said to be in effect a judgment by default for laches.[23]

Not favored. Since the policy of the law is to have every litigated case tried on its merits, judgments by default are not favored,[24] and, as such a judgment deprives defendant of substantial rights, it is lawful only when duly authorized.[25]

§ 188. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions

Statutes governing default judgments are to be strictly construed.

In accordance with the principle stated supra § 187, that judgments by default are not favored in law, statutes governing default judgments are to be strictly construed.[26]

§ 189. Actions in Which Authorized

The actions in which default judgments are authorized depend on the provisions of the statutes, and may include or be restricted to actions of contract for the recovery of money or damages, or to actions on instruments in writing for the payment of money.

A "judgment by default" is technically and strictly applicable only to actions arising under the common law,[27] but the term is generally applied to like judgments taken in statutory or special proceedings,[28] such as on a motion.[29] Under some statutes the right to take judgment by default, or for want of an affidavit of defense, is restricted to actions of contract, or arising ex contractu,[30] for the recovery of money or damages,[31] and does not include

actions for damages founded on a tort;[32] but in other jurisdictions default judgments in actions for damages founded on tort have been allowed.[33] Also under some statutes the right to take a default judgment does not include an action in which the relief to be afforded on default is to be ascertained by a jury or by the judge.[34] Still other statutory provisions restrict the remedy to actions on instruments in writing for the payment of money,[35] and require that such instrument, a copy of which must be attached to the affidavit, show a definite amount due.[36] Under a statute permitting an action to be maintained for a debt or liability not yet due, as where defendant is about to depart from the state or conceal his assets, a default judgment to become effective on maturity of the debt is authorized.[37] An objection that a default judgment may not be taken in a suit in equity is of no avail where distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity have been abolished.[38] In an action for a declaratory judgment, judgment by default will not be allowed, and formal proof must be presented.[39] Where the action is commenced by capias, there cannot at common law be a judgment for default of appearance.[40]

Action on life insurance policy. It has been held that the amount claimed on a life insurance policy is a liquidated amount, which may be verified by affidavit and on which a judgment by default may be rendered,[41] and that, where the payment of the premium is alleged, and there is judgment by default, it is not necessary to prove such payment;[42] but it has also been held that a life insurance policy is not such an instrument in writing for the payment of money as will permit a judgment by default for want of an affidavit of defense to be taken thereon, since the happening or performance of the contingencies on which the policy is to become due, such as the death of the insured, furnishing proofs of death, etc., do not appear from the face of the policy.[43]

Action on fire insurance policy. It has been held, under statutes relating to judgment by default, that an action on a fire insurance policy is for the recovery of money only, although the damages demanded are unliquidated,[44] but that it is not an action founded on an instrument ascertaining plaintiff's demand.[45] Some courts have held that a fire insurance policy is an instrument for the payment of money;[46] but other courts have held the contrary where the policy contains a provision for prorating liability in case of concurrent insurance.[47]

§ 190. In Whose Favor Default May Be Taken

A judgment by default can be rendered only in favor of a party to the action.

In accordance with the general rule, stated supra § 28, that no valid judgment can be rendered for or against one who is not a party to the action, a judgment by default can be rendered only in favor of a person who is a party to the action,[48] and not in

(2) As an action for damages for a buyer's refusal to accept goods is one on a contract for the payment of money, it is within the statute providing for default judgment in suit on contract, express or implied, for the payment of money.—Orsinger v. Plaintiff not entitled to sue

A foreign administratrix who was not entitled under Kentucky statute to maintain action for conversion in Kentucky federal district court was not entitled to a judgment by default favor of one who is not such a party[49] unless he is made a party by an order of the court.[50]

Deceased plaintiff. A judgment rendered by default in a suit instituted in the name of a dead person is not void, but merely erroneous, where defendant is duly served but fails to appear and defend.[51]

Codefendant becoming plaintiff. One who is originally a defendant, but afterward, by leave of court, becomes a plaintiff and files a cross bill, is not entitled to a default judgment against his codefendants, if they had no notice of his cross bill or that he had changed his status in the case.[52]

§ 191. Against Whom Default May Be Taken

a. In general
b. Codefendants

a. In General

Ordinarily a default judgment may be taken only against persons who are properly named or described as parties in the complaint.

As a general rule a judgment by default may be taken against such persons only as are properly named or described as parties in the complaint[53] and who have appeared or been properly served with process,[54] and not against persons who are not so named or described[55] although they have been served with process,[56] nor against persons who are not otherwise made parties to the action.[57]

Name. A judgment by default should be taken against defendant in his real name,[58] and a judgment taken against a person sued and served by a fictitious name is irregular[59] unless the declaration or complaint is amended by the insertion of his true name.[60]

Persons in military or naval service. Under various federal and state statutes enacted during the war to extend protection to the civil rights of persons in the military and naval service, before entering a judgment by default plaintiff is required in certain cases to file an affidavit showing that defendant is not in such service,[61] or, in the absence of such affidavit, to secure an order of court directing such entry.[62] Such a judgment without such an affidavit, however, has been held not absolutely void, but voidable only.[63] Under the provision that a judgment rendered against a person in the military service, who was prejudiced in his defense by reason of such service, may be opened to permit such person to put in his defense, the judgment so rendered is not void but voidable,[64] and may be challenged only by the person against whom it was rendered.[65] The statute does not prevent the rendi-

Intervener

A voluntary intervener, in an action in claim and delivery for possession of an automobile, cannot complain that plaintiff, by obtaining possession under a statute and then dismissing his complaint, subjected himself to judgment without pleadings for the return of the property to defendant, since such intervener is not affected by proceedings between the original parties, both adverse to him.—Sanders v. Ratification

Even though original action in replevin was filed without knowledge or consent of named plaintiff, such plaintiff would be bound by default judgment therein if it ratified the action, and ratification could be inferred if plaintiff remained silent when, according to ordinary experience, it should have spoken if it did not consent.—Hanover Fire Ins. tion of a judgment against a person in the military service who was in default before his enlistment.[66]

Deceased defendant. Where defendant dies after default and before the execution of a writ of inquiry or other proceedings for final judgment, a final judgment cannot be entered thereon[67] unless the action is revived against his personal representative.[68]

b. Codefendants

(1) In general
(2) Where some only default
(3) Want of service on some defendants
(4) Successful defense by some defendants

(1) In General

Where all defendants jointly sued and served default, a default judgment cannot be entered against some without discontinuing as to the others.

Where all of several defendants who are jointly sued and served with process are equally in default, a judgment by default cannot be entered against some of them only[69] without discontinuing as to the others.[70]

(2) Where Some Only Default

At common law, if some defendants default, a separate final judgment cannot be entered against them alone; and while under statutes such a judgment is proper in some cases it is not permitted where the defendants are jointly liable.

As is discussed supra § 34, at common law, and in the absence of statute otherwise, where several defendants are joined in an action ex contractu, and all are brought before the court by service or appearance, plaintiff must recover against all or none. In accordance with this rule, if some defendants default, a final judgment in favor of plaintiff can be entered only against all defendants,[71] and a several judgment cannot be entered against those only who have defaulted[72] or against that defendant alone who has answered.[73] In such a case there may be entered an interlocutory judgment of default against the defaulting defendant,[74] but a final judgment cannot be entered on the default until the issue as to the other defendants is successfully disposed of.[75]

Under statutes. As discussed supra § 33, in some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that in actions regularly commenced against several joint defendants the court may, whenever a several judgment would be proper, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others. Under these statutes, where the rights or liabilities of a portion of the codefendants who are in default is several, or joint and several, plaintiff may take a separate judgment by default against them and proceed to a determination of the issues as against defendants who appear and answer,[76] and, as appears infra subdivision b (4) of this section this rule applies although defendant who sets up a separate defense establishes it, and judgment is rendered in his favor, and although separate interlocutory judgments by default are entered against the defaulting defendants severally at different periods and on separate service of process.[77] However, even under such statute, if the claim is on a joint liability, no final judgment by de-

Convenience as controlling

Where there are several defendants, the trial court may, as convenience dictates, render judgment by default against nonappearing parties before final hearing, or await the trial and render appropriate judgment as to all parties at that time. —Ex parte Mason, 104 So. 523, 213 Ala. 279.

In condemnation proceedings the highway commission's failure to enter default of one or more nonappearing defendants did not render judgment void as to defendant who appeared and contested case, since the only effect of entering the default would be to bar the defaulted parties from participating in further proceedings.—State v. Whitcomb, 22 P.2d 823, 94 Mont. 415.

77. Md.—Loney v. Bailey, 43 Md. 10.

fault can be entered until the issues raised against the other defendants are finally disposed of;[78] nor can a judgment by default be entered against a defendant who is only secondarily liable, until a successful termination of the suit against defendant primarily liable.[79] A judgment by default cannot be entered against persons who, being necessary parties by virtue of having the same interests as plaintiff, are brought into the action as defendants.[80]

Discontinuance as to some. Where one or more of several joint defendants who are jointly liable default, plaintiff cannot discontinue or dismiss his action as to one defendant and take judgment by default against the others,[81] or discontinue the action as to the ones who have defaulted and proceed to judgment against the others,[82] unless the one as to whom the discontinuance is had has pleaded a matter going to his personal discharge,[83] or unless the cause of action is joint and several.[84]

(3) Want of Service on Some Defendants

Where some of several joint defendants are not served, a default judgment cannot, in the absence of statute, be rendered against any of them; but some statutes permit judgment in such case to be entered against the defendants who were served provided the liability is several.

Since, as discussed infra § 192, a legal judgment by default cannot be rendered against a defendant who has neither appeared nor been duly served with notice of the suit, where one or more of several joint defendants has not been properly served with process or appeared, a judgment by default, in the absence of statute, cannot be rendered against any of them.[85] Under appropriate statutes, however, if the codefendants are severally liable, judgment by default may be entered against defendants who have been served with process, and have defaulted, without regard to the other defendants.[86] It has been held that a joint judgment against all, where some have been served irregularly or not at all, is not entirely void;[87] it is erroneous merely, and accordingly valid as to the person served, at least on collateral attack,[88] although it may be reversed on appeal or error[89] or, if it comes within the rules considered infra § 334, set aside on a proper application in the court below. Under some joint debtor acts, judgment by default may be taken against all joint defendants, although only some are served, and the judgment will be good as against the joint property of all, and the separate property of those served.[90] A judgment in favor of one defendant against another cannot be entered on the default of the latter, unless he had notice and opportunity to defend as against his codefendant.[91]

(4) Successful Defense by Some Defendants

A successful defense by one defendant on a ground not personal to himself inures to the benefit of his defaulting codefendant so as to bar a judgment against him; but the rule may be otherwise where the cause of action is joint and several.

Where one defendant suffers a default, while the other pleads and goes to trial and defends successfully on a ground not personal to himself, his success will inure to the benefit of the defaulting defendant, and judgment must be rendered for both,[92] and in such a case it is erroneous to render a judgment for defendants who have successfully defended the action and against those who have defaulted.[93] Under some statutes, where the cause of action is joint and several, judgment may be taken against defendant who defaults, although it

§ 192. Jurisdiction in General

a. In general
b. Obtaining jurisdiction of defendant

a. In General

Jurisdiction of the defendant and of the subject matter is essential to the validity of a default judgment.

As in the case of judgments generally, it is essential to the validity of a judgment by default that the court rendering the judgment have jurisdiction of defendant[96] and of the subject matter;[97] and, as is discussed infra subdivision b of this section, in order to have such jurisdiction there must have been either due service of process on defendant or a valid appearance by him or on his behalf. If the court has jurisdiction of the defendant and of the subject matter, and there are no fatal defects in the proceedings, the court has jurisdiction to enter judgment by default.[98] Jurisdiction of the court to enter a default judgment is not affected by the fact that the judgment is excessive, where the excessiveness is due to defendant's default.[99]

b. Obtaining Jurisdiction of Defendant

(1) In general
(2) Process
(3) Service
(4) Appearance

(1) In General

In order to support a default judgment, the defendant must be properly served with due process or voluntarily appear.

In order for the court to obtain the jurisdiction of the defendant essential to support a judgment by default, defendant must be properly served with due process or notice, or must voluntarily appear in person or by attorney.[1] Mere knowledge of the pendency of the suit,[2] and even the attendance on court,[3] will not support a default judgment. If the court's jurisdiction of defendant has been obtained by due process, a default judgment ordinarily is not void for failure to give defendant notice of subsequent proceedings in the cause,[4] but there is also

(2) Process

A default judgment is void if the process does not conform to essential statutory requirements.

A judgment by default is void where the process does not substantially conform to essential statutory requirements.[6] Thus a default judgment is void where the notice, although bearing the proper caption, is not properly addressed to defendant,[7] or where the notice, writ, or summons is not properly subscribed.[8] So too a default judgment is void where it is based on a citation which does not sufficiently conform to the statutory requirements,[9] as where it fails to name all the parties,[10] or fails properly to state the nature of plaintiff's demand[11] or the date when plaintiff's petition was filed,[12] or where it summons defendant to appear on an impossible date[13] or at a time or term not designated by law[14] or at a place other than the one designated by law,[15] or where it is erroneously or insufficiently directed to the officer for service,[16] or where it directs the officer to summon someone other than

Statute is mandatory
The courts have uniformly held that the requirements of the statute as to what shall be stated in a citation are mandatory and that, in the absence of such essential compliance, a judgment by default will not be sustained.—Nueces Hardware & Implement Co. v. Jecker, Tex.Civ. App., 56 S.W.2d 474—Wyman v. American Mortg. Corporation, Tex. Civ.App., 45 S.W.2d 629—Tyner v. Glass, Tex.Civ.App., 27 S.W.2d 916—Martinez v. "And wife"
A citation commanding an officer to summon a named defendant "and wife" was insufficient to support judgment by default against either of defendants, since it was not in compliance with statutes requiring names of all parties to be stated.—Brecheen v. Wink Independent School Dist., Tex.Civ.App., 89 S.W.2d 293—Brecheen v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 89 S.W.2d 259.

"Et ux"

"Special term"
Where process was void because it directed defendant to appear at unauthorized and nonexistent "special term" of county court to be held in December, fact that case was tried at following regular term of court would not avail as ground for not setting aside judgment by default.—Mosaic Templars of America v. Gaines, Tex.Civ.App., 265 S.W. 721.

defendant.[17] However, mere irregularities in the form of process, provided they do not violate essential requirements of the statute, have been held not to render a default judgment absolutely void.[18]

(3) Service

Proper service of process on the defendant is essential to the validity of a default judgment, and there must be a substantial compliance with statutory provisions as to return and proof of service.

To authorize a default judgment, process must be properly served on defendant in the manner prescribed by statute.[19] If defendant is not served, a default judgment taken against him is void;[20] and the same is true where service on defendant is radically defective.[21] Thus a default judgment is void where it is based on service of process by one without authority,[22] or where service is made on a third person instead of on the actual defendant[23] or on one not a proper agent to receive service of process.[24] However, mere irregularities in the manner of service, provided they do not violate the essential requirements of the statute, do not render a default judgment void.[25]

Alias citation

Where citations issued by county clerk of county in which plaintiffs' pleadings alleged parties to be served resided were returned with notation that president who was sued with corporation could not be found, but that he was living in county seat of another county, alias citations issued by same county clerk to sheriff or constable of other county formed sufficient basis for default judgment.—Artex Refining Co. v. Pollard & Lawrence, Tex.Civ.App., 124 S.W.2d 946.

17. Tex.—Fort Worth Lloyds v. Johnson, Civ.App., 129 S.W.2d 1157.

Officer of corporation

Citation commanding officer to summon secretary and treasurer of defendant corporation to answer and appear, instead of commanding him to summon the corporation itself, will not sustain default judgment against corporation.—Temple Lumber Co. v. McDaniel, Tex.Civ.App., 24 S.W.2d 518.

Service too late

In special proceeding for sale of land to pay debts of decedent's estate, service of summons on defendants over thirty days after its issuance was insufficient to bind them by default judgment, in absence of waiver of service within statutory period of ten days after issuance of summons or voluntary appearance.—Green v. Chrismon, 28 S.E.2d 215, 223 N.C. 724.

Writ of capias

Court had no jurisdiction to enter judgment by default against defendant, against whom writ of capias was issued, where defendant escaped from custody of sheriff immediately on his arrest, since service under writ of capias is incomplete without production of defendant in court to answer or his release on bail.—Oliver v. Wrong state official

Service of process on secretary of state when statute requires service on commissioner of insurance does not support a default judgment.—Order of Calanthe v. Armstrong, 62 So. 269, 7 Ala.App. 378.

25. Ariz.—Noonan v. Montgomery.

Personal service. In the absence of any statutory provision authorizing substituted or constructive service, process must be personally served in order to support a judgment by default.[26]

Constructive or substituted service. A valid personal judgment by default cannot be predicated on substituted or constructive or extraterritorial service on a nonresident.[27] In the absence of personal service within the state or a voluntary appearance by defendant, a default judgment against a nonresident is void unless property or credits belonging to him within the state have been brought within the jurisdiction of the court by provisional process,[28] such as attachment and levy[29] or garnishment proceedings,[30] or unless the action involves title to real property within the court's territorial jurisdiction.[31] Where such property of a nonresident defendant is or has been so brought within the jurisdiction of the court, a default judgment may be taken against him on the basis of constructive or extraterritorial service;[32] but such a judgment is void if the method of attempted notice to defendant is insufficient to constitute due process[33] or does not comply substantially with the statutory requirements as to notice.[34] Even where there have been proper constructive service and attachment and levy, a default judgment cannot be enforced against a nonresident personally; the judgment is effective only against the property attached.[35] Mere irregularities in the manner of service by publication, not going to the substance of the statutory requirements concerning notice, will not render the judgment void.[36]

Return and proof. In the absence of a general appearance by defendant, the fact of due and proper service of the process must appear on the record,[37] as by the officer's return or proof of service.[38] It has been held that a valid judgment by default cannot be taken when there is no return by the officer serving the writ,[39] or when the return or other proof is radically faulty or defective,[40] as where it does not conform to essential statutory

(1) Under some statutes where garnishment proceedings are invoked as a basis for substituted service, a default judgment may be rendered against the principal defendant when the default occurs, even though the substituted service and default must both fail if it subsequently develops that the garnishee actually holds no property of defendant.—Herd v. Chambers, supra.

(2) Under other statutes it has been held that, where defendant is served only by publication, and no property seized, it is improper to render judgment by default against him before finding that garnishee possesses property belonging to defendant, since the court will have no jurisdiction over defendant unless garnishee possesses such property.—Riley Pennsylvania Oil Co. v. Filing with clerk

Since there was no statute absolutely requiring the sheriff's return to be filed with the clerk, failure of the sheriff so to file it did not prevent default judgment, in view of the presumption that the return was exhibited to the court before judgment.—Rhyne v. Missouri State Life Ins. Co., Tex.Com.App., 291 S.W. 845.

requirements[41] or fails to show a legal service of the writ;[42] but there is authority for the view that a faulty or defective return or proof of service,[43] or even complete absence of return or proof of service,[44] does not of itself render a default judgment void if due service actually was had, since it is the fact of service, and not the return or proof thereof that gives the court jurisdiction.[45] It is generally agreed however, that minor irregularities or ambiguities in the return will not vitiate the judgment.[46]

(4) Appearance

A voluntary general appearance is a waiver of want or defect of process or service and will support a judgment by default.

If a defendant enters a voluntary general appearance in any action, it is a waiver of a want of process, or of any defects in the process or its service or return, and a default judgment in personam thereafter entered against him is valid and binding;[47] but it is otherwise where the appearance is special and is entered for the purpose of taking advantage of a failure of notice or defective service.[48]

Agency of person served

(1) To sustain default judgment against corporation on direct attack by appeal, officer's return must show that person served was agent on whom service was authorized.—Cain, Wolcott & Rankin v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 141 So. 686, 225 Ala. 44.

(2) If the officer's return states that the person to whom process was delivered is defendant corporation's agent, such return becomes prima facie evidence sufficient to sustain a default judgment.—Green v. Nu-Grape Co., 100 So. 84, 19 Ala.App. 663.

(3) It has also been held that a default judgment against a foreign corporation will be set aside, where petition fails to show whether agent served was local or traveling agent or traveling salesman.—Holcomb & Hoke Mfg. Co. v. Amason, Tex.Civ. App., 2 S.W.2d 360.

As substitute for process

The effect of an entry of appearance as a substitute for service of process is identical therewith; accordingly, where no judgment by default could be taken against defendant for failure to plead at the term of service, none can be taken on appearance entered at that term.—Baldwin v. McClelland, 38 N.E. 143, 152 Ill. 42.

What constitutes sufficient appearance

(1) In general.—Flowers v. Jackson, 51 S.W. 462, 66 Ark. 458—33 C. J. p 1095 note 89 [b] (1), [c].

(2) Execution of bond, not approved by clerk, to discharge attachment, was not appearance authorizing default judgment against surety. —Brenton v. Lewiston, 216 N.W. 6, 204 Iowa 892.

(3) Notation on declaration whereby defendant's attorney waived process and entered appearance during term, without attestation by clerk of court, held not to authorize default judgment.—Industrial Inv. Co. v. Standard Life Ins. Co., 149 So. 883, 170 Miss. 138.

Unauthorized appearance

Where attorney's appearance on behalf of a party was wholly unauthorized and was entered by mistake or inadvertence, a default judgment, without proper service of process, is void.—Street v. Dexter, 77 P.2d 707, 182 Okl. 360.

§ 193. Pleadings to Sustain Judgment

a. In general
b. Filing
c. Service
d. Verification and signature

a. In General

In order to sustain a judgment by default, the plaintiff's pleading must state a cause of action; otherwise the judgment will be void or at least voidable. According to some authorities, but not others, the pleading must be sufficient to withstand a general demurrer.

Since, as discussed infra § 201, a default admits only what is well pleaded, it follows that, in order to sustain a judgment by default, plaintiff's declaration, complaint, petition, or statement of claim, must allege with clearness and certainty sufficient facts to constitute a good cause of action or show a right to recover.[49] It should sufficiently name or describe the plaintiff,[50] and the defendant,[51] and their places of residence, where this is required by statute,[52] and designate, with substantial accuracy, the court in which the action is to be tried.[53] It should also demand relief against defendant.[54] If the judgment is based on constructive service of process, plaintiff's declaration must allege the facts which justify such service, if the statute so requires.[55]

Where a cross petition alleging a sufficient cause of action has been properly filed, a judgment by default may be taken by a defendant against a co-defendant[56] or against a third person,[57] but there must be a sufficient pleading to support a default judgment on such a cross action.[58]

Determination of sufficiency. According to some decisions, the declaration or complaint must be sufficient to withstand a general demurrer,[59] but other authorities have held that, although the complaint is so defective that it would be open to general demurrer, the judgment is not void, or even necessarily voidable, if the complaint contains allegations of facts sufficient to support the judgment,[60] or sufficient to apprise defendant of the nature of plaintiff's demand,[61] and that if it is good in substance it is sufficient to uphold the judgment, although there may be formal defects.[62] Conversely, if a pleading is sufficient to withstand a general demurrer, it is sufficient to support a judgment by default,[63] even though such pleading might be subject to special demurrer.[64] Indeed, it has been held that, after judgment by default, the complaint will be most liberally construed as stating a cause of action which warrants the granting of the relief prayed for.[65] In determining the sufficiency of the allegations of a cross action to support a default judgment against a third party, evidence on the trial of the action against defendant cannot aid the pleadings in the cross action.[66] Reference is made in the notes to cases in which the petition, declaration, or complaint has been held sufficient[67] or insufficient[68] to support or sustain a judgment by default.

Effect of insufficient pleading. The failure of the declaration, complaint, or petition to state a good cause of action has been held to render void a judgment by default based thereon,[69] at least where the petition wholly fails to state a cause of action[70] or where the facts alleged affirmatively show that plaintiff has no cause of action;[71] but it has generally been held that a judgment in such a case is merely erroneous and reversible on appeal[72] or subject to vacation by the trial court on motion.[73] It has also been held that, where the court has jurisdiction of the person of defendant and of the subject matter, a judgment on default is not void if the petition contains allegations sufficient to challenge the attention of the court and invoke its judicial action to determine the sufficiency thereof.[74] Where the declaration contains several counts, one of which is good, a default judgment will be sustained, although the other counts are not sufficient,[75] unless the damages

Determination of proper remedy

Default judgment on defective statement of good cause of action is erroneous and must be appealed from in order to have it set aside, but default judgment on statement which is insufficient to make out cause of action is irregular and can be set aside in reasonable time where merit is shown and there is no laches.—Hood ex rel. are assessed on all the counts.[76] Thus a judgment by default may be sustained on the common counts although a special count is objectionable;[77] or such judgment may be entered on the special count, without a discontinuance on the money counts.[78]

b. Filing

In most jurisdictions, before a valid default judgment can be entered the plaintiff's pleading must have been filed within the time required by law.

In most jurisdictions it is essential to the validity of the judgment that the declaration, petition, or complaint be filed at or within the time required by law[79] before judgment,[80] or within the time limited by order of court,[81] unless defendant waives the requirement as to the filing[82] or is estopped to raise the objection.[83] In the absence of waiver or estoppel, such a judgment is premature and erroneous if it is entered before the declaration or complaint has been on file the number of days required by statute or rule,[84] or before the declaration or complaint has been filed at all;[85] and it is not validated by a subsequent filing.[86] In some jurisdictions, however, the fact that the declaration or complaint is not filed within the required time does not affect a judgment by default,[87] especially where defendant might have moved for a dismissal because of the delay in filing, but failed to avail himself of that remedy.[88]

Filing instrument. Under some statutes it is also essential that a written instrument on which the action is brought, or a copy thereof, be filed with the declaration, in order to sustain a judgment by default,[89] unless such instrument constitutes a part of the records of the court,[90] but under other statutes the filing of such instruments or copies is not required.[91]

Where pleading lost. Where plaintiff's declaration, complaint, or petition has been lost, together with the writ of summons, plaintiff cannot file a new petition and take a judgment by default without first supplying the lost record by a proper proceeding taken on notice to defendant.[92]

c. Service

Where the statutes so provide, a copy of the plaintiff's pleading or a notice of rule to plead must be served on the defendant in order to sustain a default judgment.

Under some statutes it is essential that a copy of the declaration, complaint, or petition be served on defendant at or within a specified time,[93] or that he be served with notice of rule to plead,[94] unless such service is waived.[95] However, where defendant is allowed to come in and plead after a default is taken, he is bound to plead, and, if he does not do so, judgment by default may be taken against him, although he is not served with a copy of the declaration.[96]

(2) However, where the default is based on want of appearance, service of the statement of claim is not required, it being sufficient that the statement is on file before judgment is entered.—Smith v. Bergdoll, 159 A. 462, 104 Pa.Super. 49.

d. Verification and Signature

Under some statutes it is necessary, in order to sustain a judgment by default, that the complaint should be properly verified,[97] or be accompanied by plaintiff's affidavit showing the nature of his demand and the amount due,[98] but it has been held that the want of a proper verification is a mere irregularity which will not avoid the judgment.[99] Although under some statutes it is necessary that the petition or complaint be signed by plaintiff or his attorney in order to support a default judgment,[1] it has been held that the fact that it was not so signed, if not objected to on this ground, does not render a default judgment thereon either void or voidable.[2]

Where the complaint is amended in a matter of substance after default, a valid default judgment cannot be entered on the amended pleading unless the defendant is duly notified of the amendment and given opportunity to plead.

Where the declaration or complaint is amended in a matter of substance after defendant has defaulted, the amendment opens the case in default, as discussed infra § 338, and a valid default judgment cannot thereafter be entered on the amended pleading[3] unless the defaulting defendant is properly notified of or served with the amended pleading and given an opportunity to plead, and then fails to do so within the proper time.[4] Where, however, the amendment is not as to a matter of substance, but only as to an immaterial or formal matter, notice or service of the amendment is not necessary before entering judgment by default;[5] neither is such notice or service required as to an amendment which is not a voluntary one, but is made by order of court on the motion of defendant,[6] or as to parties who are brought into the case at the instance of defendant and against whom plaintiff does not seek to recover.[7] It has also been held that, in the absence of statute or rule so requiring, a defendant who has been summoned but has not yet been put in default need not be resummoned or notified of a subsequent amendment to the

Verification requiring verified answer
Where verification of the complaint calls for a verified answer, verification by a corporate plaintiff's attorney who resided in a county other than that of plaintiff, was held not sufficient to authorize judgment by default for failure to interpose a verified answer.—Geo. H. Storm & Co. v. G. Migliore & Sons, 224 N.Y.S. 271, 130 Misc. 654.

Verification by attorney

Duty of court
Before entering default judgment after amendment of pleadings, trial court should examine the pleadings and ascertain whether amendments were so substantial as to constitute waiver of default.—Bley v. Dessin, 87 P.2d 889, 31 Cal.App.2d 338.

Against codefendant
Failure to serve on adverse parties amended answers whereunder for first time affirmative relief, based on adverse claims, is sought against codefendant who has previously defaulted, precludes acquisition of binding additional adverse rights thereunder.—Gutleben v. complaint, if the amendment is such as supports the original cause of action.[8]

Bringing in new party. If, pending the action, a new party is brought in as defendant, he cannot be defaulted unless the complaint is amended, or a new complaint filed against him,[9] and he has been given an opportunity to appear and plead.[10] The summons cannot be changed after defendant's default by bringing in a new plaintiff and giving him a judgment.[11]

Judgment before amendment. Where judgment by default is entered, before an amendment is made, based on the original complaint, it is unnecessary to serve the amended complaint on defendant as to such default;[12] but, where plaintiff is required to amend his pleading, he cannot enter a default judgment before the amendment is made.[13]

Against plaintiff. The fact that a cause of action alleged in the original complaint is omitted in the amended one is no ground for entering default against plaintiff as to the omitted cause of action.[14]

§ 195. Grounds for Judgment

The defendant should not be considered in default except on some definite and sufficient ground.

Since, as stated supra § 187, judgments by default are not favored, defendant should not be considered in default except on some definite and sufficient ground;[15] he must have violated or disregarded some statute,[16] order,[17] rule of court,[18] or stipulation of the parties,[19] and even then he should not be considered in default if a good excuse for such violation is shown.[20] It is not usually ground for a judgment by default that defendant has failed to obey an order which the court has no power to make.[21] It is also erroneous to enter a judgment by default where a judgment of nonsuit appears on the record as still subsisting.[22] Where defendant pleads in abatement, and no replication is filed, his failure to move for a judgment of non pros. does not authorize the entry of a judgment against him.[23]

§ 196. —— Default of Appearance

Judgment by default may be taken against a defendant who fails to enter an appearance within the proper time after being duly served with process.

Where defendant has been duly served with process, and fails to enter his appearance within the proper time, plaintiff may take judgment by default.[24] Such a judgment, however, cannot be rendered if defendant has made a formal entry of appearance[25] or its equivalent,[26] or has taken any step in the proceedings which unequivocally shows that he submits himself generally to the jurisdiction of the court.[27] Where plaintiff's failure to proceed justifies the conclusion that he has abandoned the suit, a judgment by default cannot be grounded on defendant's failure to appear.[28]

A special appearance[29] entered for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the court,[30] or to make a motion to dissolve an attachment,[31] or for a continuance,[32] is generally held not to be such an appearance as will prevent a judgment by default, but there is also authority to the contrary;[33] and it has been held that, on a special appearance for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the court, it is error to enter a default judgment without a hearing and ruling on the objection.[34]

Appearance by attorney. If defendant's appearance is entered by an attorney, in order that it may be such as will prevent a judgment by default for want of appearance, it must be made by formal notice of his retainer and appearance[35] or by the filing of a pleading.[36] If defendant has not been properly served with process, judgment by default cannot be entered against him on an unauthorized appearance by an attorney;[37] but, where defendant has been properly served with process, an unauthorized appearance for him by an attorney does not prevent such a judgment from being entered against him.[38]

As discussed in Appearances § 30, the withdrawal of defendant's appearance, after pleading, works a withdrawal of his plea or answer, and a judgment by default may thereafter be entered on his default as on nonappearance.[39] If the attorney who has entered an appearance for defendant withdraws his appearance, before further proceedings are had, judgment by default for want of an appearance may then be taken.[40] And the absence of an order permitting the withdrawal cannot be complained of by defendant, as the subsequent entry of judgment is a ratification by the court of the withdrawal.[41] However, the withdrawal of the attorney's appearance after the filing of a plea does not withdraw the plea so as to justify a judgment by default;[42] and, where an attorney abandons his client's cause without notice, the client should be given a reasonable time to secure other counsel before judgment is taken against him by default.[43] Under some statutes, where an attorney is permitted to withdraw the answer and his appearance for defendant who fails to appear further, and no attempt is made by plaintiff to substitute counsel, or to notify defendant to do so, judgment cannot be taken against defendant.[44]

§ 198. —— Absence from Trial or Other Proceeding

As a general rule a default judgment may be taken on defendant's failure to appear for the trial after issues have been joined, but plaintiff has been required to establish his cause of action before such default judgment is entered.

As a general rule, judgment by default may be entered on defendant's failure to appear, after issue has been joined, when the case is called for trial.[45] However, in some jurisdictions defendant's mere failure, after issue has been joined, to attend when the case is called for trial is not by itself sufficient grounds for taking judgment by default,[46] at least where defendant had not been given notice of trial[47] or has some other good excuse for his absence.[48] Before plaintiff is entitled to judgment in such a case, he must establish his cause of action,[49] unless the facts admitted by the answer[50] or other pleas[51] make out a prima facie case in his favor; and the proper course, in some jurisdictions, is to call defendant and, on his failure to appear, to proceed to trial, on which plaintiff must present evidence in support of his demands;[52] or plaintiff may be allowed to proceed to take an inquest and enter judgment thereon.[53] Conversely, if plaintiff fails to appear or proceed, under some statutes defendant may proceed with the case and judgment may be rendered on the merits;[54] but under others defendant cannot recover judgment on plaintiff's cause of action where plaintiff fails to appear at trial[55] and defendant has pleaded only defensive matters.[56] If defendant files a set-off or counterclaim and plaintiff fails to appear, defendant may proceed with the trial of the set-off or counterclaim.[57]

Pending imprisonment. Where after issue is joined one party is sentenced to prison, the other party may proceed in the action and take judgment by default.[58]

(1) General Rules

A default judgment may be entered against a defendant who, having been duly served with process, fails to demur, plead, or answer properly.

Where process has been duly served on defendant, and plaintiff has filed a good declaration or complaint, judgment as by default may be entered against defendant if he fails to demur, plead, or answer properly[59] within the required time, as discussed infra subdivision a (3) of this section. The rule applies notwithstanding defendant has entered an appearance in the action,[60] or has demanded a trial by jury;[61] but defendant's failure to answer will not support a judgment by default where the undisputed evidence shows that he is not liable to plaintiff.[62]

Sufficiency of pleading to prevent default. To prevent a judgment by default on this ground it is generally held that defendant's plea or answer must be in writing,[63] and be properly signed[64] and verified, where verification is required by statute,[65] although, under some statutes, it has been held that, unless plaintiff takes steps to have an unverified answer removed or stricken, judgment by default is

Consolidation of cross suit
Plaintiffs were held not entitled to judgment by reason of defendant's failure to file answer, where action had been treated by all parties as consolidated with cross suit.—Rowe v. Arnett, 45 S.W.2d 12, 241 Ky. 768.

Answer of codefendant
(1) Ordinarily, the answer of a codefendant will not prevent the taking of a default judgment against defendant who does not answer.—Kunsky-Trendle Broadcasting Corporation v. Kent Circuit Judge, 275 N. W. 175, 281 Mich. 667.

(2) However, where the answer of a codefendant was treated by defendants and the court as having been filed on behalf of both defendants, the entry of a default judgment against the nonanswering defendant was properly refused.—Thomas v. Williams, 49 P.2d 557, 173 Okl. 601.

Constructive service
Where service of process on each of defendants was constructive only, refusal of district court to quash that service imposed no duty on part of defendants personally to answer in the cause in order to avoid personal judgments by default.—Kimbel v. Osborn, Wyo., 156 P.2d 279.

improper.[66] It must also be filed in the particular action,[67] and must be responsive to, and join issue on, the pleadings which defendant is bound to answer.[68]

Failure to answer interrogatories. Under some statutes a party may take a judgment by default on the opposing party's failure to answer interrogatories filed.[69] However, the fact that the answers are deemed insufficient or evasive does not authorize the court to enter a default without further proceedings;[70] it should fix a time within which further answers may be filed, in order that the time of default, if they are not filed, may be definitely known.[71] After an answer to the merits, plaintiff may not take judgment by default because defendant neglects to answer interrogatories which are taken for confessed, but may avail himself only of the confession as proved on the trial.[72]

(2) Rule or Notice to Plead

Where defendant is not required to plead until ruled to do so, he ordinarily may be put in default when, and only when, he has been duly served with rule to plead and has failed to comply.

Where defendant fails to enter an appearance, plaintiff is entitled to judgment by default without serving or posting any rule to plead on him,[73] but, where defendant has appeared and the practice or circumstances of the case are such that he is not obliged to plead unless he is ruled to do so, he cannot be put in default and judgment entered against him, unless a rule to plead is taken out and properly served on him, requiring him to plead,[74] or unless he waives his right to have plaintiff take out such a rule,[75] as where he agrees to go to trial without requiring the issues to be completed.[76] If, after the proper service or notice of such rule, defendant fails to plead or answer within the appointed time, judgment may be taken against him as for want of a plea,[77] although it has been held that a plea filed after the day fixed by the rule will not be too late, where it is filed before a default is asked for and ordered,[78] or where no delay is occasioned by his failure to plead within the prescribed time.[79] The sufficiency of the plea or answer on a rule to plead must be determined by the court,[80] and not by plaintiff.[81] Apart from the question of the propriety or necessity of a rule to plead to put defendant in default, it has been held in at least one jurisdiction that the court cannot make and enforce an order requiring defendant to plead, answer, or demur, since defendant has an absolute right to stand in default.[82]

When rule not required. A rule requiring defendant to plead, before the entry of a default, is not required where the time to plead is limited by statute or rule of court,[83] or where a rule for judgment for want of sufficient pleading has been argued and leave granted to file a supplemental pleading;[84] nor may such a rule be given and judgment entered on it for want of a plea, after a plea has been entered and the cause remanded to the rules.[85]

Motion to dismiss
Defendant's motion to dismiss petition for want of security for costs was not a "pleading" preventing a default judgment for want of an answer or demurrer.—Morrison v. Baker, Ohio App., 58 N.E.2d 708.

Motion for bill of particulars
Motion to require plaintiff to set forth particulars of claim for services is not a demurrer, but is within statute as to bill of particulars, and judgment by default is proper after removal of motion from calender for want of appearance.—Butler v. Loss of pleading. Where, after the cause is at issue, the records and files of the court are destroyed and plaintiff files a new declaration under his affidavit that he has substantial copies of the papers which had been filed, judgment by default may not be entered against defendant because of his failure to comply with a rule of the court to plead;[86] in such a case the court can do no more than allow plaintiff to supply the plea.[87]

(3) Time for Pleading

Judgment by default cannot properly be taken until the time for pleading has expired and defendant has failed to plead within that time.

Defendant cannot be put in default for failure to plead or answer before the expiration of the time allowed to him for filing his plea or answer,[88] and, as discussed infra § 207, a judgment by default entered against him before the expiration of that time is irregular and voidable at his instance. However judgment by default may be entered, if defendant fails to plead or make up issues as the law requires, within the time limited by statute or rule of court,[89] or within the time limited by an order extending the time to plead,[90] unless such order is revoked, in which case judgment may be taken for a failure to plead within the time originally required.[91] Defendant cannot escape the consequences of his default by filing an answer or plea after the expiration of the time allowed,[92] unless it is filed by consent of plaintiff[93] or leave of court,[94] or unless, in some jurisdictions, it is filed before the entry of the default.[95]

Excuse for delay. The filing of a plea or answer after the time allowed therefor may be sufficient to prevent a judgment by default, where there is a legal and sufficient excuse for the delay,[96] as where

Attorney's inadvertence

Even though it does not constitute a legally sufficient excuse, the court should not summarily deny defendant a hearing where he is caught unawares through attorney's inadvertence and no harm can result from trial on merits.—Tonkel v. Williams, 112 So. 368, 146 Miss. 842.

the delay is due to the action of the court,[97] or is attributable to plaintiff's own fault or irregular action in the case,[98] or the grant of further time in which to plead,[99] or a delay in the mails,[1] unless such delay is due to defendant's own fault.[2]

Whole of last day. Defendant has the whole of the last day of the time limited in which to plead, and cannot be put in default until that day has fully expired,[3] and, if the last day falls on a Sunday or holiday, he is entitled to the whole of the next succeeding day.[4]

Pleading and judgment on same day. Where defendant's pleading is filed on the same day on which judgment by default is entered, the court may consider fractions of the day for the purpose of determining whether or not the plea or answer was actually filed before the judgment was rendered.[5] In some jurisdictions it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the pleading was first in point of time, and the judgment, therefore, erroneous.[6] In other jurisdictions, however, the presumption is that the judgment was first in point of time;[7] and, if the default is taken in good faith, and without knowledge of the pleading, it will be upheld as regular,[8] although it was in fact taken after the plea or answer was served,[9] especially where the plea or answer was held back for the purpose of delay.[10]

b. Answering Amended Pleadings

Where plaintiff substantially amends his pleading, default judgment usually may be taken against defendant if he fails to file a new or amended plea within the required time, provided he is properly served with, or notified of, the amended pleading.

Where plaintiff amends his declaration or complaint so as to change the cause of action, or add a new one and thereby abandons the original issues, judgment by default may be taken against defendant if he fails to file a new or amended answer or plea within the time allowed therefor,[11] notwithstanding the original answer or plea is still on file,[12] unless defendant is not properly served with, or notified of, the amended pleading,[13] or ordered to plead thereto,[14] for after an amendment, without notice, defendant may be defaulted only as to matters alleged in the original complaint and not as to matters alleged in the amended complaint.[15] This rule, however, does not apply where the amendment is merely to formal or immaterial matters, and does not change the cause of action,[16] unless the original plea or answer has been withdrawn;[17] nor does it apply where the original plea or answer set forth a sufficient defense to the declaration or complaint as

Construction of extension
An indefinite agreement between parties' attorneys for extension of time to file answer should not be construed by counsel technically or strictly in taking of default judgment, so as to deprive defendant unjustly of his rights, but should be construed in spirit of professional courtesy and mutual helpfulness.—Cahaley v. amended,[18] or where no time for filing the new answer is fixed either by statute or rule or order of court.[19]

c. Answer to Part of Cause

If the answer or plea sets up a defense to only a severable part of plaintiff's cause of action, plaintiff may ordinarily take judgment by default or nil dicit for the unanswered part.

If defendant's plea or answer sets up a denial or defense to only a part of plaintiff's cause of action, severable from the rest, plaintiff may take judgment by default, or more properly by nil dicit, for the part that is unanswered,[20] and proceed to trial for the rest,[21] or he may concede the validity of the defense, as to that portion of his demand which is answered, and have judgment by default for the remainder, without trial.[22] If in such a case plaintiff at first replies or demurs, he may thereafter take judgment nil dicit at any time before final judgment on the payment of costs.[23] If, however, the plea professes to answer the whole declaration, but in fact answers a part only, it has been held that plaintiff cannot waive the objection and take judgment for the part unanswered;[24] and this rule applies where some of the pleas do and others do not answer the whole declaration.[25]

d. Filing and Serving Plea or Answer

In order to prevent a default it is generally required that defendant's plea or answer be actually and duly filed in the clerk's office.

In order to prevent a default defendant's plea or answer must ordinarily be actually and duly filed in the clerk's office[26] within the required time,[27] notwithstanding there has been an affidavit of merits,[28] and notwithstanding it has been served on plaintiff's counsel,[29] although as to this latter rule there is authority to the contrary.[30] In some jurisdictions, in addition to filing, the plea or answer must be called to the attention of the court,[31] especially where it is filed after the time for filing has expired.[32] If a plea filed to a declaration is applicable to the declaration as amended, it need not be filed again.[33]

Service. Failure to serve a copy of defendant's pleading on plaintiff or his counsel ordinarily does not warrant a judgment by default, if it has been properly filed.[34]

Demurrer

(1) Under a statute providing that, in the absence of a new plea or answer to an amended pleading, the original plea or answer shall stand and be considered as pleaded in answer to the amended pleading, a demurrer to the original declaration should be considered as made to the amended declaration.—Grand Court Order of Calanthe of North America, South America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Australia, Jurisdiction of Florida, v. Johnson, 160 So. 884, 119 Fla. 440.

(2) If such demurrer is responsive to amended declaration, court should not enter default without notice for failure to demur or plead to amended declaration.—Johnson v. City of Sebring, 140 So. 672, 104 Fla. 584.

19. Iowa.—Wright v. Howell, 24 Iowa 150.
N.Y.—Elmore v. Vallette, 16 Abb.Pr. 249.

Reasonable opportunity to plead to an amended declaration must be given defendant; hence, a default judgment entered on day on which plaintiff filed an amended declaration should be reversed.—Boone v. Miller, 133 So. 121, 160 Miss. 287.

Cross complaint

Where plaintiff files a cross complaint against interveners and serves such cross complaint on defendant, defendant's failure to answer such cross complaint does not entitle plaintiff to default judgment thereon, where defendant answered the original complaint which involved the same issues, and where court found for defendant on such issues.—Shuff v. Blazer, 152 P.2d 216, 66 Cal.App. 2d 348.

e. Affidavit of Defense or Merits

Under various statutes, judgment by default or nil dicit may be taken unless defendant duly files an affidavit of merits or an affidavit of defense in cases where they are required.

Under some statutes or rules of court, judgment by default or nil dicit may be taken against defendant unless he duly files an affidavit of merits, showing that he has a meritorious defense to the action,[35] unless, in some jurisdictions, the answer is verified.[36] Under other statutes, a judgment by default may be entered against defendant unless he files, within the required time, an affidavit of defense setting forth the facts on which he means to rely as a defense where the action is on an instrument or contract for the payment of money,[37] including an action on a contract of guaranty or suretyship,[38] a bond or recognizance,[39] a note or draft,[40] a judgment,[41] or a book account.[42] However, this requirement has no application to claims arising out of torts,[43] or where defendant is sued in a representative capacity,[44] or where, owing to the lapse of time, a presumption of payment has arisen,[45] or where there has been an award of arbitrators finding that plaintiff has no cause of action.[46]

If the defense alleged in the affidavit is good as to a part of the claim, but insufficient as to the balance, the court may direct judgment for the part insufficiently denied, and allow plaintiff to try the case as to the remainder,[47] unless the affidavit purports to apply to the whole of plaintiff's claim.[48] Under some statutes, such judgment may also be rendered for want of an affidavit of defense in an action of scire facias on a mortgage[49] or mechanic's lien.[50]

f. After Decision on Motion or Demurrer

Judgment by default or nil dicit may be taken against defendant where his motion or demurrer is overruled and, although he is given leave and the requisite opportunity to do so, he fails to plead over.

Judgment as by default or nil dicit may be rendered against defendant where he fails or refuses to plead over within the required time after a plea or motion is overruled or denied.[51] Thus a default judgment may be entered where defendant fails to plead over after a plea to the jurisdiction[52] or a plea in abatement[53] is found against him, or after his motion to quash the summons[54] or to dismiss the action[55] is overruled, or after his demurrer to plaintiff's declaration or complaint is overruled,[56] provided, in some jurisdictions, there has been a rule or order granting him leave to plead over.[57] However, until the expiration of the statutory period within which to answer, defendant cannot be put in default after the overruling of his demurrer[58] or plea[59] or denial of his motion;[60] and, where the statutes give defendant a number of days after notice of the decision in which to answer, he cannot be put in default in the absence of such notice,[61] unless he has waived it.[62]

Failure to answer an amended petition after the overruling of a demurrer thereto authorizes a judgment by default, although the answer to the original petition is on file;[63] but, where the demurrer is filed after a plea, default cannot be entered after overruling the demurrer, as the demurrer does not waive the plea.[64] Where defendant's plea of privilege is sustained and the cause is transferred and defendant files no further pleading, judgment nil dicit is authorized.[65] Where defendant's motion to strike out parts of the complaint is sustained and defendant pleads no further, plaintiff may take judgment by default if sufficient matter is left in the complaint to warrant the relief granted.[66]

Where demurrer by plaintiff sustained. Judgment by default may also be taken against defendant where plaintiff demurs to the plea or answer, and the demurrer is sustained, and defendant fails to avail himself of leave given to amend or to file a new plea or answer,[67] or fails to ask leave to amend or plead over;[68] but default judgment cannot properly be entered against defendant where plaintiff's demurrer is sustained only as to part of the answer.[69]

Where trial court had erroneously overruled demurrer to complaint wherein four causes of action were improperly united, and defendant stood on its demurrer and did not answer complaint within time allowed or make any appearance thereafter, a default judgment could not properly be entered without affording defendant opportunity to answer complaint after correction thereof to include only causes of action properly unitable.—Hartford Min. Co. v. Home Lumber & Coal Co., 114 P.2d 1091, 61 Nev. 1.

The interposition of a defective answer to which a demurrer was sustained is a failure to plead over within the meaning of the statute providing that the judgment on overruling a demurrer shall be that the party plead over and, if he fails so to do, judgment shall be rendered against him as on a default.—McKinney v. Default judgment for failure to amend pleading within period granted by court on sustaining demurrer thereto would not be reversed for lack of notice where counsel was in courtroom at time leave to amend was given, since court, which had power to refuse plea to amend, had lesser power to permit amendment without notice under circumstances.—Provo City v. Against plaintiff. Judgment as by default may be taken against plaintiff where he fails or refuses to plead over after the overruling of his demurrer to the answer, which contains a sufficient defense,[70] or a plea of set-off or recoupment,[71] or after a demurrer to the complaint is sustained.[72]

g. Failure to Reply or Rejoin

Where defendant's answer is such as to require plaintiff to reply, his failure to do so within the required time, or to demur, will ordinarily warrant a judgment by default against him.

Judgment by default may be entered against plaintiff where, on it becoming his duty to make replication to defendant's plea or answer, he fails to do so within the time required by law,[73] or fails to demur thereto,[74] as where, in some jurisdictions, he fails to reply to an answer of set-off or counterclaim,[75] or fails to answer defendant's cross complaint.[76] However, this rule does not apply to a failure to reply to a pleading by defendant which is in effect nothing more than an affirmative traverse or denial of the allegations of the petition;[77] nor does the rule apply to a failure to reply to a cross complaint which is a repetition of the answer and presents no new issues.[78]

Default judgment cannot be taken against plaintiff for failure to reply to a counterclaim where the allegations of the complaint controvert the counterclaim,[79] or where, as under some statutes, a counterclaim is deemed controverted in the absence of a reply.[80] In any event, defendant has been held not entitled to judgment until plaintiff has had a reasonable opportunity to reply,[81] or until an issue raised by the complaint and as much of the answer as constitutes a defense thereto have been disposed of,[82] or, in some jurisdictions, until he has first asked for a rule against plaintiff.[83] Clearly, where plaintiff fails to reply to a verified answer setting forth facts sufficient to defeat the right of action, a valid default judgment cannot be rendered in favor of plaintiff.[84]

Failure to rejoin. Where defendant fails to rejoin to a replication when it is his duty to do so, a judgment by default may be taken against him.[85]

On a cross petition, although no summons may be required to be served on plaintiff, he is entitled to the same time to plead to the cross petition as though defendant filing the cross petition was plaintiff and plaintiff was sole defendant, and in such case a default and judgment on the cross petition, before the time to plead has expired, are erroneous.—Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. of Nebraska v. Gumaer, 192 N.W. 941, 109 Neb. 832.

Non pros

(2) It has been held that, where plaintiff fails to reply to a defense set up in the answer, final judgment by default as on the merits cannot be taken against him, defendant being entitled only to judgment non pros or judgment of nonsuit.—Ross v. h. Striking or Withdrawal of Pleading

Judgment by default or nil dicit ordinarily may be entered where defendant withdraws his pleading or does not offer or obtain leave to plead further after his pleading is stricken for good cause.

Judgment as by default or nil dicit may be entered where defendant withdraws his plea or answer,[86] or where he is granted permission to withdraw a plea on the express or implied condition that he will replead forthwith and he fails to do so.[87] So, too, judgment by default may be taken against defendant where he does not offer or obtain leave to plead further on his plea, answer, or affidavit being properly stricken out for good cause,[88] or where, having obtained such leave, he fails to file an amended pleading.[89] However, this rule does not apply where issue has been joined on the plea or answer,[90] especially after a trial is had and witnesses are sworn and examined;[91] or where the plea or answer is sufficient and no good reason for striking it out appears;[92] or where part of the answer is stricken out, but enough remains to constitute a substantial defense.[93] Where defendant's pleading is valid on its face and not wholly frivolous or without merit, it is error to dispose of it summarily by considering it ex parte and striking it from the files, and then to adjudge defendant in default.[94]

Waiver. Defendant's conduct may be such that he will be deemed to have waived, abandoned, or withdrawn his pleas,[95] and in such case he will be held impliedly to have authorized the entry of a judgment by default, notwithstanding the pleading on file.[96]

i. Pending Disposition of Pleading

(1) In general
(2) Pending decision on demurrer
(3) Pending decision on motion

(1) In General

On cross action by defendant, judgment nil dicit may be taken against plaintiff who withdraws his answer to the cross action.—Howe v. Central State Bank of Coleman, Tex. Civ.App., 297 S.W. 692.

Withdrawal of counsel does not result in the withdrawal of defendant's answer so as to put defendant in default.

34 C.J. p 169 note 64.

After striking affidavit of merits

(1) Where an affidavit of merits is stricken for insufficiency, plaintiff is entitled to judgment as by default, it being unnecessary, although not improper, to strike the plea as well.—Firestone Tire, etc., Co. v. Ginsburg, 120 N.E. 544, 285 Ill. 132—Resnick v. Varouxakis, 48 N.E.2d 555, 319 Ill.App. 51—James J. Brown Plastering Co. v. Gottschalk, 261 Ill. App. 147—Bannat v. Zulley, 243 Ill. App. 497.

(2) However, it has been held that the striking of an affidavit of merits does not carry with it the plea, and the filing thereafter of an additional affidavit under leave of court will prevent plaintiff from taking judgment by default.—Hunter v. Troup, 226 Ill.App. 343.

Defendant, who withdrew from case when it was regularly called for trial after its motion to withdraw its answer and appearance was overruled and remained in courtroom during trial without objecting to proceedings or to judgment rendered against it, waived issues raised by answer as though instrument had been withdrawn from record, so that judgment rendered was judgment nil dicit.—Grand Lodge Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Ware, Tex.Civ. App., 73 S.W.2d 1076, error dismissed.

A judgment by default or nil dicit cannot be entered against defendant while an answer or other pleading by him, raising an issue of law or fact, is properly on file in the case and not disposed of;[97] before a default judgment may be properly entered, the answer or other plea must be disposed of by motion, demurrer, or in some other manner.[98] This rule applies, even though defendant's pleading is filed out of time,[99] or is defective in form or in substance,[1] unless it is such that it may be treated as a mere nullity,[2] and even though defendant does not answer on being called.[3] The foregoing rule is applicable where there is on file and undisposed of a plea in abatement;[4] or where the parties have agreed to consider a plea as filed and an issue joined.[5]

Distinction between negative and affirmative pleas. A distinction has been drawn between negative and affirmative pleas, and, while the general rule is held applicable to a negative plea filed by defendant and issue joined thereon,[6] if defendant pleads affirmatively, so that he bears the burden of proof and afterward fails to appear and defend his plea, judgment by default may be rendered, although the plea has not first been disposed of,[7] except where defendant files a plea under oath denying the execution of the instrument on which the suit is based.[8]

Where defendant properly demands oyer, default cannot be entered by plaintiff for failure of defendant to file a plea until the oyer has been furnished,[9] but defendant must have his prayer entered of record and invoke the judgment of the court as to whether or not he shall plead further until the oyer is granted; otherwise plaintiff may disregard his demand and take a judgment by default.[10] If, on a demand of oyer, the oyer given is different from that set out in the complaint, plaintiff cannot sign judgment by default without a rule or notice after service of a true oyer.[11]

(2) Pending Decision on Demurrer

Judgment by default should not ordinarily be rendered against a party whose demurrer to his adversary's pleading is still pending.

Judgment by default should not be rendered against defendant who has filed a demurrer to the declaration or complaint, where such demurrer remains undetermined and not disposed of in any way,[12] unless defendant has waived or withdrawn his demurrer,[13] or plaintiff has filed an amended or substituted complaint,[14] and the demurrer is not renewed or a new demurrer filed.[15] This rule applies, even though the demurrer was filed out of time without leave or consent,[16] or would not be sustainable,[17] unless it is merely frivolous,[18] or even though it is taken to one only of several counts of the declaration.[19] On the same principle judgment by default cannot be entered against plaintiff for failure to plead, where his demurrer to defendant's plea or answer is not disposed of,[20] or where a demurrer to his pleading is not disposed of.[21]

(3) Pending Decision on Motion

As a general rule, judgment by default cannot be entered while a motion made by defendant remains pending.

Although under some statutes a motion is not such a pleading as to prevent the taking of a default judgment during its pendency,[22] generally, and under most statutes, it has been held that a judgment by default cannot be entered while a motion made by defendant remains pending and not disposed of,[23] unless the motion appears on its face to be frivolous and without merit,[24] or such that it may be treated as a nullity,[25] or is of such a nature
