The strict rule of res judicata does not apply to a decision on a motion to vacate a default judgment and the court in its discretion may allow and act on a renewal of the motion,[24] at least where the order denying the first motion is vacated[25] or where different grounds are alleged in the second motion,[26] but it may also properly dismiss a motion for the reason that it has formerly been refused.[27] In some jurisdictions a second application may be permitted even on the same grounds which were previously ruled on adversely,[28] but in other jurisdictions a judgment refusing to open a default judgment concludes defendant as to a second motion on the same grounds,[29] although defendant may not have been present when the first motion was heard and a judgment was rendered.[30] To justify granting the second motion, the motion must show additional facts to excuse the default and not merely newly discovered evidence,[31] and if it does not refer to the first motion it must contain a full showing of facts to excuse the default.[32] Where the second application is for different relief, as, for instance, where the former motion was to vacate a judgment as a nullity, and the second is to open up such judgment and let the applicant in to defend, or vice versa, the denial of the first motion is no bar as to the second.[33]

Where defendant after two opportunities has failed to show a meritorious defense, it has been held that an order denying an application to open a default should not grant leave to renew the application.[34]

Application in different court. After a motion to remove a default has been denied, it has been held that the party may not petition another court of concurrent jurisdiction for relief on the same grounds.[35]

Necessity for leave. It has been held that leave to renew a motion to open a default must be procured,[36] but the irregularity of failing to procure leave is cured where the court overrules an objection to a hearing of the second motion.[37]

n. Objections and Exceptions

By participating in a trial on the merits after entry of an order vacating the default judgment, the plaintiff waives, or is estopped to question, the propriety of the order.

Where plaintiff participates in a trial on the merits which takes place after entry of an order vacating the default judgment he waives, or is estopped to question, the propriety of the order,[38] but he is not estopped to raise the question of the court's jurisdiction.[39] Parties moving to set aside a judgment as a nullity and recognizing it as a nullity in the proceedings after the motion has been granted are estopped to deny the nullity of the judgment.[40] Where objections to the introduction of an amended return of service of process are specifically stated by movant, other grounds not mentioned as a basis of objection are waived.[41]

o. Vacation and Review of Order

The court, while it retains jurisdiction, may cancel a former order granting or overruling a motion to set aside a default judgment if a sufficient reason exists for that action.

While the court retains jurisdiction of the cause, it may cancel a former order granting or overruling a motion to set aside or vacate a default judgment,[42] if a sufficient reason exists for such action.[43] After a default judgment has been set aside and defendant has filed a plea, it has been held that the court cannot vacate the order setting aside the judgment.[44] An order signed by the trial judge may not be impeached in a proceeding against the clerk.[45]

Where an affidavit in the original action has not been regarded as a pleading by plaintiff, defendant, or the court, it will not be regarded as a pleading in proceedings to review the propriety of an order refusing to vacate a default.[46]

p. Costs

Where a default judgment is opened or vacated as a matter of favor or grace to the defendant and on his motion, it is error to impose the costs on the plaintiff.

Where a judgment is opened or vacated as a matter of favor or grace to defendant and on his motion, it is error to impose the costs on plaintiff.[47] Plaintiff will not be compelled to pay costs as a penalty for his refusal to stipulate for a new trial on defendant's proffer of costs and disbursements.[48]

43. Order in ex parte proceedings

Where default decree was set aside ex parte during term in which it was rendered, but later in the term, case was fully reviewed in presence of both parties, and showing previously made as to reasonable excuse for default, if any, was found insufficient, court properly reinstated default decree.—Kern v. Sanborn, 7 N.W.2d 801, 233 Iowa 458.

Affidavit filed but not indorsed as filed

Where, in an action of debt on foreign judgment, the declaration was accompanied by affidavit required by statute, and at the following term, after office judgment, defendant filed plea of nul tiel record, duly verified, and an order was entered reciting tender and filing of such plea with affidavit, and setting aside the office judgment, it was error to set aside such order, reject the plea, and render judgment for plaintiff on the ground that there had been no counter affidavit filed under the statute, although a verified affidavit was found in the file, sworn to prior to the entry of the order, but not indorsed as filed by the clerk, which affidavit the court treated as a stray paper.—Forest Glen Land Co. v. 48. Wis.—Port Huron Engine & Thresher Co. v. Clements, 89 N.W. 160, 113 Wis. 249.

Reason for rule

Plaintiff is under no obligation voluntarily to consent to the opening of a default, although defendant presents a sufficient excuse.—Camp v. Stewart, 2 E.D.Smith., N.Y., 88.

q. Liabilities on Bonds

The surety on a bond given in proceedings to open or vacate a default judgment may not be held liable on the bond unless its conditions are violated.

The surety on a bond given in proceedings to open or vacate a default judgment is not liable on the bond unless its conditions are violated.[49] A judgment canceling the bond is conclusive written evidence of the termination of the surety's liability.[50]

§ 338. Proceedings in Cause Operating to Open Default

A default judgment may be vacated by subsequent proceedings in the same action which are inconsistent with the judgment continuing in force.

A default judgment may be vacated in effect, although not in terms set aside, by subsequent proceedings in the same action which are inconsistent with the judgment continuing in force.[51] As a general rule, an amendment of the complaint after a default has been taken, which introduces a new cause of action or goes to the substance of the pleading operates to open the default,[52] but an amendment in matters of form rather than substance does not operate to open the default.[53] Where the court tries the case on the merits it has been held that the default judgment is impliedly set aside or vacated without a specific order to that effect,[54] but it has also been held that the default judgment is not impliedly vacated if there has been no finding as to whether defendant was excused from filing an answer in the original proceeding.[55] Where plaintiff participates in a trial on the merits after rendition of the default judgment he impliedly consents to the vacation of the judgment.[56] A nonsuit which is entered on the motion of plaintiff after a default judgment has been entered against defendant has the effect of setting aside the default judgment.[57]

§ 339. Proceedings after Opening Default

Where a default is opened the defendant should be allowed or required to serve or file his plea or answer. The case should be placed on the calendar or set for trial, and should thereupon be proceeded with as though no default had been entered.

Where a default is opened, defendant should be allowed or required to serve or file, within a prescribed or reasonable time, his plea or answer,[58]

49. Failure of principal to pay

Where judgment by default was set aside on defendant's filing a bond in effect that, if the principal should fail to pay costs and judgment recovered, the bond should be in effect, judgment could not be entered against the surety, as until failure of the principal to pay, the conditions of the bond were not violated.—Sunset Motor Co. v. Woodruff, 228 P. 519, 130 Wash. 516.

Limitation to defendant furnishing bond

Words "any recovery," in bond, were held not to include judgments against any defendants, where surety undertook to answer only for defendant furnishing bond.—Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. National Surety Co., 227 N.Y.S. 139, 131 Misc. 679.

Nonmaterial amendment

An amendment to petition in trover, amplifying description of article sued for, and alleging title or right of possession, not being material, was held not, after default, to open case for answer.—Land v. Pikes Peak Lumber Co., 132 S.E. 644, 35 Ga.App. 159.

Application for leave to answer

(1) Application for leave to file answer, after vacation of default judgment, is not a pleading and, if not required by statute, need not be in writing.—Schaffner v. Preston Oil Co., 154 N.E. 780, 94 Ind.App. 554.

(2) Although made in writing, the application is not demurrable.—Schaffner v. Preston Oil Co., supra.

Extension of time

(1) Extension of time to answer may be permitted where the court is obliged to open default.—Naderhoff v. Benz, 141 N.W. 501, 25 N.D. 501, 47 L.R.A.,N.S., 853.

except where the judgment is vacated because it is void for want of jurisdiction of defendant, in which case it is not proper to require defendant to appear and plead.[59] The case should be placed on the calendar or set for trial,[60] and should thereupon be proceeded with as though no default had been entered.[61] Plaintiff is not bound to serve the declaration on a party who is let in to defend after a default.[62] The issues of the case should be determined,[63] and the trial should be before a jury if, under usual rules, a jury case is presented.[64] The court may require defendant to proceed with his defense rather than cause plaintiff to prove his case,[65] but, where judgment is entered generally and without terms, plaintiff, in the absence of a statute otherwise providing, is put to proof of the cause of action as though judgment had not been entered.[66] The action may be dismissed for want of prosecution,[67] or it may be dismissed as to defendants against whom no cause of action is stated.[68] If defendant defaults again, a second judgment by default may be entered against him.[69] Where a trial on the merits results in the same decision as before, it has been held that a new judgment should not be rendered but that the original judgment should be reinstated.[70] A partial reversal of the judgment does not automatically work a reversal of the entire judgment.[71]

Amendment of pleadings. The trial court may use its sound discretion in refusing or permitting the amendment or withdrawal of pleadings.[72]

Notice or service of amended pleadings after opening of default by amendment of the declaration or complaint is considered supra § 194.

§ 340. —— Defenses Available

Except to the extent to which the defendant is limited by the conditions imposed by the court, he may avail himself of any meritorious defense existing at the time of the vacation of a default judgment.

Where the court, as a condition of opening or vacating the judgment, has limited the defenses which defendant may make to the action, defendant will not be allowed to set up matters outside the

(2) On motion to set aside judgment, extension of time beyond twenty days for filing answer was held authorized where time for filing answer had not expired when judgment was entered, and defendants had meritorious defense.—Town of Greenville v. Munford, 131 S.E. 740, 191 N.C. 373.

Terms

Where defendant's default was twice opened on identical terms which were not met, the default should not have been opened a third time on more favorable terms on an application for reargument, particularly where defendant not only deliberately failed to comply with original terms, but also failed to answer a subpœna for his examination in proceeding supplementary to execution of the default judgment, for which he was adjudged in contempt and fined.—General Exchange Ins. specifications of the order;[73] but otherwise he may avail himself of any meritorious defense,[74] existing at the time of the judgment vacated, but not a defense subsequently accruing.[75] Merely formal and technical objections[76] or dilatory pleas[77] usually will not be permitted, and defendant may be limited to issuable pleas, excluding special demurrers which do not go to the merits,[78] although demurrers[79] or pleas in abatement[80] may be permitted. Under statutes permitting defendants served only constructively, as by publication, to be let in to defend, as discussed supra § 335, the defense is not limited to matters which if pleaded in apt time would defeat the action,[81] but includes any matter of defense or exception which would have prevented or modified the judgment.[82]

power of equity in this connection being inherent,[84] and existing irrespective of any statute authorizing such relief.[85] A bill attacking a judgment is not regarded with favor by the courts,[86] and will lie only in exceptional cases.[87] Such relief may be had, not of right, but in the exercise of a sound legal discretion,[88] and each case must stand on its own peculiar merits.[89]

Under some circumstances, relief against a judgment ordinarily must or should be sought by a suit in equity.[90] Thus it has been held that the only re-

Enjoining enforcement of judgment

It has been held that, in the absence of statutory authority, a court has no power to enjoin a judgment creditor from enforcing his judgment against a judgment debtor.—Pisciotta v. Preston, 10 N.Y.S.2d 44, 170 Misc. 376.

Excuse of moment

Although there is no inflexible rule, some excuse of moment must exist to carry rights over to another judicial forum.—Blazewicz v. Weberski, 208 N.W. 452, 234 Mich. 431.

Comparison with collateral attack

Except in cases of palpable fraud, the rules and limitations established and recognized by courts of equity render a direct attack on a judgment almost as difficult of accomplishment as would be a collateral attack.—Redfield v. First Nat. Bank, 244 P. 210, 66 Utah 459.

Rehearing of litigated issues not desired

Statute authorizing bill of review to revise judgment must be construed so as not to allow unending rehearing of litigated issues or furnish uncertainty of administration of guardian's estate.—Watts v. Moss, Tex.Civ.App., 63 S.W.2d 1095, error dismissed.

Adjudication of title to land

Statutory bill of review cannot be employed directly to adjudicate title to land.—Johnson v. Oritz Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 104 S.W.2d 543.

Different interpretation of will

In the absence of extrinsic fraud or certain jurisdictional defects, an action in equity does not lie to secure an interpretation of a will different from that adopted by the probate court whose decree of distribution has become final.—Vincent v. Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles, 155 P.2d 63, 67 Cal.App.2d 602.

Presence of innocent third parties

Where a judgment, although not void on its face, is for some collateral reason void, as, for instance, where it has been procured by means of fraud extrinsic to the merits of the case, and innocent third parties have acquired interests through or by virtue of the judgment, the more orderly course is to proceed by an independent suit in equity to set it aside or to restrain and prevent the party in whose favor the judgment has thus been procured from making an equitable use thereof.—Sharp v. Eagle Lake Lumber Co., 212 P. 933, 60 Cal.App. 386.

Mistake affecting rights of all partitioners

A mistake which, if corrected, would affect the rights of all partitioners cannot, unless by agreement of all the parties, be corrected except by suit in equity.—Hutton v. Ward, 128 S.E. 647, 99 W.Va. 364.

Exclusive jurisdiction

Generally, courts of equity have

lief against a judgment after adjournment of the term of court at which it was rendered is by plenary suit in equity,[91] and that a judgment which is voidable, rather than void, may be set aside only in an equitable proceeding.[92] On the other hand, a party attacking a judgment is not always restricted to the remedy of injunction against enforcement of the judgment,[93] and it has been judicially observed that in modern practice, the remedies at law by amending, opening, vacating, and reviewing judgments or by granting new trials have greatly lessened the occasions for resorting to equity for relief against a judgment.[94] It has been asserted that a judgment which becomes unjust by subsequent developments may be corrected by proceeding in equity;[95] but it has also been asserted that an action will not lie in equity to modify or discharge a judgment by reason of matters arising subsequent to the entry of the judgment.[96]

Nature of remedy. A suit to set aside a judgment and retry the original case, or an attack on a judgment on the ground of fraud, is generally an equitable proceeding or in the nature of such a proceeding.[97] The equitable remedy against a judgment is not a proceeding in rem, but is a proceeding in personam against a party to the judgment seeking to deprive him of the benefit of the judgment by enjoining him from enforcing it.[98] The remedy in equity does not assail the court in which the judgment was rendered;[99] it need not seek to change, modify, suspend, or vacate the judgment,[1] but may be employed to secure relief against the judgment on the ground that the rights acquired thereunder cannot be retained in good conscience.[2] An action in equity to vacate a decree is analogous to a motion for a new trial in so far as it involves a reexamination of the issues.[3]

b. Requisites of Relief in General

In general, one seeking equitable relief against a judgment must show that there is some recognized ground for equitable interference, and also that his situation is not due to his own fault and that he is entitled to the favorable consideration of the court.

In order to entitle a party to relief in equity against a judgment, he must show that there is in the case a recognized ground, such as fraud, accident, mistake, or the like, for equitable interference,[4] and, as discussed infra § 343, that there is exclusive jurisdiction to annul judgments at law, as well as their own decrees because of fraud or mistake. —Jordan v. Tharp, 137 So. 667, 223 Ala. 619.

Preferable procedure

Procedure by petition to open final decree and order to show cause is substitute for bill of review and is preferable as simpler and more direct procedure.—Cameron v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co., 173 A. 344, 116 N.J.Eq. 311.

Bill of review

An independent suit for relief against a judgment, while not strictly speaking a bill of review, is largely of the same nature.—Halbrook v. Quinn, Civ.App., 286 S.W. 954, certified questions dismissed Quinn v. Halbrook, 285 S.W. 1079, 115 Tex. 513.

A petition to open a judgment is essentially an equitable proceeding, and the opening of the judgment an exercise of equity powers.—Sherwood Bros. Co. v. Kennedy, 200 A. 689, 132 Pa.Super. 154.

Motion treated as plenary suit

Motion to set aside judgment alleging excuse for failure to defend and meritorious defense, on which citation was duly issued, should be treated as plenary suit in equity to obtain relief from judgment.—Squyres v. Rasmussen, Tex.Civ.App., 296 S.W. 977.

Equity administered under common-law forms

In proceeding to open judgment, court of common pleas administers equity under common-law forms.—Kowatch v. Home Building & Loan Ass'n of Latrobe, 200 A. 111, 131 Pa. Super. 517.

Suit in partition by heirs against other heirs who obtained property by representing that they were the only heirs was held neither direct nor collateral attack on judgment, but equity proceeding based on fraud.—Beatty v. Beatty, 242 P. 766, 114 Okl. 5.

Proceeding held not action in equity

A proceeding to vacate or set aside an order or judgment filed in original suit is not an action in equity, although it is equitable in character and relief is granted on equitable terms.—In re Vanderlip's Estate, 12 Ohio Supp. 123.

Grounds for relief see infra §§ 350–376.

Prima facie case for vacation of judgment

Injunctive relief to prevent enforcement of judgment will not be granted, unless prima facie case for vacation of such judgment is presented.—Smith v. Patterson, 280 S.W. 930, 213 Ky. 142.

Lack of jurisdiction over person

Party seeking to have judgment set aside in equity on ground that court had acquired no jurisdiction over him must bring himself within rules of law or equity applicable for such relief.—Reynolds v. Volunteer State Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 80 S.W.2d 1087, error refused.

Question held not cognizable

Question whether attorneys and court acted in pursuance of mandate of appellate court in proceedings which followed receipt of mandate is not cognizable in independent suit in equity based on ground that judgment was procured by fraud.—Matheson v. National Surety Co., C.C.A. Alaska, 69 F.2d 914.

Intent of testatrix

In an equity action to amend and construe a decree of distribution affecting a testamentary trust, where no mistake appeared, it was immaterial that testatrix may have intended or done something different in a former will, later revoked.—Vincent v. Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles, 155 P.2d 63, 67 Cal.App.2d 602.

Personal judgment in foreclosure suit

Purchaser of mortgaged property was held not entitled to set aside personal judgment against him by default in foreclosure suit, wherein he was personally served, and wherein it was alleged that he assumed mortgage indebtedness, where decree recited that cause was heard on documentary and oral evidence, and there was no evidence that judgment was procured through fraud.—Fort Smith Building & Loan Ass'n v. Discovery of defense

Statute limiting time in which proceedings to set aside judgment may be commenced does not confer right to set aside judgment within time limit, regardless of negligence or diligence of judgment debtor in discovering defense.—W. T. Rawleigh Co. v. Seagraves, 173 S.E. 167, 178 Ga. 459.

quiesce in it, or waive the errors complained of.[6] He must also show that he is not liable for the debt for which judgment was rendered;[7] that he is injured by the judgment as it stands or will be injured by its enforcement;[8] that there is an attempt or threat to enforce the judgment against him;[9] that he is in a position equitably to seek relief;[10] and that he comes into equity with clean hands and is entitled to the favorable consideration of the court.[11]

Equity will never interfere to vacate a judgment where the party seeking the relief could not possibly derive any benefit from the relief sought,[12] and thus he is generally required to show that if relief were granted a different result would obtain than that reached in the judgment of which he complains.[13]

§ 342. Jurisdiction

A court having general equity powers has jurisdiction to grant equitable relief against a judgment in a proper case; but its jurisdiction in this respect is not supervisory over courts of law, and cannot be made to serve the purpose of an appellate review.

A court possessing general equity powers has authority in a proper case to grant equitable relief against a judgment,[14] Courts of equity have no supervisory jurisdiction over courts of law, and, accordingly, a suit in equity for relief against a judgment at law cannot be made to serve the purposes of an appellate review of the judgment with regard to alleged errors therein,[15] and the power of a court of equity to enjoin enforcement of a judgment is

Assent to settlement

Where parties to suit appeared before judge in open court and stated that they had settled suit on specified terms, which judge noted on docket, and parties and their attorneys all assented to, or made no complaint of, such terms after judge read to them his understanding of settlement, and judgment was rendered in accordance with such statement, defendant was not entitled to have judgment set aside on ground of additional settlement agreement, covering questions at issue in another suit pending in different chancery court, in absence of fraud or bad faith.—Tallent v. Sherrell, 184 S.W. 2d 561, 27 Tenn.App. 683.

Waiver held not shown

Fact that defendants, discovering trial judge's disqualification, petitioned supreme court for rehearing, did not constitute waiver of right to vacate judgment.—Cadenasso v. Bank of Italy, 6 P.2d 944, 214 Cal. 562.

Proceeds of sale as sufficient to satisfy judgment

Where, although personal judgment against a particular defendant was not authorized, it was possible that sufficient would be realized on the sale of the property involved to satisfy the judgment in full, so that such defendant would not be injured by a personal judgment, it would be premature to grant relief to him in a suit to set aside the decree until the question of injury should be determined by the result of the sale.—Marsters v. Ashton, 107 P.2d 981, 165 Or. 507.

Actual eviction held unnecessary

It has been held that a purchaser in possession under a contract of sale need not show that he has been actually evicted in order to secure injunctive relief against a judgment obtained on a note given for the purchase price; it is sufficient that a judgment of ejectment has been rendered against him.—Green v. McDonald, 21 Miss. 445.

not dependent on its jurisdiction to review the proceedings on which the judgment is based.[16] Where no proper grounds exist, equity has no jurisdiction to afford relief against a judgment.[17]

§ 343. —— Existence of or Resort to Other Remedy; Inadequacy of Remedy at Law

a. In general
b. Statutory remedies
c. Remedy by review

a. In General

Equitable relief against a judgment generally will not be granted where other adequate remedies, as by motion for a new trial or independent action at law, are available, or by the exercise of proper diligence would have been available; and this rule has been applied by some authorities even to judgments which are void or have been procured by fraud. Equity will interfere, however, where there has been a loss of legal remedies without fault on the part of the one seeking relief.

As a general rule, equity will not grant relief against a judgment where the party complaining of the judgment has, or by exercising proper diligence would have had, an adequate remedy at law, or by proceedings in the original action, by motion, petition, or the like to open, vacate, modify, or otherwise obtain relief against, the judgment.[18] Equity will not interfere to relieve against a judgment where the complaining party has an adequate remedy by a motion in an appellate court,[19] or by a motion or proceedings to arrest judgment,[20] or to stay or quash execution.[21] Under some circumstances, however, it has been held that injunction may be granted, although relief against the judgment might be obtained at law, or by motion to vacate or set aside, and the time for obtaining such

A complaint demanding an injunction staying execution and opening a default judgment to allow plaintiffs to intervene as parties to the original action does not involve the application of any equitable remedy not available by a motion in the original action, and hence cannot be maintained.—Tolbert v. relief has not yet expired.[22] Equitable relief is of course available in a proper case where there is no other or adequate remedy;[23] and in this connection there is ordinarily no adequate remedy at law where the facts relied on as rendering it inequitable to enforce the judgment did not exist when the judgment was rendered.[24]

Fraud. The general rule requiring inadequacy of other remedies as a prerequisite to equitable relief against a judgment is usually applied to a judgment procured by fraud.[25] In some cases, however, it has been held that, where the element of fraud is present, the party aggrieved may go into either a court of equity or a court of law for relief,[26] and, having applied to equity, he cannot be sent back to a court of law, although he may also have a remedy there.[27] Clearly, a party may, in a proper case, have equitable relief against a judgment secured by fraud where his remedies at law are inadequate or have been exhausted.[28]

Void judgment. In the case of a void judgment the cases are not harmonious.[29] According to some decisions, equity will grant relief by injunction, although there may be an adequate remedy in the original cause.[30] It has generally been held, however, that in order to obtain relief on this ground, it is necessary for complainant to show that he has no adequate remedy at law,[31] or that he has exhausted his legal remedies without obtaining relief.[32] These decisions proceed on the theory that, where there is an ordinary remedy for error, an extraordinary one will not be allowed.[33] Equitable relief against a void judgment will be granted where an adequate remedy at law is not available.[34]

New trial. Injunction will not be granted to restrain the enforcement of a judgment or to order a new trial, where the party still has an opportunity to move the trial court for a new trial, or had such opportunity and negligently omitted to avail himself of it.[35] However, only parties to a suit are required to move for new trials, and a person against whom a judgment is rendered in an action to which

Lack of counsel; diligence before trial

It is not sufficient to sustain an action to set aside a judgment that plaintiff, without fault or negligence, was deprived of counsel at the trial of the case, but he must show a sufficient excuse for not filing a motion for new trial at the term at which the judgment was rendered; and, in the absence of such showing, the extent of his diligence before trial is immaterial.—Moore v. Moore, Tex.Civ.App., 259 S.W. 322.

he has not been made a party need not move for a new trial before suing to enjoin the judgment.[36]

Independent action or remedy at law. Equity ordinarily will refuse to enjoin or reform a judgment where the party would have an available and adequate remedy for any damage he may suffer from its enforcement, by means of an independent action at law,[37] or an action or remedy against some third person responsible over to him.[38] However, the action for damages must be as complete, practical, and efficient as the equitable remedy in order to bar relief.[39]

Loss of legal remedy. Where the party had a remedy at law by appeal or motion to vacate or for a new trial, and has lost it, without fault on his own part, by causes which he could not control, preventing him from applying for it in due season, equity will not refuse to enjoin the judgment merely because the remedy at law, if it had been available, would have been appropriate and adequate.[40] However, the mere loss or exhaustion of legal remedies is no ground for equity to interfere, unless it is also shown that there is equitable ground of objection to the judgment as it stands;[41] and it has been held that relief will not be granted where the loss of the remedy at law was due to accident[42] or a mistaken mode of proceeding.[43]

Relief will in no case be granted where the loss of the remedy at law was due to the party's own negligence or fault or that of his counsel.[44]

b. Statutory Remedies

Statutes which provide remedies cumulative to those available in equity do not preclude equitable relief against judgments. However, equity will generally decline jurisdiction where the grounds of relief are equally within the cognizance of the law courts under the statutes, and complete and adequate relief may be had at law under the statutes.

The existence of statutes permitting courts of law to open, vacate, modify, or set aside their own judgments, for causes specified, does not exclude the power of courts of equity to relieve against judgments on sufficient grounds, where the statutes are deemed to furnish a cumulative or additional remedy;[45] and, a fortiori, equitable relief will not be

Denial of motion to vacate
An order denying a motion to vacate a judgment at law does not destroy the jurisdiction of equity to entertain a bill to set aside such judgment, where the motion was made at a time when the court of law had lost jurisdiction to entertain it.—Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Donaldson, 128 Ill.App. 196.

In suit to enjoin execution and cancel judgment on ground of want of service, relief was denied where president of defendant association knew of pendency of suit and of rendition of judgment therein, had tried to have cause continued, and no excuse was offered for failure to file motion to have judgment set aside or for a new trial.—Citizens Mut. denied where the legal remedy under the statute is inadequate.[46] Resort to equity is cut off, however, where the grounds of the application and the relief to which the party is entitled are within the cognizance of the law court under statutes, and a motion or other proceeding under the statute will furnish, or by the exercise of proper diligence by the complaining party would have furnished, an adequate and complete remedy.[47]

During the period in which the statutory remedies are available, courts of law and courts of equity sometimes have concurrent jurisdiction,[48] but, under the rule that the latter will not grant relief where the former have jurisdiction to do so, courts of equity generally will not assume jurisdiction during such statutory period.[49] When, however, the time within which a motion may be made has expired, and no laches or want of diligence is imputable to the party asking relief, equity will grant relief.[50]

c. Remedy by Review

One who has, or by taking proper steps would have had, an adequate remedy by appeal or error ordinarily can have no relief against a judgment in equity. This is not an inflexible rule, however, and does not defeat equitable relief in cases where the remedy by review is doubtful or inadequate.

The general rule is that relief will not be granted in equity against a judgment where the party has an adequate remedy as to the matters complained of by review, appeal, or writ of error and makes no effort to avail himself of it, or has lost such remedy by failing to take proper steps to secure or to perfect it.[51] This is equally true whether the party

Relief limited to parties

A statute permitting a party to move within a specified period for relief from a judgment taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect does not afford an adequate legal remedy, which will exclude relief in equity, to one who was not a party to the action.—Gill v. Frances Inv. Co., C. C.A.Cal., 19 F.2d 880.

Broader power of chancellor

As respects availability of remedy of injunction against collection of judgment entered by confession, although courts exercise equitable powers in motions to vacate judgments entered by confession, the courts do not exercise equity power on such motion as broad as that exercised by the chancellor in a suit in equity; and the distinction between the equitable powers exercised by court on motion to vacate and equity powers of a chancellor in a suit in equity is not entirely abrogated by the statute providing for joinder of legal and equitable causes of action and setting up of all cross-demands in counterclaims.—Printers Corporation v. Time of discovery of fraud

Equity will afford relief against judgment procured by fraud of successful party when injured party, in exercise of reasonable diligence, did not discover, within time allowed for commencing statutory proceeding to vacate judgment, sufficient evidence of fraud to warrant reasonable belief and expectation that such proceeding would be successful, if instituted.—Hoeppner v. has neglected altogether to take an appeal or has prosecuted a defective or insufficient appeal.[52] Equity will not interfere if there has been a failure to resort to or exhaust an adequate remedy by certiorari[53] or supersedeas.[54]

Failure to resort to or exhaust all remedies by way of review, however, does not always bar relief in equity against a judgment,[55] and some decisions make an exception to the general rule in cases where fraud is alleged against the judgment.[56] Resort to, or exhaustion of, remedies by way of review has been held not a prerequisite to equitable relief against a judgment in cases where an equitable defense fails because it is not cognizable at law,[57] or where a case for equitable interference, independent of a mere reversible error, is stated,[58] and also where the remedy by review is doubtful or inadequate,[59] as where the matters alleged against it lie outside the record and therefore are not cognizable on appeal or writ of error[60] or, likewise, are not

§ 344. Persons Entitled to Relief

Equitable relief against a judgment ordinarily will be granted only to parties to the action or their privies, or persons directly jeopardized by the judgment. An owner or purchaser of property affected by the judgment may be entitled to relief.

As a rule relief in equity against a judgment at law is given only to the parties to the action[63] or those in privity of interest or estate with them;[64] and a third person or stranger to the proceedings who is not affected by the judgment cannot attack it in equity or enjoin its enforcement.[65] In proper instances, however, particularly in the case of a fraudulent or collusive judgment, relief in equity may be had at the instance of one who, although not a party to the proceeding in which the judgment was rendered, shows that he is directly injured or jeopardized by the judgment as it stands,[66] as where he claims to be the true owner of the property in controversy or sets up a paramount title to it.[67]

One who had full knowledge of the pendency of the suit, and neither sought to become a party thereto nor made any effort to intervene therein so as to protect his rights, may be barred, after rendition of judgment, from suing to set such judgment aside or to restrain its enforcement;[68] but voluntary intervention is not required as a condition of equitable relief to one who was absolutely entitled to a hearing, and such a person, although not a party to the proceedings in which the judgment was rendered, may nevertheless have relief against it in a proper case.[69]

Purchasers, encumbrancers, and creditors. A purchaser of property subject to the lien of a judgment to which his grantor makes no objection cannot maintain a suit to enjoin its enforcement, unless without notice, contrary to valid agreement not of record, defendants had no remedy by writ of error, but remedy lay in direct attack on judgment.—Caffarelli v. Reasonover, Tex. Civ.App., 54 S.W.2d 170.

Discharge in bankruptcy

As respects right of motorist, after discharge in bankruptcy, to bring bill in equity to vacate judgment for injuries to pedestrian, quash body execution, and discharge jail limits bond, discharge in bankruptcy granted after judgment was rendered would not be ground for appeal from judgment.—Doering v. Baker, 270 N. W. 185, 277 Mich. 683.

Claim of interest

Persons not parties to a partition action could not petition to have the decree set aside merely because they claimed an interest in the property. —Gage v. Lee, 141 N.E. 397, 309 Ill. 614.

"Aggrieved party"

(1) Statute authorizing suit to set aside judgment to be brought by "aggrieved party" against "prevailing party" was held intended to include all those who were parties to action, although having varying interests therein.—Tankar Gas v. Lumbermen's Mut. Casualty Co., 9 N.W. 2d 754, 215 Minn. 265, 146 A.L.R. 1223.

Absence of fraud on lienor

One claiming landlord's lien could not enjoin enforcement of conditional seller's judgment in detinue, where bill did not allege facts showing that judgment was concocted in fraud of lien claimant's rights.—Larue v. Loveman, Joseph & Loeb, 132 So. 715, 222 Ala. 472.

A taxpayer is entitled to equitable relief from a judgment entered against a city when it appears that his case comes within some of the recognized grounds of which a court of equity assumes jurisdiction, such as fraud of either of the parties to the judgment or the collusion of both.—Indiana Harbor Belt R. Co. v. Calumet City, 63 N.E.2d 369, 391 Ill. 280.

he can show that it was fraudulent or expressly designed to injure him;[70] and a similar rule obtains in the case of encumbrancers by mortgage or otherwise,[71] and other creditors of the common debtor.[72] Under proper circumstances, however, the purchaser of property may have the right to impeach a judgment, and the lien thereof against his property, although not a party to the action in which the judgment was rendered,[73] at least in cases in which the judgment is void by reason of facts appearing on the judgment roll.[74]

Sureties. Although there is nothing in the mere character of a surety entitling him to special consideration in the awarding of equitable relief against a judgment,[75] yet there may be circumstances rendering it inequitable and against conscience to allow the enforcement of the judgment.[76] Where judgment is erroneously or wrongfully taken against one as principal, when he is liable only as surety or indorser, equity may relieve him against the judgment, on evidence showing the true character of his liability.[77]

§ 345. Persons against Whom Relief Available

Equitable relief against a judgment may in general be had against any one who attempts to enforce it, except the sovereign and bona fide purchasers of property affected by the judgment.

An action to enjoin a void, fraudulent, or unconscionable judgment may generally be maintained against any person who attempts to enforce it,[78] including the heirs at law of the judgment creditor.[79] Relief ordinarily will not be awarded against purchasers of the property affected, who take it in good faith and without notice of the circumstances affecting the validity of the judgment.[80] An exception to this latter rule exists, however, in the case of gambling contracts, made void by statute, and relief against a judgment on such a contract may be obtained even against a bona fide holder for value without notice.[81]

United States. Since the sovereign is beyond the reach of any prohibitory process, an injunction cannot be issued to restrain the United States from collecting a judgment in its favor.[82]

§ 346. Judgments against Which Relief May Be Granted

It is generally considered that equity may grant relief against judgments of any judicial tribunal, and of whatever form or nature, including decrees in equity and judgments of special tribunals.

Subject to some limitations and exceptions, a court of equity, on sufficient cause shown, ordinarily may grant relief against a judgment, decree, or order of any judicial tribunal,[83] and the form or na-

Divestiture of property with intent to defraud creditors

Creditors of persons who through fraudulent contrivance or fraudulent complicity with others cause a judgment to be rendered whereby they are divested of their property with a design to defraud their creditors may resort to courts having equity jurisdiction for relief against such injustice, since the fraud in those cases is regarded not only on the person aggrieved but likewise on the court itself.—Hooffstetter v. Adams, 35 N.E.2d 896, 67 Ohio App. 21.

Future creditor

A judgment creditor may not be precluded from satisfying his judgment from a private fund on the ground that a future creditor may thereby find himself in the position of having an uncollectable judgment against the debtor.—Pisciotta v. Preston, 10 N.Y.S.2d 44, 170 Misc. 376.

The purchasers of property under an unrecorded deed, against whom a subsequent purchaser obtained a judgment quieting title in him, were held to have no right of action to set the judgment aside as against a bank which held the unrecorded deed and the contract of sale in escrow.—Jeffords v. Young, 277 P. 163, 98 Cal.App. 400.

Fundamental jurisdictional defect

In judgment debtor's suit against judgment creditor and third party to set aside judgment and sale thereunder for fundamental jurisdictional defect, third party is not entitled to protection of judgment unless it appears that he is a purchaser in good faith and that the judgment is regular on its face.—Morris v. Soble, 61 S.W.2d 139.

ture of the judgment is not generally material in this respect.[84] While it has been broadly held that probate decrees may not be set aside in equity,[85] even for fraud,[86] it has also been held that they may be set aside in a proper case,[87] as for fraud, accident, or mistake, or the acts of the adverse party unmixed with the negligence or fault of complainant,[88] or where a defect in jurisdiction or other fatal error affirmatively appears on the record.[89] A court of equity may, on sufficient reasons for such action being shown, grant relief against the enforcement of a judgment at law in favor of[90] or against[91] an executor or administrator.

Decrees in equity. If, through lapse of time or for other reasons, the remedy by way of bill of review is not available to attack a decree in equity which has been improperly entered, there may be relief by way of an injunction in equity, where justice so demands, and there is no other way open.[92] In a proper case a bill will lie to review a decree in equity against a personal representative.[93]

Interlocutory decrees. A court of equity will not interfere to set aside an interlocutory decree in a cause then pending in another court[94] because the party complaining of such a decree has a sufficient remedy by applying to the court which made it.[95]

Judgments affirmed on appeal. It has been held by some authorities that a judgment which has been affirmed on appeal may not be impeached or set aside by a court of equity, in a suit brought for that purpose;[96] it has also been held, however, that such a judgment may be enjoined[97] on any ground of error apparent on the face of such judgment, or on the record of the case in which it was rendered,[98] at least where it appears that the judgment is void[99] or that it was obtained by fraud.[1]

Pendency of an appeal or a writ of error does not necessarily affect the jurisdiction of a court of equity over a bill to enjoin a judgment,[2] at least where the suit in equity does not draw into question the judgment and proceedings at law, or claim a right to revise them, but sets up an equity independent of the judgment, which admits the validity thereof, but suggests reasons why the party who has obtained it ought not to avail himself of it.[3]

Special tribunals. It has been said that injunction does not lie to restrain the execution of a judgment of a special tribunal created by statute, certiorari being the proper remedy.[4] However, the judgment of such a tribunal which is a nullity may be enjoined.[5]

§ 347. —— By Confession or on Consent or Offer

Equitable relief against a judgment by confession or on consent, although not readily granted, may nevertheless be had on a showing of sufficient grounds.

Where a party to an action at law voluntarily confesses judgment, usually he is not entitled to equitable relief against the judgment, unless without negligence on his part he was prevented from making his defense by fraud, accident, surprise, or mistake.[6] However, if sufficient grounds appear, equitable relief against a judgment by confession may properly be granted.[7] If judgment is confessed for a balance claimed, with the privilege of correcting errors, if any, it can be enjoined only on proof of errors.[8]

Consent judgment. Although equity is little disposed to overhaul judgments settled by consent or compromise,[9] yet on a showing of proper circumstances, such as fraud or mistake in the procurement of the judgment, relief against it may be obtained in equity.[10]

§ 348. —— By Default

A court of equity may grant relief against a default judgment provided the complaining party was not at fault in failing to defend.

A court of equity will not grant relief against a judgment taken by default where the applicant, shown to have been duly served with summons, failed to avail himself of an opportunity to defend, such failure not being the result of fraud, accident, mistake, or the like.[11] On a showing of sufficient grounds, however, a court of equity will grant relief against a default judgment which was obtained without fault on the part of the one seeking relief.[12] Where a judgment by default is obtained against a party by his own neglect, it constitutes no ground for equitable intervention that his adversary obtained more relief than he was entitled to.[13]

§ 349. Meritorious Cause of Action or Defense

As a general rule, the plaintiff must show a meritorious cause of action, and the defendant a meritorious defense, as a condition of equitable relief to him against a judgment. Some authorities, however, do not require such a showing where the attack is made on a void judgment.

A court of equity will not interfere with the enforcement of a judgment recovered at law, unless it is unjust and unconscionable; and therefore as a general rule such relief will not be granted unless complainant shows that he has a good and meritorious defense to the original action, or, where the party seeking relief was the plaintiff in the action in which the judgment was rendered, that he has a meritorious cause of action.[14] This is the rule where the judgment was procured by fraud, accident, or mistake,[15] and although the judgment is by default[16] or confession.[17] It has been said, however, that the rule and the reason for it entirely fail when defendant comes into court with the money and offers to pay the judgment as a condition precedent to its being set aside.[18]

Although the party seeking relief must show at least presumptively that he has a defense,[19] the requirement of a meritorious case does not necessitate an absolute guarantee of victory[20] or a conclusive showing of sufficient cause of action or defense.[21] It is enough to present facts from which it can be ascertained that the complaining party has a sufficiently meritorious claim to entitle him to a trial of the issue at a proper adversary proceeding;[22] it suffices to establish good faith and to tender a seriously litigable issue.[23]

Void judgment. The authorities are not in harmony in requiring a meritorious defense where the judgment is void, as where it was obtained without service of process, and where defendant had no opportunity to be heard; in some jurisdictions defendant is not required to show a good defense in such case.[24] However, it has generally been held that a showing that defendant has, or at the time of the judgment had, a meritorious defense, is none the less necessary because the judgment is allegedly void,[25] as in the case of a judgment obtained without proper service of the summons or appearance of defendant,[26] or on an unauthorized appearance,[27] or on a false return of service,[28] especially where the lack of jurisdiction does not appear on the face of the record.[29]

Nature of defense. It has been said that equity will not relieve against a judgment on the showing of a merely technical defense[30] or one which would be considered unconscionable.[31] However, it has also been asserted broadly that a meritorious defense is one which, if established on another trial, would produce a different result.[32] The question of whether or not, in any given case, the claim of the complaining party is meritorious must be determined by the particular facts presented.[33] While there is some authority to the contrary,[34] it is generally considered that the statute of limitations is a meritorious defense within the meaning of the rule.[35] A discharge in bankruptcy has also been held a meritorious defense.[36]

B. GROUNDS FOR RELIEF

§ 350. In General

a. General principles
b. Disability or privilege of party; unauthorized suit

a. General Principles

Generally, any fact showing it to be against good conscience to enforce a judgment may afford ground for equitable relief to a complainant otherwise entitled thereto; but equitable power to relieve against a judgment at law will be exercised sparingly and confined to cases clearly of equitable cognizance.

Injunctive relief from invalid judgments must rest on grounds cognizable in equity.[37] As a general rule any fact which clearly proves it to be against good conscience to execute a judgment, and of which the injured party could not have availed himself in a court of law, or of which he might have availed himself there, but was prevented by fraud or accident unmixed with any fault or negligence in himself or his agents, will authorize a court of equity to set aside or to enjoin the adverse party from enforcing such judgment.[38]

Since the power to set aside or enjoin the enforcement of judgments is liable to abuse, and the abuse thereof is extremely mischievous, as tending to conflicts of jurisdiction, its exercise will be closely and carefully scrutinized, and confined to clear cases and well recognized grounds of equitable interference.[39] In other words, equitable relief against a judgment will not be granted in the absence of clear and sufficient grounds of an equitable character.[40] It should appear that it would be

Executors and administrators

(1) In the case of suits involving decedents' estates and funds in the hands of executors and administrators, it is sufficient ground for the intervention of a court of equity that the judgment defendant, although having a good equitable defense to the claim, had no legal defense to the action at law.—Lyon v. Howard, 16 Ga. 481—24 C.J. p 888 note 87.

(2) It is sufficient that, having a legal defense, the judgment creditor was unable for sufficient reason to present it.—Pickett v. Stewart, 1 Rand. 478, 22 Va. 478—24 C.J. p 888 notes 88, 89.

(3) In a proper case an executor or administrator may be relieved in equity from personal liability under a judgment at law, as where there are no assets or there is a deficiency of assets.—Pendleton v. Stuart, 6 Munf. 377, 20 Va. 377—24 C.J. p 888 note 90.

(4) On the other hand, in a number of instances, equitable relief on the foregoing ground has been denied.—Brenner v. Alexander, 19 P. 9, 16 Or. 349, 8 Am.S.R. 301—24 C.J. p 888 note 91.

unjust and against good conscience to enforce the judgment,[41] that some rule or law of public policy has been violated,[42] or that the defense available to the party seeking relief is one of purely equitable cognizance,[43] and equity will not interfere merely on account of hardship,[44] because of prejudice in the community,[45] or because an equity court in deciding the same case would have reached a different conclusion.[46] It must also reasonably appear that the result would be different from that already reached if the judgment were set aside and a new trial granted.[47] Where a proper case for equitable relief is made out, the fact that the judgment creditor is of undoubted solvency and able to refund the money which may be collected on an execution will not prevent the interposition of equity.[48]

The principal grounds for equitable relief against a judgment are lack of power or jurisdiction in the court rendering it,[49] or procurement of the judgment through fraud, accident, mistake,[50] or other adventitious circumstance beyond complainant's control,[51] without fault, negligence, or fraud on his part.[52] It has been said, however, that equity will afford relief against a judgment irrespective of any issue of inattention or neglect, where the circumstances under which the judgment was rendered show deprivation of the legal rights of the litigant seeking relief and enforcement of the judgment would be unconscientious and inequitable,[53] at least where the other party has not changed his position in reliance on complainant's actions.[54]

Effect of statutory provisions. Statutes providing for the setting aside or vacating of judgments in equity authorize relief on grounds specified therein.[55] Some statutes specifying grounds on which a judgment may be annulled have been construed as not restrictive and as permitting equitable relief against a judgment under general equitable principles, even though the statutory grounds for relief are not shown,[56] but under other statutes the grounds for relief must be among those enumerated therein.[57]

b. Disability or Privilege of Party; Unauthorized Suit

There is a conflict of authority as to whether equity will grant relief against the enforcement of a judgment rendered against one in violation of a privilege or disability precluding suit; it has been held that relief is warranted from a judgment entered in a suit brought without authority of the ostensible party plaintiff.

It has been held that a personal disability,[58] or privilege[59] of defendant in a judgment is not a ground for equitable interference with the judgment, the defect not being jurisdictional, and the remedy being at law. Other decisions, however, regarding a judgment against such a person as void, hold it proper for chancery to restrain its enforcement.[60] Execution on a judgment against a person deceased, it has been held, will not be enjoined, the remedy being at law.[61]

Judgment on suit brought without authority. Enforcement of a judgment obtained by an attorney who had no authority from plaintiff to bring the suit may be enjoined;[62] and a similar rule prevails where complainant was joined as a plaintiff in the suit without his consent,[63] or where the suit was brought by a nominal plaintiff who had no authority from the real party in interest.[64]

§ 351. Invalidity of Judgment

Some authorities have held that equity will afford relief against a void judgment, such as one rendered without jurisdiction of the subject matter or of the parties, while others take the view that the mere fact that a judgment is void will not alone suffice as a basis for equitable relief, but that there must exist further grounds for equitable cognizance.

Some authorities hold broadly to the effect that a void judgment is open to equitable attack,[65] and that equity may set aside, cancel, or annul a void judgment,[66] or enjoin its enforcement.[67] Equitable relief has been held available against a judgment where the court had no jurisdiction[68] of the subject matter[69] or of the person.[70] While it has been held that the rule applies where the judgment is regular on its face and does not disclose the grounds of its invalidity,[71] and that a suit in equity will not lie to set aside a judgment void on its face,[72] it has also been held that equitable relief may be obtained against a judgment void for lack of jurisdiction appearing from the face of the record.[73]

On the other hand, according to some decisions, the fact that the judgment is void[74] because of a mere defect in jurisdiction[75] of the subject matter[76] will not justify equitable relief in the absence of some further ground of equitable cognizance,[77] as where the judgment is inequitable as between the parties.[78]

Where it affirmatively appears that the court had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter, the judgment is at most merely voidable, its enforcement may not be enjoined for mere error,[79] and it has been stated that complainant is entitled to enjoin enforcement of a judgment only if it is void.[80] However, there are also decisions to the effect that, while a court of chancery will not enjoin enforcement of a judgment merely because it is erroneous, it will enjoin one which is either void or voidable for certain reasons recognized as grounds of equitable relief.[81]

Where no judgment at all was in fact rendered, equity will relieve against enforcement of what purports to be a judgment.[82] Enforcement of a judgment may be enjoined where it was obtained in violation of a restraining order.[83] If it is determined that the judgment is neither void nor voidable, relief will, of course, be denied.[84]

§ 352. —— Want of, or Defects in, Process or Service

a. In general
b. Defective process or service

a. In General

As a general rule, one may secure equitable relief from a judgment rendered against him without service of process or essential notice in the suit, unless he has duly waived the defect.

It has generally been held that a party may obtain equitable relief from a judgment rendered against him without service of process or other necessary notice in the suit, by reason whereof he fails to appear and defend,[85] and the rule has been held applicable, even though it is not shown that complainant lacked independent knowledge of the pendency of the action against him,[86] unless the circumstances were sufficient to amount to a waiver of notice.[87] This rule has been held to apply whether the record affirmatively shows want of service of process,[88] or merely omits to show the service, leaving it to be presumed prima facie.[89] There are some decisions, however, which seem to hold, without any qualification, that a judgment void because defendant was not served with process cannot be relieved against in equity by injunction or otherwise,[90] unless there is some further ground of equitable cognizance, as discussed supra § 351.

Where, on a proceeding for final distribution of an estate, personal notice is not required by statute, the want of such notice furnishes no ground for enjoining the judgment.[91] Failure to give notice in the manner directed by a statute which is not mandatory has been held not to render the judgment subject to equitable attack if actual notice was duly received.[92]

Joint defendants. Where judgment was rendered against two defendants, although process was served on only one of them, defendant not served may have relief in equity against the judgment.[93] However, a defendant who has been served with process may not attack the judgment in equity on the ground that his codefendant had not been served.[94]

b. Defective Process or Service

Defective process or notice, or defective service of process, may afford ground for equitable relief, although such relief will ordinarily be denied where the complainant had an adequate remedy at law.

Defects in the process so radical that it does not serve its purpose of notifying defendant of the suit and the time for proceeding in it will be ground for an injunction against the judgment;[95] but it is otherwise where the process or notice is sufficient to put him on inquiry as to the action, which inquiry he negligently fails to pursue.[96] Ground for the interposition of equity may be laid by showing a fatal defect in the manner of serving the process,[97] but a defective return or proof of process duly served has been held not a sufficient ground for equity to interfere.[98] Equitable relief may be denied where the circumstances are such that complainant had an adequate remedy at law of which he negligently failed to avail himself,[99] as where the service was merely irregular,[1] or not in strict compliance with the statute.[2]

§ 353. —— False Return of Service

There is a conflict of authority as to whether equitable relief may be granted against a judgment obtained where there was a false return without due service of process.

It has been acknowledged that there is some difference of judicial opinion as to whether or not equitable relief may be granted against a judgment where there was a false return without due service of process.[3] Some authorities hold that if the process is returned executed on defendant at law, and was not in fact executed, and judgment was rendered without appearance or opportunity to defend, chancery has power to enjoin the judgment.[4] According to these decisions, the return of the officer to the writ is only prima facie evidence of the fact stated by it, and may be contradicted,[5] and, while complainant may be denied the right to attack the sheriff's return regarding service under statutes providing for remedy by motion, nevertheless he retains the right to equitable relief.[6]

On the other hand, there are authorities to the effect that a return is so far conclusive as between the parties that the judgment is not open to equitable attack on the ground that the return was false and complainant not duly served with process unless some further ground for equitable relief appears,[7] as that complainant had a meritorious defense[8] or that his adversary was guilty of fraud in connection with the matter.[9] It has, however, been held that a court of equity has power to entertain a bill containing clear and convincing allegations which, on being proved, would establish that no service of process whatsoever was had on a necessary party defendant in contradiction of the facts appearing on the record,[10] and that statutes precluding attack on a sheriff's return do not prevent complainant from attacking a judgment on the ground that he was not legally cited, as the real basis of such an attack is in respect of the citation and not of the return, which latter is simply evidence of the citation.[11]

Where defendant appears and pleads to the action, the judgment will not be enjoined notwithstanding a false return of service.[12]

§ 354. —— Unauthorized Appearance

There is a conflict of authority as to whether a judgment resting on an unauthorized appearance may be canceled or its enforcement restrained in equity.

According to some decisions, a judgment obtained and resting on an unauthorized appearance for the party may be canceled or its enforcement restrained in equity, irrespective of the question whether the attorney entering the appearance is responsible or irresponsible, or acted by procurement or collusion with his antagonist.[13] According to other decisions, where a regular attorney of the court appears and answers for a defendant in a suit at law, a judgment recovered by plaintiff will not be vacated and execution enjoined by a court of equity, although the attorney appeared without authority from defendant, unless it is shown that the attorney is not of sufficient ability to answer for the damages caused by his unauthorized appearance, or there has been collusion between him and plaintiff in the suit at law; in such a case redress must be sought against the attorney.[14]

There are also authorities to the effect that a judgment obtained on an unauthorized appearance of an attorney will not be enjoined, whether the attorney is or is not solvent and able to respond in damages,[15] unless special circumstances render it necessary,[16] as where the question of unauthorized appearance is complicated by fraud,[17] or where it would be "against conscience" to execute the judgment,[18] or where it is evident that the court cannot properly determine on motion all the interests affected, the only proper method of procedure in such cases being in equity.[19] It has also been held that relief will be denied unless it is shown that the attorney's appearance and answer were prejudicial to the rights of the complaining party and resulted in the judgment against him.[20] Withdrawal by attorneys of their appearance with consent of the court has been held not of itself to deprive the latter of jurisdiction so as to authorize cancellation of the judgment in equity.[21]

§ 355. Payment or Satisfaction of Judgment

In an otherwise proper case the complainant may secure equitable relief against enforcement of a judgment previously paid or satisfied.

It has generally been held that equity may enjoin a judgment creditor from proceeding to collect a judgment which has been in fact paid, discharged, or satisfied,[22] provided, of course, payment was made to some one having authority to receive the money.[23] Under some circumstances such equitable relief may be proper notwithstanding the court in which the judgment was rendered may have the power to grant the same relief on motion to stay the execution.[24] However, it has been held that equity has no jurisdiction to relieve against a judgment which has been satisfied, where the remedy at law is adequate,[25] either by the ancient writ of audita querela [26] or by motion made in the court in which such judgment was rendered,[27] unless there are questions of law and fact which may be better tried in a court of equity than in a law court, or there is an equitable right involved more appropriate for the jurisdiction of the former tribunal than the latter.[28] Similarly, one who might have set up the fact of payment or discharge of a judgment, by way of defense to an action at law on it, or in a proceeding to revive it, cannot claim equitable relief against its enforcement.[29] In any case, where the legal remedy is not available,[30] or where fraud[31] or injustice[32] appears, the judgment may be enjoined. It has been held that a court cannot rescind or annul a judgment theretofore paid by one of several solidary judgment debtors.[33]

§ 356. Errors and Irregularities

Errors and irregularities in a judgment will not afford ground for relief by a court of equity unless facts extrinsic to the error bring the case within one of the recognized grounds for equitable cognizance or the errors are fundamental.

Equity will not set aside or enjoin a judgment recovered at law, against a party who had a full opportunity to defend himself, in a case of which the court had jurisdiction, simply on the ground that the judgment is irregular or erroneous,[34] as a court of equity may not review judgments of other courts of competent jurisdiction,[35] or afford equitable relief for mistakes of fact[36] or errors of law,[37] unless the judgment is against good conscience,[38] or there are facts extrinsic to the error justifying relief,[39] as where the errors are the result of fraud or collusion[40] or of such a nature as to deprive the party of all opportunity of making his defense in the action at law.[41]

Mere irregularities or errors in the proceedings leading up to a judgment constitute no ground for equitable interference,[42] and it has been held immaterial that the judgment is unjust[43] or that the error was such as to warrant a new trial,[44] although under statutes regulating bills of review it has been held that such a bill will lie only if the grounds presented are such as would have required granting of a new trial at law.[45] Where there was in legal contemplation no error committed, equitable relief will, of course, be denied.[46] On the other hand, fundamental errors going to the power or jurisdiction of the court to render the judgment may afford a basis for equitable relief,[47] except, it has been said, where the interests of third persons intervene which should be protected under broad principles of public policy;[48] and where the errors committed are of a character making the judgment a nullity, and it would be against good conscience to enforce it, enforcement of the judgment may be enjoined.[49]

§ 357. —— Defects or Objections as to Parties or Pleadings

Judgment by confession

(1) A judgment by confession is not subject to equitable relief for mere defects or irregularities in the instrument of confession.—Burch v. West, 25 N.E. 658, 134 Ill. 258—34 C.J. p 441 note 11.

(2) Likewise such relief cannot be granted merely because the affidavit to the complaint on which the judgment was rendered was defective.—Reiley v. Johnston, 22 Wis. 279.

49. Colo.—Ferrier v. Morris, 122 P. 2d 880, 109 Colo. 154.

Where the trial court had jurisdiction to render judgment, defects and objections as to parties amounting to no more than irregularities do not constitute grounds for equitable relief against the judgment.[50] Nonjoinder of a proper party defendant will not authorize equitable relief to other defendants who were properly cited,[51] but failure to join a necessary party defendant may justify equitable relief in an action by such party.[52] A court of equity may not amend a judgment so as to add a new party where there is no statutory provision authorizing such procedure.[53]

If the trial court had jurisdiction of the person and subject matter, equity ordinarily will deny relief against a judgment on the ground of defects, objections, mistakes, or insufficiency with respect to the pleadings,[54] especially where the defects are due to the mistake or negligence of complainant himself[55] and he failed to avail himself of his remedy at law.[56] So it has been held that a court of equity will not restrain enforcement of a judgment because the complaint in the action was fatally defective.[57] Equitable relief may be afforded, however, where the defect in the pleadings is of such character as to deprive the court of jurisdiction,[58] and an independent bill may lie to set aside a judgment where it is beyond the scope of the pleadings[59] or issues.[60]

§ 358. —— Objections to Evidence

Ordinarily equity will not afford relief against a judgment for insufficiency of the evidence to support it, or for erroneous rulings of the trial court in respect of admissibility of evidence.

Ordinarily equity will not afford relief or enjoin the enforcement of a judgment at law on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support it[61] or the lack of evidence of essential facts[62] or because of erroneous action of the court in admitting or excluding particular evidence.[63]

§ 359. —— Error in Amount of Judgment or Relief Granted

Error in respect of the amount of the judgment or the relief awarded affords no ground for equitable relief where the court had jurisdiction of the parties and subject matter, unless other grounds of equitable cognizance appear, such as fraud or mistake, coupled with lack of an adequate remedy at law.

Where the court has jurisdiction of the person and the subject matter, and there is no special ground for equitable interference, the fact that a judgment is erroneous as to the amount awarded,[64] as for a greater amount than claimed,[65] or fails in other respects to grant the proper relief,[66] affords no ground for vacating it in equity or enjoining its enforcement. Similarly, mere error in the taxation of costs,[67] or in the allowance of interest where the verdict gives none,[68] affords no ground for enjoining the judgment.

On the other hand, where through fraud, accident, mistake, or miscalculation a judgment is entered for an amount or in terms not intended, or inconsistent with the pleadings, equity may give relief on clear and satisfying proof.[69] Relief will not be granted, however, where the party has an adequate remedy by appeal, motion, or other proceeding in the law court,[70] or where he is chargeable with negligence in permitting the mistake to occur or in failing to seek his remedy in due time.[71]

§ 360. —— Irregular Rendition or Entry

Errors in the time, form, or manner of rendition or entry of a judgment ordinarily afford no ground for equitable relief; but where there are additional grounds of equitable cognizance relief may be granted.

Irregularities or errors in the time, form, or manner of the rendition or entry of a judgment furnish no ground for equity to reform it or enjoin its collection.[72] On the other hand, some cases recognize the right of equity to interfere in a grave emergency produced by an erroneous entry of judgment[73] where there is no other way of obtaining relief[74] or where the party has been prevented from obtaining relief at law by fraud, accident, or the act of the opposite party, without fault or neglect on his own part.[75] So, where the clerk of the law court has made mistakes or erroneous entries in the record of the judgment, it is proper for equity to grant relief.[76] It has been held that a defect in rendition of a judgment going to the jurisdiction of the court may constitute ground for suit in equity.[77]

§ 361. Defenses Not Interposed in Former Action

a. In general
b. Particular defenses

a. In General

A defendant who negligently fails to interpose an available defense in an action, and who is not prevented from interposing it by fraud, accident, or the like, cannot assert such defense as a ground for equitable relief against the judgment.

A defendant in an action who has a defense of which he is or should be fully aware, which is cognizable by and within the jurisdiction of the court in which the action is brought, and which he has an opportunity to interpose, is chargeable with negligence if he fails to set up such defense and insist on it, not being prevented from doing so by any fraud, accident, or surprise; and he cannot have relief in equity against the judgment in that action on the same grounds which constituted such defense.[78] This proposition has been so repeatedly affirmed that it has become a well recognized principle and maxim of equity,[79] and will not be abrogated merely because the judgment may be wrong in law or fact,[80] or may work injustice and hardship,[81] as, for instance, when the effect of allowing the judgment to stand will be to compel the payment of a debt which defendant does not owe or which he owes to a third person.[82] An exception to this rule has been held to exist, however, in cases where relief is sought by persons incapacitated to contract generally or specially;[83] and, as discussed infra §§ 363–368, relief in equity may be had where there was an adequate excuse for not presenting the defense in the original action.

Defenses available either at law or in equity. Where a party's defense to an action is cognizable either at law or in equity, it has been held in some jurisdictions that he may choose in which form he will make his defense, and if he omits to do so at law he may then have recourse to equity for relief against the judgment.[84] However, if in any such case the party makes his defense in the trial at law, he will be regarded as having made his election, and if he fails he will have no ground for a bill in equity for relief against the judgment[85] unless his defeat occurred through fraud, surprise, accident or the like.[86]

In other jurisdictions where a suit is first brought in a court of law, in which defendant may make his defense as fully and adequately as he could in a court of equity, he must make his defense there, and if he neglects to do so a court of equity has no jurisdiction to relieve him,[87] except where some special ground for relief can be established,[88] or where the statutes provide otherwise.[89]

b. Particular Defenses

(1) Insufficiency or illegality of cause of action

(2) Other defenses

(1) Insufficiency or Illegality of Cause of Action

Insufficiency or illegality of the cause of action on which the judgment was based is generally considered not a ground for equitable relief against the judgment where there was nothing to prevent the interposition of such defense in the original action.

The fact that the cause of action stated by plaintiff is not sufficient to support the judgment or does not entitle him to the relief awarded is a defense which must be interposed at law, and equity will not enjoin the judgment on this ground,[90] unless it appears that there was some good reason why defendant did not or could not plead it[91] or there are circumstances impeaching the justice or validity of the judgment.[92] The fact that the contract or cause of action was illegal, immoral, or contrary to public policy is good ground for enjoining the enforcement of the judgment,[93] although, according to some cases, only when the defense could not have been made at law or was prevented.[94] It has been held that equity will not interfere where the party seeking relief is in pari delicto with the other,[95] except in so far as the contract remains in whole or in part executory.[96]

Gambling contracts. Under statutes which expressly declare that judgments based on gaming contracts shall be void, it is the rule that equity will grant relief against a judgment founded on a gaming consideration although no defense was made at law.[97] This is true although the judgment was obtained by default[98] or by confession.[99] In jurisdictions where there is no statutory declaration that judgments founded on gaming contracts shall be void, the party is bound to make his defense at law, and, having failed to do so, cannot come into equity to enjoin the judgment on the ground of illegality of consideration.[1] Where a party has unsuccessfully attempted to resist the payment of a debt for which he is sued at law, on the ground of its being based on a gaming transaction, he cannot afterward have relief in equity.[2]

Usury. While it has been held in some jurisdictions that it is competent for a party to a usurious contract to go into equity for relief as to the interest, even after a judgment at law, and without assigning any reason for have failed to defend himself at law,[3] the general rule is well settled that where defendant at law failed to make his defense of usury and was not prevented by fraud or the fault of the other party, or by accident, unmixed with negligence on his part, a court of chancery will not take jurisdiction to afford relief,[4] unless under the circumstances such defense could not have been established at law, or would have involved an embarrassing and complicated inquiry.[5] which should have been interposed in the original action has been applied to a great many defenses, including such defenses as want of consideration, and payment or discharge of the claim underlying the judgment.

Although some decisions favor the right of equity to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment, because of the want or failure of consideration for the contract on which it is founded, on the broad ground that it would be against conscience to permit the collection of the judgment under such circumstances,[6] it has generally been held that this is a defense which should be interposed in the original action, and will furnish no ground for relief in equity if the party raised it in the original action or might have done so.[7] Relief may be granted under some circumstances, however, as where the failure of consideration occurs or is discovered after the rendition of the judgment,[8] provided the injured party has then no adequate remedy at law,[9] which is the case, for instance, where his remedy would be by an action against the other party and the latter is insolvent,[10] and provided complainant himself is free from all fraud or dishonesty and is injured by the judgment as it stands.[11]

Payment, settlement, or discharge of the claim in suit must generally be set up as a defense before judgment, and will furnish no ground for a court of equity to enjoin the judgment unless the party was prevented from making his defense by fraud, circumvention, or deceit, or by an accident.[12] This applies to a defense that defendant in the original suit was discharged from liability as surety by an extension of time granted to the principal.[13] Clearly a party is not entitled to enjoin the collection of the entire judgment because of the payment of a part.[14]

Miscellaneous defenses. The rule prohibiting equitable relief against a judgment where the ground of relief is based on matters which should have been interposed as a defense in the original action has been applied to a great many defenses in addition to those already considered, including defenses based on breach of warranty,[15] coverture,[16] a discharge in bankruptcy,[17] duress or threats,[18] forgery,[19] infancy,[20] invalidity of a statute,[21] limitation of liability under an insurance policy,[22] misrepresentation in securing a contract,[23] non est factum,[24] the pendency of another action,[25] rescission of the contract in suit prior to judgment,[26] the statute of limitations,[27] and ultra vires.[28] The rule has also been applied to a defense that plaintiff in the action at law was not legally incorporated;[29] that plaintiff, a foreign corporation, was without authority to sue because of noncompliance with the requirements of domestic statutes;[30] that because of collusion complainant's right to a set-off was defeated;[31] that a credit to which he was entitled was not given to complainant;[32] that the issues on retrial of the original action were not limited in accordance with the decision of the appellate court;[33] and other defenses.[34]

§ 362. —— Equitable Defenses

Relief against a judgment at law may be had in equity on grounds constituting an equitable defense which could not have been interposed in the law action.

If a party's defense to an action at law is not within the cognizance of a court of law, being purely equitable in its nature, he is, of course, not chargeable with negligence in failing to make it effectual at law; and he may have relief in equity against the judgment, if it is unjust and inequitable, on the grounds constituting such defense.[35] The rule applies whether the party suffers judgment to go against him without attempting to make the defense,[36] or whether, on attempting it, it is adjudged to be purely equitable and not a defense to an action at law.[37] If defendant has both a legal and an equitable defense, the latter not cognizable at law, a failure to use diligence in making his legal defense will not prevent a court of equity from granting an injunction on proof of the equitable defense.[38]

Under codes of practice which blend legal and equitable powers, or confer extensive equitable powers on the courts of common law, it has been held that a defense, if available under the code, must be set up in the original action, and cannot be made the basis of a subsequent application to equity, although it is inherently equitable in its nature.[39]

§ 363. Excuses for Not Defending

Failure to interpose a defense will not bar equitable relief against a judgment where a sufficient excuse exists for such failure, provided the party asserting the excuse was not guilty of any fault or negligence.

Equity may grant relief against a judgment which is unjust and inequitable, where the party had a good defense to the action, but had no opportunity to avail himself of it, or lost such defense through the wrongful acts of the adverse party.[40] Thus

Where defendant, in an action to enforce payment of notes, failed to set up his defense that plaintiff had agreed to cancel notes, he could not afterward apply to a court of equity for an injunction to restrain enforcement of a judgment rendered in such action, and in such proceeding assert that defense.—Corcanges v. equity may relieve against a judgment at law where the defense could not have been set up at law,[41] as where payment or settlement was made after the institution of the suit and was not then pleadable.[42] A judgment may be enjoined if, according to the jurisdiction of a court of common law, it is doubtful whether the grounds of plaintiff's defense were legally available,[43] or if there would have been great difficulty and embarrassment in complainant's legal remedy,[44] especially where such difficulty and embarrassment were produced by the conduct of defendant.[45]

The party asserting the excuse must have been without fault as to the rendition of the judgment and must have exercised due diligence, for a court of equity will not grant relief against a judgment in a former action when the failure to have a full and fair presentation of the case therein resulted from the negligence or fault of the party seeking relief or that of his agents.[46] As a rule it must appear that, notwithstanding the exercise of ordinary diligence, the circumstances on which the complaining party relies were unknown to him before judgment.[47] A defendant is not justified in failing to

It has been said to be poor practice to open a judgment, to establish a defense which has originated since the rendition of the judgment; but when the subject matter of defense is attached to the judgment or to the consideration on which it rests, the court under its equitable powers will entertain a petition and, if the facts warrant, will open the judgment.—Pollard & Brant, Inc., v. Failure to present evidence

Fact that existing evidence was not presented because of accident, mistake, or misfortune is not sufficient reason for revocation of final decree in equity suit.—Holyoke Nat. Bank v. Dulitzky, 173 N.E. 405, 273 Mass. 125.

Negligence induced by adverse party

Alleged negligence of the complaining party superinduced by negligence of the party opposing relief cannot be invoked to estop the former to set aside judgment.—Overton v. Overton, 37 S.W.2d 565, 327 Mo. 530.

present his defense at law simply because plaintiff verbally assures him that he will not be held responsible according to the terms of the judgment prayed for.[48] Equity will not enjoin a judgment where the only reason alleged for the failure of defendant to avail himself of a legal defense is an erroneous ruling of the trial court excluding such defense, for this is to be remedied by appeal.[49]

Availability of evidence at law. Where defendant cannot make good his defense, because the only evidence to sustain it is not admissible or cannot be produced in a court of law, but can be supplied in equity, he may be relieved against the judgment.[50] Relief will not be granted, however, where the same grounds of objection to the proposed evidence are equally prohibitive in equity as at law.[51]

Reliance on advice, statements, or acts of others. It is not a sufficient excuse for failing to defend an action at law that the party relied on others, who were not officially bound to give him correct information or any information at all, to advise him concerning the character or purpose of the suit, the necessity of defending it, the progress of the cause, or its probable time of trial.[52] An exception to the rule has been made in the case of executors and administrators, who are obliged, from the nature of their office, to rely on the information of others.[53] It has been held that one of two defendants has the right to rely on the assurance of the other that he will take care of the matter.[54] A party is not at fault for assuming that commissioners making a partition acted impartially.[55]

§ 364. —— Ignorance of Facts or Law

A party's ignorance of facts which constitute a defense, and which he could not have discovered by the exercise of due diligence, may furnish a ground for equitable relief against a judgment; but ignorance of the law generally will afford no ground for equitable interference.

Equity may grant relief against a judgment at law, where there was a good and valid defense to the action, of which defendant was ignorant during the pendency of the original action, and which he could not have discovered, by the exercise of reasonable and proper diligence, in time to set it up.[56] However, he must show the exercise of due diligence to discover his defense, or that he was prevented from employing such diligence by fraud, accident, or the act of the opposite party, unmixed with fault or negligence on his own part; otherwise equity will do nothing for him.[57] Although a party may have suspected the existence of a fact which would have given him a good defense to the action at law, this will not preclude him from relief in equity, if his suspicions did not amount to legal or moral certainty, and if he is not chargeable with laches in failing to make efforts to discover the truth.[58]

Special favor to administrators. Some courts are disposed to show special indulgence in this particular to administrators, on the ground that they are obliged, from the nature of their office, to rely on the information which they may derive from others.[59]

Necessity of seeking discovery. If defendant in an action at law could obtain information concerning the facts which constitute his defense, and which are necessary to make his defense effectual, by the aid of a bill in equity for a discovery from the adverse party, his failure to avail himself of this means of information will preclude him from afterward obtaining an injunction against the judgment.[60]

Ignorance of the law, of the nature or consequences of the action, or of the party's legal rights and duties, will generally afford no ground for equitable interference.[61] However, in some cases it has been held that ignorance of the unconstitutionality of an act is excusable, and that mistake caused by proceeding under such a law is a ground for relief.[62] A party cannot be permitted to defeat a judgment on the ground that he did not understand the legal effect of papers served on him.[63]

§ 365. —— Mistake or Surprise

a. Mistake
b. Surprise

a. Mistake

An honest, mutual, and extrinsic mistake of fact which deprives a party of an opportunity to present his case affords ground for equitable relief against a judgment. A mistake of law, however, ordinarily is not sufficient.

While in a proper case equity may grant relief against a judgment on the ground of mistake,[64] a mere showing of a mistake of some kind is not of itself sufficient to justify such relief.[65] The mistake must be one of fact;[66] usually it must relate to matters which prevented a party from making a valid defense,[67] and it must be unmixed with the fault, negligence, or laches of the injured party.[68]

Availability of funds to satisfy claim

The surety on a replevy bond of a defendant was held not entitled to have a judgment against him on the bond set aside on the ground of mistake based on a claim that he was induced to sign the bond by a representation that defendant had deposited with the attorney sufficient funds to satisfy the note and mortgage involved, and that after judgment was entered the money was returned to defendant without the surety's knowledge or consent, in the absence of anything connecting plaintiff with the transaction.—Reeves v. Mo.—Gorg v. Rutherford, App., 31 S.W.2d 585.
N.H.—Lancaster Nat. Bank v. Whitefield Sav. Bank & Trust Co., 30 A.

As the rule is sometimes expressed, a mistake of fact, provided it is honest and genuine, and such as a man might reasonably make, will be a sufficient excuse for not defending an action at law, and will warrant a court of equity, if the judgment is against conscience, in enjoining its enforcement.[69] The mistake relied on as a ground for equitable relief against a judgment must be a mutual mistake,[70] or a unilateral mistake of the complaining party coupled with some act of the opposing party which brings about the mistake.[71] The mistake must be extrinsic rather than intrinsic.[72]

Mistake of law. It is no ground for relief in equity that the party was prevented from making his defense at law by a mistake of law, not induced by the fraud or misconduct of the other party,[73] or by reason of mistaking or misunderstanding his rights in the premises.[74] This is true even where the mistake is due to an erroneous statement made by the trial judge.[75] Relief, however, may be decreed in cases of mistakes in law induced by the fraud or circumvention of the party profiting thereby[76] or where there are other facts sufficient to take the case out of the general rule.[77]

Mistake of court officers. Relief is sometimes granted for mistake made by officers of the court,[78] at least when the mistake is of a ministerial rather than a judicial character.[79]

b. Surprise

Equity may grant relief against a judgment on the ground of surprise unmixed with negligence on the part of the complaining party; but surprise caused by the evidence given at the trial, and against which the injured party could have protected himself by proper care, is insufficient.

Equity may relieve a party from a judgment obtained against him by surprise,[80] especially where the facts constituting the surprise are tantamount to a perpetration of fraud by the opposite party.[81] Thus a party will be entitled to equitable relief

Fraudulent concealment or inequitable conduct

Relief from consent decree, entered as result of unilateral mistake induced by fraudulent concealment of facts by party against whom relief is sought, is available; but in absence of such concealment or other inequitable conduct, relief is not available.—Mudd v. Lanier, Ala., 24 So.2d 550.

where he had no knowledge of the suit until after judgment had been obtained,[82] where a party for good and sufficient reasons, and without any negligence or inattention, believes that his case will not be reached for trial during the current term or within a certain time, but nevertheless it is called and he is defaulted,[83] or where at a subsequent day of the term judgment was taken in a litigated case, defendant and his counsel having in the meantime left the court, relying on an order of continuance of all cases until the next term.[84] On the other hand, an injunction will not be allowed where the surprise relied on was such as might reasonably have been guarded against,[85] where the party has a remedy in the trial court,[86] or where the surprise was occasioned by his own negligence or lack of care or attention.[87]

Surprise caused by evidence or witnesses. Relief in equity against a judgment ordinarily cannot be had on the ground of surprise caused by the absence of a witness from the trial,[88] by the unexpected character of the testimony given by a witness,[89] by the introduction of unanticipated evidence,[90] or by a discovery that a witness who was relied on to testify is incompetent or privileged,[91] at least where the party could have guarded himself against such a surprise by the exercise of proper care and vigilance.[92] However, where a witness who immediately before the trial assured defendant that he could prove material facts either designedly or from lapse of memory failed to do so, equity will grant relief.[93]

§ 366. —— Accident or Misfortune

Accident or misfortune, such as that preventing a party or his counsel from attending the trial, may afford ground for equitable interference with a judgment, provided the accident or misfortune was unavoidable and not attributable in any way to the fault of the party seeking relief.

Unavoidable accident, misfortune, or casualty preventing the party from making his defense is sufficient ground for the interference of equity in an otherwise meritorious case.[94] However, it must appear that the accident, casualty, or misfortune was in fact unavoidable or in no way attributable to the negligence or lack of diligence of the party seeking equitable relief,[95] and relief will not be granted on this ground where no counsel was employed, or witnesses summoned, or any other steps taken to defend the action.[96] Misunderstandings between counsel, or between counsel and clients, may constitute unavoidable casualty or misfortune justifying relief against a judgment.[97] It has been held that the required unavoidable casualty and misfortune has reference to the inability of a party to be present and participate in the proceedings, and has no application to the inability of a party to discover evidence necessary to constitute a defense.[98]

Unavoidable casualty or misfortune held not shown

(1) Neglect of a party and his attorney in failing to examine the record to determine whether the case had been stricken from the docket was held not to constitute an un-

Absence or incapacity of counsel. The unavoidable or excusable absence of the party's attorney from the court at the time of the trial may in some circumstances entitle the party to relief in equity,[99] although the courts are not very much disposed to interfere on this account,[1] and will not do so where it appears that defendant could have saved himself by the timely employment of other counsel[2] or where he had another attorney in the case.[3] Equity will furnish relief where, without the knowledge or fault of a party, his attorney becomes physically or mentally incapacitated causing his acts or conduct to lead to damaging result so detrimental and unjust as to shock the conscience.[4]

Sickness of party or relative. The severe illness of defendant, or of a near relative, preventing him from attending the trial may be ground for relief in equity against the judgment,[5] provided his personal presence was necessary to the successful defense of the action,[6] and it appears that, had he been present, there would probably have been a different result and one more favorable to him.[7] However, a party in this situation must use diligence in endeavoring to prepare for the trial, employing counsel, summoning witnesses, asking for a continuance or for a new trial, or otherwise making suitable efforts to save himself; and, if he fails in this, equity will not relieve him.[8]

§ 367. —— Excusable Neglect

Excusable neglect, unmixed with any carelessness on the part of the complaining party, may justify equitable relief against a judgment.

Equity may relieve a party from a judgment taken against him through his excusable neglect.[9] However, if he has carelessly or foolishly omitted avoidable casualty.—McCommas v. McCawley, 14 S.W.2d 1057, 228 Ky. 263.

(2) Where grantee of realty lent money to owner, took a warranty deed to realty, and pledged realty to secure grantee's debt, fact that when pledgee sued for foreclosure and served summons on owner, owner was informed by attorney that grantee would bid in the realty for owner's benefit, which grantee failed to do, did not constitute unavoidable casualty or misfortune preventing owner from defending, so as to entitle owner to vacation of foreclosure judgment.—Mason v. Lacy, 117 S.W.2d 1026, 274 Ky. 21.

(3) Where mortgagor and wife did not file answer to foreclosure suit and evidence showed that wife at time of service of summons on husband was not too ill to accept service and that illness did not take place until after summons was served on husband with whom copy of summons was left for wife, judgment of foreclosure would not be set aside on ground of unavoidable casualty.—White v. Milburn, 122 S.W.2d 589, 197 Ark. 373.

Identification of allottee

The facts that an allottee was too young at the time he was enrolled to know who could identify him, that the witnesses to his enrollment were dead, and that he was unable to learn the names of individuals who could identify him as the allottee have been held not to constitute unavoidable casualty and misfortune justifying an attack on a judgment. —Burton v. Excuse held sufficient

In a suit to vacate and restrain to attend to his case, to retain and instruct counsel, to gather his witnesses, or otherwise to prepare for the trial, he is in no position to invoke the aid of equity, and it will be refused.[10] If a litigant authorizes another to look after the defense of the action, the failure of such other person to employ an attorney or to take other proper and necessary measures will bar relief in equity in the absence of fraud.[11]

A distinction must be made between such neglect as is attributable solely to the party himself and such as is brought about by the improper or deceitful conduct of the other side; the former is not excusable, the latter sometimes is.[12]

§ 368. —— Negligence or Misconduct of Counsel

Negligence or misconduct of a party's counsel is generally attributable to the party himself, and ordinarily furnishes no ground for equitable relief against a judgment. Under some circumstances, however, as where the party has been betrayed by his attorney, or where the opposite party has caused the misconduct, relief against the judgment may be granted.

It is not sufficient ground for relief in equity that a judgment was obtained against a party in consequence of the neglect, inattention, mistake, or incompetence of his attorney,[13] unless it was caused collection of a judgment entered by a real estate agent against a landowner for a commission for selling the land, letters written by the agent to the landowner to the effect that he was suing the one who had contracted to purchase, and that although the landowner would be a necessary party the suit could not hurt him, presented a sufficient excuse for failure of the landowner to appear and defend.—Walberg v. Failure to verify time of trial

Where judgment was rendered in absence of defendants and their counsel because of reliance by one defendant on alleged announcement of opposing counsel in open court during sounding of docket that case would not be tried during week for which it had been set and such defendants' notice to their counsel of such announcement, without seeking to verify it, defendants were held not entitled to have judgment vacated.—Poland v. Risher, Civ.App., 88 S.W.2d 1106, affirmed Mann v. Risher, 116 S.W.2d 692, 131 Tex. 498.

Discharge of attorneys

Plaintiffs' discharge of attorneys on false assumption that trial would remain in abeyance pending subsequent action has been held negligence precluding equitable relief against judgment.—Davis v. Cox, Tex.Civ.App., 4 S.W.2d 1008, error dismissed.

Belief as to abandonment of case

The fact that the party seeking relief believed that case had been abandoned, because he had not heard from it for a long time, does not excuse his default.—Millikin v. Anderson, Mo.App., 269 S.W. 675.

Failure to file caveat

Petitioner, although nonresident, was held not entitled to set aside judgment setting apart statutory support for widow and children, where he filed no caveat to application on which citation had issued and been published.—Beddingfield v. Old Nat. Bank & Trust Co., 165 S.E. 61, 175 Ga. 172.

Lathrop, supra.

Suspension of attorney

The fact that an attorney was suspended shortly after the proceedings complained of is not of itself sufficient to justify relief in equity. —De Tray v. Chambers, 297 P. 575, 112 Cal.App. 697.

Failure of third person to follow attorney's directions

A litigant is not entitled to have default judgment against him vacated by fact that attorney, employed by him to defend suit, on being called out of town, directed third

by the opposite party,[14] the fault of the attorney being attributed to the party himself.[15] The rule is in no way affected by the fact that the attorney is insolvent and unable to respond in damages.[16] Not every act of inadvertence on the part of an attorney, however, is negligence imputable to the client,[17] and the courts have thought proper to grant relief in some cases of misunderstanding or misapprehension on the part of the attorney,[18] especially where the mistake arose from misinformation.[19] Relief may also be granted where the party has been deceived or betrayed by his attorney,[20] or where the attorney withdrew from the case without notice and without lawful cause.[21]

In applying the rule prohibiting relief for negligence or misconduct of counsel, it has been held no ground for relief against a judgment under the circumstances of the particular case that counsel neglected to answer or file a plea for a party, or failed properly to present the defenses of his client;[22] that counsel managed the trial of the cause unskillfully;[23] absented himself from court during the trial, intentionally or otherwise;[24] failed to notify his client of the time of trial;[25] advised his client to remain away from court;[26] failed to in-person to file answer that attorney had prepared, but third person forgot to do so.—Roberts v. Seymore, 73 P.2d 895, 181 Okl. 201.

Failure to set up oral agreement

Fact that defendants' attorneys did not set up oral agreement allegedly constituting a defense to action, but permitted judgment to be entered in favor of plaintiff, did not entitle defendants to have judgment vacated, in absence of any claim of fraud on part of attorneys, or that failure to present defense resulted from connivance or fraud of plaintiff.—Ferrara v. § 369. Matters Determined in Original Action

Matters determined in the original action, including matters determined on motions for a new trial, to vacate the judgment, or for a continuance, generally cannot again be advanced as a ground for equitable relief against the judgment rendered.

Equity will not entertain a bill for relief against a judgment, founded on any matters which were tried and determined in the prior action, or which were there so put in issue that they might have been adjudicated,[39] however unjust the judgment may appear to be.[40] This rule assumes, however, that there has been a trial in which the respective parties have had an opportunity fully to present their claims.[41]

On motion for new trial or to vacate. Equity will refuse to interfere by injunction, when the grounds presented for its action have been already considered and held insufficient on a motion made in the trial court to open or vacate the judgment or for a new trial.[42]

§ 370. Compelling Set-Off or Reduction of Damages

a. In general
b. Subject matter of set-off

a. In General

Equitable relief against a judgment may sometimes be had to enable the judgment debtor to set off a claim against the judgment creditor which by reason of the judgment creditor's nonresidence or insolvency, or for some other sufficient reason, would otherwise be uncollectable; but in order to justify such relief it must appear that the complaining party has not been guilty of inexcusable failure to plead his set-off in the original action.

As equity may order one judgment to be set off against another, so it has power to restrain the execution of a judgment to the extent that the judgment debtor has a claim against the judgment creditor which the judgment debtor cannot otherwise collect.[44] If a case for equitable relief is presented, but the amount due on the set-off is less than the amount of the judgment, the court should not enjoin the whole judgment,[45] but should permit the balance to be collected by execution.[46] A party going into equity to enjoin a judgment on the ground of a set-off must show as strong a claim to be paid the amount of his demand as if he were suing on it at law or in equity,[47] and such relief will not be granted where the judgment debtor has an adequate remedy at law,[48] or where he has been guilty of such negligence or lack of diligence as to render inequitable his demand for an offset.[49] In order to justify relief of this nature it must appear that the judgment creditor is in some way unable to respond to the claim against him, so that complainant is in danger of losing it.[50]

Insolvency or nonresidence of judgment creditor. According to some decisions the mere insolvency of the judgment creditor will not of itself justify an injunction against the enforcement of a judgment at law in order to let in a set-off which might have been pleaded at law at the time when such judgment was recovered.[51] The rule laid down by the weight of authority, however, is to the effect that the insolvency of the party seeking to enforce a judgment furnishes a sufficient ground for the interposition of a court of equity to enable the debtor to avail himself of a set-off;[52] and even though insolvency may not of itself be considered a sufficient ground on which to base equitable relief, it is always an important factor and may with other grounds of equitable relief justify the interposition of the court of equity by the process of injunction.[53]

Application for rehearing based on lack of service

Where, after default, defendant filed application for rehearing alleging that summons and complaint had not been served on him and that he had no notice until after judgment was rendered, and judgment was rendered against him on this application, which was afterward affirmed, there was an adjudication, and relief against the judgment will be denied in equity.—Handy v. Absence of injury to assignee

A judgment debtor was held not barred from equitable relief against an assignee of the judgment because of delay in bringing his action where it appeared that the judgment had been assigned for a preexisting debt and that the assignee had not been injured by the delay.—Jegglin v. Orr, 29 S.W.2d 721, 224 Mo.App. 773.

53. Ill.—Matson v. Oberne, 25 Ill. App. 213.

It has been held by some decisions that the nonresidence of the party against whom the set-off is asserted is good ground for equitable relief,[54] provided he became a nonresident after the rendition of the judgment,[55] particularly if he has no property within the state;[56] but there are decisions to the contrary.[57]

Failure to plead set-off in original action. Equity will not enjoin a judgment on account of matters which might have been pleaded by way of set-off in the action in which the judgment was recovered, where the party neglected his opportunity in that respect,[58] unless he shows a good and sufficient excuse for his neglect.[59] Still less will equity grant relief because of any set-off or counterclaim which was set up in the action at law and rejected or decided adversely to him.[60] However, if the remedy in equity is more adequate, or rests on equitable principles, the failure to present the set-off at law is no defense,[61] and injunction will not be denied on the ground of an adequate remedy at law where a remedy at law was not in fact available or was extremely doubtful.[62]

Relief to vendee on failure of title. Where a vendor of property has recovered judgment for the purchase money and become insolvent, and the vendee is damnified by a failure of title or possession,[63] or by having to pay off an encumbrance,[64] equity may enjoin the judgment to the extent of the loss which the vendee has suffered; but such relief will not be granted where the vendee has a plain and adequate remedy at law by action for breach of the covenant of warranty or against encumbrances,[65] or where he has neglected an opportunity to set off his damages when sued for the purchase price.[66]

b. Subject Matter of Set-Off

In a proper case, equitable relief may be had to set off one judgment against another, or an equitable debt against a legal one; but relief ordinarily will not be granted to permit the debtor to assert a contingent or unliquidated claim.

Where equitable grounds are shown, injunction may be used as a means of setting off one judgment against another.[67] Equity possesses the power to set off an equitable debt against a legal one, where there are special circumstances of which only a court of chancery may take notice,[68] and, although the claims may not appear on their face to be mutual, a court of equity will look beyond the nominal parties to the real parties in interest and adjudge accordingly.[69] Where a judgment creditor is insolvent, the debtor may, in equity, set off against the judgment in the hands of an assignee thereof a demand against the creditor which became due before the assignment.[70] So, also, a judgment debtor may in this way set off an amount which he has paid in the character of a surety for the judgment creditor.[71]

Equity ordinarily will not grant this relief where the claim set up is contingent, uncertain, or unliq-

uidated,[72] unless the circumstances are such as to warrant the interference of equity to prevent wrong and injustice,[73] as where defendant is insolvent;[74] and it is immaterial whether the demand arises out of the same[75] or different[76] transactions. Equity will not grant relief where the claim accrued or was acquired by complainant after the recovery of the judgment at law;[77] but it is otherwise where the claim was acquired before the rendition of the judgment at law, but too late to plead it by way of set-off in that action.[78]

§ 371. Fraud, Perjury, Collusion, or Other Misconduct

Duress or other misconduct practiced by the successful party on his adversary furnishes ground for equitable relief against a judgment, provided the complaining party is not himself guilty of fault or negligence in the matter.

Courts of equity may grant relief against a judgment for misconduct preventing a bona fide adversary trial;[79] but their willingness so to act is limited to cases where the unsuccessful party has been prevented from presenting the full strength of his case by reason of some wrongful, misleading, or deceptive, act or conduct on the part of the successful party,[80] unmixed with any fault or negligence on the part of the complaining party.[81]

Duress. A judgment may be attacked in equity on the ground of duress,[82] although entered pursuant to ostensible agreement or consent of the parties.[83] In order to warrant the vacation of a judgment for coercion, the means of coercion must be extrinsic or collateral to the subject of dispute in the action wherein the order or judgment complained of was entered,[84] and, where evidence of the coercion or duress could have been presented to the court or to an attorney of complainant's own choosing during the pendency of the action so that full examination of the facts could have been made and full protection given to the rights of the parties, equity will not interfere.[85]

§ 372. —— Fraud or Concealment

a. In general
b. Nature of fraud

a. In General

Equity has inherent power to grant relief against a judgment on the ground of fraud, especially if it was practiced on the court, inducing it wrongfully to assume jurisdiction. To justify such relief, the fraud must be perpetrated by the successful party or his agents, and must be unmixed with any fault or negligence on the part of the complaining party.

A court of equity on a proper application will relieve against, or enjoin a party from enforcing, a

Failure of plaintiff to discover jury's misconduct in motion for new trial did not authorize setting aside judgment where his failure was not chargeable to defendant, notwithstanding plaintiff was not negligent in failing sooner to discover alleged misconduct.—Brannen v. City of Houston, Tex.Civ.App., 153 S.W.2d 676, error refused.

A definitive judgment may be annulled, except for defects of form prescribed in statute, only where it appears that it has been obtained through wrong practices of party in whose favor it was rendered.—Adkins' Heirs v. Crawford, Jenkins & Booth, La., 24 So.2d 246.

Judgment or decree

Relief in equity on the ground of fraud may be had against any judgment or decree, legal or equitable. U.S.—U. S. v. Gallucci, D.C.Mass., 54 F.Supp. 964.

Ala.—Hooke v. Hooke, 25 So.2d 33.

Unconscionable or fraudulent agreement

Equity may relieve against a judgment founded on an unconscionable or fraudulent agreement, particularly where it arose out of confidential relations, or was obtained by undue influence.—Raimondi v. Bianchi, 134 A. 866, 100 N.J.Eq. 288.

Solvency of defendant

Where a party has obtained a judgment by fraud, it is no ground for refusing to enjoin the judgment that he is solvent.—Sanderson v. Voelcker, 51 Mo.App. 328.

When proceeding is in rem, injured party, without notice of proceeding, and not wanting in diligence, may have equitable relief against decree procured by fraud.—Quick v. McDonald, 108 So. 529, 214 Ala. 587.

ticed on the court.[87] The power of equity in this respect is inherent.[88] Equitable relief may be had on the ground of fraud in inducing the court to assume jurisdiction which it did not have or would not otherwise have exercised.[89] Relief will also be granted where, by reason of fraud, the party loses his right to obtain or move for a new trial[90] or to take an appeal.[91] To justify relief on the ground of fraud it must be shown that the fraud was successfully perpetrated and that the judgment complained of would not have been rendered had it not been for the fraud; there is no ground for equitable intervention where the fraud, if attempted, would have been unsuccessful.[92] It should appear that the judgment complained of is unjust[93] and that

Conspiracy to give false testimony

Conduct of attorney in conspiring with ostensibly disinterested witness who did not in fact witness accident to give false testimony as to cause of collision and in using such testimony to obtain verdict for plaintiff amounted to a fraud on the court for which equity should grant relief.—Sutter v. Easterly, Mo., 189 S.W.2d 284.

Origin and flexibility of rule

"Equitable relief against fraudulent judgments is not of statutory creation. It is a judicially devised remedy fashioned to relieve hardships which, from time to time, arise from a hard and fast adherence to another court-made rule, the general rule that judgments should not be disturbed after the term of their entry has expired. Created to avert the evils of archaic rigidity, this equitable procedure has always been characterized by flexibility which enables it to meet new situations which demand equitable intervention, and to accord all the relief necessary to correct the particular injustices involved in these situations."—Hazel-Atlas Glass Co. v. Hartford-Empire Co., 64 S.Ct. 997, 1002, 322 U.S. 238, 88 L.Ed. 1250, rehearing denied 64 S.Ct. 1281, 322 U.S. 772, 88 L.Ed. 1596.

Statutes held not controlling

(1) Statutory limitation for filing petitions to review judgments by persons served by publication who did not appear and defend does not deprive equity of power to set aside after such period judgments procured by fraud.—Fadler v. Gabbert, 63 S.W.2d 121, 333 Mo. 851.

(2) Statutes specifically providing grounds for the vacation of judgments in the court of common pleas, which, by virtue of other statutes, apply equally to the probate court, have been held to have no controlling effect where the proceedings in the probate court are in equity for the purpose of impeaching a judgment for fraud.—Hoffstetter v. Adams, 35 N.E.2d 896, 67 Ohio App. 21.

Fraudulent concoction of simulated cause of action

Necessity of fraud affecting jurisdiction

(1) A fraud which justifies the court in setting aside a judgment must relate to jurisdictional matters, and not to such matters as may be available as a defense.—Mason v. Lacy, 117 S.W.2d 1026, 274 Ky. 21—Metcalf v. Metcalf, 61 S.W.2d 1083, 250 Ky. 202—Greene v. Fitzpatrick, 295 S.W. 896, 220 Ky. 590.

(2) "It is the general rule that a judgment cannot be impeached for fraud . . . unless the fraud alleged affects the jurisdiction of the court or appears on the face of the judgment roll itself."—Dr. P. Phillips Co. v. Billo, 147 So. 579, 581, 109 Fla. 316.

Inadmissibility of concealed evidence

A suit in equity cannot be maintained to set aside a judgment for insurer in an action on a policy on the ground that insurer fraudulently concealed certain evidence, where such evidence would have been inadmissible because irrelevant to the issues in the former action.—Kithcart v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 119 F.2d 497, certiorari denied U. S. ex rel. Kithcart v. Gardner, 62 S.Ct. 793, 315 U.S. 808, 86 L. Ed. 1207—Kithcart v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Relief against annulment decree

In considering equities of wife seeking to set aside default annulment decree obtained by husband through extrinsic fraud, and woman who subsequently married husband in good faith, haste of the woman in some detriment or injury has been occasioned or contributed to by the fraud.[94]

Fraudulent alteration. It is good ground for the intervention of equity that a judgment fairly and regularly obtained has afterward been fraudulently altered so as to increase the amount for which it stands[95] or so as to include a person not originally named in it or made a party to the action.[96]

By and on whom perpetrated. In order to obtain relief against a judgment on the ground of fraud it must appear that the fraud was practiced or participated in by the judgment creditor[97] or his agent[98] or attorney.[99] The fraud must have been practiced on the opposite party[1] or his agents[2] or attorneys,[3] or on the court;[4] fraud between codefendants will not affect the plaintiff, however gross it may be.[5]

Fault or fraud of complaining party. The party seeking relief on the ground of fraud must show that he is free from fault, negligence, or lack of due attention to his case; relief will not be granted where the injured party is chargeable with such timely knowledge of the facts alleged as would have enabled him to prevent the entry of the judgment, if he had used proper diligence.[6] Further, relief will not be granted to one whose conduct has been marrying the husband was a factor for consideration.—Bloomquist v. Thomas, 9 N.W.2d 337, 215 Minn. 35.

Judgment correct as matter of law
Alleged fact that plaintiff bribed juror did not constitute ground for suit in nature of bill of review to vacate judgment where plaintiff was entitled to judgment on facts as a matter of law, since alleged fraud of plaintiff and juror if true would not taint or impair judgment rendered.—Elder v. Fraud of officer of complaining corporation
Insurer was not entitled to have default judgment set aside on ground that its own secretary and member of board of directors had fraudulently failed to disclose that he had been served with process and that suit had been filed.—Southern Travelers Ass'n v. Stillman, Tex.Civ.App., 109 S.W.2d 285, error dismissed.

Dispute involving one of several defendants
Where plaintiff is induced by one of several defendants to exchange parcel awarded to plaintiff in partition for tract awarded to such defendant and judgment is entered accordingly, plaintiff may not maintain a separate action to set aside such judgment for extrinsic fraud perpetrated on him where none of other defendants are involved in the dispute and all other parties received their own awards and none of them participated in alleged misrepresentations.—Machado v. Machado, 152 P.2d 457, 66 Cal.App.2d 401.

Correspondence with clerk of court
A defendant who received due notice of the pendency of the action and filed an answer, but failed to appear for trial due to correspondence with the clerk of the court whereby he was informed that the case would not be called, neither plaintiff nor his attorney having knowledge of such correspondence, could not have a judgment thereafter rendered for plaintiff set aside on the ground of fraud.—Farmers' Mut. Misplaced confidence
Fact that one has placed confidence improper or fraudulent,[7] except in some cases where the parties are not in pari delicto.[8]

b. Nature of Fraud

(1) In general
(2) Extrinsic or intrinsic fraud
(3) Concealment or deceit

(1) In General

In determining whether the circumstances amount to fraud so as to justify equitable relief against a judgment, each case must be judged on its own facts. Mere error of fact or law is insufficient, and it is sometimes necessary to show the elements of actionable fraud.

As respects the right to equitable relief against a judgment on the ground of fraud, the term "fraud" is a generic term,[9] and while it has been held that equitable relief against a judgment may be granted for extrinsic fraud, but not for intrinsic fraud, as discussed infra subdivision b (2) of this section, in the final analysis each case must be judged on its own facts in determining whether the circumstances amount to fraud so as to justify equitable relief against a judgment.[10] Broadly speaking, if in another is not sufficient to excuse lack of diligence in investigating facts respecting fraud.—Lindsey v. Dougherty, Tex.Civ.App., 60 S.W.2d 300, error refused.

Amendment of pleading

In an action on a note where the answer was sufficient to render a co-defendant served with summons, but who made default, primarily liable, and the answer was afterward amended by adding an allegation of his liability and a prayer for judgment accordingly, and he had knowledge of the contents of the original answer, but was not notified of the amendment, a judgment pursuant to the prayer is not subject to vacation on the ground of fraud.—Scott v. Johnson, 224 P. 41, 115 Kan. 661.

Fault of complaining party held not shown

(1) Generally.

Ga.—Bryant v. Bush, 140 S.E. 366, 165 Ga. 252.

Minn.—Bloomquist v. Thomas, 9 N. W.2d 337, 215 Minn. 35.

(2) In a suit to set aside a judgment on a fraudulent contract, proof that men, apparently working in his interest, were participating in the conspiracy to defraud, excused plaintiff's lack of diligence to discover the fraud until after judgment.—Paulson v. Kenney, 224 P. 634, 110 Or. 688.

(3) Payment of taxes for single year was held not sufficient notice of procurement of judgment accomplished by fraudulent practices, so as to bar relief against the judgment, where adverse claimant paid taxes for other years.—Bernhard v. Waring, 2 P.2d 32, 213 Cal. 175.

7. Ky.—Hoover v. Dudley, 14 S.W. 2d 410, 228 Ky. 110.

8. Attorney and client

Where parties to fraudulent transaction occupy fiduciary relationship of client and attorney, and client relies on advice of counsel, client is not in pari delicto with attorney; attorney is deemed more culpable than client, and equity can relieve client from burden of unjust and fraudulent judgment obtained by attorney against client.—Sontag v. Denio, 73 P.2d 248, 23 Cal.App.2d 319.

9. N.C.—McCoy v. Justice, 155 S.E. 452, 199 N.C. 602.

N.C.—McCoy v. Justice, 155 S.E. 452, 199 N.C. 602.

Circumstances held to constitute fraud

(1) Plaintiff knowing that notes sued on were given to suppress criminal prosecution was guilty of fraud in initiating litigation.—Dahms v. Swinburne, 167 N.E. 486, 31 Ohio App. 512.

(2) Prosecution of appeal, after representations that appeal without notice would not be taken, constitutes fraud.—American Ry. Express Co. v. Murphy, 234 Ill.App. 346.

(3) Fraud was held established where it appeared that counsel for plaintiffs assisted judge in preparing findings and conclusions without knowledge of defendant's counsel.—Fellows v. Owens, 62 P.2d 1215, 178 Okl. 224.

(4) Other circumstances.

Ark.—Parker v. Nixon, 44 S.W.2d 1088, 184 Ark. 1085.

Tex.—Pearl Assur. Co. v. Williams, Civ.App., 167 S.W.2d 808.
Wash.—Bates v. Glaser, 227 P. 15, 130 Wash. 328.

Circumstances held not to constitute fraud

(1) The fact alone that the complaining party was without business experience does not establish fraud so as to warrant relief against a judgment.—McLaughlin v. Feerick, 176 N.E. 779, 276 Mass. 180.

(2) Entry of judgment without notice to defendant, on latter's failure to perform settlement agreement, is not fraud for which injunction will lie.—Mutual Casualty Co. of Missouri v. Sansone, Mo.App., 17 S. W.2d 558.

(3) Fact that creditor knew debtor had been discharged in bankruptcy as against debt sued on could not be made basis of charge of fraud in taking judgment by default.—Harding v. Quinlan, 229 N.W. 672, 209 Iowa 1190.

(4) Failure of a party or his attorney to advise the adverse party regarding the competency of the attorney for such adverse party does not constitute fraud justifying an attack on the judgment.—Luna v. Miller, 42 P.2d 809, 171 Okl. 260.

(5) Failure to advise defendant's attorney of setting of case for trial did not constitute fraud justifying vacation of judgment for plaintiff.—Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Street, 154 So. 316, 228 Ala. 677.

(6) A mistake of judgment whereby a party consented to or permitted a decree to be entered against him and from which he did not appeal does not constitute extrinsic fraud or misrepresentation warranting equitable relief.—Eskridge v. Brown, 94 So. 353, 208 Ala. 210.

(7) Failure of debtor to appear and assert defense in response to summons served on him, because person serving process told him it was subpœna to appear as witness, is not sufficient ground to set aside judgment against him as procured by fraud.—Brinegar v. Bank of Wyoming, 130 S.E. 151, 100 W.Va. 64.

(8) Fact that judgment in partition was not fraudulently obtained was held shown by recital that party opposed its entry.—Bennis v. Conley, 231 N.Y.S. 635.

(9) A party may in separate and contemporaneous actions against different defendants pursue inconsistent remedies for demands arising

the result complained of is a consequence of fraud, the mode or manner in which the fraud was effected is immaterial;[11] where there is no question that gross fraud has been committed, technicalities of interpretation or refinement of distinction will not be permitted to embarrass the court in exercising its power to do justice.[12]

In order to have a judgment set aside on the ground of fraud, the essential elements of actionable fraud are sometimes required to be shown.[13] Thus, for representations to be sufficient to amount to fraud justifying relief against the judgment, it must appear that the representations were made as to existing facts,[14] that they were false,[15] that the complaining party was ignorant of such falsity and believed and relied on them,[16] and that by reason of such belief and reliance he was injured.[17] A mere error of fact[18] or law[19] does not constitute fraud. Fraud is not established by the fact that a larger judgment was rendered than the facts justified,[20] or by the fact that voluminous, ambiguous, and disorderly testimony has been offered and received on a trial.[21]

Fraud as actual or constructive; breach of fiduciary relation. It is generally considered that the wrong constituting the basis of the fraud must be intentional and done with knowledge[22] or constitute the breach of a duty growing out of a fiduciary relation.[23] Fraud cannot be predicated on a statement or representation which was made without from a single transaction without advising court thereof, and judgment obtained by such party is not subject to attack as being obtained by fraud on court.—Savery v. Mosely, 76 P.2d 902, 182 Okl. 133.

Expression of opinion

A statement of plaintiff's counsel, that there was no question but that plaintiff could go into court and recover judgment on the facts, was held a mere expression of opinion, which could not be made the basis of a charge of fraud.—Moore v. Moore, Tex.Civ.App., 259 S.W. 322.

Running of statute of limitations

Fact that court may have given an erroneous judgment in holding that statute of limitations had not run would not support a decree to annul judgment for fraud in procurement of judgment.—Bullivant v. Greer, 264 S.W. 95, 216 Mo.App. 324.

Circumstances consistent with honesty

Fraud which will warrant the setting aside of a judgment is not to be presumed where the parties do not stand in fiduciary relation, and will not be imputed when the facts and circumstances from which it is supposed to arise are fairly and reasonably consistent with honesty of intention.—Farrell v. Farrell, 10 So. 2d 153, 243 Ala. 389.

knowledge on the part of the alleged wrongdoer of its falsity, or without an intent to deceive,[24] or which was made in the belief that it was true,[25] however implicitly it may have been acted on. It has been held that the fraud must be actual and positive,[26] and not merely constructive.[27] Other authorities, however, have held that intentional wrongdoing or actual fraud is not essential to the granting of relief in equity,[28] and that equity will grant relief, under appropriate circumstances, on the ground of constructive, as well as actual, fraud.[29]

(2) Extrinsic or Intrinsic Fraud

While the authorities are not unanimous, the general rule is that the fraud which will justify equitable relief against a judgment must be extrinsic or collateral to the issues tried in the original action, and that intrinsic fraud, or fraud in the cause of action or instrument in suit, will not suffice.

Generally speaking equitable relief against a judgment may be granted for extrinsic fraud[30] but

Inducing person not to protect his interests

Where a person holding confidential relationship with, and charged with duty to, another person, induces him not to protect his interests in a legal proceeding for first person's own gain, with result that judgment is rendered against such other person, invocation of equity to right such wrong is warranted.—Rosenbaum v. Tobias' Estate, 130 P.2d 215, 55 Cal.App.2d 39.

Where there is a duty to speak because of a trust or confidential relation, the failure to do so is a fraud for which equity may afford relief from a judgment thereby obtained, whether such fraud be regarded as extrinsic or as an exception to the extrinsic fraud rule.

Inherent power of equity

The power of a court of equity to give relief against judgment obtained by extrinsic fraud is inherent. —Moore v. Capital Gas Corp., Mont., 158 P.2d 302.

Public policy

The demand of public policy that there should be an end of litigation for repose of society yields to ends of justice where extrinsic fraud has been practiced only because main characteristic of such fraud is that it deprives party of opportunity of presenting his case or defense and not for intrinsic fraud.[31] The fraud which will afford ground for equitable relief against a judgment must be extrinsic, extraneous, or collateral to the matters or issues tried in the action in which the judgment was rendered;[32] relief on the ground of fraud cannot be predicated on matters or issues renders result as to him no trial at all in legal sense.—Horne v. Edwards, 3 S.E.2d 1, 215 N.C. 622.

Extrinsic or intrinsic nature of fraud as affecting remedy

Generally, where fraud is extrinsic or collateral, operating from without, remedy also may be from without, and judgment may be set aside by an independent action; but when the fraud is intrinsic, operating from within upon some matter within the line of consideration of the court on the merits, remedy must also be from within by motion in the cause made in apt time.—Horne v. Edwards, 3 S.E.2d 1, 215 N.C. 622.

The submission of stipulation for judgment to court for signing of formal judgment did not put it beyond power of court of equity to set aside judgment on ground of extrinsic fraud.—Scott v. Dilks, 117 P.2d 700, 47 Cal.App.2d 207.

which actually were, or which with due diligence could have been, presented and adjudicated in the original proceedings.[33] As the rule is sometimes expressed, fraud in the matter on which the judgment or decree was rendered is not sufficient;[34] the fraud must not be something which was actually or potentially in issue in the case, unless the interposition of the defense was prevented by fraud or conduct of the opposite party.[35] On the other hand, it has been said that relief lies in cases of intrinsic as well as extrinsic fraud.[36]

Fraud is not extrinsic where the court rendering the judgment had before it the same issue of fraud on the same essential facts.—Mills v. Baird, Tex.Civ.App., 147 S.W.2d 312, error refused.

Intrinsic fraud is that which arises within the proceeding itself and concerns some matter necessarily under the consideration of the court on the merits.—Horne v. Edwards, 3 S. E.2d 1, 215 N.C. 622.

Equitable fraud

It has been held that chancery may, for equitable fraud, restrain the enforcement of a judgment at law even though legal fraud in respect of the same matter has been unsuccessfully pleaded in the action at law.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Tarnowski, 30 A.2d 421, 130 N.J.Eq. 1.

Allegation as to conveyance of title

In action to cancel deed, grantees' allegation that deed conveyed legal and equitable title was, if untrue, a misstatement as to an issue in controversy, and hence constituted intrinsic and not extrinsic fraud.—Crockett v. Root, 146 P.2d 555, 194 Okl. 3.

Time of discovery of facts

(1) Discovery of the alleged fraud after, not before, the commencement of the original action or the entry of the judgment attacked ordinarily is an essential element to the granting of relief.

Difficulty in applying rule

(1) It has been judicially observed that the line of distinction between extrinsic and intrinsic fraud is some-

In general the fraud must be such as prevented the unsuccessful party from fully and fairly presenting his case or defense;[37] it must be such as prevented the losing party from having an adversary trial of the issue.[38] Where a party to an action had a good case or defense but was prevented from setting it up by the fraud, artifice, deceit, or misrepresentation of the opposite party, without

Lack of interference in search for evidence

The alleged fraud of the owner of a patent in conspiring to monopolize the business of making and selling scales by means of suits brought on a patent which it knew to be invalid because of prior use, and in buying up as many of the anticipating scales as it could secure, was held not to have interfered with defendant in its search for evidence of prior use, so as to justify setting aside a decree.—Toledo Scale Co. v. Knowledge and wrongful intent

Extrinsic fraud has been defined to be actual fraud, such that there is on the part of the person chargeable with it malus animus, the mala mens, putting itself in motion and acting in order to take an undue advantage of some other person for the purpose of actually and knowingly defrauding him.—Continental Nat. Bank of Jackson County, at Kansas City, Mo., v. Holland Banking Co., C.C.A.Mo., 66 F.2d 823—34 C.J. p 471 note 48 [a], p 472 note 66 [a] (1).

Fraud in procurement of judgment. The rule has frequently been laid down that the fraud must have been in the procurement of the judgment,[40] and such fraud is sufficient,[41] since it is regarded as perpetrated on the court as well as on the injured party.[42] This may, for example, consist in deceit and imposition practiced on the court as a means of obtaining a judgment which otherwise would not be rendered,[43] or in the act of the successful party in illegally tampering with the jury,[44] or in wrongfully obtaining a judgment by the surreptitious use of legal process and proceedings.[45] Deception practiced by the successful party in keeping his opponent in ignorance of the proceeding is extrinsic or collateral fraud.[46] Wrongfully preventing the complaining party or his material witnesses from appearing in court or attending the trial,[47] or inducing his attorney to professional delinquency or infidelity in connection with the case,[48] also constitutes extrinsic or collateral fraud.

Fraud in cause of action or instrument in suit. Although some of the earlier cases support the right of equity to enjoin a judgment on the ground of fraud in the instrument or transaction on which it is founded,[49] for example, a judgment for the price of property sold, where the sale was induced by false representations or concealment of the truth, with regard to quantity, character, or title,[50] it has been generally held that fraud in the cause of action or instrument in suit must be set up in the original action, and furnishes no ground for relief in equity,[51] unless the interposition of the fraud as a defense was prevented by fraud of the opposite party[52] or the judgment was rendered in a court where such defense was not available to him.[53] The fact that allegations set forth in the pleadings of the successful party were false cannot be successfully urged as a ground for equitable interference with the judgment rendered thereon.[54]

Or.—Dixon v. Simpson, 279 P. 939, 130 Or. 211.

Exceptions to the rule prohibiting relief for fraud in the cause of action or instrument sued on have been made,[55] as, for example, in cases where the judgment was based on service by publication and defendant had no actual knowledge of the suit,[56] where the court in which the action was brought and the trial had was without jurisdiction to pass on the question of fraud,[57] or where the transaction on which the judgment was based was against public policy.[58] Under statutes in some states authorizing relief against decrees and judgments obtained by fraud, such as perjured testimony, fraudulent documents, forged instruments, and the like, the jurisdiction of a court of equity has been held limited to the granting of relief on the grounds enumerated.[59]

Strangers to record. The rule that a judgment by a court of competent jurisdiction will be set aside only for fraud which is extrinsic or collateral has been held applicable to strangers as well as to parties to the action.[60] It has also been held, however, that a stranger to the record may, when he has been injured thereby, have a judgment set aside for fraud in the cause of action on which it is founded[61] because he has not had his day in court to plead it sooner.[62]

(3) Concealment or Deceit

Concealment or deceit, at least where there is a legal duty to disclose the facts, is ground for equitable relief against a judgment. In the absence of such a duty, however, mere silence is not fraud justifying such relief.

Relief against an unjust judgment obtained by means of deceit, artifice, or concealment may be had in equity, provided there is no adequate remedy at law.[63] Fraud justifying such relief may consist in the suppression of truth as well as a suggestion of what is false;[64] it may be based on silence when there is a legal duty to disclose the facts, as, for example, in the case of a trust or confidential relation.[65] However, in order that fraudulent concealment shall be ground for any equitable relief, there must be a duty to disclose.[66] In the absence of such a duty, no party is bound to furnish weapons to his adversary or plead himself out of court; and the mere fact that he keeps silent and does not communicate to the court or to the adverse party facts which would defeat his recovery is not such fraud as will justify a court of equity in granting relief against the resulting judgment.[67]

Where fraudulent concealment of a fact is relied on, it must be an intentional concealment of a material and controlling fact, for the purpose of misleading and taking advantage of the opposite

Settlement

Where a settlement was pleaded as a defense, plaintiff owed no duty to defendant or the court to prove such defense, and hence fact that plaintiff's attorneys, who testified at the trial were not questioned as to the alleged settlement did not show fraud on part of plaintiff in obtaining judgment.—May v. Failure to give details of counterclaim

Failure of buyer, sued for price of merchandise, to advise seller in advance of details of counterclaim was not fraud.—Zapon Co. v. Bryant, 286 P. 282, 156 Wash. 161.

Failure to disclose resale price

Failure of vendor, suing for breach of contract to trade property, to disclose resale price of premises under subsequent exchange contract did not constitute fraud warranting vacation of default judgment against first vendee.—Minetti v. Einhorn, 173 N.E. 243, 36 Ohio App. 310.

party.[68] A judgment will not be set aside on the ground that the prevailing party practiced a fraud on the court and the adverse party, by concealing the evidence of his fraud, where the particular fraud, evidence to establish which is alleged to have been concealed, was the issue in trial and there adjudicated.[69]

Collusion or fraudulent conspiracy in the procurement of a judgment, which could not have been interposed as a defense in the action, furnishes ground for equitable relief to an innocent person injured thereby.

Equity may grant relief to an innocent person against a judgment which was unjustly obtained by means of a conspiracy or fraudulent collusion.[70] This rule is applied where the collusive agreement was between plaintiff or his attorney and the judge,[71] between plaintiff or his attorney and defendant's attorney,[72] between plaintiff and one of several defendants, to the prejudice of another defendant,[73] between plaintiff and the officers of a defendant corporation or municipality who are bound to protect its interests,[74] between the parties to the action[75] or between a party and another person[76] to the injury of a third person having an interest in the property in suit, or between plaintiff and an executor or administrator, being defendant, resulting in the establishment of an invalid claim against the estate.[77]

Collusion between codefendants, however gross it may be, will not affect plaintiff.[78] Collusion is no ground for relief in equity if it could have been pleaded in defense to the original action.[79] Ordinarily a court of equity will not grant relief to those who were parties to the collusion;[80] but an exception to this rule exists where a fiduciary relationship existed between the parties and they were not in pari delicto.[81]

§ 374. —— Perjury and Subornation of Perjury

According to the weight of authority, perjury or subornation of perjury, not accompanied by any extrinsic or collateral fraud, ordinarily does not constitute ground for equitable relief against a judgment.

Although some cases sustain the doctrine that equity may grant relief against a judgment obtained by means of false testimony,[82] provided it was procured, concocted, and intentionally produced by the successful party,[83] the weight of authority is to the effect that ordinarily there is no ground for equitable interference with a judgment in the fact that perjury or false swearing was committed by such party or his witnesses at the trial,[84] at least where

Extent of personal injuries

False testimony as to the extent of a plaintiff's injuries does not justify equitable interference with a judgment, where the extent of the injuries was a question in issue and defendant was not prevented from making a full defense.

Place of accident

In action for injuries received in fall, defendant was held not entitled to vacation of adverse judgment after expiration of term on ground that plaintiff had falsely testified as to place at which she fell, where petition alleged exact place of fall and surrounding circumstances so that defendant, at time of trial, could have located witnesses who allegedly would have testified to seeing plaintiff fall at different place.—Pinches v. conclusion that but for such fraud the result would have been different.[87] There is usually no ground for equitable interference on the ground of perjury even though the opposite party did not know of the real facts,[88] especially where it might have been established at the trial by cross-examination;[89] but in some cases, where it appears that the perjury was not discovered in time to enable the complaining party to avail himself of the knowledge on the original trial, a bill to set aside the judgment has been entertained.[90] It has been held, in applying the rules respecting the granting of equitable relief against a judgment on the ground of perjury, that there is no distinction between introducing false and forged instruments in evidence and swearing falsely as a witness.[91]

In some jurisdictions equity will not grant relief against a judgment obtained in consequence of perjury unless it appears that the perjurer was duly convicted[92] and that the judgment could not have been obtained without the evidence of the perjurer.[93] In any event, before a court of equity will interfere with a judgment on the ground of perjury, it must appear that the injured party has exercised due diligence[94] and that he is clearly entitled to the relief sought.[95]

Perjury as intrinsic or extrinsic fraud. Perjury or false swearing is a species of intrinsic, not extrinsic, fraud,[96] and hence the rule against granting relief for perjury is in accordance with the general rule discussed supra in § 372 b (2) that relief in equity ordinarily cannot be had for intrinsic fraud. However, perjury as to jurisdictional facts, whereby a court is imposed on and induced to assume jurisdiction where in reality none exists, and which never could have been exercised if the truth had

In North Carolina

(1) It has been held that judgment cannot be vacated in equity because shown to have been based on perjured testimony, unless witness has been convicted of perjury.—McCoy v. Justice, 155 S.E. 452, 199 N.C. 602.

(2) It has also been held that intrinsic fraud consisting of perjured testimony or false evidence is not ground for equitable relief against a judgment regardless of whether perjured witnesses have previously been convicted of perjury, or falsity of evidence established by deed, writing, or unimpeachable record, since public policy demands end of litigation.—Horne v. Edwards, 3 S.E.2d 1, 215 N.C. 622.

Materiality of testimony

(1) A party is not entitled to have verdict and judgment against him set aside on ground that certain testimony was false, where it appears that allegedly false testimony concerned a subject immaterial to any proper issue before the court.—Stephens v. Pickering, 15 S.E.2d 202, 192 Ga. 199.

been known, is extrinsic, and relief against a judgment so obtained may be had in equity.[97]

Subornation or conspiracy. It is not a ground for equitable relief that the successful party suborned the witnesses and conspired with them to secure a judgment in his favor.[98] However, it has been held that where a lawyer engages in a conspiracy to commit a fraud on the court by the production of fabricated evidence, and by such means obtains a judgment, a court of equity may grant relief against the judgment.[99]

§ 375. —— Violation of Agreement

A party's violation of an agreement, as, for example, with respect to the time of trial or settlement of the case, whereby his adversary, without negligence, was prevented from presenting his case, has frequently been held to furnish ground for equitable relief against a judgment.

The jurisdiction of equity to relieve against judgments obtained by fraud is exercised very frequently where a party is prevented from presenting his defense, or taking advantage of remedies to which he is entitled, because of the violation by his adversary of some express agreement with him,[1] and it is not necessary that the judgment creditor should have directly threatened to enforce the judgment.[2] Equity will enjoin a judgment taken in violation of an agreement to dismiss or to discontinue a suit,[3] to submit the matter in controversy to arbitration,[4] or to credit a sum paid after the commencement of suit.[5]

The rule permitting equitable relief for violation of an agreement does not apply where complainant has been guilty of negligence,[6] or where there is an adequate legal remedy,[7] as by action at law for the breach.[8] Likewise the breach of an agreement will not constitute a ground for relief where the suit at law was in pursuance of an illegal act participated in by complainant.[9]

It has been held that a consideration for the agreement must be shown, and also that the applicant for relief must have been injured by his reliance on it.[10] However, it has also been considered that the right to relief does not depend on the legal validity of the agreement but rather on the question whether it has been relied on by the one party, and made use of by the other to obtain an unjust judgment.[11] If the agreement relied on is made by the attorney of the adverse party, the violation of it will not constitute a ground for equitable interference, unless it is shown that the attorney had authority to make such agreement, or that it has been ratified.[12]

Promise to do equity
Equity will relieve against a judgment obtained by inducing defendants thereto to withdraw an equitable plea that they had filed in the case, by the promise of plaintiff that if such plea was withdrawn he would do the equity set up in the plea, and would enter into writing to that effect, all of which he failed to do.—Markham v. Angier, 57 Ga. 43.

Agreement not to enforce judgment
Relief may be granted against a judgment for violation of an agreement, on payment of a certain sum of money, not to enforce a judgment already obtained.—Thompson v. Laughlin, 27 P. 752, 91 Cal. 313.

Personal judgment in ejectment suit
An agreement that plaintiff in the action at law was not to take a personal judgment against defendant in a suit in ejectment will justify equitable relief.

Maker's liability on note
(1) Relief has been granted where the maker of a note held a receipt acknowledging payment thereof from the indorsee, who sued on the note, representing to the maker that he did not intend to enforce its collection against him, but against the payee, and judgment was accordingly rendered by default.—Baker v. Redd, 44 Iowa 179.

(2) Where maker of note had never made any payments thereon and had not acknowledged his liability in writing, either before or after running of statute of limitations, action of payee in lulling maker into security by repeated promises that no harm would come to him if he ignored summons which had been served on him constituted fraud.—Pavlik v. Necessity that agreement be written. According to some authorities, violation of an agreement with regard to the suit will furnish no ground for equitable interference unless the agreement is in writing.[13] It has also been held, however, that fraud involving the violation of an agreement may constitute ground for equitable relief notwithstanding the existence of a court rule requiring stipulations and agreements of counsel to be in writing.[14]

Agreement as to time of trial. Equity may grant relief against a judgment obtained in violation of an agreement between counsel respecting the time of trial and notice thereof to counsel for the complaining party,[15] particularly where the agreement had been approved by the trial judge.[16] Violation of an agreement that the cause shall not be called for trial except by consent has been held ground for relief.[17]

Agreement as to compromise or settlement. Where a judgment is fraudulently taken by default in violation of an agreement for a compromise or settlement, the interposition of a defense being thus prevented, its enforcement will be restrained,[18] if defendant is not chargeable with negligence in failing to prevent the entry of judgment when he could have done so,[19] and provided there is no longer an adequate remedy at law.[20]

§ 376. Newly Discovered Evidence

a. In general
b. Character and effect of evidence

a. In General

Some authorities hold that equity will not grant relief against a judgment on the ground of newly discovered evidence, while others permit such relief under certain circumstances. The authorities are agreed that relief on such ground will in no case be granted where the complaining party failed to exercise due diligence in securing the evidence in time to present it in the original action.

In some cases it has been held that equity will not relieve against a judgment on the ground of newly discovered evidence,[21] unless there are also circumstances of fraud, accident, or mistake preventing a defense,[22] on the ground that courts of law now have ample jurisdiction to grant relief, and the reason for the exercise of equity jurisdiction has therefore ceased to exist.[23] Other cases, however, hold that where a defendant was prevented from making good his defense by the lack of evidence to support it, being ignorant of the existence of such evidence and unable to discover it by the exercise of due diligence, equity will relieve him against the judgment, on the subsequent discovery and produc-

Belief as to existence of agreement
A claim that the complaining party assumed and believed that the parties had tacitly agreed that the trial would remain in abeyance pending disposition of a subsequent suit was held insufficient to show any equitable ground for relief where it did not appear that the opposing parties or counsel were responsible for the belief and were not parties to the subsequent suit, particularly where a court rule required agreements between attorneys or parties to be in writing.—Davis v. Mere misapprehension insufficient
It is not sufficient that the complaining party was under some misapprehension with reference to whether the case would be tried, unless it appears that either the court or the opposite party was in some measure responsible for the false impression.—Davis v. Cox, Tex.Civ.App., 4 S.W.2d 1008, error dismissed.

Lack of diligence held not shown
Where party suing on note agreed to dismiss suit after settlement agreement was made, fact that defendant therein did not investigate court records to ascertain whether plaintiff had complied with agreement to dismiss case could not be considered lack of diligence precluding the vacating of default judgment.—Sloan v. Newton, Tex.Civ. App., 134 S.W.2d 697.

Effect of reformed code procedure
Where reformed code procedure was part of the state procedure from the time the constitution was adopted, equity jurisdiction to grant relief from a judgment on ground of newly discovered evidence was not the jurisdiction of the old courts of equity, but the jurisdiction of equity under the reformed code procedure, whereby nothing short of a showing of absolute extrinsic fraud would justify granting a practical extension of relief offered under the code.—Wasem v. Ellens, 4 N.W.2d 850, 68 S.D. 524.

23. Ala.—De Soto Coal Mining & Development Co. v. Hill, 65 So. 988, 188 Ala. 667.

tion of such evidence,[24] unless he had a legal remedy, and failed to avail himself of it,[25] and that statutes authorizing courts of law to grant new trials on the ground of newly discovered evidence do not divest courts of equity of the power to grant a new trial in cases where the facts justify it.[26]

In determining whether, in the particular case, equitable relief against a judgment will be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the same rules govern as the rules prescribing the circumstances under which a new trial will be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence.[27] It must appear that the judgment is unjust,[28] that relief is necessary to protect a meritorious complainant from a clear miscarriage of justice,[29] and that relief can be granted without mischief to the rights of innocent persons.[30]

Diligence in former proceedings. Equity will not grant relief against a judgment on the ground of newly discovered evidence, where the evidence could have been discovered before, and produced on, the trial by the exercise of care and diligence in searching for it or in interrogating persons cognizant of the facts.[31] The same diligence is required as is required of a litigant who moves for a new trial under statute.[32] Thus, where it appears that the evidence is matter of record, accessible to defendant, and from its nature necessarily within his knowledge,[33] or where the facts might have been established at the trial by cross-examination,[34] no ground for relief is shown. However, the fact that defendant might have obtained evidence by a bill of discovery or otherwise will not affect his right to relief where he had no reason to suspect the existence of such evidence;[35] and even the fact that the existence of the defense was suspected, and that it was unsuccessfully set up at law, will not necessarily preclude relief, where there was no lack of diligence in making the discovery.[36]

b. Character and Effect of Evidence

The additional evidence for which equitable relief against a judgment is sought must in fact be newly discovered; in addition, it must be material and calculated to produce an opposite result, evidence which is merely cumulative being insufficient.

Relief will not be granted against a judgment on additional evidence which is not in fact newly discovered;[37] the evidence must have been discovered too late for use in the original action.[38] Evidence is not newly discovered where the party relying on it knew about it and that it existed, but had forgotten the circumstances or failed to appreciate their significance and value.[39]

To justify a court of equity in enjoining a judgment on the ground of newly discovered evidence, it must appear that such evidence is material and competent[40] and is of such a character and strength that it is reasonably certain that it would have caused an opposite result if produced at the trial,[41] some cases even going so far as to hold that the new evidence must be incontrovertible and conclusive.[42] Evidence which is uncertain and inconclusive in character and of slight probative value is insufficient.[43] Evidence will not be sufficient to warrant equitable relief if it appears to be merely cumulative or corroborative[44] or merely intended to impeach some of the witnesses at the former trial.[45] The rule in this respect is the same in both courts of equity and at law.[46]

Necessity of writing. Newly discovered evidence need not be in writing to justify equitable relief against a judgment.[47]

C. PROCEDURE

§ 377. Form of Proceedings

Equitable relief against a judgment is generally sought in a separate and independent proceeding, equitable in nature, commenced by bill or complaint.

As a general rule, where application is to be made to a court possessing equitable jurisdiction, for relief against a judgment, it may and should be in the form of a separate and independent proceeding commenced by bill or petition,[48] or, under the code practice, by complaint.[49] Where the adjudication to be impeached is a decree in equity, relief may be sought either by petition in the original action, by bill of review, or by original bill in the nature of a bill of review, according to the circumstances, as discussed in Equity §§ 622-667. Under some statutes, however, a bill of review may also lie as an independent proceeding for the purpose of obtaining equitable relief against a judgment at law,[50] and, while it has been held that such a proceeding is in the nature of, and has the same scope

Judgment of dismissal
Petition to vacate judgment was proper proceeding to take following judgment of dismissal.—Smith v. Brown, 184 N.E. 383, 282 Mass. 81.

Original bill or bill of review
(1) A bill to set aside a decree for fraud in its procurement, or for fraud extrinsic and collateral to matter on which the decree rests, and under which a third person has acquired an interest, is an original bill and not a bill of review.—Ostrom v. Ferris, 134 A. 305, 99 N.J.Eq. 551, affirmed 141 A. 920 (two cases), 103 N.J.Eq. 22.

(2) The position of parties who filed petition to set aside decree in equity suit more than two years after entry on ground that court had no jurisdiction over subject matter, if question could be raised by petition rather than by bill of review, was no stronger than it would have been had they raised it by bill of review.—Fooks' Ex'rs v. Ghingher, 192 A. 782, 172 Md. 612, certiorari denied Phillips v. Ghingher, 58 S.Ct. 47, 302 U.S. 726, 82 L.Ed. 561.

Statutory procedure held inapplicable
Service on defendant by leaving copy of summons and petition at his dwelling with member of family constituted "personal service," so that statutory provisions for vacating judgment by petition for review were inapplicable.—Force v. Margulius, Mo.App., 33 S.W.2d 1023.

Foreclosure
Equitable relief from action for deficiency judgment can be had only when sought by petition to review original foreclosure proceeding and not by bill to restrain the enforcement of the deficiency judgment.—Meranus v. Lawyers' & Homemakers' Building & Loan Ass'n, 180 A. 665, 118 N.J.Eq. 586.

App., 165 S.W.2d 233, error refused—Allen v. Trentman, Civ.App., 115 S.W.2d 1177—Griffith v. Tipps, Civ. App., 69 S.W.2d 346.

Effectuation of relief sought
An equitable bill of review must effectuate the relief sought completely within the particular proceedings.—Cheney v. Norton, Civ.App., 126 S. W.2d 1011, reversed on other grounds Norton v. Cheney, 161 S.W.2d 73, 138 Tex. 622.

Distinction based on service of process
A distinction exists between equitable bill of review as against a previously rendered judgment under and purpose as, a motion for new trial[51] or writ of error in an action at law,[52] it has also been held that the remedy is distinct from, and not an alternative for, such remedies as a motion for new trial, appeal, or writ of error.[53] In those jurisdictions where legal and equitable powers are vested in the same courts, jurisdiction of equity to grant relief against a judgment may be invoked by means of a motion addressed to the court which rendered the judgment as well as by an independent action in equity,[54] and under some practice a rule to show cause is proper to bring the matter of cancellation of a judgment before a court of equity.[55] A direct attack on a judgment may sometimes be set up by a cross action or cross bill,[56] and it may be permissible for the judgment debtor, when suit is brought on the judgment, to set up in his answer the grounds on which he claims that it should be vacated or enjoined, and demand appropriate relief, whereupon the answer will be treated as equivalent to a bill in equity.[57]

An application to vacate a judgment, made after the expiration of the term at which the judgment was rendered, may be considered an independent proceeding, although it was entitled as a part of the original action and designated as a motion.[58] On the other hand, where a party by mistake brings process served on defendant, and similar action on judgment rendered when process was by publication, since, in the former, actions are docketed separately from action sought to be reviewed, and are tried out on issues made, while, in latter cases, motions are treated as motions for new trials in original case and are filed in that case and heard as part of it, irrespective of how they are indorsed, styled or docketed. —Smith v. Higginbotham, Tex.Civ. App., 112 S.W.2d 770.

Statute not mandatory

Bill of review is not exclusive method by which new trial may be obtained after judgment on service by publication, statute providing for bill of review not being mandatory. —Dennis v. McCasland, Civ.App., 69 S.W.2d 506, reversed on other grounds 97 S.W.2d 684, 128 Tex. 266.

Bill of review

(1) A bill which states substance of proceedings sought to be revised and facts relied on for relief will be considered a "bill of review" if in fact it is an original proceedings to set aside a judgment and shows equitable grounds for relief, although it is denominated a motion.—Custer v. McGough, Tex.Civ.App., 184 S.W.2d 668—City of Eastland v. Owen, Civ.App., 49 S.W.2d 534, reversed on other grounds Owen v. City of Eastland, 78 S.W.2d 178, 124 Tex. 419—Smith v. Kraft, Tex.Civ.App., 9 S.W.2d 472.

(2) Pleading styled motion for new trial, containing essential elements of bill of review, will be regarded as such if motion for new trial could not have been filed.—Box v. Pierce, Tex.Civ.App., 278 S.W. 226.

(3) If pleading possesses essential elements of bill of review, it is immaterial that it was filed under number and style of former suit.—City of Eastland v. Owen, Civ.App., 49 S.W. 2d 534, reversed on other grounds Owen v. City of Eastland, 78 S.W.2d 178, 124 Tex. 419.

(4) However, where essential elements of a bill of review are lacking, motion will not be treated as such a bill.—Lindsey v. Panhandle Const. Co., Civ.App., 46 S.W.2d 339, affirmed Panhandle Const. Co. v. Lindsay, 72 S.W.2d 1068, 123 Tex. 613.

(5) So defendant's motion to dissolve injunction subsequent to expiration of judgment term could not be treated as a statutory petition for review so as to warrant court in acting on it, where it was not claimed that injunction proceeding was irregular, but only that decree entered was erroneous.—State ex rel.

an independent action, when his remedy is by motion in the original cause, the court may, in its discretion, treat the summons and complaint as a motion,[59] although a bill or action to vacate or enjoin a judgment in which the only relief asked is a perpetual injunction,[60] or an action for reformation, in which it is merely alleged that the prior judgment does not constitute a bar to recovery,[61] may not be treated as a motion in the original cause or a petition for a new trial. A cause of action to set aside a judgment or decree has been regarded as a continuation of the original suit in which the judgment or decree was entered.[62]

In Louisiana, if it is claimed that an adjudication is absolutely void for illegality or other cause, resort should be had to an action of nullity, and not an injunction.[63] Such a suit may not be brought by way of intervention or third opposition; it must be brought in the ordinary form, by petition and citation.[64]

An action for equitable relief against a judgment is equitable in nature and is governed by equitable principles.[65]

§ 378. Conditions Precedent

A party seeking equitable relief against a judgment must on his part do whatever equity requires, but leave to sue is usually not required.

A party coming into equity to obtain relief against a judgment at law must on his part do whatever equity requires.[66] In particular, if complainant does not dispute the validity of the judgment with respect to the entire amount of it, he must first pay or offer to pay whatever amount he admits to be due,[67] or show some sufficient excuse for his failure to do so,[68] unless the circumstances are such that no payment or tender is required.[69] However, it is not usual or necessary, before filing a bill for this purpose, to obtain leave of the court whose judgment is to be impeached or of that in which the bill is filed.[70]

A bill of review for equitable relief from a judgment is addressed to equitable powers of the court and equity principles and maxims must be observed.—Kelley v. Wright, Tex.Civ.App., 184 S.W.2d 649, affirmed, Sup., 188 S.W.2d 983—Harris v. Elm Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 183 S.W.2d 216, error refused—American Red Cross v. Prayer for rule nisi

The equitable character of a petition to set aside a judgment or decree is not affected by the fact that it contains a prayer for a rule nisi in addition to the prayers for equitable relief.—Williamson v. Haddock, 140 S.E. 373, 165 Ga. 168.

Appellate court

A bill in equity to restrain the enforcement of a judgment at law is not a bill of review, for which leave from the appellate court to file is required.—Mineral Development Co. v. Kentucky Coal Lands Co., D.C.Ky., 285 F. 761, affirmed, C.C.A., 285 F. 1021.

§ 379. Time to Sue and Limitations

In the absence of a statute controlling the time of application to a court of equity for relief against a judgment, no particular lapse of time will be marked off as barring a complainant's right to relief, the question being merely one of laches or diligence.

Ordinarily equitable relief against a judgment may not be sought prior to the time permitted by statute,[71] and, where a statutory remedy for vacation of a judgment is exclusive for a specified period of time, a party may not maintain an action in equity to set aside the judgment prior to the expiration of that period of time.[72]

In the absence of a statute controlling the time of application to a court of equity for relief against a judgment, no particular lapse of time will be marked off as barring complainant's right to relief, the question being merely one of laches or diligence,[73] and statutes authorizing courts of law to vacate or open their own judgments for fraud, mistake, surprise, or other cause, generally do not preclude relief in equity after the time which they fix as a limit.[74] It is generally sufficient and necessary for the party seeking relief to show due diligence and to file suit within a reasonable time,[75] either in term or in vacation,[76] and it is not required that the proceeding be instituted at the term at which the judgment was rendered.[77] A suit in equity may be available to set aside a default judgment on which execution was issued, even after the execution has been returned satisfied.[78]

In many states there are statutes of limitation specifically applicable to proceedings in equity for relief against judgments,[79] and, by analogy, statu-

In Kansas

(1) An action to set aside a judgment for fraud practiced by the successful party in obtaining it must be tory limitations applicable to proceedings by bill of review[80] or appeal[81] have been held applicable; and in all cases within the terms of such statutes suit may and should be brought within the time limited.[82] It has been held that a statute of limitations does not bar suit where the ground of the application for an injunction did not exist when the judgment was rendered,[83] where the institution of proceedings within the time limited was prevented by the fraud of the adverse party,[84] or where he was a nonresident during the running of the statutory period.[85]

In the case of fraud it is generally provided that brought within two years, unless plaintiff is under some disability.—Johnson v. Schrader, 95 P.2d 273, 150 Kan. 545—Elfert v. Elfert, 294 P. 921, 132 Kan. 218—Harvey v. Dolan, 176 P. 134, 103 Kan. 717.

(2) Proceedings to open up judgment obtained without other service than publication in newspaper must be brought within three years.—Elfert v. Elfert, supra.

In Louisiana

(1) An action to annul a judgment must be brought within one year from its rendition; if on the ground of fraud, within one year from the discovery of the fraud.—Adkins' Heirs v. Crawford, Jenkins & Booth, 24 So.2d 246—Succession of Raphael, 144 So. 429, 175 La. 715—34 C.J. p 481 note 76 [f].

(2) However, prescription of one year does not apply to action to annul confession of judgment made in violation of law or public policy.—Cilluffa v. Monreale Realty Co., 24 So.2d 606—Phillips v. Bryan, 134 So. 88, 172 La. 269.

(3) A judgment against one who has not been cited and who has not appeared is a nullity so that attack thereon is not barred by two-year prescriptive period relating to suits attacking judgments for mere informalities.—Dickey v. Pollock, App., 183 So. 48.

In South Dakota

The code provisions limiting to one year the trial court's authority to grant new trials for newly discovered evidence or relief from a judgment because of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect were adopted as a part of the reformed code procedure to the end that there might be a certain finality to judgments, and were made applicable to suits in equity as well as actions at law.—Wasem v. Ellens, 4 N.W.2d 850, 68 S.D. 524.

In Texas

(1) A direct attack in equity on a judgment is subject to the bar of the four-year statute of limitations.—Whitehurst v. Estes, Civ.App., 185 S.W.2d 154, error refused—Litton v. Waters, Civ.App., 161 S.W.2d 1095, error refused—Laird v. Gulf Production Co., Civ.App., 64 S.W.2d 1080, error dismissed—Burge v. Broussard, Civ.App., 258 S.W. 502—34 C.J. p 481 note 76 [i].

(2) Such statute applies to suit to vacate a judgment by default rendered on constructive service by publication.—Snell v. Knowles, Civ.App., 87 S.W.2d 871, error dismissed—Seastrunk v. Kidd, Civ.App., 53 S.W.2d 678.

(3) Where defendant is cited by publication and judgment rendered, he may file within two years a bill of review.—Texas Co. v. Dunlap, Civ.App., 21 S.W.2d 707, affirmed, Com.App., 41 S.W.2d 42, rehearing denied 43 S.W.2d 92.

(4) A petition for bill of review is not a "suit at law" governed by four-year statute of limitations, but is an "equitable proceeding" governed by the rule of equity relating to stale demands and laches.—Garcia v. Jones, Civ.App., 155 S.W.2d 671, error refused.

(5) Statute prohibiting injunction to stay execution, after expiration of one year, is not applicable, where injunction is auxiliary to suit to vacate judgment.—West v. Dugger, Civ.App., 278 S.W. 239.

In Alabama

(1) "In a long line of decisions this court has declared bills in equity to enjoin or cancel judgments at law because of mistake, accident, or fraud, are bills in the nature of bills of review, and by analogy, a limitation of three years has been applied; with proviso that one year must be allowed after discovery of the fraud, mistake, etc., upon which the equity of the bill rests."—Hatton v. Moseley, 156 So. 546, 547, 229 Ala. 240.

(2) There are a number of cases which have held in accordance with this statement of the rule.—Swoope v. Darrow, 188 So. 879, 237 Ala. 692—Wynn v. First Nat. Bank, 159 So. 58, 229 Ala. 639—Nichols v. limitations do not begin to run until after the discovery of the fraud,[86] and, even in the absence of specific provision, lapse of the statutory period does not bar suit under such circumstances;[87] but suit may[88] and should[89] be brought within a reasonable time after discovery of the fraud. Knowledge of the fraud, with respect to running of the statute of limitations, may be constructive,[90] and may be imputed to a party deriving his claim from one who had knowledge.[91] Under some statutes ignorance of the judgment,[92] or of the alleged mistake, neglect, or omission rendering the judgment voidable,[93] will not extend the running of the statute beyond the statutory period, and, in any case, passage of the twenty-year period of prescription may preclude attack on a judgment regardless of when the alleged fraud was discovered.[94] In case of a person under disability, the limitation begins to run from the removal of the disability.[95]

It is generally held that, where a judgment or decree is utterly void, suit for equitable relief against its enforcement may be brought at any time regardless of the statute of limitations.[96]

§ 380. Defenses

Any ground destructive of the plaintiff's equity may constitute a defense to a bill for equitable relief against a judgment.

A bill for an injunction against a judgment may be defended on any ground destructive of the equity set up by complainant,[97] and his negligence may sometimes preclude the granting of relief.[98] The judgment attacked may not be pleaded as a bar or as res judicata.[99] A transfer of plaintiff's inter-

When fraud perpetrated

Where note containing confession of judgment was not to be presented for collection until after maker's death, fraud was perpetrated against maker only on institution of suit on note and rendition of executory judgment therein during maker's lifetime, and not from date of execution of note, as regards question of prescription.—Hanson v. Haynes, La. App., 170 So. 257, rehearing denied 171 So. 146.

Disclosure of knowledge

Under Louisiana statute requiring that suit for declaration of nullity of judgment because of fraud be brought within one year from discovery of fraud, suit in federal court to set aside mortgage foreclosure sale on ground of fraud could not be maintained when filed more than a year after suit in state court disclosing full knowledge of the alleged fraud.—McCrory v. Supervening disability

The disability existing at time decree was entered determines right of party to decree to institute action questioning validity of decree within two years after such disability is removed, and no supervening disability can be tacked onto former disability in computing time within which direct attack can be made on decree.—McCampbell v. Warrich Corporation, C.C.A.Ill., 109 F.2d 115, certiorari denied 60 S.Ct. 1077, 310 U.S. 631, 84 L.Ed. 1401, rehearing denied 61 S.Ct. 55, second case, 311 U.S. 612, 85 L.Ed. 388, and 61 S.Ct. 1089, 313 U.S. 599, 85 L.Ed. 1551.

§ 381. —— Laches

A party seeking equitable relief against a judgment must act with reasonable promptness or his suit may be barred by laches, especially where the rights of other persons have been prejudiced by the delay; but delay due to legal disability, ignorance of the facts, or pursuit of other remedies generally does not constitute laches.

One who desires to invoke the assistance of equity as against a judgment at law must act with reasonable promptness, and relief will not be granted to a complainant who has delayed his application to equity, without adequate excuse, for such a considerable period of time as to be chargeable with laches,[2] especially where the situation of the adverse party has changed to his disadvantage,[3] or where the rights of innocent third persons have intervened,[4] as where the judgment has been collected by execution and title to real estate would be invalidated by the setting aside of the judgment.[5] However, the court has a large discretion as to the lapse of time which will show laches,[6] and a suit will not be barred for mere delay, in the absence of other elements of laches,[7] as where it is not shown that other persons were prejudiced by such delay.[8] Accordingly, where plaintiff acts within a reasonable time, considering the circumstances of the case, he will not be barred by laches from seeking relief.[9] Ordinarily laches is not imputable to a complainant who takes all the time which the statute allows him,[10] but under certain circumstances laches may operate to bar suit prior to the running of the statutory period,[11] as where the delay has been such as to justify the presumption that defendant may have been prejudiced thereby.[12]

However great the lapse of time since the rendition of the judgment, applicant is not to be charged with laches where he was ignorant of its existence, or of his defenses against it, and acts promptly after discovering the facts;[13] nor is laches imputable to a party who, during the interval, has been contesting the validity of the judgment in the courts of law or attempting to obtain relief against it in other proceedings.[14] One against whom a void judgment has been rendered will not be estopped by laches to seek relief from such judgment at any time;[15] and, with respect to laches in seeking correction of a decree in partition, one in peaceable possession of realty under a claim of right may rest in security until his title or possession is attacked.[16]

Person under legal disability. As a rule laches is not imputable to a person while he is under legal disability,[17] but in some circumstances the laches of a parent or guardian may be imputable to a minor.[18]

Equitable defense
In absence of statutory duty to interpose an equitable defense in an action at law, it is not necessarily "laches" for a defendant having such a defense to wait deliberately until judgment at law has been rendered against him and then bring a suit to restrain enforcement of judgment.—Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hathaway Baking Co., 28 N.E.2d 425, 306 Mass. 428.

Other remedy
One against whom judgment is rendered may proceed, under statute or in equity, for rehearing on ground of want of notice or knowledge of pendency of suit, or fraud preventing defense, and is not guilty of laches in filing bill, without having sought to avail herself of such statute.—Alabama Chemical Co. v. Claim derived from parent
One suing to set aside judgments confirming arbitrators' award of land was chargeable with her mother's laches, although plaintiff was nonresident infant at time of arbitration and knew nothing thereof until shortly before bringing suit, where plaintiff's claim was derived from her mother.—Morse v. Lewis, supra.

Suit by person not a party to judgment. Generally the rule that an action for equitable relief against a judgment must be diligently pursued within a reasonable time after rendition of a judgment does not apply where relief is sought by one not a party or privy to the judgment involved,[19] but one deriving his claim of right from a party to the judgment who was guilty of laches may be barred thereby from seeking relief.[20]

§ 382. Jurisdiction of Particular Courts

Equitable relief against a judgment may be sought only in a court having the requisite power and authority, and, while usually it is proper to sue in the court which rendered the judgment, suit in another court of concurrent or equal jurisdiction is permitted in some states; and a federal court may in a suit within its jurisdiction grant relief against a void judgment of a state court.

As a general rule, equitable relief against a judgment may be sought only in a court having the power and authority to consider such an application,[21] and ordinarily, if the court which rendered the judgment has equitable powers, it is proper to bring suit in that court to enjoin or set aside the judgment.[22]

In some states it is generally the rule that any court of equitable powers, having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter, may enjoin the enforcement of a judgment, although it was rendered by a court of concurrent or equal jurisdiction,[23] and, where this rule prevails, a court of chancery jurisdiction may enjoin a judgment obtained in another chancery court,[24] or in the supreme court of the state,[25] or even in a court in another state.[26] In other jurisdictions, either by statute or settled practice, a suit to enjoin a judgment must be brought in the same court which rendered it, and will not be entertained by another court of coördinate jurisdiction,[27] unless such judgment is void and its invalidity is apparent on the face of the record,[28] or the enforcement of the judgment is sought to be restrained for some purpose collateral to the subsequent suit,[29] or it appears that the court rendering the judgment is unable by reason of its limited jurisdiction to afford the relief sought.[30] It has been held that the rule is the same whether the second action is brought by a party or a stranger to the first,[31] but there is also authority to the contrary.[32] The consent of the parties cannot change the rule requiring suit in the court which rendered the judgment, or relax its binding force in any particular case.[33]

The federal courts are prohibited by statute from granting injunctions to stay proceedings in the state courts,[34] but such statute does not prevent a federal court in a suit within its jurisdiction, by reason of diversity of citizenship and the amount involved, from granting relief against a judgment of a state court on the ground that it was procured by fraud or was void for want of jurisdiction,[35] where such relief could be granted if the judgment was that of a federal court.[36] Conversely, state courts have no power or jurisdiction to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment rendered by a court of the United States[37] unless such judgment was procured by fraud.[38]

§ 383. Venue

A suit for equitable relief against a judgment generally should be brought in the county or other judicial district in which the judgment was rendered, but the proper venue may sometimes be elsewhere.

A bill in equity for relief against a judgment should as a general rule be brought in the county or other judicial district in which the judgment was rendered,[39] unless an objection on this ground is waived,[40] or a change of venue is granted for due

Sale

Where a judgment itself orders the sale of specific property, such sale cannot be restrained by another court on the application of a party to the judgment.—Carey v. Looney, 251 S.W. 1040, 113 Tex. 93.

In Connecticut

(1) Under a statute so providing, all actions for equitable relief against judgments rendered in the superior court must be brought in that court exclusively.—Smith v. Hall, 42 A. 86, 71 Conn. 427.

(2) However, the superior court has power in its equitable jurisdiction to afford relief against decrees of court of probate.—Folwell v. Howell, 169 A. 199, 117 Conn. 565.

In Iowa

Under a statute so providing, when proceedings on a judgment are sought to be enjoined, the suit must be brought in the county and court in which the judgment was obtained.—Ferris v. Grimes, 215 N.W. 646, 204 Iowa 587—34 C.J. p 483 note 1 [b].

In Louisiana

(1) As a general rule, suit to set aside a judgment is properly instituted in the court which rendered judgment.—Trichel v. Bordelon, 9 Rob. 191—Clark v. Christine, 12 La. 394—Dickey v. Pollock, App., 183 So. 48.

(2) The action of nullity of judgment must usually be brought before the court which rendered the judgment, and it may not be brought in another court unless the judgment is absolutely void on its face.—Abraham Land & Mineral Co. v. Marble Sav. Bank, D.C.La., 35 F.Supp. 500.

(3) However, a judgment on appeal rendered by a court without jurisdiction ratione materiæ may be attacked before the court in which the judgment appealed from was rendered.—Hibernia Nat. Bank v. Standard Guano & Chemical Mfg. Co., 26 So. 274, 51 La.Ann. 1321.

Situs of judgment

For the purpose of a proceeding on petition and service of summons to vacate a judgment after expiration of term at which it was rendered, on ground that it was obtained by fraud, situs of judgment was in county in which judgment was rendered.—Parker v. Board of Com'rs of Okmulgee County, 102 P. 2d 880, 187 Okl. 308, followed in Parker v. Board of Com'rs of Okmulgee County, 102 P.2d 883, 187 Okl. 311.

Special pleading

Objection to venue in suit to enjoin execution of judgment as not brought in county in which judgment was rendered must be specially cause,[41] or unless the judgment is void, in which case it may be attacked in any court having equitable jurisdiction.[42] It has been held, however, that the suit may be brought in any county, subject to defendant's right to have the case transferred.[43] In some cases the proper venue of the action has been held to be the place where defendant resides, although it is other than the place of the rendition of the judgment,[44] and in others that, when the judgment is sought to be enforced against specific property, an action to restrain such enforcement may be maintained at the place where the property is situated.[45]

§ 384. Parties

a. In general

b. Plaintiffs

c. Defendants

a. In General

Generally all the parties to the original action or their representatives, and any other persons whose rights are involved, are proper and necessary parties to an action for equitable relief against a judgment, but persons having no interest in the controversy need not be joined as parties.

To a bill in equity to set aside, vacate, or enjoin the enforcement of, a judgment recovered at law, all the parties to the original action,[46] or their representatives[47] or privies,[48] and also any other persons whose rights would or might be affected by the grant of the relief asked,[49] may and should be made parties. On the other hand, persons not parties to the original suit and having no interest in the controversy are not proper[50] or necessary[51]

Severable interest

A bill of review attacking a judgment in trespass to try title in so far as it awarded an interest in land to one of several defendants, where interest of the defendant was severable from that of other parties whose rights were not challenged, was not defective for failure to make all parties to judgment parties to the bill.—Lamb v. Parties interested in maintenance of judgment

Tex.—Dallas Coffee & Tea Co. v. Williams, Civ.App., 45 S.W.2d 724, error dismissed.

Marital relation

The state is an "interested party" in cases brought under statute providing that any judgment obtained by means of perjury or any fraudulent act, practice, or representation of prevailing party may be set aside, where marital relation is involved, but, where death intervenes and there are no children but only property rights involved, the state has no concern and equitable principles should govern.—Bloomquist v. Thomas, 9 N.W.2d 337, 215 Minn. 35.

51. U.S.—Hanna v. Brictson Mfg. Co., C.C.A.S.D., 62 F.2d 139.
Tex.—Williams v. Tooke, Civ.App., 116 S.W.2d 1114, error dismissed.

Order arresting and setting aside void decree canceling loan deed to parties, and parties to the former suit sometimes may not be necessary parties where they will not be affected by the relief sought.[52] Under proper circumstances a third person may be allowed to intervene.[53]

b. Plaintiffs

All persons interested in the relief sought may join as parties plaintiff but persons whose interests are hostile to those of the plaintiff, or against whom no relief is sought, and who cannot be adversely affected by the decree entered in the action are not necessary parties.

All persons interested in the relief sought may join as parties plaintiff to a suit to enjoin or set aside a judgment.[54] Where a judgment is recovered against two or more as joint defendants, all should join as plaintiffs in an action to enjoin its enforcement,[55] or be joined as defendants, in accordance with the general rule in equity.[56] The rule is the same where the judgment was recovered jointly against a principal and surety.[57] This rule, however, is one of convenience, and must yield where its rigid enforcement would be attended with inconvenience,[58] and persons whose interests are hostile to those of plaintiff, or against whom no relief is sought, and who cannot be adversely affected by any decree entered therein, are not necessary parties.[59] So, where one of several joint judgment debtors sues to restrain the enforcement of the judgment against himself alone, he need not join the others as parties plaintiff.[60] Tenants in common may sue jointly to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment in ejectment, although they were not all made defendants in the ejectment.[61] A judgment debtor and his grantee may properly join as complainants in a suit to restrain an execution sale and to cancel the judgment,[62] but it has been held that a grantor disclaiming any interest in realty against which a judgment foreclosed a lien, and who was not a party to the prior suit, may not be properly joined as a plaintiff with his grantee.[63]

c. Defendants

In an action for equitable relief against a judgment, all persons really and beneficially interested in the judgment, or whose rights are likely to be affected by the injunction, including necessary or proper parties who refuse to join as plaintiffs, should be joined as defendants.

A bill in equity for relief against a judgment may and should join as defendants all persons really and beneficially interested in the judgment, or whose rights are likely to be affected by the injunction,[64]

premises purchased under warranty deed duly recorded after entry of decree was not erroneous because of failure to make purchaser party to proceeding to arrest decree or to give him notice of pendency thereof, it being sufficient that opposite party in controversy wherein decree was obtained was given notice.—Land Development Corporation v. Apparent rights In suit to annul judgment on ground that judgment, valid on its face, was void as to those seeking its annulment because they were not parties to suit in which judgment was rendered, only those parties who have apparent rights under judgment need be joined.—Willson v. Kuhn, Tex.Civ.App., 96 S.W.2d 236.

Claim in equity
A person need not be a judgment creditor in order to intervene in suit to enjoin enforcement of judgment, but claim in equity is equally as good a basis to support such right.—Eyles v. Southern Ohio Sav. Bank & Trust Co., supra.

including plaintiff or joint plaintiffs in whose name the judgment stands,[65] the party for whose use the action was really brought, although he is not the nominal plaintiff,[66] persons claiming or acquiring interests in the property specifically affected by the judgment,[67] and any persons who participated in an alleged fraud, charged as the means whereby the judgment was obtained, although they were not parties to the original action.[68] Necessary or proper parties who refuse to join as plaintiffs should be made defendants.[69] On the other hand, persons against whom no relief is sought and who have no interest in the controversy adverse to plaintiff are not necessary parties.[70]

Where the owner of a judgment has assigned it to a third person, both the assignor[71] and the assignee[72] are proper and necessary parties, unless the latter is the only one having an interest in the judgment.[73] However, the assignor of a cause of action which is afterward merged in a judgment is not a necessary party to an action to enjoin the enforcement of the judgment by the assignee.[74] Where plaintiff sues to enjoin enforcement of two judgments, rendered in favor of different parties, such parties, who are not jointly affected by the two judgments, may not be joined as defendants.[75]

If the action is brought against the sheriff or other officer holding process under the judgment to restrain him from proceeding for its collection, the judgment plaintiff may be joined as a defendant,[76] and sometimes is required to be joined as a party;[77] but where the suit is against the judgment creditor it is neither necessary nor proper to make the sheriff a party[78] unless a statute so provides[79] or the sheriff has joined with the creditor in the commission of the fraud of which complaint is made.[80] Where the judgment is in the name of the sheriff, he is properly made a party to a bill to set it aside, although he may have no personal interest.[81]

Expired execution

Where sheriff was made party to proceedings to set aside default judgment solely so that it would be possible to enjoin him from enforcing the judgment by levying outstanding execution, and the execution expired while case was pending and it then became apparent that judgment would be set aside, sheriff was no longer a necessary party.—Kulikowski v. Improper joinder of court,[83] or other officers of the law[84] usually are not proper parties to a suit of this kind; and in any case they may not be sued alone without joining the real parties in interest.[85] Officials interested in the proceeds of a judgment levying a fine, and not the state, are necessary parties defendant.[86]

Persons not formally named. Where persons are not formally named as defendants, but employ an attorney to represent them, who appears in court and conducts a defense in their name, they are parties to the suit authorizing the court to adjudicate issues involving their interests.[87]

§ 385. Process and Appearance

In a suit for equitable relief against a judgment, jurisdiction of the person generally must be acquired by proper service or by appearance, but the decisions are in disagreement as to whether service by publication is sufficient.

As a general rule, in a suit in equity to enjoin or set aside a judgment, jurisdiction of the person must be acquired either by proper service[88] or by appearance,[89] but such a suit has also been regarded as a continuation of the original suit in which the judgment or decree was entered so that service of subpœna within the state on parties to the original suit was unnecessary.[90] According to some decisions service by publication will not give jurisdiction[91] since the action is one in personam requiring personal service,[92] but according to other decisions such a suit is in the nature of one in rem in which constructive service is authorized,[93] and service by publication is proper where the case is such as to come within the statute authorizing such service.[94] Where the statute requires service of process of the party himself, service may not be made on the attorney of record for plaintiff in the original action,[95] but service on the attorney may be proper where plaintiff in the original action is a nonresident or out of the jurisdiction of the court[96] unless some other mode of service, such as by publication, is provided for in such cases.[97]

§ 386. Release of Errors

Although a bill for equitable relief against a judgment does not of itself constitute a release of errors, some statutes require such a release, or make the injunction operate as one, in the case of attack on judgments at law which are not void; such a release applies only to errors in the legal proceeding which might be taken advantage of in the appellate court.

A bill in equity to enjoin a judgment at law is not of itself a release of errors.[98] By statute, however, it is frequently provided that complainant in a bill in equity for relief against a judgment at law shall file or indorse on his bill a release of errors,[99] if required to do so by the court,[1] or that the injunction, when granted, shall operate as such a release.[2] In order that the granting of an injunction shall operate as a release of errors, there must be an injunction of a judgment at law.[3] The statutes do not apply where the relief asked does not amount to a stay of proceedings on the judgment,[4] or where it is sought to stay proceedings prior[5] or subsequent[6] to the judgment, and not to affect the judgment itself; nor do they apply to proceedings in chancery or those in their nature equitable,[7] or where the judgment is not merely erroneous but is void,[8] or where it is sought to enjoin proceedings in violation of law.[9]

A release of errors applies only to errors in the legal proceedings of which advantage might be taken in the appellate court.[10] It does not prevent the correction of clerical errors,[11] or preclude the party from assailing the judgment for matters dehors the record,[12] as that the judgment was obtained by fraud,[13] or affect the remedy of the party in equity.[14] The omission of a release is ground for dissolving the injunction,[15] but not for dismissing the bill.[16] A subsequent dismissal of the injunction will not affect the release.[17]

§ 387. Preliminary or Temporary Injunction

a. In general
b. Continuance or dissolution

a. In General

In a proper case, a preliminary or temporary injunction may be granted in a suit for equitable relief against a judgment, provided there has been compliance with requirements as to notice of application and furnishing of security.

In a suit in equity for relief against a judgment at law, a preliminary or temporary injunction may be granted in a proper case to await the determination of the validity of the judgment where it appears that the judgment was obtained by fraud, mistake, or surprise,[18] or to await the determination of issues on which the rights of the parties depend.[19] However, this action will ordinarily be taken only where plaintiff's equity is clear, or at least is supported by a strong prima facie case,[20] and not where the judgment appears to rest on a good and valuable consideration,[21] pending an appeal from the judgment,[22] where the judgment has already been enforced by execution before the filing of the bill,[23] or where it is not shown that the refusal of the injunction will cause serious injury to complainant.[24]

Proceedings to obtain. Where a temporary injunction against a judgment is asked, notice of the application must be served on defendant,[25] unless it appears that injury will be likely to occur before a hearing can be had, in which case the facts as to injury must be set forth either in the bill or by an affidavit accompanying it.[26] As a further condition, complainant is usually required to furnish security, at least in cases provided for by statute.[27] In some states the ordinary injunction bond is considered sufficient for this purpose, and complainant is not required to bring into court the amount of the judgment, unless under extraordinary circumstances.[28] In others, sometimes under statute, it is necessary to pay the amount of the judgment and costs into court, and give security for damages which may be sustained, or, as an alternative within the discretion of the court, to give a bond conditioned to pay the amount of the judgment, damages, and costs.[29] A statute requiring the giving of a bond must be strictly complied with; the court has no discretion to fix the condition or penalty of the bond variant from that directed thereby.[30] Where there is no statutory provision on the subject, the matter is left to the discretion of the court.[31] Where an injunction is obtained without complying with such statutes, defendant is entitled to summary relief, and is not put on his motion to dissolve.[32] A bond given to obtain an injunction will not operate as a supersedeas, if it describes a judgment different from that sought to be enjoined.[33]

b. Continuance or Dissolution

In a proper case, a temporary injunction may be continued until the hearing and determination, but the injunction will be dissolved on the furnishing of a refunding bond where it appears that the complainant is not entitled to relief against the judgment, or where the respondent's answer sufficiently denies the equity of the bill.

Whether a temporary injunction will be continued or dissolved is generally a matter within the discretion of the court in which equitable relief is sought.[34] Where the rights of the parties depend on unsettled issues of fact,[35] or it appears that dissolution might work irreparable mischief to complainant,[36] the preliminary injunction ordinarily will be continued until the hearing and determination. On the other hand, it may be dissolved if the court becomes satisfied that complainant is not entitled to relief against the judgment[37] and that the injunction ought never to have been granted,[38] or where relief must be denied for want of a release of errors[39] or for want of prosecution of the suit,[40] or where the amount proposed to be set off against the judgment, for which purpose the injunction was sued out, bears an insignificant proportion to the amount of the judgment.[41]

The injunction should not be dissolved for a mere defect of parties[42] or for amendable defects in the bill or petition.[43] Where the judgment was recovered by a vendor of land for the purchase money, and was enjoined on the ground of a defect or failure of title, it should be dissolved on his exhibiting a good title or tendering a good and sufficient deed, as the case may be,[44] but time to procure a good title will not be allowed.[45] Where an injunction against a judgment at law is dissolved, it should also be dissolved as to costs.[46]

On answer. When respondent's answer denies the equity of complainant's bill, and fully and explicitly negatives all its essential allegations, the preliminary injunction should in general be dissolved,[47] but this will not be done where the denials of the answer are vague, general, or lacking in particularity,[48] or where the answer admits the substantial rights of complainant,[49] or where there appears to be some good reason for retaining it.[50] If the answer shows that complainant is entitled to some equitable relief, but not to the extent claimed by the bill, the injunction may be dissolved in part, or continued on such terms as will insure the ultimate ends of justice between the parties.[51] If it appears that a part of a judgment at law only should be enjoined, the injunction may be perpetuated as to such part, and dissolved as to the residue.[52]

Refunding bond. When the preliminary injunction is dissolved on the answer, it is proper to require of respondent a bond conditioned to refund the amount he may collect on the judgment in case the equity proceedings should finally be determined against him.[53]

§ 388. Pleading

Pleadings are required in proceedings for equitable relief against a judgment.

In accordance with the rules as to equity pleadings generally, discussed in Equity §§ 179–198, pleadings are required in proceedings for equitable relief against a judgment, and the court may not assume jurisdiction on its own motion to modify a judgment in the absence of proper pleadings.[54] The rules of pleading must be strictly observed in such proceedings.[55]

§ 389. —— Bill or Complaint

a. In general
b. Specific grounds for relief
c. Allegations as to specific matters

a. In General

In a suit for equitable relief against a judgment, jurisdiction of the court is invoked by the filing of a properly verified bill or complaint, and such pleading must state a good cause of action.

The jurisdiction of a court to entertain a suit for equitable relief against a judgment is ordinarily invoked by the filing of a bill, petition,[56] complaint, or motion in writing.[57] In accordance with the general rules as to equity pleading, discussed in Equity §§ 217–232, the bill, petition, or complaint must show good and sufficient equitable reason why the judgment complained of should be enjoined or set aside, or, in other words, it must state a good cause of action for equitable relief.[58] Thus there must be proper and sufficient allegations setting

Attorney's fees

Where a judgment debtor procured an injunction restraining sheriff from taking and holding him under a capias ad satisfaciendum, but injunction did not enjoin payment of judgment, judgment creditor was not entitled to attorneys' fees incurred in having debtor's complaint in injunction suit dismissed under statute requiring debtor to pay damages on dissolution of an injunction, since injunction did not prevent the issuance of an execution and levy on any property belonging to debtor.—Bransky v. In suit to obtain sale of realty in which plaintiff claimed an interest under deed from his father which widow asserted was void because father was of unsound mind when deed was executed and because of fraud and undue influence, widow's exceptions to judgment and master commissioner's report of sale could not be treated as petition to vacate or modify judgment within statute, where widow advanced claim to homestead in property in answer and counterclaim and participated in trial of the case.—Pugh v. Fraud

Where a petitioner for the review of a default judgment has complied with the statutory provisions, the petition need not allege that the judgment was procured by fraud in order to secure a review of such judgment.—Dillbeck v. Johnson, 129 S.W.2d 885, 344 Mo. 845.

Restrictions of equitable practice

In proceeding to review probate court orders, petition need not conform to rules and is not limited to restrictions of equitable practice applicable to bill of review, as such proceeding is not strictly speaking a "bill of review" but in nature of such a bill in equity.—Union Bank & Trust Co. of Fort Worth v. Smith, Tex.Civ.App., 166 S.W.2d 928.

(2) In action to set aside judgment on note, petition alleging that plaintiffs had not been served with process and were not before court in action on the note, but containing allegations from which it might be inferred that plaintiffs took part in proceedings, especially subsequent to entry of judgment, failed to state a cause of action.—Hibbard v. Clay County, 186 S.W.2d 423, 299 Ky. 560.

(3) A bill of review presents no cause of action where gravamen of complaint is merely that counsel failed to present his client's cause or defense.—Whitehurst v. Estes, Tex. Civ.App., 185 S.W.2d 154, error refused.

Incorporation of record

(1) Compliance with text rule was shown where plaintiffs, who were defendants in prior action, made record in prior action a part of their petition as though incorporated therein.—Triplett v. Stanley, 130 S. W.2d 45, 279 Ky. 148.

(2) However, rules of pleading do not require that record in former suit be completely exhibited by petition seeking bill of review.—Sloan v. Newton, Tex.Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 697.

(3) Necessity of incorporating transcript of record as an exhibit see infra § 390.

were made, how they were finally determined,[60] and for what reason the judgment is void.[61] The necessity of allegations as to the existence of a meritorious defense, plaintiff's diligence and lack of fault, injury or injustice to complainant resulting from enforcement of the judgment, and lack or loss of remedy at law are considered infra subdivision c of this section.

The allegations of the bill or complaint must be positive, explicit, and certain.[62] The bill must set forth facts, and not mere conclusions of law,[63] and, if conclusions are used, they must be supported by allegations of fact.[64] However, mere informality of statement in the petition will not prevent it from being considered on its merits,[65] and the fact that it contains inconsequential misstatements of fact is not fatal where defendant was not harmed thereby.[66] The improper designation of a pleading is immaterial where it alleges the elements required of a bill or complaint for equitable relief against a judgment.[67] A petition substantially following the statute authorizing the proceeding is sufficient.[68]

In a proper case, a defective pleading may be amended.[69]

Verification. In accordance with the general rules as to verification of equity pleadings generally, discussed in Equity §§ 183–190, a bill for an injunction against a judgment,[70] or a petition to set aside a judgment,[71] must be verified by complainant in person, unless there is some sufficient reason for its verification by his attorney.[72]

Tex.—Kelley v. Wright, Civ.App., 184 S.W.2d 649, affirmed, Sup., 188 S.W.2d 983.

Pleadings and result

(1) A bill of review must clearly recite pleadings and result of original suit, so as to enable court to determine with reasonable certainty the issues involved.—Bevill v. Rosenfield, Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 340, error dismissed—Griffith v. Tipps, Tex.Civ.App., 69 S.W.2d 846—Winn v. Houston Building & Loan Ass'n, Tex.Civ.App., 45 S.W.2d 631, error refused.

(2) Any fact averred in bill of review inconsistent with, or contradictory of, pleadings or judgment in main case will be given no effect in determining legal sufficiency of bill.—Bevill v. Rosenfield, supra.

History of proceedings

A bill of review to set aside probate court order appointing defendant as attorney to represent interests of plaintiff in an estate was sufficient where bill set forth history of probate proceedings and circumstances under which appointment was made.—Bevill v. Rosenfield, supra.

Ga.—Hanleiter v. Spearman, 36 S.E. 2d 780.
Ky.—Triplett v. Stanley, 130 S.W.2d 45, 279 Ky. 148.

Invalidity on face

In a direct attack on a judgment, it is not necessary to allege that the judgment showed its invalidity on its face.—Garza v. Kenedy, Tex. Com.App., 299 S.W. 231, rehearing denied 5 S.W.2d xx.

62. Ala.—Fletcher v. First Nat. Bank of Opelika, 11 So.2d 854, 244 Ala. 98.

Tex.—Dunlap v. Villareal, Civ.App., 91 S.W.2d 1124.
34 C.J. p 488 note 14.

Mere inference insufficient

A pleading to set aside a judgment should be definite, and the nonexistence of facts which invalidate the judgment should not be evaded, and mere inference is insufficient to show the invalidity of the judgment when the question is raised by proper demurrer.—Roy v. Abraham, 96 So. 883, 209 Ala. 691.

Allegations on information and belief

(1) Chancery will not restrain the collection of a judgment at law on a bill in which all the material facts are charged on information and belief only, without any allegation as to whence the information was derived or any affidavit connected with the bill.—McGraw v. Walsh, W.Va., 232 F. 122, 146 C.C.A. 314—34 C.J. p 488 note 14 [c].

(2) However, in an action to have a judgment declared void and to have it expunged from the record on the theory that no personal service was ever effected on plaintiff, it was proper for plaintiff to allege facts leading to entry of judgment on information and belief, since, presumably, plaintiff had no personal knowledge of the service on a person other than himself or of the facts concerning the lack of service.—Hammond v. Citizens Nat. Bank of Potsdam, 22 N.Y.S.2d 656, 260 App.Div. 374, motion denied 23 N.Y.S. 2d 559, 260 App.Div. 894.

Irregularities and omissions

In action to set aside a judgment, it is not sufficient, with reference to the stating of a cause of action, to make general allegations of irregularities and omissions, but plaintiff must clearly set forth definite facts from which there can be drawn the conclusion that a reconsideration or the conducting of further proceedings will result in a different decree.—Termini v. McCormick, 23 So.2d 52, 208 La. 221.

Matter not discretionary

Filing. Where a party has performed every act required to place his case before the only court which may entertain his bill, the omission of the clerk of court to make a proper indorsement in filing the bill does not prejudice the rights of the complaining party.[73]

b. Specific Grounds for Relief

(1) In general
(2) Fraud or perjury

(1) In General

The existence of the specific ground for relief against the judgment must be shown by specific averments setting forth in detail the particular facts constituting the ground alleged.

Whatever the specific ground on which equity is asked to interfere—whether fraud, accident, mistake, want of jurisdiction, or excusable neglect—the bill or complaint must sufficiently show the existence of such ground by specific averments, setting forth in detail the particular facts constituting the ground alleged.[74] In order to show the invalidity of the judgment on the ground of want of jurisdiction, the bill must set out in detail facts from which it is apparent that under no circumstances could the law court have had jurisdiction to render it.[75]

Newly discovered evidence. A bill for relief in equity against a judgment at law on the ground of newly discovered evidence must set forth such evidence in detail, so that the court may judge of its nature, materiality, and weight.[76] It must also aver that complainant was ignorant of such evidence at the time of the trial at law,[77] that it could not have been discovered by due diligence, before judgment was rendered,[78] what efforts he made for that purpose and what degree of diligence he employed,[79] that the evidence was discovered after judgment,

Facts not warranting conclusion

A general allegation that a judgment was procured by fraud is no stronger than recital of facts from which the general conclusion is drawn, and, if such facts do not warrant the conclusion the petition is insufficient.—Oglesby v. Oglesby, 32 S.E.2d 906, 198 Ga. 864.

Procurement of decree

In order to sustain bill to vacate than intrinsic fraud,[87] and by showing that the judgment is wrong.[88] It is not sufficient to incorporate in the bill a general allegation of fraud, deceit, or concealment, but the specific facts constituting the alleged fraud must be set forth particularly.[89] On the other hand, if the facts constituting fraud are so set forth, the bill is sufficient, although it lacks a specific allegation of fraud,[90] unless any reliance on fraud as a ground for relief is specifically abandoned by statement to the court.[91] Where the fraud charged consists of acts of third persons, it must appear from the bill that the judgment creditor was a party to it.[92]

Perjury. Where a judgment is attacked on the ground of perjury, the bill or complaint must contain all necessary allegations warranting the relief sought.[93] The bill should name the witnesses, and wherein they swore falsely,[94] and set forth facts tending to show that their testimony was false,[95] to the knowledge of the judgment creditor,[96] and that complainant has witnesses to prove such facts,[97] giving their names and addresses.[98] Plaintiff must also allege the means by which the perjury decree for fraud, bill must allege facts showing that fraud was in concoction or procurement of decree.—Jones v. Henderson, 153 So. 214, 228 Ala. 273.

was discovered,[99] and that such discovery could not have been made in time to have been available as a defense in the law action.[1]

c. Allegations as to Specific Matters

Where such a showing is a prerequisite to relief, the bill must contain proper and sufficient allegations as to the existence of a meritorious defense, the plaintiff's diligence and lack of fault, injury or injustice resulting from the enforcement of the judgment, and lack or loss of remedy at law.

Where the existence of a meritorious cause of action or defense is a prerequisite to relief, as discussed supra § 349, the bill must allege and show that complainant has a good and meritorious claim or defense to the action at law,[2] that he is able to present to the court the evidence constituting such defense,[3] and that a different judgment would ensue if the judgment at law were set aside and the action tried anew.[4] Ordinarily, a general allegation that complainant has a meritorious defense to

Allegations of original bill
Failure to allege good and meritorious defense against defendants' supplemental answer and cross bill, on which defendants obtained decree pro confesso, was supplied by averment of plaintiff's original bill that plaintiff had recovered judgment for enforcement of which he was then invoking aid of chancery jurisdiction of court, which judgment had been recorded as provided by statute, and that judgment was valid.—McCarty v. the original suit is not sufficient, and the facts which constitute such defense must be pleaded,[5] but it has been held that a pleading in general terms may be sufficient in the absence of special exception thereto.[6] It is not enough for complainant to aver that he has stated the facts to his attorney and that he is advised by him that he has a good defense.[7]

The rule that a meritorious defense must be pleaded does not apply where the judgment is attacked as void, rather than voidable,[8] as where the judgment was rendered without obtaining jurisdiction over the person of defendant,[9] and it has been held that this is the case whether the invalidity of the judgment appears on its face or must be shown by evidence dehors the record.[10] A complaint to set aside a judgment rendered through mistake or the like need not show a meritorious defense where the defense has already been made.[11]

Diligence and lack of fault. As a general rule, complainant in a suit in equity for relief against a judgment at law must exonerate himself from blame for the situation in which he finds himself, that is, his bill must contain proper averments to show that the judgment against him was not attributable to his own negligence or fault, and that he has been diligent in seeking to make his defense, and he must set forth the facts which he relies on as showing such diligence,[12] or, where it appears that the judgment was obtained as a result of his neglect, he must sufficiently allege that such neglect was excusable.[13] Plaintiff must also allege a sufficient excuse for delay in instituting suit,[14] and for his failure to move for a new trial during the term of the court at which the judgment was rendered,[15] or to seek relief from the judgment by appeal to a higher court.[16] However, where the ground relied on could not have been set up as a defense at law, no excuse for failure to prevent the judgment need be alleged.[17] So, where the facts make out a case from which it appears doubtful whether there is any remedy at law, or show an existing remedy to be inadequate to do complete justice, failure to make defense at law, or failure to defend successfully, need not be excused.[18] A party filing a petition under a statute authorizing equitable relief against a judgment is not required to acquit himself of negligence in failing to apply to the court of law for relief before going into equity to obtain the same relief.[19]

Injury or injustice to complainant. The bill must allege that it would be against conscience to allow the enforcement of the judgment, or that it would work injury or injustice to complainant in some specific manner.[20] Facts must be alleged; a general allegation of injury is not sufficient.[21]

Lack or loss of remedy at law. Where the nonexistence or inadequacy of a remedy at law is a condition to the granting of equitable relief against a judgment, as discussed supra § 343, complainant must sufficiently allege that he has no adequate remedy at law against the judgment, or if the case is so, that he has unavailingly exhausted his legal remedies,[22] and an averment of the insolvency of respondent may be a necessary part of this allegation.[23] However, a bill to enjoin the execution of a fraudulent judgment need not aver that plaintiff in such judgment is insolvent.[24] other grounds, Com.App., 257 S. W. 232.

34 C.J. p 490 note 23.

Lack of notice of judgment

(1) A bill seeking to set aside a judgment at law must allege want of notice of judgment.—Murphree v. International Shoe Co., 20 So.2d 782, 246 Ala. 384.

(2) Petition alleging that plaintiff had no notice of filing of suit or rendition of judgment until several months after rendition of judgment was demurrable in failing clearly to allege that he had no knowledge of rendition of judgment during six months within which remedy of appeal by writ of error was available. —Avant v. Broun, Tex.Civ.App., 91 S. W.2d 426, error dism.

(3) Complaint in action to set aside default judgment, which did not allege that judgment was taken by surprise, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, was demurrable, notwithstanding allegation that plaintiff's attorney withdrew his appearance without plaintiff's knowledge.—Sweetman v. Peru Building & Loan Ass'n, 200 N.E. 82, 101 Ind.App. 505.

What judgment should be rendered. Where the cause is one in which the court of equity may fully determine the rights of the parties and enter a final decree, as discussed infra § 397, the bill must not only plead sufficient facts to show that a judgment different from that under attack should have been rendered, but also what that different judgment should be.[25] The facts pleaded must be sufficient to authorize the court to determine the issues presented in the former suit and to render such judgment as will be an effective substitute for the one set aside.[26]

Prayer for relief. Under a prayer for general relief, there may be awarded the appropriate relief to which, on the allegations and proof, plaintiff may appear to be entitled.[27] A petition is not defective for failure to include, in addition to the general prayer for relief, a request for a new trial.[28] It has been held that, where a judgment or decree has been executed, the proper prayer for a bill to review such determination is that it be reversed, and that plaintiff be restored to his former condition or status as though the judgment or decree had not been rendered.[29]

§ 390. —— Exhibits

The bill should incorporate such exhibits as are necessary to enable the court to determine the validity of the judgment and the right to relief.

As a general rule, where relief is sought in equity against the enforcement of a judgment, complainant should incorporate in his bill or file as an exhibit a transcript of the record,[30] including the judgment,[31] pleadings,[32] and the substance of the evidence,[33] when necessary to enable the court to determine the validity of the judgment and the right to relief, and also any other documents which may be necessary to present the case fully and clearly to the mind of the court.[34] However, where the reason thus stated for the production of exhibits does not exist, the rule is not applied,[35] and it may be sufficient merely to make specific reference to the judgment or decree sought to be vacated.[36]

§ 391. —— Answer, Motion to Dismiss, and Demurrer

The defendant is entitled to file an answer to a petition for equitable relief against a judgment, or he may take objection to defects in the petition, in a proper case, by motion to dismiss or demurrer. A cross bill may sometimes be maintained.

In a proceeding for equitable relief against a judgment, defendant is entitled to file an answer.[37] Such answer should be responsive to the charges of the bill,[38] and should answer its allegations specifically and in detail,[39] and negative every hypothesis on which complainant's equity could be founded.[40] If want of jurisdiction in the equity court appears on the face of the bill, the objection may be taken by motion to dismiss,[41] or, if the bill appears to lack equity, and fails to state sufficient facts to warrant the relief prayed, respondent may demur,[42] in which case the court may determine the suit on such demurrer,[43] but the demurrer or other exception should be overruled if the petition sufficiently states grounds for the relief sought.[44] Where the bill fails to show circumstances warranting equitable relief against the judgment, it must be dismissed for want of jurisdiction, even though no demurrer is filed.[45] On exceptions to plaintiff's pleadings, the facts alleged therein must be considered as true.[46]

Cross bill. In a proper case, defendant may file a cross bill for such relief as he may be entitled to,[47] but it has been held that a cross bill which states purely a cause of action at law, without any independent equity, may not be maintained.[48]

§ 392. —— Issues, Proof, and Variance

In a suit for equitable relief against a judgment, the hearing and the proof will be restricted to the issues raised by the pleadings; plaintiff must prove all material allegations of his bill which are not admitted.

In order to enable the court to act on an application for relief against a judgment, it is necessary that the parties should frame and present distinct issues as to the matters they mean to contest,[49] and the hearing will be restricted to the issues thus raised and presented.[50] Ordinarily, if the judgment is assailed on the ground of fraud or want of jurisdiction, the court will not enter on an inquiry as to the validity of the obligation sued on or the merits of the original action,[51] further than to require complainant to offer enough proof of his alleged defense to show that, if given a trial on the merits, he could at least make a prima facie case.[52] According to some authority, however, the proof should be suf-

Demurrer held too general

A demurrer alleging that the petition failed to set forth facts constituting fraud is too general to raise any question as to whether or not the petition should have alleged fraud with greater particularity.—Mullis v. Bank of Chauncey, 150 S.E. 471, 40 Ga.App. 582.

On general demurrer to application to set aside default judgment entered at prior term of court, allegations must be accepted as true except that court may consider record in original cause, and any fact averred in application that is inconsistent with record will be given no effect.—Barrow, Wade, Guthrie & Co. v. Stroud, Tex.Civ.App., 125 S.W.2d 365.

Conclusions not admitted

A demurrer to bill for injunction did not admit allegations of bill as to irregularity of former proceeding and as to invalidity of judgment, enforcement of which was sought to be enjoined, since such allegations were mere "conclusions of law."—Viator v. In suit to set aside void partition proceeding, allegations and prayer of cross bill which averred that proceedings were valid, or if not, that it had been ratified, or if not ratified that cross complainant was owner of an undivided interest in entire property, or was entitled to general relief, was sufficient to require action by court on alternate contention of cross complainant as to manner in which its interest should be adjusted.—Prudential Ins. The testimony must be limited to the points made by the pleadings;[54] and as far as it goes to support any point not in issue, it is irrelevant, and will be rejected.[55] The pleadings and the proof must correspond.[56] Plaintiff must prove all the material allegations of his bill[57] which are not admitted.[58]

§ 393. Evidence

a. Presumptions and burden of proof
b. Admissibility
c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

With some exceptions, in a proceeding to obtain equitable relief against a judgment, presumptions will be indulged in favor of the jurisdiction of the court in which the judgment complained of was rendered, the regularity of its proceedings, and the validity of the judgment. The burden is on the party seeking relief to sufficiently establish all the facts on which he relies as the basis of his application.

As a general rule, on a bill in equity for relief against a judgment at law, presumptions will be indulged in favor of the jurisdiction of the court, the regularity of its proceedings, and the validity of the judgment,[59] at least where the judgment appears valid on its face.[60] So it will be presumed that an appearance entered for a party by an attorney was

Recital

(1) Where judgment recited that matters of law and fact were heard at term at which it was rendered, and court which rendered judgment had jurisdiction of the parties and subject matter, court determining suit to set aside judgment was required to presume that such recital was true.—Gann v. Putman, Tex.Civ.App., 159 S.W.2d 931, error refused.

(2) Where decree recites cause was heard on process duly issued, served, and returned, presumption is court had process before it.—Stepp v. State Road Commission, 151 S.E. 180, 108 W.Va. 346.

Incompetent testimony

Trial court, which had admitted incompetent testimony in prior action, would presumably have excluded that testimony, if objection had been urged thereto, based on statute rendering the testimony incompetent.—Blackman v. Blackman, Tex.Civ.App., 128 S.W.2d 433, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Matters of record

Verity of judgment in all matters of which it contains record will be presumed in absence of contradicting evidence.—Starkweather v. Minduly authorized[61] and that the judgment is based on evidence supporting it.[62] It has been held, on the other hand, that where a judgment is directly attacked as void there is no presumption as to its validity[63] with respect to the particular in which it is attacked.[64] It has been held that fraud in procuring the judgment will neither be presumed nor inferred from circumstances which are not inconsistent with good faith,[65] but there is also authority holding that fraud will be presumed where the parties stand in a relationship of trust and confidence, and there is no evidence of fair dealing.[66] The propriety of other particular presumptions has been adjudicated.[67]

Burden of proof. In general the burden of proof is on the party demanding relief against the judgment to establish by sufficient evidence all the facts on which he relies as the basis of his application.[68] Thus the party seeking relief has the burden of showing want of jurisdiction,[69] want of valid service of process,[70] or fraud or duress in the procure-

Notice to manager
However, where, in a suit to set aside a judgment on the ground that no notice of suit was served on

ment of the judgment,[71] and also, in a proper case, that he had a meritorious defense to the former suit[72] which he was prevented from urging by fraud, accident, or the act of the other party[73] without fault or negligence on his part,[74] that he has not been negligent in failing to seek his remedy at law[75] or in delaying institution of the present suit,[76] and that enforcement of the judgment would result in injury or injustice to him.[77]

On the other hand, it has been held that, where the complaint alleged sufficient facts to show prima facie the invalidity of the judgment, the burden is on defendant to establish its validity,[78] and that, where the parties stand in a relationship of trust and confidence to each other, defendant may have the burden of establishing his fair dealing in obtaining judgment.[79] Where the complainant has established a right in equity to set aside the judgment on some recognized ground and shows the existence of a substantial controversy, which is predicated on a plea denying the allegations of the complaint by which the burden would be on plaintiff in the action at law, the same burden should be the rule in the trial of that issue in the equity suit.[80]

b. Admissibility

In proceedings for equitable relief against a judgment, only legal evidence tending to establish or disprove the facts in issue is admissible.

In proceedings to set aside a judgment, or to enjoin the enforcement thereof, evidence is admissible on the part of defendant as well as on the part of complainant.[81] The record of the case in which the judgment was rendered is ordinarily admissible in evidence,[82] including a transcript of the evidence, if properly authenticated,[83] and also the record of another judgment bearing on the facts in controversy,[84] as well as any collateral memorandum or agreement between the parties[85] or other legal evidence tending to establish the facts in issue.[86] On the other hand, evidence which is not competent or relevant to the issues in controversy is not admissible.[87] Independent transactions, not in any way connected with the transaction between the parties to the suit, are not admissible in evidence.[88]

Parol evidence is admissible to prove such facts as naturally rest in pais,[89] such as lack of negligence[90] or complainant's knowledge of the pendency of the action against him,[91] but not to modify or explain away the purport or terms of the judgment,[92] except where the judgment is attacked on the ground of fraud or mistake.[93]

c. Weight and Sufficiency

(1) In general

(2) Fraud, perjury, collusion, or other misconduct

(1) In General

In order to warrant equitable relief against a judgment, the complainant's case must be supported by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence, preponderating distinctly in his favor.

In order to justify a court of equity in setting aside or enjoining the enforcement of a judgment, the complainant's case, including alike the specific grounds on which he asks equitable relief, his excuse for not making his defense in the original action, and the showing that he himself is free from fault or negligence, must be supported by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence, preponderating distinctly in his favor,[94] and this rule has been

Docket entries

Joint complaint

Where complaint for new trial after default was joint, evidence must warrant granting of new trial as to both applicants.—Julien v. Lane, 157 N.E. 114 (second case), 95 Ind.App. 139.

95. Wis.—Kiel v. Scott & Williams, 202 N.W. 672, 186 Wis. 415.

Proof beyond reasonable doubt

"Sufficient evidence," within rule that action in equity to set aside default judgment entered because of mistake of officer of court in failing to record filing of answer must be based on sufficient and substantial evidence, is that amount of proof which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind beyond a reasonable doubt.—State ex rel. Sterling v. Shain, 129 S.W.2d 1048, 344 Mo. 891.

Authority of counsel

In proceeding to be relieved from judgment on ground that it was entered through defendant's mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect, the appearance of counsel for defendant in action wherein judgment was rendered was prima facie evidence of counsel's authority to appear for defendant.—Vail v. Department of Financial Institutions of Indiana, 17 N.E.2d 854, 106 Ind.App. 39.

collection of a judgment will not be granted if there is reasonable doubt of the existence of the facts on which the application is founded.[96] Where the rights of innocent third persons have become involved, the courts will be more exacting as to the quantum of proof required.[97]

Where, as discussed supra § 349, a meritorious defense to the cause of action is required to be shown, such defense must be fully set forth and clearly proved.[98] It is, however, sufficient to make a prima facie showing of the truth or existence of the defense.[99] The same certainty of proof is not required to establish an excuse for not making a defense at law that would be required to establish the existence of that defense;[1] but if the excuse is not proved it avails nothing to prove the defense.[2]

Lack of proper citation or notice of proceedings. Where it is sought to set aside a judgment for lack of proper citation or notice of the proceedings, the proof must be clear and convincing to entitle complainant to relief.[3] While the recital in a judgment that process was served is not conclusive,[4] the falsity of the recital must be shown by clear and convincing testimony and not merely by a preponderance of the evidence.[5] It has been held that the officer's return showing service may not be impeached by the testimony of one witness unless it is strongly corroborated by other evidence.[6]

(2) Fraud, Perjury, Collusion, or Other Misconduct

To warrant equitable relief against a judgment on the ground of fraud, collusion, or other misconduct, the proof in support of the allegations must be clear, distinct, and certain, and an especially high degree of proof is required in the case of a charge of perjury.

To entitle a complainant to relief in equity against a judgment on the ground of fraud, collusion, or other misconduct, the proof in support of the allegations must be clear, distinct, and certain,[7] and, according to some decisions, so cogent and

Nature of evidence required

In suit to vacate default judgment, corroborating evidence to impeach officer's return on citation showing service in original suit against plaintiff may consist of facts and circumstances showing that direct evidence is worthy of credit, but need not be direct and positive; corroborating evidence must come from other sources than witness whose testimony requires corroboration.—Panhandle Const. strong as to leave no reasonable doubt.[8] The evidence may be circumstantial,[9] but it must be unequivocal,[10] persuasive,[11] and something more than a suspicion.[12] It has been held that the judgment or decree will not be set aside on affidavits without the examination and cross-examination of witnesses, particularly where the affidavits are contradictory with respect to important issues.[13] The proof must be especially clear to induce the court to enjoin a judgment at the instance of strangers to the suit, although incidentally affected by the decision of the question involved.[14]

Perjury. It is established by all the authorities that a very high degree of proof is required, where relief is sought on the ground of perjury,[15] the cases generally holding that it must be established either by a conviction for the alleged perjury[16] or by documentary evidence.[17] A voluntary admission of perjury may be sufficient proof,[18] but the affidavit of a former witness impeaching his prior testimony may be insufficient where a charge of perjury could not well be predicated on it.[19] tradicted, may be sufficient to justify a decree in his favor, the interposition of an answer denying the charges of the bill requires the complainant to furnish corroborative evidence.

According to some authority, complainant's verified bill, if not contradicted, may be sufficient to justify a decree in his favor;[20] but it has also been held that the mere introduction of pleadings alleging facts warranting the setting aside of the judgment does not meet the requirement of proof,[21] and that the answer of the respondent, if denying positively the charges of the bill, will be so far evidence in his favor that the bill must be dismissed unless complainant sustains his case by corroborative evidence.[22] The answer of one defendant cannot be considered as evidence against another.[23]

§ 395. Trial or Hearing

An action to enjoin or vacate a judgment proceeds to trial in accordance with the rules and principles of equity, and the court may and should determine the issues involved, and, in its discretion, may grant or deny relief.

An action to enjoin or vacate a judgment proceeds to trial in accordance with the rules and principles of equity.[24] The proceeding is tried on the allegations of the new petition and the answer of the other party.[25] Generally, the court may and should determine the issues involved,[26] and, in its discretion, may grant or deny the requested relief.[27] The trial and hearing should be confined to the question of the judgment against which relief is sought,[28] and, ordinarily, the court should not enter on a trial of complainant's defense to the original action once he makes a prima facie showing of a meritorious defense;[29] but, if the proceeding is one in which the court is authorized to grant full relief to the parties in the one action, as discussed infra § 397, it may try and determine all questions involving the merits of the controversy.[30]

In determining whether the judgment from which relief is sought should be opened, the court may and should consider the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses, and give due effect to writings,[31] but, where the facts are undisputed and only questions of law are raised, the cause may be determined without the introduction of evidence or the intervention of a jury.[32] If there are disputed questions of fact involved, or the evidence appears to be conflicting or contradictory, it is in the discretion of the court to send the issues to a master or commissioner for determination,[33] or to a jury on interrogatories or under proper limitations as to the questions they are to consider in accordance with the rules discussed in the C.J.S. title Juries § 37, also 33 C.J. p 497 notes 31, 32; 35 C.J. p 173 notes 90–94, and in this case the court should make its decree in accordance with the facts as found by the jury,[34] unless manifest error has intervened during the course of the trial.[35] Issues should not be submitted to a jury where the evidence is insufficient to warrant such submission,[36] but directing a verdict for plaintiff[37] or defendant[38] is error when the evidence would have authorized a verdict for the other party. After enjoining a judgment and directing issues to be tried by a jury, the court may afterward, although no verdict has been certified, set aside the order and dissolve the injunction if it becomes satisfied that a new trial ought not to be had.[39]

§ 396. Dismissal

A bill for equitable relief against a judgment may be dismissed for failure to follow up the application, or to establish the allegations of the bill, or to comply with a statutory condition precedent to the issuance of an injunction; but a dismissal on the merits without a hearing is usually erroneous.

The bill or petition for equitable relief from a judgment may be dismissed for failure of complainant to appear and follow up his application,[40] for want of necessary parties,[41] for failure to establish the allegations of his bill[42] or to comply with a statutory condition precedent to the issuance of an injunction,[43] or where it appears from the pleadings and the proof that complainant is not entitled to the relief requested.[44] When an injunction is the sole object of the suit, and it is dissolved because of the want of equity in the petition, the case should be dismissed, if plaintiff declines to amend.[45]

On the other hand, where a bill sets forth a ground for equitable relief, ordinarily it is error to dismiss it without a hearing on the merits,[46] so that, where an injunction is dissolved on an answer containing an unqualified denial of the charges of the bill, the court should not dismiss the bill, if there is sufficient equity on its face to give the court jurisdiction, since complainant has a right after his injunction is dissolved to prove his bill.[47] In such a case it is error to dismiss the bill, although plaintiff makes no request for trial of the case on its merits.[48] It is error to dismiss a suit on the merits on trial of a rule for a preliminary injunction, since the only question presented is whether preliminary injunction should be granted.[49]

§ 397. Judgment or Decree, and Relief Awarded

a. In general
b. Relief awarded

a. In General

The form of the judgment or decree in an equitable proceeding to secure relief against a judgment must be justified by the frame of the bill.

The decree, as far as form is concerned, must be justified by the frame of the bill.[50] As far as relief is concerned, it should not go beyond the prayer of the petition, as discussed infra subdivision b of this section. A decree perpetuating an injunction is irregular where no injunction was granted because of failure to execute a bond.[51] It is error to render a final judgment on overruling defendant's motion to dissolve the injunction; he should be allowed to answer.[52] Where a new trial is necessary, it is error at once to set aside the judgment; the decree should await the result of the new trial, the judgment meanwhile standing as security for what may be found to be justly due.[53]

On voluntary dismissal of a bill, defendant is entitled to judgment by motion against plaintiff and the sureties on his injunction bond for the amount of the judgment and interest.[54]

b. Relief Awarded

On a properly framed bill for an injunction or other equitable relief against a judgment at law, the court has authority to grant the parties any and all relief to which they may appear entitled, and to impose conditions on the granting of such relief so as equitably to adjust the rights of the parties.

On a bill for an injunction or other equitable relief against a judgment at law, properly framed, the court has authority to grant the parties any and all relief to which they may appear to be entitled,[55] although the decree should not go beyond the prayer of the petition or bill,[56] and relief should be denied if it appears that complainant is not entitled thereto.[57] It is within the authority of a court of equity to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment at law, whenever sufficient equitable grounds are shown,[58] and ordinarily this is the proper method of granting relief; but in so doing the equity court does not undertake to interfere with the judgment itself, but lays its prohibition on the party otherwise entitled to enforce it.[59] So, if the judgment is attacked on the ground of fraud, want of notice, or other like cause, a decree restraining its enforcement and putting the parties in statu quo will generally be proper,[60] or the court may ingraft a trust on the property in the hands of the beneficiary of the fraud, and leave the judgment undisturbed.[61] Complainant may sometimes be entitled to the restitution of money already collected on the judgment,[62] or damages for the attempted or successful enforcement of the judgment by execution;[63] but restitution will not be ordered where the court, on consideration of all the evidence, feels that complainant is not entitled to such relief.[64]

In a proper case, the relief awarded may include the vacation or annulment of the judgment,[65]

Adjudication of legality of service

Where judgment on its face showed that legal service was had, and sheriff testified that he had served all parties, but did not return writ into court, having failed to sign it at all, the court was empowered at a subsequent term, in action to set aside such judgment and with all interested parties before it, to adjudge that legal service had originally been made, and to correct its records accordingly.—O'Quinn v. Impounding proceeds of judgment

Where it was apparent that there existed a financial obligation which was asserted as an equitable set-off to a judgment, but court in which relief was sought did not have jurisdiction to determine amount thereof, and delay in the proceeding to enable tribunal having jurisdiction to determine the liability would be impracticable, court could make such reasonable orders as might be necessary to avoid any inequity either by staying enforcement of judgment or by permitting collection of the judgment and impounding of the proceeds thereof.—Southern Surety Co. of New York v. but it has been held that a court of equity has no power in a strict sense of the term to set aside a judgment at law,[66] or peremptorily to order a new trial in the law action,[67] and that the usual and proper course is not to award a new trial in express terms, but to decree that, unless the party consents to have the judgment set aside and a new trial had, he shall be perpetually enjoined from collecting his judgment.[68] Under some practice, however, the court of equity may decree a new trial and reinstatement of the cause on the docket of the law court.[69] It has been held that, if a new trial is proper, the court should order an issue to be tried as other issues out of chancery are tried.[70] If the grounds of action or defense are purely legal, it has been held that the parties may be sent back to the law court for this purpose;[71] but, if they are suitable for the cognizance of equity, the chancellor will generally try the merits of the cause and close the controversy by a final decree.[72] Relief may be granted as to one of two or more complainants, and denied as to the rest.[73] Where it appears that any part of the judgment is justly due, the injunction may be so framed as to permit the collection of that part, while forbidding proceedings to enforce it as to the residue.[74] However, where there is no means of ascertaining how far it is correct or justly due, but only that it is unconscionable to some extent, it will be set aside in toto.[75] Relief will generally be granted to the extent of credits, or unjust amounts, admitted by the judgment creditor, although the bill makes out no case for equitable relief.[76] In setting aside a compromise judgment in favor of plaintiff and awarding him a larger recovery, defendant is entitled to credits for payments made under the vacated judgment.[77] In denying relief in a suit to enjoin enforcement of judgment, the court may not enjoin enforcement of a stipulation whereby securities were deposited for payment of judgment.[78]

Jurisdiction of court of law

If a court of equity orders a judgment at law to be set aside and a new trial awarded, a court of law has jurisdiction, after the lapse of the judgment term, to set aside the judgment in question, redocket the case, and subsequently to dismiss the action for want of prosecution.—Brown v. Ebann, 165 Ill.App. 218.

Complete relief in one proceeding

(1) Where an equitable suit is brought to set aside judgment, it is not contemplated that there shall be two trials, the one in which judgment is rendered setting aside former judgment, and other on trial of the merits, but every issue arising on the merits may and should be disposed of and only one judgment rendered.—Texas Employers' Ins. Injunction to extent of damages

In action by holder of judgment on past-due purchase-money note for land sold under bond for title, to require vendor to quitclaim land to purchaser for purposes of execution sale under judgment, wherein purchaser intervened and alleged existence of outstanding paramount title to land and vendor's insolvency and asked that damages for defective title "be awarded" and for general relief, purchaser was entitled to injunction against judgment to extent of damages.—Campbell v. decree against complainant the amount due on the judgment,[79] unless such relief is permitted by statute.[80]

Conditions on granting relief. He who seeks relief in equity against a judgment must do equity; and it is competent and proper for the court to impose such terms on him, or require him to submit to such orders or conditions as may be necessary to adjust the rights of all parties in entire accordance with equity.[81] So the court may require that the adverse party free from fault be compensated for expenses incurred in securing the judgment.[82] It is also competent for the parties to agree that a judgment may be set aside and enjoined, on condition that it shall not affect the right of plaintiff therein to prosecute a suit on his original cause of action, which formed the basis of the judgment.[83] An order for an injunction against a sale under execution does not become effectual until there has been a compliance with any conditions required by the order, such as the execution of a bond.[84]

§ 398. Review and Costs

General rules relating to appeal and error usually govern the review of decisions granting or denying equitable relief against judgments. Costs are ordinarily allowable to a successful complainant, but generally a judgment debtor who seeks relief on the ground that he has been prevented from making his defense at law is himself chargeable with the costs.

The decision of the court of chancery on a bill for an injunction or other equitable relief against a judgment will not be disturbed on appeal where the evidence was conflicting and the determination of the court was one within its discretion,[85] or for immaterial irregularities in its action,[86] or on objections to the judgment not presented to the equity court.[87] However, a decree for complainant will be reversed where the bill states no cause of action, or its want of equity is apparent on its face.[88] Assignments of error alleged to have been committed on the trial of the former case may not be considered.[89] It has been held that the evidence should be set forth in the record.[90]

Costs. Where a judgment debtor seeks relief in equity, on the ground of his having been prevented from making his defense at law, he is generally chargeable with the costs of the proceeding,[91] especially where he might have obtained the same relief on application to the court of law,[92] or where his injunction is dissolved,[93] but otherwise costs are allowable to a successful complainant.[94] The successful complainant, however, is not entitled to costs in the action in which the judgment, set aside at his suit, was rendered.[95] While it has been held that counsel fees are not properly allowed to plaintiff as damages, in a suit to annul a judgment and enjoin its execution,[96] it has also been held that such fees may be allowed as a beneficial part of the judgment, although not a matter of right, in an action to set aside a former judgment.[97]

§ 399. Operation and Effect of Injunction

An injunction against a judgment operates against the person, and, while it does not necessarily vacate the judgment, it does prevent the maintenance of any action on it.

An injunction against a judgment is strictly in personam to restrain respondent from using the judgment unconscientiously.[98] It does not necessarily negative the authority of the court rendering the judgment or the legality of its action; nor does it, by relation back, make the proceedings at law irregular,[99] or strip the judgment of its usual incidents and consequences, except with respect to proceedings to enforce it.[1] The injunction will prevent the maintenance of an action on the judgment,[2] either at law or in equity,[3] or even an action against the surety on a bond given in an effort to appeal from that judgment.[4] However, this does not prevent a proceeding to revive the judgment, on the death of a party, by scire facias, although the injunction will operate on the revived judgment as well as on the original.[5] Where a judgment contains a mandamus compelling payment, the dissolution of a subsequent injunction, enjoining payment of such judgment, has been held to restore the mandamus in the judgment and to render issuance of a second mandamus unnecessary.[6] An injunction effective only as to one of the parties to the judgment will not prevent its enforcement against the others.[7] When complainant seeks not only injunctive relief but also vacation of the judgment and a determination of his interest in the subject matter, a decision in his favor may be broad enough to constitute an adjudication of his interest.[8]

§ 400. Damages on Dissolution of Injunction

On the dissolution of an injunction, the statutes usually permit recovery of damages sustained by the interference; in an action on an injunction bond the extent to which the amount collectable on the judgment has been reduced by the injunction is a proper element of damage and costs, interest on the judgment, and counsel fees incurred in its dissolution may also be recovered in a proper case.

On the dissolution of an injunction, the statutes usually permit damages sustained by the interference to be assessed by the court against complainant and his sureties, the amount of which may be fixed at a certain percentage on the amount of the judgment.[9] It is not proper to include in the award of damages the amount of the judgment enjoined, or the whole of the original debt,[10] unless the whole judgment or debt was lost in consequence of the injunction.[11] Such statutes relate only to judgments for money; when the judgment is of a different character, the amount of damages becomes a question of fact which must be determined in an action on the bond.[12] Where the injunction did not extend to the whole judgment, but only stayed the collection of a part of it, damages should be awarded on that part only, when the injunction is dissolved.[13] Where an order of seizure against two joint vendees is enjoined by one of them, damages are allowed only on the amount due by the vendee who enjoined the proceedings.[14] Such damages are allowed only in cases in which the injunction is obtained at the instance of a party to the judgment enjoined,[15] unless the terms of the act are sufficiently broad to cover an injunction sued out by a stranger.[16]

Liability on injunction bond. In an action on an injunction bond given in a suit to restrain enforcement of a judgment, the extent to which the amount collectable on the judgment has been reduced in consequence of the injunction is a proper element of damage.[17] Damages may be allowed for tying up an excessive amount of the judgment.[18] The damages in such an action may also include costs[19] and interest on the judgment.[20] Counsel fees incurred in procuring the dissolution of the injunction and sustaining the judgment are usually recoverable in an action on the bond,[21] but fees for services rendered prior to the execution of the bond are not.[22] Although it has been held that attorneys' fees should not be included if the effect would be to make the damages greater than the statutory limit,[23] it has also been held that it is no objection to an allowance for such counsel fees that the amount of a judgment collected by execution from the judgment debtor exceeds the penalty of a bond given under an injunction against the judgment,[24] and that the right to an allowance is not affected by a statute providing that, on dissolution of the injunction, damages, in lieu of interest at a given per cent, shall be incorporated in the debt.[25] Liability on an injunction bond is not dependent on the form of procedure pursued to procure dissolution of the injunction.[26]

XII. COLLATERAL ATTACK

A. IN GENERAL

§ 401. General Rule

A judgment which is not void is not subject to collateral attack, but a void judgment may be attacked at any time by any person in any proceeding.

A judgment rendered by a court having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter, unless reversed or annulled in some proper proceeding, is not open to contradiction or impeachment, in respect of its validity, verity, or binding effect, by parties or privies, in any collateral action or proceeding,[27]

"Good faith, as well as sound public policy demands that erroneous and voidable judgments be set aside or modified in courts in which they are rendered."—Jackson City Bank & Trust Co. v. Fredrick, 260 N.W. 908, 910, 271 Mich. 538.

The distinction between erroneous and void judgments is based on wholesome public policy which facilitates final determination of disputed issues by decreeing that erroneous judgments may be attacked only directly, that is, by appeal or in manner prescribed by statute, and void judgments collaterally only where fact which rendered them void, namely, lack of jurisdiction in court to render them, appears on face of the record.—Commonwealth ex rel. Dummit v. Jefferson County, 189 S.W.2d 604, 300 Ky. 514.

Dormant judgment

A dormant judgment is not void, but only voidable, and an order of sale of execution on dormant judgment is merely voidable, and not subject to collateral attack.—McGlothlin v. Scott, Tex.Civ.App., 6 S.W.2d 129—34 C.J. p 513 note 48 [a].

Power of court to dispose of void judgment

A court of general jurisdiction may, by virtue of its inherent powers and without the aid of statutes, clear its records of a void judgment, no matter in what form or in what manner the application to do so is made.—John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Gooley, 83 P.2d 221, 196 Wash. 357, 118 A.L.R. 1484.

Estoppel

(1) Where circumstances are such as might otherwise afford sufficient grounds for successful collateral attack on judgment or decree, the conduct of the attacking party may be such as to estop him from availing himself of those grounds.—Askew v. Rountree, Tex.Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 117, error dismissed.

(2) A party is not estopped from assailing a void judgment, especially where the prima facie effect of such judgment is to confer on the party a false marital status.—Coast v. Coast, Tex.Civ.App., 135 S.W.2d 790.

(3) In attacking a decree based on an application to have land registered under the Torrens Title Act, and void on its face, petitioner is not required to excuse himself for negligence in not asserting his claim, the fact that he failed to answer the application, in the absence of other facts creating an estoppel, being immaterial.—Petition of Furness, 218 P. 61, 62 Cal.App. 753.

(4) One is not estopped from objecting to a determination made by an administrative body, including industrial commission, or by a court, that body or court had no jurisdiction to make.—Zimmermann v. Scandrett, D.C.Wis., 57 F.Supp. 799.

Laches or limitations no bar

Neither doctrine of laches nor statute of limitations applies to collateral attack on judgment void because of want of jurisdiction, since there is no time limiting collateral attack on void judgment.—Garrison v. Blanchard, 16 P.2d 273, 127 Cal. App. 616.

Statute making judgment absolute not applicable

The statute providing that, if petition for review is not filed within three years after final judgment is rendered, the judgment shall stand absolute applies only to special procedure on petition for review of a valid default judgment, as provided in statute concerning time when final judgment may be vacated, based on grounds set out in statute concerning what must be shown by petition to set aside judgment, and the statute concerning time when judgment shall stand absolute is not applicable to a judgment which is void for lack of jurisdiction to enter it.—Hankins v. Smarr, 137 S.W.2d 499, 345 Mo. 973.

Judgment after dismissal

Judgment of restitution, rendered after suit for possession of premises was dismissed, is subject to collateral attack in suit to set it aside.—Woods v. Wark, 269 N.W. 76, 235 Mich. 90.

In ejectment

The rule which permits a collateral attack on a void judgment whenever it is called to the attention of the court in any proceeding in which it is material to the issue presented is particularly apposite in an ejectment suit in which a party may show that any instrument relied on by his adversary as evidence of title is void.—Powell v. Turpin, 29 S.E.2d 26, 224 N.C. 67.

On appeal

Void decree could be first attacked on appeal.—Powers v. Sutherland, 160 S.E. 57, 157 Va. 336.

A test in determining whether judgment is void and subject to "collateral attack" is whether, if party attacking it had been a party thereto, a motion in arrest could have been sustained for defects appearing in face of pleadings, which could not have been aided by amendment or cured by verdict.—Deck v. Shields, 25 S.E.2d 514, 195 Ga. 697.

Judgment constituting collateral attack on judgment

Where first final decree of county court in probate proceeding was valid and not subject to collateral attack, orders made in connection with special administration proceedings and second final decree constituted a "collateral attack" on the first final decree, and were void on the face of the judgment roll and subject to collateral attack, and county court properly vacated all orders made in connection therewith.—Porter v. Hansen, 124 P.2d 391, 190 Okl. 429.

evidence is admissible to show the jurisdictional defect. In order to make a judgment subject to collateral attack it must have been rendered by a court without legal organization;[32] or, as discussed infra §§ 421–427, by a court without jurisdiction. Where an attack is collateral, the ordinary rules governing a direct attack on a judgment have no bearing in determining the contention,[33] and the only question before the court is whether the judgment or decree is void.[34]

§ 402. To What Judgments and Courts Rule Applies

In general the rule against collateral attack applies to all varieties of valid judgments in all kinds of judicial proceedings.

The rule against the collateral impeachment of judgments applies generally to all varieties of judgments, decrees, or orders made by courts of competent jurisdiction, in all kinds of judicial proceedings,[35] such as, among others, contempt proceedings,[36] summary proceedings,[37] tax proceedings,[38] garnishment,[39] judgments against political subdivisions of a state,[40] proceedings against partnerships or partners,[41] judgments in interpleader suits,[42] mortgage foreclosures,[43] or proceedings relating to

Extension of time for payment of guaranty

Trial court's orders granting bank deposit guarantors extension of time for payment of guaranty were held "judgments" which could not be collaterally attacked in action on guaranty, by bank's receiver, since there was issue for judicial determination in proceedings before trial court, which issue was whether guarantors were entitled to have time of payment of their guaranty extended and bank's receiver enjoined from selling collateral and bank's realty in meantime, which issue, in nature of things court could not determine without adjudging that guaranty was in force.—Hopkins v. Confirmation of sale
A judgment confirming partition sale and impounding money share of certain party was final and could not be collaterally attacked, and hence subsequent judgment quieting title in such party and restraining sale of his interest was not res judicata and was ineffective, since title had passed to purchaser at partition sale.—Drake v. Morrow, 299 N.W. 545, 140 Neb. 258.

County court
Under Civ.Code Pract. § 499, the county court is made a court of general jurisdiction for the partition of lands among joint owners, and as such its judgments in partition are immune from collateral attack on jurisdictional grounds as other judgments of courts of general jurisdiction, and are supported by the same presumptions as support the judgments of any other court of general jurisdiction.—Morgan v. Big Woods Lumber Co., 249 S.W. 329, 198 Ky. 88.

§ 403. —— By Confession or on Consent or Offer

The rule against collateral attack applies to judgments on confession or by consent.

The rule against collateral attack applies to judgments entered on confession,[66] either in open court or under warrants of attorney,[67] and also to such as are rendered by consent of parties, as the result of a compromise or settlement.[68] A stipulation for judgment by a trustee in his individual capacity has been held not to prevent his raising a question of error therein in his capacity as trustee.[69]

§ 404. —— By Default

A valid default judgment may not be attacked collaterally.

An agreed judgment fixing boundaries between certain lands was not subject to collateral attack in an action for alleged trespass.—Pierce v. Huff, 143 S.W.2d 183, 283 Ky. 753.

In condemnation proceedings

Where a consent judgment in condemnation suit recited that all parties interested in tract of land had been served with process and that they had agreed on a purchase price and that the United States should hold title to the land free of all claims and judgment was signed by attorney representing landowners, the judgment was valid and not subject to collateral attack by those owning interests in land who were over twenty-one years of age at time consent judgment was entered.—Watson v. U. S., D.C.N.C., 34 F.Supp. 777.

Consent decree, even though of interlocutory nature, within purview of pleadings and scope of issues is valid and binding on all parties consenting, and not open to collateral attack.—Curry v. Curry, 79 F.2d 172, 65 App.D.C. 47.

Injunction decree entered by consent is not subject to impeachment in application to conditions then existing.—U. S. v. Swift & Co., App.D.C., 52 S.Ct. 460, 286 U.S. 106, 76 L.Ed. 999.

Judgment coram non judice

Where a court adjudicates a matter not embraced in issues as made by pleadings, that part of judgment is coram non judice and void, and fact that judgment is by consent of all parties does not affect right of any of them to dispute its validity.—Texas Empire Pipe Line Co. v. Stewart, App., 35 S.W.2d 627, reversed on other grounds 55 S.W.2d 283, 331 Mo. 525—Owens v. McCleary, Mo.App., 273 S.W. 145.

A "judgment in retraxit" can be attacked on grounds of mental incapacity of plaintiff only by motion in the cause.—Steele v. Beaty, 2 S.E.2d 854, 215 N.C. 680—Gibson v. Gordon, 197 S.E. 135, 213 N.C. 666.

The void contractual provisions of an agreed judgment are subject to collateral attack and if judgment entered in state's suit to cancel oil leases of university lands was an agreed judgment and agreements evidenced thereby were unenforceable because of lack of authority of attorney general to bind state thereby, it was immaterial whether attack thereon was direct or collateral.—State v. Reagan County Purchasing Co., Tex.Civ.App., 186 S.W.2d 128, error refused.

peachment as any other form of judgment.[70] However, a default judgment, rendered by a court not having jurisdiction, like any other void judgment, is subject to collateral attack at any time when it is sought to be made the basis of a right, where the record itself in such case discloses the infirmity.[71]

§ 405. —— In Criminal Cases

As a general rule, the judgment of a court having jurisdiction of an offense and of the party charged with its commission is not open to collateral attack.

As a general rule, the judgment of a court having jurisdiction of an offense and of the party charged with its commission is not open to collateral attack.[72] Where, however, the judgment is void,[73]

Default judgment against partners

Where partnership, as maker, and firm members, as accommodation indorsers or sureties, were sued jointly on firm note, indorsed by members, and where some members filed pleas and answers, but none were filed by firm and other accommodation indorsers or sureties, and case was marked in default as to firm and latter sureties, and where verdict and judgment were rendered against members filing no pleas or answers, but no judgment was rendered against firm, judgment against such members was not void, and was not subject to collateral attack by one of defendants thereto, in petition to restrain sheriff and one claiming under purchaser of his land under such judgment from interfering with his possession thereof.—Burson v. Sentence on record of court controlling

As against a claim of variance between a commitment and the sentence as orally pronounced, the only sentence known to law is the sentence or judgment entered on records of court, and, if entry is inaccurate, there is remedy by motion to correct it, but judgment imports verity when collaterally assailed.—Hill v. U. S. ex rel. Wampler, Pa., 56 S.Ct. 760, 298 U.S. 460, 80 L.Ed. 1283—U. S. v. Rollnick, D.C.Pa., 33 F. Supp. 863.

Nolle prosequi

Record judgment docket in county recorder's court showing a nolle prosequi has been held not impeachable collaterally by parol evidence of defendant's indictment and judge's disposition of case therein on subsequent superior court trial for same offense.—State v. Norris, 173 S.E. 14, 206 N.C. 191.

Suspension of sentence and probation

Where owner of vessel took vessel from lien claimant and on complaint of lien claimant was convicted of grand theft, sentence for which was suspended and probation granted, owner's subsequent action for declaratory relief to determine whether such lien existed was not barred as a "collateral attack" on a judgment which had become final by reason of failure to appeal, since on suspension of sentence and granting of probation there could be no final judgment and an appeal was precluded.—Balestreiri v. Arques, 122 P.2d 277, 49 Cal.App.2d 664.

73. Ill.—People v. Buffo, 149 N.E. 271, 318 Ill. 380.

or rendered under an unconstitutional statute[74] or by a court wholly unauthorized by law,[75] it is a nullity, and as such may be collaterally assailed. A collateral attack may be made in a criminal case when its purpose is to punish a crime committed by means of the decree, judgment, or record collaterally attacked.[76]

§ 406. —— Judgments and Orders in Special Proceedings

Judgments and orders in special proceedings are within the rule prohibiting collateral attack.

The rule against collateral attack applies to orders and judgments made by the courts in special proceedings taken before them, although not in the nature of contested actions, or purely ex parte, provided the matter involves a judicial determination and carries the sanction of the court's authority.[77]

§ 407. —— Judgments of Particular Courts or Tribunals

a. In general
b. Probate courts
c. Coördinate courts
d. Boards and officers acting judicially

a. In General

The rule against collateral attack applies to valid judgments of courts of limited or inferior jurisdiction.

A domestic judgment rendered by a court of inferior jurisdiction is not open to collateral attack when the facts requisite to confer jurisdiction appear affirmatively on the face of the proceeding,[78] but if the facts do not so appear it may be attacked collaterally.[79] These rules apply to judgments rendered by justices of the peace, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Justices of the Peace § 115, also 35 C.J. p 684 note 33–p 687 note 67, or on appeal from,[80] or founded on,[81] judgments of inferior courts. By statute it is often provided that on the filing of a transcript of a judgment of a magistrate or justice of the peace, the judgment shall become a judgment of the higher court, and in such a case it is not open to collateral attack if valid on its face.[82]

Absence of provision for review. Some cases hold that, when no appeal or other form of review is provided for, the judgments of inferior courts may be assailed collaterally;[83] but there is also authority to the contrary.[84]

though their decrees have been held, in at least one jurisdiction, not conclusive as to the fact of jurisdiction.[86] The general rule applies, for example, to decrees of partition made by a probate court having jurisdiction for that purpose,[87] to an order of sale,[88] and to judgments determining inheritance taxes.[89] On the other hand, since the jurisdiction of probate courts is confined to particular matters, if it affirmatively appears that the jurisdictional facts did not exist, their decrees are subject to collateral attack.[90] The general principle that decrees of a probate court are not subject to collateral attack should not be stretched to the extent of furnishing a shield to one who, without actual or constructive notice to anyone in interest, fraudulently obtains a decree for the purpose of swindling an estate.[91]

c. Coördinate Courts

Decisions in courts of law may not be collaterally attacked in courts of equity, and vice versa.

A judgment at law may not be impeached collaterally in a court of equity,[92] nor can the validity of a decree rendered by a court of equity be impeached in a collateral action at law.[93] The effect of state judgments in federal courts and that of federal judgments in state courts are discussed infra §§ 900, 901.

d. Boards and Officers Acting Judicially

The rule against collateral attack applies to decisions of state and county or municipal boards and officers acting judicially.

The rule against collateral impeachment of judicial decisions applies to the determinations of state and county officers or boards of officers, who, although not constituting a court, are called on to act judicially in matters of administration,[94] such

Statutory and limited jurisdiction

Where jurisdiction to set aside exemptions to widow in the absence of administration is statutory and limited, the probate court's judgments and decrees in such a case are unimpeachable only where the court proceeds to final decree in accordance with provisions of statute.—Dake v. Inglis, 194 So. 673, 239 Ala. 241.

Proceedings in rem

Where petition was sufficient to invoke statutory jurisdiction of probate court and proceeding was in rem, no subsequent errors or irregularities are available on collateral attack.—Bedwell v. Dean, 132 So. 20, 222 Ala. 276.

Foreclosure

Probate court having acquired jurisdiction of decedent's estate, parties, and subject matter, its order authorizing executrix to mortgage specified realty for expense of alteration and repair could not be collaterally attacked by decedent's heirs intervening in action to foreclose mortgage, interveners' remedy being by appeal from order, or by motion or other proceeding in probate court to have order set aside.—Walker Bank & Trust Co. v. Steely, 84 P.2d 56, 54 Idaho 591.

In suit for specific performance of agreement to purchase realty, to which plaintiff derived title under residuary clause of will, it was not open to defendant to object that payments of unpaid balance of legacy therein to deceased legatee's heirs, as shown by executors' accounts, allowed without objection by probate court decrees not appealed from or sought to be opened, were not properly made in satisfaction of such legacy.—Mahoney v. Nollman, 35 N.E.2d 265, 309 Mass. 522.

Suit for attorney's fees

Order and judgment of probate court, in which estate was being probated, authorizing employment of attorneys to protect interest of estate could not be collaterally attacked in attorney's suit for fees for services rendered estate, on ground that probate court did not have authority prior to rendering of services to determine whether services were necessary.—Bearden v. McFarlane, Tex.Civ.App., 103 S.W.2d 392, error dismissed.

Limited jurisdiction

Probate courts are courts of limited jurisdiction and on application for writ of habeas corpus, regarding custody of a minor, refusing an offer of proof that minor was an illegitimate child, having a living mother, that the decree of the probate court appointing respondent guardian of minor's person was made without notice to the mother and without proceedings to remove the mother as guardian, as required by statute and that it was void for want of jurisdiction, was error, since the decree of the probate court was not conclusive and could be attacked collaterally.—Lewis v. Klingberg, supra.

as statutory boards of claims[95] or civil service commissions.[96] The rule has also been held applicable to the judicial acts of a referee in bankruptcy[97] and to the quasi-judicial acts of an executive officer of the government.[98] The rule does not apply, however, to attack on an administrative act[99] or to a determination which the administrative body had no jurisdiction to make.[1]

§ 408. What Constitutes Direct or Collateral Attack

a. Direct attack
b. Collateral attack

a. Direct Attack

A direct attack on a judgment is an attempt to avoid, correct, vacate, annul, review, cancel, or set aside the judgment in a proceeding or manner provided by law for such purpose.

The terms "direct" and "collateral," as used with reference to attacks on judgments, apply to the purpose of, or method employed in, the attacks and are not descriptive of the attack itself.[2] A direct attack on a judgment is an attempt to avoid or correct it in some manner provided by law,[3] in a

Secretary of interior

Where Indian left will disposing of his property and will was approved by secretary of interior who delivered restricted funds freed of restrictions to testamentary beneficiaries, the legal title, vested in the beneficiaries through administrative action of the secretary, was not open to collateral attack.—Hanson v. Hoffman, C.C.A.Okl., 113 F.2d 780.

Jurisdiction must appear

No presumption of regularity accompanies findings of tribunal of limited jurisdiction, such as workmen's compensation commissioner, in absence of evidence that such tribunal found jurisdictional facts, which cannot, as in case of courts of general jurisdiction, be inferred from mere exercise of jurisdiction.—Hoffman v. General principles of law and equity control

While distinctions in forms of pleading have been abolished and equitable and legal relief may be sought in same action, substantive principles of law and equity and general rules of procedure governing such actions, in so far as form and nature of relief are concerned, still exist, and question of whether action is direct proceeding to attack a judgment, or one merely collateral, must be determined by general principles of law and equity.—Dockery v. Central Arizona Light & Power Co., 45 P.2d 656, 45 Ariz. 434.

Nature of relief

One of the primary tests of whether or not a subsequent suit is a "direct attack" on a former judgment is nature of the relief sought.—Ram-proceeding instituted for that very purpose,[4] in the same action and in the same court;[5] and the fact that other incidental relief is also asked is immaterial.[6] Such is a motion or other proceeding to vacate, annul, cancel, or set aside the judgment;[7]

Bankruptcy proceeding

A bankrupt who included in schedule of liability a judgment obtained against him under alleged separation agreement and who was discharged in bankruptcy was not precluded from seeking cancellation of the judgment on theory that by so doing he sought to impeach the judgment collaterally, since inclusion of such judgment in schedule of liabilities is not an attack on such judgment, and, even if it is, such attack is made in a proceeding provided by law for such purpose.—In re Collis, 53 N.Y.S.2d 316, 184 Misc. 717.

Suit to set aside a judgment and to obtain new judgment

Where plaintiff had in a previous action recovered judgment on a note against defendant a "first amended original petition" filed under the same docket number as that assigned to the original action claiming that the original judgment was invalid because of a defect in citation, but that issuance thereof prevented running of limitation statute and that plaintiff was entitled to judgment on the note was the institution of a new suit and an attempted "direct attack" upon the former judgment.—Litton v. Waters, Tex.Civ. App., 161 S.W.2d 1095, error refused.

Defective direct attack

When a suit is brought with a view of directly attacking a judgment and the suit fails for some reason to meet all the requirements of a direct attack, it will be disposed of as a collateral attack.—"56" Petroleum Corporation of Texas v. Rodden, Tex.Civ.App., 98 S.W.2d 269.

A petition for rule to show cause why order admitting will to probate in common form in Colleton County should not be revoked was not a "collateral attack" on the order, but was a "direct attack," and therefore latent defect that testatrix' residence had been fixed in Charleston County by her commitment therefrom to the state hospital was properly asserted as a ground for the petition.—Reed v. Lemacks, 28 S.E.2d 441, 204 S.C. 26.

Attack regarded as motion in original cause

In creditors' suit by mortgagee bank, where bank attacked judgments foreclosing other mortgages executed by debtor in actions to which bank was not a party, and all parties to such foreclosure actions were parties to creditors' suit, attack on judgments could not be complained of as improper collateral attack, since judge in his discretion could deem the proceeding to be a motion in the original cause.—First Carolinas Joint Stock Land Bank of Columbia v. Parties

(1) Whether a proceeding to vacate or set aside a judgment is a direct or collateral attack depends on whether all the parties to be affected are before the court; if they are not, the attack is collateral.—Hartel v. Dishman, 145 S.W.2d 865, 135 Tex. 600—Pure Oil Co. v. Reece, 78 S.W.2d 932, 124 Tex. 476—Hannon v. Henson, Tex.Com.App., 15 S. W.2d 579—Williams v. (2) Original parties being parties to suit, nature of suit as direct attack on judgment is not altered because others were made parties.—Garza v. Kenedy, Tex.Com.App., 299 S.W. 231.

Seasonable motion

(1) A seasonable motion to vacate judgment is a direct attack on the judgment.—City of Los Angeles v. Glassell, 262 P. 1084, 203 Cal. 44.

(2) An application to vacate a judgment made to court that rendered it within thirty days after its entry is a "direct attack" on the judgment, but if made after expiration of thirty days it is a "collateral attack."—Barnard v. Michael, 63 N.E. 2d 858, 392 Ill. 130, appeal transferred, see 61 N.E.2d 578, 326 Ill.App. 69.

(3) A motion to vacate a judgment, made after the expiration of the period allowed by statute for a motion to set aside default judgment, is governed by the rules applicable to a collateral attack.—Wells Fargo & Co. v. City and County of San Francisco, 152 P.2d 625, 25 Cal. 2d 37—City of Salinas v. Luke Kow Lee, 18 P.2d 335, 217 Cal. 252—People v. Herod, 295 P. 383, 111 Cal.App. 246.

(4) After expiration of time for a direct appeal a motion to quash service of summons by publication must be considered as a collateral attack.—Butler v. McKey, C.C.A.Cal., 138 F.2d 373, certiorari denied 64 S.Ct. 636, 321 U.S. 780, 88 L.Ed. 1073.

(5) Where district court's power over its default judgment had ceased with end of term at which judgment was rendered, a proceeding on defendant's motion at a subsequent term to recall execution issued on judgment and to vacate judgment stood on same footing as a "collateral attack" on a judgment.—Ridley v. McCallum, 163 S.W.2d 833, 139 Tex. 540.

(6) Motion to vacate judgment, entered some twenty months prior thereto, against sureties on forthcoming bond given after levy of execution, and to cancel execution issued on the judgment, was a "collateral attack" and was improperly sustained in absence of fraud or collusion.—State ex rel. Fulton Bag & Cotton Mills v. Burnside, 15 So.2d 324, 153 Fla. 599.

Proceeding to set aside default decree

A proceeding by curator of minors' estate and trustee under trust deed, securing note for money loaned by curator on minor's behalf, to set aside default decree for cross complainant, claiming title to mortgaged land as purchaser at tax sale, in foreclosure suit, on grounds of fraud in obtaining decree, lack of notice to or service on minor cross defendants and valid defense to cross complaint, is not collateral attack on such decree.—Arkansas Trust Co. v. Sims, 133 S.W.2d 854, 198 Ark. 1143.

Dissolution or setting aside of attachment execution judgment against garnishee after discharge of original judgment on which attachment proceeding is based would not constitute "collateral attack" on attachment judgment or deprive original judgment creditor of "vested right" in attached property.—Sophia Wilkes Building & Loan Ass'n, to Use of Wiehe, v. Rudloff, 35 A.2d 278, 348 Pa. 477.

proceeding to review it in an appellate court, whether by appeal, error, or certiorari,[14] action to review,[15] bill of review,[16] writ of review,[17] or, in general, any statutory method for avoiding or correcting a judgment.[18]

Under some circumstances, an action to quiet title is a direct attack on the judgment;[19] under others it is considered a collateral attack;[20] but a suit to quiet title, which attacks proceedings subsequent to the judgment has been held to be neither a

Timely filing essential

Where no motion for a new trial was filed before expiration of a specified number of days from date of judgment, a motion made after such period to set aside judgment and for judgment non obstante veredicto was a collateral attack on judgment and court was unauthorized to set it aside unless it was void.—Bridgman v. By bringing error in suits on judgments based on judgment taken by default, plaintiff in error attacked default judgment directly, not collaterally.—Cheshire v. Palmer, Tex. Civ.App., 44 S.W.2d 438.

Appeal from ruling on motion

Plaintiff's appeal to circuit court from grant of defendants' motion to require plaintiff to satisfy common pleas court judgment for plaintiff held not collateral attack on common pleas court judgment.—McCarty v. Cook, 71 S.W.2d 1053, 189 Ark. 309.

Appeal from order allowing claims under statute providing that on levy of attachment, garnishment, or execution, not founded on claim for labor, any person who has performed work for defendant within ninety days prior to levy may file claim, not exceeding two hundred dollars, constituted a "direct attack," on the order.—Driver v. International Air Race Ass'n of America, 129 P.2d 771, 54 Cal.App.2d 614.

Certiorari to review contempt conviction

A certiorari proceeding to review relator's conviction for contempt in violating temporary injunction was a "collateral attack" on injunction which would fail unless injunction was shown to be a nullity so that, under statute prohibiting issuance of injunction in suit involving labor dispute except after "findings of fact," where temporary injunction was issued without "findings of fact" whether court erred in determining that suit involved no labor dispute could not be determined on certiorari to review conviction of contempt for violation of injunction.—Reid v. Bill of review in equity as collateral attack see Equity § 635.

Filing in same court or action essential

(1) A bill of review not filed in the same court where the judgment or order under attack was made is a collateral attack.—Whitehurst v. Estes, Tex.Civ.App., 185 S.W.2d 154, error refused—Cheney v. Norton, Tex.Civ.App., 181 S.W.2d 835, error refused.

(2) Statutory bill of review is not available to interested person to nullify orders of probate court, such as appointing a guardian authorizing sale of land or approving report of such sale, so as to create an estoppel against purchasers in other actions against them in the district court to try title to land, where the land has actually been conveyed to persons having no interest in such orders save as they constitute links in their chain of title, since such orders are voidable only on a direct attack and under the circumstances the bill of review is not a direct attack.—Johnson v. Declaratory judgment action to quiet title

Where adopted son, as only heir at law of deceased to whom land was allegedly conveyed for life with remainder to his heirs, brought declaratory judgment action to have title to such land quieted in him against parties who were adjudged owners in fee simple thereof in action to settle estate of deceased because of conveyance to them by deceased, and adopted son was made party to such action, and such judgment was not void, declaratory judgment action constituted a "collateral attack" on prior judgment and would not lie.—Eversole v. Smith, 178 S.W. 2d 970, 297 Ky. 53.

direct nor a collateral attack on the judgment.[21]

Where the element of fraud or mistake is involved in the issue it is a general rule that the attack is direct.[22]

Where a judgment is pleaded as a defense to an action, plaintiff has a right to challenge and have the court pass on the validity of the judgment and the proceedings under which it was obtained.[23]

b. Collateral Attack

A collateral attack is an attempt to avoid, defeat, or evade a judgment, or to deny its force and effect, in some incidental proceeding not provided by law for the express purpose of attacking it.

A collateral attack is an attempt to impeach the judgment by matters dehors the record,[24] before a court other than the one in which it was rendered,[25] in an action other than that in which it was rendered;[26] an attempt to avoid, defeat, or

Impeachment for fraud

(1) Under a bill to quiet title, any attempted impeachment of probate decree allotting homestead exemption to widow, on ground that it was infected with fraud, is a mere collateral attack and unavailable.—Cogburn v. Callier, 104 So. 328, 213 Ala. 38.

(2) Where, in bill to quiet title, respondents set up a homestead exemption decree as their muniment of title, and thereupon complainants amended their original bill, and alleged fraud in procurement of such decree, and prayed that it be set aside, such amendment constituted a direct attack on decree, giving court jurisdiction, and placing burden of proof on complainants, and final decree thereon is conclusive.—Cogburn v. Callier, 104 So. 330, 213 Ala. 46—Cogburn v. Callier, 104 So. 328, 213 Ala. 38.

(3) Complainants' averments of fraud in procuring homestead allotment decree, which were made in answer to respondents' cross bill, and not in their bill of complaint, constituted but a collateral attack on such decree, and is not available for its impeachment.—Cogburn v. Callier, 104 So. 330, 213 Ala. 46.

Application to vacate Enoch Arden decree

An application of second husband to vacate decree procured by his present wife against her former husband in a so-called Enoch Arden proceeding for dissolution of marriage on ground of former husband's absence for five years on charge that wife procured decree through fraud was a "direct attack" and not a "collateral attack" on the decree, and therefore could be maintained, but application would be denied where it appeared that former husband was living and had received no notice of motion, since former husband was a "party" to proceedings within contemplation of the law.—Application of Neiman, 28 N.Y.S.2d 109, 176 Misc. 552.

Action to cancel deed

In action to cancel for fraud a deed to property registered under Torrens Law, evidence that defendant had purchased land and paid consideration held not collateral attack on judgment.—Whitham v. Whitham, 15 P.3d 1105, 127 Cal.App. 481.

Any attack in interpleader action on an order made in a prior action, was a "collateral attack" on the order and was governed by the rules pertaining to such attack.—Driver v. International Air Race Ass'n of America, 129 P.2d 771, 54 Cal.App.2d 614.

In receivership suit, attack made on orders entered in prior receivership suit in same court involving same corporations was a collateral attack, requiring proof of want of jurisdiction, where objections went only to particular judge sitting at hearing and to particular receivers, and consolidation of the two pending receivership suits in same court did not render attack in subsequent suit, on orders entered in prior suit, direct attack, which would reach mere errors.—Johnson v. Manhattan Ry. Co., N.Y., 53 S.Ct. 721, 289 U.S. 479, 77 L.Ed. 1331.

Consolidated actions which were in effect one action attempting to set aside former judgment in order that plaintiff might attack a judgment rendered in another and distinct action constituted a "collateral attack" on judgment in former action, and hence could be maintained only if former judgment was void on its face.—Hershey v. Banta, 99 P.2d 81, 55 Ariz. 93, followed in Hershey v. Republic Life Ins. Co., 99 P.2d 85, 55 Ariz. 104.

Escheat proceedings

A decree determining that named nationals and residents of Germany were the only heirs of deceased was conclusive, and could not be collaterally attacked in escheat proceedings subsequently brought by the state.—In re Giebler's Estate, Mont., 162 P.2d 368.

Defense as collateral attack

(1) In mortgage foreclosure action, affirmative defense that mortgagee agreed to transfer exclusive patent license to mortgagor, and that, by judgment in a prior action, it was adjudged that mortgagor had acquired exclusive license, and averring that mortgagor had since ascertained existence of prior transfers of licenses to third persons, was held properly stricken out as collateral attack on a final judgment.—Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Harriscolor Films, 31 P.2d 189, 220 Cal. 383.

(2) In suit for fees which sheriff, pursuant to judgments, collected for attorney whom court appointed for nonresidents in tax suits, plea that attorney was not licensed attorney was held objectionable as collateral attack on judgments.—Turner v. Willacy County, Tex.Com.App., 58 S.W. 2d 12.

(3) Defense that trustee for bondholders bid in property in name of dummy at owner's direction, and that no cash was received, was held not objectionable as collateral attack on foreclosure record showing cash sale, in action by owner of bonds to recover from trustee proceeds of foreclosure sale.—White v. Central Trust Co. of Illinois, 259 Ill.App. 68.

Cross complaint

Where defendant filed a cross complaint to foreclose his lien, claim by plaintiff that defendant's lien was obtained by subrogation in action to cancel deed for fraud, which court had no right to do, was a collateral attack on a judgment of court of competent jurisdiction, which could not be set up.—Rooker v. Leary, 149 N.E. 358, 84 Ind.App. 77.

(2) In suit to quiet title, where complaint did not mention foreclosure decree through which defendant deraigned title and defendant counterclaimed to quiet title without referring to decree, answer to counterclaim alleging that decree was entered in foreclosure proceeding wherein service was by publication without any sufficient affidavit of jurisdictional facts authorizing such service constituted collateral attack on foreclosure decree and did not authorize introduction of evidence dehors record, such as the affidavit, to show invalidity of decree.—Intermill v. Nash, 75 P.2d 157, 94 Utah 271.

(3) Amended petition in trespass to try title, alleging that property had been sold under judgment on trust deed which had been executed to secure judgment against property, that property was homestead of judgment debtor and not subject to debt and lien asserted, and that property was sold for inadequate consideration, was held not subject to special exception as collateral attack on judgment.—Milliken v. Coker, Civ. App., 90 S.W.2d 902, modified on other grounds 115 S.W.2d 620, 132 Tex. 23.

(4) In trespass to try title to realty which had been purchased with money which heir had enabled purchaser to borrow under agreement with heir that purchaser would purchase realty for heir's benefit and then convey realty to the heir, testimony showing lack of consideration received by heir for sale of realty was not inadmissible on ground that it amounted to a collateral attack on orders of probate court confirming sale to purchaser where purchaser held realty in trust for benefit of the heir and evidence showing trust relation did not amount to collateral attack on order of probate court.—Berry v. Chadwick, Tex.Civ.App., 137 S.W.2d 859, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Garnishment

(1) The validity of a judgment cannot be questioned in garnishment proceedings based thereon.—Aach v. Pippart, Mo.App., 261 S.W. 929—34 C.J. p 522 note 57 [b].

(2) In garnishment proceedings against bank having deposits for benefit of several classes of claims against mutual benefit society, mere showing of nature of claim on which judgment against society was rendered was held not collateral attack on judgment.—Spain v. First State Bank of Stamford, Tex.Civ.App., 39 S.W.2d 184, error dismissed.

ing is for the purpose of construing the judgment,[34] or determining its scope and effect[35] or its nature,[36] there is no infraction of the rule against collateral attack.

The introduction of evidence to show the actual owner of a judgment has been held not a collateral attack on the judgment.[37] Inquiry into the circumstances under which a judgment was obtained is not necessarily a collateral attack.[38]

§ 409. —— Proceedings to Enforce Judgment

A proceeding to enforce a judgment is collateral to the judgment, and therefore no inquiry into its regularity or validity can be permitted in such a proceeding.

A proceeding to enforce a judgment is collateral to the judgment, and therefore no inquiry into its regularity or validity can be permitted in such a proceeding, whether it is a direct action on the judgment[39] or on a note given in satisfaction of the judgment,[40] or a proceeding to revive the judgment,[41] or proceedings supplementary to execution,[42] or a bill in equity in aid of execution or to enforce the lien of the judgment,[43] or a rule to show cause why a writ of possession should not issue,[44] or an action or suit to set aside a conveyance and subject property to satisfaction of a judgment.[45] The rule also applies whether the proceeding is for an injunction to protect rights acquired by a judgment,[46] or presentation of the

Default judgment
Where default judgment had been rendered determining that plaintiff was entitled to peaceable and undisturbed possession of land which was in defendant's possession, on rule to show cause why plaintiff's assignee should not be put into possession of land, refusal to allow defendant to seek to nullify the default judgment was not error where defendant failed to set up in her answer any legal ground for annulling the judgment rendered against her more than five years before the rule was issued.—Bodcaw Lumber Co. of Louisiana v. judgment to the probate court for classification as a demand against the judgment debtor's estate,[47] or an action of ejectment,[48] or a proceeding by mandamus to compel the payment of a judgment[49] or award,[50] or to compel the levy and collection of a tax to provide funds for the payment of the judgment, the debtor being a municipal corporation,[51] or an action to enjoin the collection of a tax levied to pay a judgment against a municipal corporation.[52] In a proceeding of this kind, it may be shown that the judgment is absolutely void for want of jurisdiction.[53] In a suit on a judgment, a contention that the judgment was not final is not a collateral attack.[54] In garnishment proceedings on a judgment, a motion to dismiss which raises the point that on the face of the proceeding there is no judgment in existence and that it is conclusively presumed to have been paid is not a collateral attack on the judgment.[55]

Reversal of judgment. A final judgment reversing a judgment can not be collaterally attacked by mandamus proceedings to compel the clerk of court to issue execution on the reversed judgment.[56]

§ 410. —— Proceedings to Prevent Enforcement of Judgment

Proceedings to prevent the enforcement of a judgment are direct or collateral attacks depending on the circumstances of the case and the nature of the proceeding.

It has been broadly stated that a proceeding for equitable relief from the effect of a judgment, order, or decree is not a collateral attack.[57] According to some decisions, and under some circumstances, a suit in equity to enjoin or set aside a judgment constitutes a direct attack on it;[58] according to others, or under other circumstances, such a pro-

Where judgment not assailed

In mandamus proceedings to compel city to pay balance on condemnation judgment awards after relator and city had entered into a binding stipulation requiring relator to remove relator's buildings from condemned land at relator's expense, admitting the stipulation in evidence did not constitute a collateral attack on condemnation judgment, and holding relator to performance of its undertaking to remove buildings did not modify or contradict judgment either as to its amount or finality.—People ex rel. Want of service of process

(1) Where property after foreclosure of trust deed was sold to purchaser who refused to comply with his bid, answer by purchaser in proceeding by commissioner to compel purchaser to comply with bid that decree of foreclosure was void on ground that minor defendants had never been served or represented constituted a permissible direct attack and not a collateral attack, notwithstanding it was not made until after expiration of the term at which the decree was entered, where chancellor had specifically retained control of proceedings.—Fisher v. Wilkerson, 139 S.W.2d 689, 199 Ark. 31.

(2) In suit by mortgagee's assignee to quiet title under sheriff's deed procured on foreclosure wherein mortgagor filed cross complaint attacking default foreclosure decree as void on ground that no process had been served on mortgagor and wife, cross complaint and answer constituted a "direct attack" on the foreclosure decree.—John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Gooley, 83 P.2d 221, 196 Wash. 357, 118 A.L.R. 1484.

Satisfaction of judgment

A suit to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment on the ground that it has been satisfied has been held not to be a collateral attack.—Smith v. Morrill, 55 P. 824, 12 Colo.App. 233.

Guardian's suit to enjoin enforcement of alimony judgment against insane ward for fraud in procuring it was held not barred as collateral attack on judgment granting defendant divorce.—Crow v. Crow-Humphrey, 73 S.W.2d 807, 335 Mo. 636.

Injunction to restrain trespass on land condemned

Where a county court condemned land for highway purposes and disallowed landowners' claims for compensation because of insufficient funds from which to pay claims, a subsequent injunction issued by a chancery court of county wherein land was located restraining persons from trespassing upon land was not a collateral attack on county court's judgment.—Arkansas State Highway Commission v. Hammock, 148 S.W.2d 324, 201 Ark. 927.

In Texas

(1) Generally an action to enjoin enforcement of a judgment, rendered by the court in which the action is brought, is considered a direct attack, not a collateral attack, on the judgment.—Switzer v. Smith, Com. App., 300 S.W. 31, 68 A.L.R. 377—Willbanks v. Montgomery, Civ.App., 189 S.W.2d 337—Bragdon v. Wright, Civ.App., 142 S.W.2d 703, error dismissed—Settles v. (2) If brought in a court other than the one in which the judgment was rendered it is collateral.—Stewart v. Adams, Civ.App., 171 S.W.2d 180—Oetting v. Mineral Wells Crushed Stone Co., Civ.App., 262 S. W. 93.

(3) Even though injunction suit to restrain the enforcement of a judgment constituted a collateral attack, such suit was proper where the judgment was void.—Lewis v. Terrell, Civ.App., 154 S.W.2d 151, error refused.

(4) A suit to enjoin judgment creditors and sheriff from selling realty under execution to satisfy judgment, which was rendered against plaintiff by court in which suit was brought and grew out of same case under same docket number, constituted direct attack, rather than collateral attack, on judgment. —Willbanks v. Montgomery, Civ. App., 189 S.W.2d 337.

(5) Judgment rendered by court without jurisdiction may be set aside on direct attack by suit instituted for such purpose.—Ezell v. Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n, Civ.App., 5 S.W.2d 594, reversed on other grounds Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Ezell, Com.App., 14 S.W.2d 1018, rehearing denied 16 S.W.2d 523.

(6) Suit to set aside judgment, brought by one who was served and defaulted, on ground that all necessary parties were not joined, involves collateral attack on voidable judgment.—State Mortg. Corporation v. Garden, Civ.App., 11 S.W.2d 212.

(7) Judgment in judgment debtor's proceeding to set aside judgment could not be collaterally attacked in suit to enjoin execution sale under judgment.—Simmons v. Sikes, Civ. App., 56 S.W.2d 193, error dismissed.

As against innocent purchasers

A suit to set aside judgment foreclosing vendor's liens in which there was an admission that the owners and holders of interests in the land were innocent purchasers for value without notice except the notice reflected by the record in the action, the judgment of which was sought to be set aside, constituted a collateral attack on the judgment, and could be maintained only if the judgment was void on its face or circumstances surrounding its entry would cause a prudent person to make inquiry which, if pursued with reasonable diligence, would reveal the vice of the judgment.—Williams v. Tooke, Tex.Civ.App., 116 S.W.2d 1114, error dismissed.

Extraordinary equitable remedy

A collateral attack on a judgment of a court having jurisdiction of parties and subject matter is an "extraordinary equitable remedy" and is closely circumscribed.—In re Gray's Will, 8 N.Y.S.2d 850, 169 Misc. 985.

Motion to set aside

In suit in equity to establish and enforce a lien, a tenant's motion to set aside order for writ of possession to put landlord in possession of tenant's house, purchased by landlord under decree for sale thereof to enforce landlord's statutory lien, was collateral attack on such decree.—Chandler v. Price, 15 So.2d 462, 244 Ala. 667.

34 C.J. p 524 note 76.

In some jurisdictions a distinction is made between a suit to enjoin, and a suit to set aside, a judgment. If an injunction only is sought, the suit has been held to be a collateral attack,[63] but if plaintiff seeks also to have the judgment set aside and the case retried on the merits it has been held to be a direct attack.[64] It has also been held that a suit to prevent an inequitable advantage being taken of a judgment, by adjudging the guilty beneficiary or his successor with notice a trustee for the defrauded party, is a direct attack,[65] but conceding that the attack is collateral it is no objection to the maintenance of a suit for that purpose that it involves a collateral impeachment of the judgment, provided the demand for relief is based on want of jurisdiction, fraud, or some other distinctive ground of equitable interference, although it is not permissible in such an action to review mere errors or overthrow the judgment for mere irregularities.[66] An injunction to restrain enforcement of an administrative order of a court has been held not objectionable as a collateral attack on a judgment.[67]

An application for a writ of prohibition to forbid the court to enforce its judgment is generally regarded as a collateral attack.[68]

A cross complaint[69] or cross bill[70] seeking affirmative relief against a judgment is a direct, not a collateral, attack on the judgment. Where injunction to stay enforcement of a judgment must be in the court rendering the judgment, a cross action in a suit to foreclose a judgment lien brought in another court is a collateral attack.[71]

Motion to vacate. Where the action may properly be regarded as a motion to vacate the judgment it has been held not to be a collateral attack on the judgment.[72]

A motion to annul a judgment of conviction in a criminal case is a collateral attack.[73]

A writ of mandamus, as far as it seeks to avoid the effect of a judgment or order of a court, is a collateral attack.[74]

§ 411. —— Separate Action against Party or Officer

The validity or correctness of a judgment may not be impeached in a subsequent action by the unsuccessful party against the successful party involving the same issues or seeking to avoid the effects of the judgment.

The validity or correctness of a judgment cannot be impeached in a subsequent action brought by the unsuccessful party against the successful party, involving the same issues,[75] or in an action to recover back the money paid under the judgment,[76] or for damages in obtaining a judgment because of no proper service,[77] or for fraud and conspiracy in obtaining the judgment.[78] Also a judgment may not

Stakeholder

Corporation having paid to husband dividends declared on stock registered in the name of wife was sufficiently connected with controversy as to ownership of stock and right to dividends thereon as to be bound by the same rule relative to collateral attack on judgment determining ownership of stock as that applicable to parties to action in which such judgment was entered, and hence would have no greater right than husband collaterally to attack judgment in action between husband and wife on ground that it was based on wife's perjured testimony.—Perkins v. In partition proceedings

(1) Following the general rules, a decree or judgment for partition is not subject to collateral attack as being erroneous by any of the parties to it.—State v. Rogers, 31 N. E. 199, 131 Ind. 458—47 C.J. p 438 note 91.

(2) However, where judgment was null as to one defendant in partition suit, any of other parties to suit could avail themselves of such nullity, although only interest such defendant had in property was through estate of mother which was still under executorship.—Kelly v. Kelleher, 171 So. 569, 186 La. 51.

raised at any time between the parties, even in a collateral proceeding.[84] The term "parties," in the sense of those concluded by a judgment, includes all those who had the right to control or defend the proceedings and appeal,[85] while "privies" are those who succeeded to the rights or property of parties to the judgment.[86] If the judgment is void on its face the right of parties or their privies to attack it collaterally does not depend on any showing of prejudice to their interests.[87]

§ 414. —— Third Persons in General

A stranger to the record may impeach a judgment in a collateral proceeding where he has rights, claims, or interests which would be prejudiced or adversely affected by its enforcement, and which accrued prior to its rendition.

A stranger to the record, who was not a party to the action in which the judgment was rendered or in privity with a party is not prohibited from impeaching the validity of the judgment in a collateral proceeding;[88] but in order to do so he must show that he has rights, claims, or interests which would be prejudiced or injuriously affected by the enforcement of the judgment,[89] and which accrued

Stansbury, 126 P.2d 251, 190 Okl. 554.

Insurer

Party issuing motor vehicle liability policy pursuant to statute is a party privy to judgment recovered against insured, and may only attack judgment for fraud by direct proceeding to vacate the judgment and not collaterally in suit by party recovering the judgment to recover the amount from the insurer.—Bosse v. Wolverine Ins. Co., 190 A. 715, 88 N.H. 440.

Policy holders of mutual insurance company

A decree or order of circuit court liquidating insolvent mutual insurance corporation, formed under specified statutes, under direction of insurance commissioner and forming basis of obligation of policy holders, was final and binding on policy holders and not subject to collateral attack.—In re Whitman, 201 N.W. 812, 186 Wis. 434.

Stockholder

Default judgment recovered by bank against corporation could not be collaterally attacked in subsequent suit by bankruptcy trustee of sole stockholder against certain claimants, mortgagees, and pledgees, on theory that debt on which judgment was based was that of sole stockholder and not of corporation.—Salmon v. Foreign judgment

Where, in partition suit in one state, complainant was denied right to litigate her claim of equitable ownership of interest in the land, and brought action in another state against one of parties to partition suit, claiming his share of proceeds, such suit was held not a collateral attack on decree of first court distributing proceeds of sale.—Horst v. Where right to intervention lost

Judgment, in action for accounting determining owners of, and their respective interests in, corporation's entire production, was held conclusive on claimants not parties thereto, absent fraud; hence orders purporting to modify judgment were void.—Selby v. Allen, 6 P.2d 285, 119 Cal.App. 257.

§ 415. —— Creditors

A creditor whose rights or claims would be injuriously affected by enforcement of a judgment against his debtor may impeach it for fraud in a proper case..

It is always open to creditors, whose rights or claims would be injuriously affected by the enforcement of a judgment against their debtor, to impeach its validity on the ground that it is fraudulent as against them,[97] but as the law favors the stability and finality of judgments, a stranger who seeks in a collateral action to impeach a judgment as a fraud on his rights must show the fraud by clear and satisfactory proof.[98] The fraud which will justify such an attack must be fraud designed to injure the attacking creditor, or at least such as directly affects his interests; fraud practiced on the debtor is not sufficient.[99] The privilege can be claimed only by a party having rights which had vested or accrued at the time the judgment was rendered, and which would be impaired or prejudiced if it was allowed full effect as against them.[1] Subsequent creditors generally cannot assail a prior judgment,[2] but the rule is otherwise where such an attack is permitted by statute.[3] An attack is to be regarded as collateral where the petitioner, as a stranger to the record, merely claims to have become incidentally interested in the judgment after a termination of the case.[4] Where the objecting party should have intervened and objected in the proceeding in which the order or decree was rendered he is thereafter barred from collaterally attacking it.[5]

B. GROUNDS

§ 416. Invalidity of Judgment Generally

A judgment or decree has been held not subject to collateral attack merely because it is invalid, as where it is based on an unconstitutional statute.

A judgment or decree has been held not subject to collateral attack merely because it is invalid,[6] as where it is based on an unconstitutional statute.[7] However, it has been held that inquiry may be made as to the validity of a warrant of attorney to enter a judgment by confession.[8]

As a general rule a judgment may be collaterally attacked only where it is void because of fraud in obtaining it, as discussed infra § 434, or because of lack of jurisdiction on the part of the court in rendering the judgment, infra §§ 421–427.

§ 417. —— Insufficient or Illegal Cause of Action

A judgment is not subject to collateral attack because of illegality or insufficiency in the cause of action on which it is based.

A judgment cannot be impeached collaterally because of any illegality or insufficiency in the cause of action on which it is founded, this not being a jurisdictional defect or sufficient to render the judgment void.[9] Under this rule it is not permissible to collaterally attack the judgment on the ground that the claim in suit had been paid or satisfied,[10] or was not supported by a consideration,[11] or was not justly due,[12] or was not yet due at the time the action was brought,[13] or on the grounds that the creditor, proceeding by attachment, had no such demand as would entitle him to use that process,[14] or on the ground that the cause of action was based on a gambling transaction,[15] or was in violation of the Sunday laws,[16] or was otherwise tainted with illegality.[17]

§ 418. —— Legal Disability of Parties

A judgment against a party under a legal disability is generally not open to collateral attack.

A judgment against a party who is under a legal disability is generally not subject to a collateral attack for that reason,[18] as where the judgment is against a person under the disability of coverture, discussed in Husband and Wife § 456, infancy, discussed in Infants § 122 a, or of insanity, discussed in Insane Persons § 151 d.

§ 419. —— Death of Party before Judgment

A judgment rendered for or against a party after his death generally is not subject to a collateral attack, except where the action was commenced after the party had died.

Ordinarily, where jurisdiction of the parties to an action has duly attached, the fact that one of them died before the rendition of the judgment for or against him does not make the judgment absolutely void, as discussed supra § 29, and therefore it is not open to impeachment in a collateral proceeding.[19] According to some decisions, however, a judgment rendered under such circumstances is absolutely void, as discussed supra § 29, and therefore is subject to collateral attack.[20] Even where the party was dead before the institution of the suit, it has been held that this does not make the judgment a mere nullity, within the meaning of the rule against collateral impeachment,[21] but it generally has been held that a judgment rendered in an action begun after the death of defendant therein is null and void and may be attacked collaterally.[22]

§ 420. —— Disqualification of Judge

A judgment rendered by a disqualified judge is subject to collateral attack only where it is regarded as void.

Where a judgment rendered by one who is disqualified to sit as judge in the case is regarded as void, in accordance with the principles discussed supra § 17, it may be collaterally attacked.[23] Where, however, such judgments are held to be merely voidable, they are not liable to collateral attack.[24] The fact, however, that the regular judge has improperly disqualified himself is not ground for collaterally attacking a judgment entered by a judge ad litem,[25] particularly where the appointment of the latter judge was agreed to by counsel.[26]

§ 421. Jurisdictional Defects.

A judgment or decree which is void for want of jurisdiction is open to contradiction or impeachment in a collateral, as well as a direct, proceeding. In order to be collaterally attacked the want of jurisdiction must affirmatively appear on the face of the record, and the facts showing the want of jurisdiction must be alleged.

A judgment or decree void for want of jurisdiction is open to contradiction or impeachment in a collateral proceeding,[27] or it may be attacked directly.[28] Moreover, in the absence of fraud, a judgment may be collaterally attacked only where

What record includes

(1) The term "record" or "record proper" or "complete record," as variously used within this rule, generally includes the pleading, process, verdict and judgment.

by extrinsic evidence,[32] although there are decisions to the contrary,[33] and extrinsic evidence has been held admissible to contradict the record in this respect, as considered infra § 426 b. Even though a judgment is valid on its face, if the parties admit facts which show that it is void, or if such facts are established without objection, the case is similar to one wherein the judgment is void on its face and is subject to collateral attack.[34]

A judgment is subject to collateral attack where the want of jurisdiction is with respect to the subject matter,[35] or where, although the court has ju-

Clear and strong evidence

Where want of jurisdiction does not appear on face of record, it may be shown by evidence dehors the record, provided the evidence is clear and strong and the rights of third persons have not intervened.—Espadron v. Davis, 43 N.E.2d 962, 380 Ill. 199.

Extraneous matter may be examined for the purpose of determining whether the court had jurisdiction of the person or of the subject matter of the suit, and, where this is found, other questions affecting the validity of the judgment must be determined from the judgment record. —State v. If the party in favor of whom the judgment runs admits facts showing its invalidity, or, without objection on his part, evidence is admitted which clearly shows the existence of such facts, it is court's duty to declare the judgment void on collateral attack.—Marlenee v. Brown, 134 P.2d 770, 21 Cal.2d 668—San Francisco Unified School Dist. v. City and County of San Francisco, 128 P.2d 696, 54 Cal.App.2d 105.

Lack of service of process

(1) The rule that judgment may be declared void on collateral attack for admitted lack of jurisdiction of party, although otherwise valid on its face, presupposes that party resisting attack admits facts showing that constructive or personal service of summons was not made on party attacking judgment and allows introduction of evidence of such fact without objection.—Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, 37 P.2d 69, 1 Cal.2d 749.

(2) If lack of service is stipulated to, the judgment must be read as though that fact appeared on the face of the judgment, in which event the judgment is then void on its face and subject to collateral attack. —Lake v. not within the issues presented by the pleadings and evidence.[39] On the other hand, if the court has obtained jurisdiction of both the parties and the subject matter, and has power to enter the judgment, unless the record shows that such jurisdiction was thereafter lost,[40] the judgment is not subject to collateral attack because it is not in the form required by statute[41] or is contrary to the limitations of such a statute,[42] or resulted from an erroneous interpretation thereof[43] or an erroneous ruling as to the operative force of one of two statutes, apparently conflicting;[44] or because it is otherwise defective or erroneous.[45]

A distinction is to be noted between those facts which involve the jurisdiction of the court over the parties and subject matter and those quasi-jurisdictional facts without allegation of which the court cannot properly proceed, and without proof of which a decree should not be made, or, as otherwise stated, between want of jurisdiction and error in the exercise of jurisdiction; a judgment being void and assailable collaterally in the former case, but not in the latter case.[46]

Want of jurisdiction of person. Where the court undertaking to try an action and render judgment never acquired jurisdiction of the person of defendant, a judgment against him is entirely void, and may be so held in a collateral proceeding,[47] unless defendant, by appearance in the action, has waived the original want of jurisdiction.[48] This want of jurisdiction may be shown to establish the invalidity of the judgment, even though the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter.[49]

Pleading and proof of want of jurisdiction. Where a collateral attack is made on a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction, facts must be alleged which show a want of jurisdiction[50] and

Scope of inquiry

(1) On collateral attack on judgment of court of record in the absence of fraud, the court cannot inquire into existence, in original action, of "quasi jurisdictional facts" or facts constituting cause of action, even though it appears on the face of the judgment itself that the court had erred both in fact and in law as to existence of such facts and the right of the parties to the relief granted.—Noel v. Edwards, 260 P. 58, 127 Okl. 163—Nolan v. Jackson, 231 P. 525, 107 Okl. 163—Abraham v. Homer, 226 P. 45, 102 Okl. 12.

(2) The court may decide as against a collateral attack both questions of law as well as of fact that may arise in the particular case, unless the rendition of the judgment clearly violates one of the rules for the determination of jurisdictional defects.—State v. District Court of Eighth Judicial Dist. in and for Natrona County, 238 P. 545, 33 Wyo. 281.

"Jurisdiction," as regards collateral attack on a judgment, is but the power to hear and determine, and does not depend on the correctness of the decision made.—Mueller v. Elba Oil Co., 130 P.2d 961, 21 Cal.2d 188—Gray v. Hall, 265 P. 246, 203 Cal. 306.

Failure to allege quasi-jurisdictional facts, without which court cannot properly proceed, does not render judgment void or assailable collaterally.—Malone v. Meres, 109 So. 677, 91 Fla. 709.

Jurisdiction of appellate court judge serving in district other than his residence cannot be challenged for irregularity in procedure designating judge by collateral attack on judgment rendered.—State v. Marsh, 168 N.E. 473, 121 Ohio St. 321, demurrer sustained 169 N.E. 564, 121 Ohio St. 477.

Whether a judgment is correct on facts or based on a valid complaint is a question of exercise of jurisdiction, not of lack of jurisdiction.—Schuster v. Schuster, 73 P.2d 1345, 51 Ariz. 1.

which will justify the trial court in determining the matter.[51] Any question as to jurisdiction or as to the validity of the judgment which does not show on the face of the record must be raised and brought to the attention of the court by appropriate pleadings.[52] In jurisdictions in which the want of jurisdiction must appear on the face of the record, it is not sufficient merely to allege and prove the absence of jurisdictional facts, but it must be alleged and proved that the record affirmatively shows the absence of such facts.[53]

Orders and decisions of administrative boards and tribunals acting in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity, with respect to which a direct or indirect means of judicial review is available, cannot be collaterally attacked except for jurisdictional defects appearing on the face of the record.[54]

§ 422. —— Want of or Defects in Process or Service

a. Want of process or service
b. Defects in process or service
c. Substituted or constructive service

a. Want of Process or Service

A failure to issue process or to make service thereof on defendant is ground for collateral attack, unless such service is waived by a voluntary appearance or otherwise.

In a personal action the issuance of process and the service thereof on defendant is necessary to confer jurisdiction on the court, as discussed supra § 23, and if no process is issued,[55] or if service is not made on defendant,[56] the judgment will be subject to collateral attack unless service is waived by voluntary appearance or otherwise.[57] However, a judgment rendered in accordance with the requirements of statute, although without actual notice to defendant of the pendency of the action, has been held conclusive on the parties until set aside by some direct proceeding for that purpose.[58] A judgment will not be set aside, on collateral attack, because of the want of service of a certified copy of the complaint or bill, such service not being neces-

A judgment of a probate court can be impeached on jurisdictional grounds only where party attacking it alleges definite reasons why it is void, a mere qualified general denial of jurisdiction being insufficient.—Winter v. Klein-Schultz, 76 P.2d 1051, 182 Okl. 231.

Jurisdiction not lost by factual revelations

Where diversity of citizenship existed and both parties in action involving title to realty submitted to jurisdiction of federal court in Mississippi and were in accord with view that land was in Mississippi rather than in Louisiana, and no factual revelations in contrariety with jurisdictional averments in complaint were developed, federal court in Mississippi retained jurisdiction and resulting judgment was not void on its face and could not be collaterally attacked in subsequent proceeding in federal court in Louisiana involving identical land.—Iselin v. Presumption

It will be presumed that, by waiving service of process and entry of appearance, defendant consented to confer jurisdiction on court rendering judgment, precluding collateral attack.—Grand Lodge, Colored K. P., v. Kidd, Tex.Civ.App., 10 S.W.2d 420.

sary to confer jurisdiction.[59] A judgment correcting a former entry by a nunc pro tunc order cannot be attacked collaterally by showing that notice was not given.[60]

b. Defects in Process or Service

A defect in the form of the process, or in the manner of service thereof, is ground for a collateral attack only where the defect is such that the process amounts to no process at all or the service does not constitute a legal service.

A defect in the form or matter of the summons or other process not absolutely destructive of its validity,[61] or an irregularity or defect in the service of the process on defendant which, although material and available on a direct attack, is sufficient to give notice of the proceedings,[62] does not deprive the court of jurisdiction and therefore does not expose the judgment to collateral impeachment, particularly where the defect or irregularity is amendable, and is cured by a failure to object thereto in time.[63] Where, however, the defect in the process is so radical that it amounts to no process at all,[64] as where it wholly fails to give the party the information it is expected to convey,[65] or where the attempted service is so faulty that it does not constitute a legal service on defendant or amounts to no service at all,[66] there is a want of jurisdiction and the judgment will be impeachable collaterally.

Service by an unauthorized or disqualified person has been held a mere irregularity which does not expose the judgment to collateral attack.—Burke v. Interstate Savings & Loan Ass'n, 64 P. 379, 25 Mont. 315—34 C. J. p 534 note 44 [b].

Service on nominal defendant
In a personal action, the service of summons on a nominal defendant in county where action is brought does not authorize the issuance of summons to another county for real defendant but such issue must be raised directly where subject matter of action is within jurisdiction of court and is not available in a collateral action.—Wistrom v. Forsling, 14 N.W.2d 217, 144 Neb. 638.

Defect in acceptance of service
The omission of the statement of the place of acceptance of service of summons in mortgage foreclosure action in the written record of the acceptance does not render the foreclosure decree subject to collateral attack by the mortgagor in proceedings by him on a fire policy, wherein he seeks to establish an insurable interest in the property by proof that the mortgage foreclosure proceeding was invalid.—Abraham v. Personal service out of state on a nonresident defendant in a personal

c. Substituted or Constructive Service

A defect in substituted or constructive service is ground for collateral attack where it constitutes a failure to comply with the statutory requirements in some essential particular.

A judgment rendered on constructive service of process, the requirements of the statute having been complied with, is as much protected against collateral impeachment as any other judgment,[67] and it cannot be shown collaterally that defendant was not in fact a nonresident as alleged,[68] that he had no property subject to the jurisdiction of the court,[69] or that the published notice did not in fact come to the knowledge of defendant.[70] A judgment against a resident, however, is subject to collateral attack where it is based on notice given in conformity with a statutory provision for service on a nonresident only by publication,[71] unless an appearance is made by or for the resident.[72]

Failure to comply strictly with the provisions of the statute in some essential and vital particular will deprive the court of jurisdiction, and so expose the judgment to collateral impeachment,[73] as where the published notice is wholly insufficient to warn defendant of the action or to give him the information he is entitled to expect from it,[74] but a mere defect or irregularity in making service by publication will not have this effect;[75] nor will the judgment be collaterally assailable although the affidavit on which the order of publication was based was defective or insufficient,[76] or false in fact,[77] and this is especially true where the court has judicially considered or adjudicated its sufficiency.[78] Where, however, the affidavit fails in any jurisdictional particular, the judgment is void and subject to collateral attack.[79]

§ 423. —— Defects in Return or Proof of Service

Mere defects, irregularities, or informalities in the return or proof of service of process do not constitute grounds for collateral impeachment of the judgment.

A judgment cannot be impeached in a collateral proceeding on the ground that the return or proof of service of process was defective, irregular, or informal;[80] nor, as has been held, can it be so impeached on the ground that the return showing service was false,[81] particularly after the lapse of a long period of time.[82] A judgment, however, may be collaterally impeached on the ground that there was no return,[83] that the return was made by the wrong person,[84] or that the return or proof wholly failed to show the facts necessary to give the court jurisdiction.[85]

§ 424. —— Unauthorized Appearance

By the weight of authority, an attorney's unauthorized appearance for a party against whom a judgment is rendered is no ground for collaterally attacking the judgment. This rule has been held not to apply in case of a judgment against a nonresident.

By the weight of authority, it is not permissible, in any collateral proceeding, for a party to contest the validity of a domestic judgment against him on the ground that an attorney who appeared for him in the action had no authority to do so.[86] In some states, however, the rule obtains that the authority of the attorney may be controverted in such a case.[87]

Nonresidents. In an action on a domestic judgment against nonresidents, it has been held that it may be shown that such judgment was rendered on an unauthorized appearance for defendant, and without service of process.[88]

§ 425. —— Presumptions as to Jurisdiction

a. Courts of general or superior jurisdiction
b. Courts or tribunals of inferior or limited jurisdiction
c. Federal courts
d. Probate courts

a. Courts of General or Superior Jurisdiction

(1) In general
(2) Process and service
(3) Exercise of special statutory powers

(1) In General

In case of a collateral attack on a domestic judgment of a court of general jurisdiction, every reasonable presumption will be indulged in support of the regularity and validity of the judgment; and, unless the contrary affirmatively appears from the face of the record, it generally will be presumed that the court had jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the parties, and that facts existed which were necessary to give the court jurisdiction or power to render the particular judgment.

As a general rule, a judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction is presumed to be regular and valid until it is shown to be invalid by allegations and proof in a direct action or proceeding instituted for that purpose.[89] Accordingly, in case

Proof held insufficient

Where a judgment is silent as to notice, evidence of an application for, and issuance of, citation to be served by publication on a nonresident of the state does not constitute such proof as is required to show that the judgment was rendered on notice by publication alone, in the absence of the sheriff's return on such citation, or of any evidence as to what else the record may show respecting service thereof.—McCarthy v. Statute not applicable

A statute providing that court may at any stage of proceedings relieve party for whom attorney has assumed to act without authority from consequences of attorney's acts applies only where party challenges attorney's authority during progress of suit, and does not apply to collateral attack four years after adverse decree was rendered.—Louth v. The chief distinction between "collateral" and "direct attacks" on a judgment is that in the former the record alone may be inspected, and is conclusively presumed to be correct, while in the latter the facts may be shown, and thus the judgment itself on appeal may be reversed or modified.

Only manner of overcoming presumption

Presumption of jurisdiction as against collateral attack may be overcome only by record affirmatively showing want of jurisdiction.—First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of King City v. Bowman, 15 S.W.2d 842, 322 Mo. 654.

If the record in the former case is not presented, the judgment or decree therein cannot be held void, on collateral attack, for want of jurisdiction.—Fisher v. Guidy, 142 So. 818, 106 Fla. 94.

where the record purports to show what was done for the purpose of acquiring jurisdiction, it will not be presumed in aid of the court's action that anything different or additional was done.[97] In the absence of any affirmative showing to the contrary on the face of the record, the presumption of jurisdiction will generally be regarded as conclusive,[98] except where evidence aliunde may be introduced, as discussed infra § 426.

These presumptions of regularity and validity, and those as to jurisdiction, will be indulged where the record, although failing to show jurisdiction affirmatively, does not distinctly show a want of jurisdiction,[99] as where the record of a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction is silent as to the facts conferring jurisdiction,[1] or is defective in consequence of the omission of proper recitals,[2] or the loss or absence of parts of the record,[3] as where

If the decree refers to the evidence on which it is based, and an examination of such evidence discloses that it is not sufficient to give the court jurisdiction, the presumption that the court had jurisdiction is overcome.—Oulvey v. Little, 233 Ill. App. 553.

Absence from record of papers which ought to have been included within judgment roll is not enough to make it appear affirmatively that court had no jurisdiction.—State ex rel. Delmoe v. District Court of Fifth Judicial Dist., 46 P.2d 39, 100 Mont. 131.

The misplacement of papers in a case cannot affect integrity of the judgment and other entries in trial the judgment roll is defective or incomplete.[4] Jurisdiction also will be presumed where the bill collaterally attacking the judgment or decree contains no disclosure as to whether the court had jurisdiction of the subject matter and parties, or as to whether there was fraud affecting the jurisdiction.[5]

Long lapses of time greatly strengthen the presumptions in favor of the validity of judgments.[6]

Particular presumptions. It will be presumed, in consonance with the presumptions of regularity and validity, that plaintiff was entitled to maintain the action;[7] that all the proceedings were regular,[8] and all jurisdictional steps were taken;[9] that all necessary parties were represented;[10] that an appearance by an attorney was authorized;[11] that the judgment was supported by the pleadings and proof;[12] that all matters covered by the judgment court's records, since pleadings and exhibits become only evidential after judgment is entered and are presumed to support the record.—Warfield Natural Gas Co. v. Ward, 149 S.W.2d 705, 286 Ky. 73—Wolverton v. Baynham, 10 S.W.2d 837, 226 Ky. 214.

Partition

(1) This rule applies to a partition judgment on a collateral attack.

Ala.—Baker v. Prewitt, 64 Ala. 551.

Ill.—Lane v. Bommelmann, 17 Ill. 95.

(2) After the acquiescence and occupation under a partition by a court of probate for a period of twenty years, the proceedings must be held to have been regular and conclusive on the question of notice.—Campbell v. Wallace, 12 N.H. 362, 37 Am.D. 219.

If the record is ancient and does not affirmatively show all that was done, presumption is that things not shown to have been done that should have been done were done, and on collateral attack omissions will be treated as erroneous but not void.

were in fact litigated by the parties;[13] that some disposition was made of every defendant in the case;[14] and that the judgment was rendered at a regular term of the court;[15] and that the land, when land is the subject of the suit, was situated within the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of the court.[16]

Presumptions not applicable. A presumption of jurisdiction will not be indulged where there is a direct admission, in the collateral proceeding, that it did not exist in the original action;[17] nor will such presumptions be indulged in favor of a judgment entered by the clerk as attend a judgment entered in pursuance of judicial action by the court.[18] Moreover, jurisdiction of the person of a defendant is presumed in support of the judgment only when he is within the territorial limits of the court, and, if he is not within such limits, the record must show service on him.[19] A presumption of jurisdiction as to one defendant will not attach to a judgment on a new cause of action included in another defendant's counterclaim;[20] and, where the judgment or decree attacked contains an affirmative recital that defendants were summoned before the cross complaint was filed, a presumption of jurisdiction under the cross complaint does not arise.[21] It has been held that the presumption of regularity and validity does not apply to a collateral attack by a stranger, who may make such attack on the judgment on any ground which could be urged against it on direct attack;[22] but that he cannot attack on the ground that he was not a party to the action in which the judgment was rendered, since the court, not having required his presence, would be presumed to have had jurisdiction without him.[23]

(2) Process and Service

Generally, unless the contrary affirmatively appears from the record, it will be presumed, in support of a judgment, that legal and proper process was issued and duly and regularly served and return made.

In support of the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction, as against a collateral attack, it will be presumed, unless expressly contrary to what 20. Mont.—Hanrahan v. Andersen, 90 P.2d 494, 108 Mont. 218.

As to nonanswering defendant
Where judgment affirmatively showed that it was entered after examination of the issues only as between plaintiff and answering defendant, and that nonanswering defendant was not even considered an interested or necessary party for purposes of counterclaim filed by one of defendants, no presumption could be indulged that court had jurisdiction of nonanswering defendant as to issue raised by counterclaim.—Hanrahan v. Andersen, supra.

The presumption of jurisdiction of a plaintiff against whom a defendant's counterclaim was directed cannot be accompanied by a further presumption of jurisdiction over another defendant whose interests were affected and who was, therefore, a necessary party to a valid adjudication of the counterclaim, but against whom it was not directed.—Hanrahan v. Andersen, supra.

is affirmatively shown by the record,[24] that all parties to the action or proceeding were properly served with notice or process;[25] that legal and proper process was issued in the action and that it was duly and regularly served on defendant or defendants[26] or was waived;[27] and that return or proof of service, when necessary, was regularly and properly made and filed.[28] If the record is silent as to service, the record of the cause may be examined as to the validity of the presumed service,[29] but extrinsic evidence may not be considered for this purpose.[30] The burden of proving lack of service of process ordinarily is on the party alleging the invalidity of the judgment on that ground;[31] but where the record shows service of the complaint, and not service of the summons, the burden is on one seeking to sustain the judgment as against a collateral attack to prove actual service thereof.[32]

Generally it will be presumed that constructive

Absence of original summons

In absence of original summons from record, it is conclusively presumed that there was proper service thereof on party attacking judgment for want of jurisdiction and indorsement on petition that summons was issued is of value as secondary evidence and entitled to more weight than parol testimony to contrary, although absolute verity is not to be imported to such entry; and, in absence of clear and convincing evidence of error or fraud, a docket entry showing service of process on litigant is conclusive.—Davis v. Extent of burden

A defendant, attacking judgment by court of general jurisdiction as void for want of service, must not only show affirmatively that he has not been served, but that he has not waived service by appearance, pleading, or otherwise, unless there is a recital in judgment showing affirmatively that return of service made by sheriff was the only basis of jurisdiction of court over person of defendant.—Green v. Spires, 7 S.E.2d 246, 189 Ga. 719.

service of process, such as by publication, was duly and regularly made[33] and that an affidavit for such service was regularly and properly made and filed.[34] Some of the decisions, however, are to the contrary in the case of constructive service by leaving a copy of the writ, or by publication, or other form of substituted service.[35]

Where the judgment is against a nonresident defendant, and jurisdiction was acquired by publication of notice, some cases hold that the judgment is not impeachable collaterally merely because the record does not show compliance with all the requirements of the statute authorizing that manner of citation, as a full compliance will be presumed.[36] Other cases, however, hold that a presumption of jurisdiction does not arise in such a case, and that to sustain a judgment the record must itself disclose facts affirmatively indicating the several steps by which jurisdiction has been acquired.[37] If defendant was a nonresident at the institution of the action, but returned to the state a considerable period of time before the entry of final judgment, it will be presumed that he was served with notice.[38]

(3) Exercise of Special Statutory Powers

Where special statutory powers are exercised by the court, a presumption of jurisdiction will be indulged in support of its judgment where it is rendered in the usual course of common-law or chancery practice.

Where special statutory powers are to be exercised by the usual common-law or chancery practice, the proceedings and judgments will have all the characteristics of the proceedings and judgments in other cases, including the presumption of jurisdiction,[39] and this rule has been held to apply to a judgment rendered in vacation by a judge acting under constitutional authority.[40] The rule has likewise been held to apply in attachment proceedings,[41] but there is also authority to the contrary.[42]

Proceedings not according to course of common law. Where a court of general jurisdiction proceeds in the exercise of special powers, wholly derived from statute, and not exercised according to the course of the common law, or not pertaining to its general jurisdiction, its jurisdiction must appear in the record, and cannot be presumed in a collateral proceeding,[43] although the court proceeds in accordance with the course of the common law as far as applicable to the proceedings.[44] This rule

Finding of evidentiary facts
On collateral attack of a judgment rendered by court of general jurisdiction pursuant to authority conferred by statute, every reasonable presumption will be indulged that court in prior proceedings found evidentiary facts after conferment of jurisdiction, but not that court found facts giving jurisdiction.—Bisbee v. has been held to apply to a judgment rendered in a summary proceeding.[45]

"Judicial" and "ministerial" acts distinguished. Where a court of general jurisdiction has conferred on it special powers by special statutes, which are exercised only ministerially and not judicially, no presumption of jurisdiction will attend its judgments, and the facts essential to the exercise of special jurisdiction must appear on the face of the record.[46]

b. Courts or Tribunals of Inferior or Limited Jurisdiction

As a general rule, nothing is presumed in favor of the validity of the judgment of a court of inferior or limited jurisdiction; but the usual presumptions apply in a case in which such court or tribunal has exclusive or general jurisdiction.

Nothing is presumed in favor of the judgment of a court of inferior or limited jurisdiction, as against a collateral attack; but the jurisdictional facts must affirmatively appear either on the face of the record,[47] or, according to some authorities, by evidence aliunde, except as to facts required to be spread on the record,[48] and, as a corollary to this rule, it has been held that it is not necessary for defendant to appear in such court and object to its jurisdiction as a prerequisite to challenging such jurisdiction in a subsequent suit.[49] This rule, however, applies only to questions of jurisdiction as to the subject matter, for where the jurisdiction has once vested as to such matter, the rules which govern its exercise as to the person, with respect to process, evidence, etc., are generally the same as those applicable to courts of general jurisdiction.[50] Although the court may be a limited or inferior tribunal, yet if it has general or exclusive jurisdiction of any one subject, its proceedings and judgments with respect to that subject will be sustained, against collateral attack by the same presumptions which obtain in the case of superior courts.[51]

Where the records of inferior courts and tribunals show either affirmatively or by necessary implication that the court or tribunal had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter, such jurisdiction cannot be avoided by adverse inferences from the judgment or order rendered,[52] and the same presumptions will then be indulged as to the regularity of the proceedings as are indulged in proceedings of courts of general jurisdiction.[53] A pleading, in order to be sufficient to show such a judgment subject to collateral attack, must set out enough of the record to show that the court did not, in fact, have jurisdiction.[54]

Administrative tribunal. The judgment or award of an administrative tribunal purports jurisdiction, as against collateral attack, unless the judgment or award shows on its face that the tribunal did not have jurisdiction.[55]

c. Federal Courts

A judgment or decree of a federal court will be presumed regular and valid on a collateral attack.

Courts of the United States, although of statutory and limited jurisdiction, are regarded, within their limitations as to subject matter, as courts of general, rather than inferior, jurisdiction, as discussed in Federal Courts § 6, and therefore their judgments and decrees stand on the same footing as those of state courts of general jurisdiction, when collaterally attacked, and, unless want of jurisdiction affirmatively appears from the record,[56] the authority and jurisdiction of the court to render the judgment or decree will be presumed,[57] although the facts conferring jurisdiction do not appear in the record.[58] Accordingly, when a judgment rendered by a federal court is collaterally attacked in a state tribunal, the latter tribunal will presume that the federal court had jurisdiction, unless the contrary appears on the face of the record.[59] The rule applies to a judgment of a federal court sitting in another state.[60] The rule that, unless the contrary appears from the record, a cause is deemed to be without the jurisdiction of a federal court, as discussed in Federal Courts § 8, does not apply where the judgment of such a court is collaterally attacked.[61]

d. Probate Courts

The judgment of a probate court within the limits of its jurisdiction ordinarily is entitled to the same favorable presumptions, as against collateral attack, as are accorded the judgments of other courts of general jurisdiction.

Generally, although courts of probate are limited in their sphere to matters pertaining to the settlement of decedents' estates, their jurisdiction is not special or inferior, but, with respect to matters to which their powers extend, are usually regarded as courts of general jurisdiction, as discussed in Courts § 298, and therefore the judgment of such a court is entitled to the same presumptions as to jurisdiction, regularity, and validity, as against collateral attack, as are accorded the judgments of other courts of general jurisdiction,[62] unless it affirmatively appears from the record that the court had no jurisdiction in the matter;[63] and the recitals in the record as to jurisdiction may not be contradicted by evidence of facts different from those appearing on the record.[64] There are some authorities, however, which hold that probate courts are courts of special or limited jurisdiction, and that their orders or decrees do not raise any presumption of jurisdiction unless the jurisdictional facts appear on the face of the proceeding.[65]

Special proceedings in probate court. With regard to matters not within the ordinary probate jurisdiction, but involving the exercise of special statutory powers, it has been held that the presumption of jurisdiction does not obtain, but the court, as concerns such matters, is a court of special jurisdiction; and the rule is the same as where a court of general jurisdiction exercises special statutory powers.[66]

§ 426. —— Recitals of Jurisdictional Facts

b. Contradicting recitals

c. Recitals showing want of jurisdiction

a. In General

Recitals as to jurisdictional facts, contained in a judgment or judgment roll or record, are deemed to import absolute verity, and are generally conclusive as against a collateral attack unless they are contradicted by other portions of the record or unless there is an averment and proof of fraud.

In accordance with the rule that the judgment roll, or record proper, is of such uncontrollable credit and verity as to admit of no averment, plea, or proof to the contrary, as discussed supra § 132, where a judgment, or judgment roll or record, of a domestic court of general jurisdiction contains recitals as to the jurisdictional facts, such recitals generally are deemed to import absolute verity and to be conclusive as against a collateral attack[67] unless they are contradicted by other portions of the Judgment by court having jurisdiction of parties and subject matter as not open to collateral attack generally see supra § 401.

Jurisdiction and power distinguished
Where question of validity of judgment arises collaterally, recitation therein of jurisdictional facts imports absolute verity, while recitation of power to execute deed which is an ancient instrument imports prima facie verity.—Loving County v. Higginbotham, Tex.Civ.App., 115 S.W.2d 1110, error dismissed.
Diversity of citizenship
Where record in district court foreclosure action affirmatively disclosed diversity of citizenship of parties, validity of title acquired by purchaser at foreclosure sale could not be challenged by collateral attack on jurisdiction of district court in such foreclosure action.—Bostwick v. Baldwin Drainage Dist., C.C.A.Fla., 133 F.2d 1, certiorari de-record[68] or, according to some authorities, by extrinsic evidence, as discussed infra subdivision b of this section, or unless there is an averment and proof of fraud.[69]

Where a judgment or decree of a domestic court recites that proper notice of the action was given, that process was duly served, or that the parties were duly summoned or cited, such recital generally is conclusive on collateral attack,[70] even though there may have been defects in some of the documents constituting part of the judgment roll and relating to the service of process;[71] but it has been nied 63 S.Ct. 1030, 319 U.S. 742, 87 L.Ed. 1699.

Judgment by agreement

Where judgment recited that it was by agreement of the parties, it was presumed that all the parties were present in open court and entered into the agreement, and the contention of any party that he did not in fact agree to the judgment must be made in a direct attack on the judgment; it could not be collaterally attacked in an action to remove clouds from title to realty on the ground that all parties to prior cause had not in fact agreed to the judgment.—Brennan v. Greene, Tex. Civ.App., 154 S.W.2d 523, error refused.

Partition

When the recitals in the record of a statutory partition show the jurisdiction of the court and its compliance with the statute, the order appointing commissioners to make partition is an adjudication of the sufficiency of the application, which cannot be questioned collaterally.—Hall v. Law, Ind., 102 U.S. 461, 26 L.Ed. 217.

Partition

(1) A recital in the record of partition proceedings that the parties were duly cited is conclusive as against collateral attack.
Mo.—Brawley v. Ranney, 67 Mo. 280.
Pa.—Vensel's Appeal, 77 Pa. 71.
Tex.—Bassett v. Sherrod, 35 S.W. 312, 13 Tex.Civ.App. 327.

(2) This rule applies where unknown heirs were made parties.—Bassett v. Sherrod, supra—Gillon v. Wear, 28 S.W. 1014, 9 Tex.Civ.App. 44.

(3) Where the recitals in the record show the jurisdiction of the court and its compliance with the statute, the order appointing commissioners to make partition is an adjudication of the sufficiency of the notice, which cannot be questioned collaterally.—Hall v. Law, Ind., 102 U.S. 461, 26 L.Ed. 217.

Recital in mortgage foreclosure decree that cause came on regularly to be heard on complaint taken as confessed by defendant on whom due and regular service of summons and complaint was made must on collateral attack be accepted as true, particularly if judgment roll does not affirmatively show that recital is false.—West v. Capital Trust & Savings Bank, 124 P.2d 572, 113 Mont. 130.

Recitals held insufficient

A recital in a judgment that more than a specified number of days had elapsed since the service of the summons and complaint falls short of a finding that the summons and complaint were served on defendant.—Illinois Trust & Savings Bank v. Town of Roscoe, 194 N.W. 649, 46 S.W. 477.

Prima facie proof

A recital that all parties to suit had notice of hearing is prima facie proof of that fact, not to be overthrown except by substantial evidence.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Cox, C.C.A.Tenn., 104 F.2d 354.

71. Cal.—Kaufmann v. California Mining & Dredging Syndicate, 104 P.2d 1038, 16 Cal.2d 90.
Ohio.—Aldrich v. Friedman, 18 Ohio App. 302.
Defects or omissions in record as affecting presumptions generally see supra § 425.

Service on wrong spouse

Fact that process intended for husband was served on wife, and that directed to wife was served on husband, did not render default judgment, reciting fact of due service, subject to collateral attack as void.

held that where the recital is a general one, of due service of process, it is limited to process actually found in the record, and the validity of the judgment depends on the sufficiency of such process and service.[72] A similar presumption arises from a recital that the defendant or parties appeared,[73] although it has been held that the recital of an appearance is never conclusive, and, where the expression is general, it is confined to those parties who have been served with process.[74]

An ambiguous or imperfect recital in the judgment will be so construed, if possible, as to make it show jurisdiction.[75] If however, the recital is meaningless, it is void and affords no presumption in favor of service.[76]

Service by publication. In the case of a judgment against a nonresident defendant on service by publication of the summons, if the judgment recites that publication was "duly made," or was "in all respects regular and according to law," or that defendant was "duly notified," this is sufficient to sustain the validity of the judgment on collateral attack[77] unless such recital conflicts with the record proper, which shows a failure to comply with the statutory requirements.[78] The same effect has been given a recital that a default judgment was regu-

—Switzer v. Smith, Tex.Com.App. 300 S.W. 31, 68 A.L.R. 377.

Judgment reciting personal service, not contradicted by record, when in reality there was no such service, is not subject to collateral attack, not being void.—Oetting v. Mineral Wells Crushed Stone Co., Tex.Civ. App., 262 S.W. 93.

72. Okl.—Johnson v. Hood, 46 P.2d 533, 173 Okl. 108—Seal v. Banes, 35 P.2d 704, 168 Okl. 550.

Tex.—Henry v. Beauchamp, Civ.App., 39 S.W.2d 642, followed in Henry v. Carter, 39 S.W.2d 645.
34 C.J. p 548 note 25.

"Come the parties"

(1) A recital that "now, at this day, come the said parties, by their respective attorneys," without any further showing that the court acquired jurisdiction against one of defendants. has been held insufficient to support the judgment against him in collateral attack.—Bell v. Brinkmann, 27 S.W. 374, 123 Mo. 270, 275.

(2) Such a recital, however, has been held prima facie sufficient to render the judgment or decree valid as against a collateral attack.—Hunt v. Allison, 32 Ala. 173—34 C.J. p 548 note 25 [a].

Filing answer

Where judgment recited that an answer was filed, presumption arose that answer was properly filed, as respects whether sufficiency of defendant's appearance could be questioned in a collateral proceeding.—State ex rel. and to Use of Bair v. Producers Gravel Co., 111 S.W.2d 521, 341 Mo. 1106.

Failure to appear

A judgment on a petition which stated a valid cause of action for personal judgment against one defendant with foreclosure of asserted lien, and which recited on its face that the defendants, although duly cited, failed to appear, was not void and could not be collaterally attacked.—Livingston v. Stubbs, Tex.Civ. App., 151 S.W.2d 285, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Prima facie true

The recital in proceedings for partition, and in the decree rendered therein, that the heirs appeared and consented thereto, is prima facie true.—Millican v. Millican, 24 Tex. 426.

Waiver

Where judgments recited that defendants entered their appearance and filed answers, question as to whether a defendant was in court because of alleged insufficiency of waiver of process and entry of appearance could not be raised in a collateral attack on the judgment by motion to quash execution and stay sale.—State ex rel. and to Use of Bair v. Producers Gravel Co., supra.

34 C.J. p 548 note 30.

The record must be treated as a whole and as including affidavit for citation by publication, in determining court's statutory jurisdiction to render judgment against nonresident on citation by publication.—Fisher v. Jordan, D.C.Tex., 32 F.Supp. 608, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 116 F.2d 183, certiorari denied Jordan v. Fisher, 61 S.Ct. 734, 312 U.S. 697, 85 L.Ed. 1132.

Recitals held insufficient

(1) Recital in a judgment that an attorney was appointed to represent defendant on the suggestion of plaintiff's attorney that he had been cited by publication as required by law was not such a recital of due service as would preclude defendant from collaterally attacking the judgment on the ground that he was not served as required by law.—Shipley v. Pershing, Tex.Civ.App., 5 S.W.2d 799, error dismissed.

(2) Recitals that defendant had been cited to appear and answer by a citation published in a newspaper more than the time required by law before the first day of the term was not equivalent to a recital of due service on a nonresident, precluding attack on the judgment.—Reitz v. Mitchell, Tex.Civ.App., 256 S.W. 697.

78. Fla.—Johnson v. Clark, 198 So. 842, 145 Fla. 258.
Okl.—Smith v. Head, 134 P.2d 973, 192 Okl. 216.
34 C.J. p 548 note 30.

Notice of attachment

Where default judgment was based on attachment proceedings, but record showed that notice of attachment was returnable a specified number of days from the first publication so that court obtained no jurisdiction over defendant's person, the judgment was not immunized from collateral attack by a recital of due service of summons, such recital being a mere conclusion which conflicted with the record proper.—John-larly entered according to law.[79] In some jurisdictions, however, statutes relating to constructive service are strictly construed, and in order to sustain the jurisdiction of a court based on such service, the record must affirmatively show that the statute has been complied with, and a formal recital that service has been had does not change this principle.[80]

b. Contradicting Recitals

Recitals of jurisdictional facts in a judgment may be contradicted by other parts of the record; but generally they cannot be contradicted or disproved by extrinsic evidence, except for fraud.

In the case of a judgment of a domestic court of general jurisdiction, the great majority of the decisions sustain the rule that its recitals concerning the service of process or the other facts on which its jurisdiction is founded import absolute verity, and that such recitals cannot be contradicted or disproved, in a collateral proceeding, by any evidence outside the record,[81] except for fraud in procuring son v. Clark, 198 So. 842, 145 Fla. 258.

A warning order which states that it was issued on verified petition, but not alleging belief that nonresident defendant was then absent from state, cannot be presumed on collateral attack to have been made on proper affidavit.—Leonard v. Williams, 265 S.W. 618, 205 Ky. 218.

Evidence without pleading and without substance is unavailing to prove that docket entries showing service on litigant of process in a prior proceeding were irregular or fraudulent so as to relieve litigant of binding effect of former judgment.—Davis v. Tuggle's Adm'r, 178 S.W. 2d 979, 297 Ky. 376.

Judgment in favor of employee for damages sustained during employment cannot be collaterally attacked on ground of lack of court's jurisdiction by extraneous evidence, even though such evidence might conceivably have shown an injury compensable under workmen's compensation law.—Row v. Cape Girardeau Foundry Co., Mo.App., 141 S.W.2d 113.

Nonresident

Where judgment foreclosing an equitable lien against defendant's interest in land recited that defendant was personally served with nonresident notice as prescribed by statute, that the sheriff's return on the order of sale had been duly made, and that a notice of such sale had been mailed to defendant, defendant could not go behind recitals in judgment by attempting to prove in subsequent trespass to try title suit that he was a nonresident at time of rendition of judgment or that he was not physically in the state on that date or that the service specified in the judgment was not legal.—Bemis v. Bayou Development Co., Tex.Civ.App., 184 S.W.2d 645, error refused. Certiorari denied Bemis v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., 66 S.Ct. 43.

Personal judgment against nonresident

Rule that, in collateral proceeding, inquiry cannot be made into facts dehors the record for purpose of showing invalidity of judgment has been held not operative to support personal judgment against nonresident of state which was rendered without personal service within the state.—Hicks v. Sias, Tex.Civ.App., 102 S.W.2d 460, error refused.

Pleading and evidence

A judgment record which showed that a matter was submitted to court on pleadings and evidence could not be impeached in a collateral proceeding to enforce the judgment by parol evidence that judgment was taken without proof being offered.—Exchange Elevator Co. v. Marshall, Neb., 22 N.W.2d 403.

Entry on appearance docket

The presumption arising from a recital in a decree that defendant had been duly served with notice, where supported only by an entry on the appearance docket, no return of service being found in the files, is overcome by defendant's positive testimony that no notice was served on him and the testimony of the sheriff by whom the service was supposed to have been made that he had no recollection of making it.—Shehan v. Stuart, 90 N.W. 614, 117 Iowa 207.

it.[82] Under this rule evidence aliunde is not admissible for the purpose of showing lack of proper service of process on defendant[83] or as to any fact on which the court must have passed in rendering the judgment.[84] By some decisions, however, it has been held that a record does not import uncontrollable verity when want of jurisdiction is alleged, and that it is permissible in a collateral proceeding to controvert the recitals of the record on this point by evidence aliunde,[85] except where jurisdiction depends on a litigated fact adjudged in favor of the party averring jurisdiction.[86]

Contradiction by record. In accordance with the rule precluding the consideration of extrinsic evidence, the judgment itself together with other parts of the record which affirmatively show want of jurisdiction are ordinarily the only matters of evidence that may be considered to collaterally contradict and impeach the judgment,[87] and the collateral attack will not be sustained where the only part of the record offered in evidence shows nothing to indicate the invalidity of the judgment.[88] It is open to a party to contest the alleged jurisdiction by producing other parts of the record or judgment roll, which contradict the recitals of service of process or of other jurisdictional facts in the judgment,[89] as, by producing the original writ or the return on it, which in case of conflict will control the recitals of the judgment,[90] although the endeavor will always be made to reconcile apparent

Rule not applicable

In suit to enforce judgment against apparent surety on supersedeas bond, judgment could be collaterally attacked on ground that apparent surety's signature to bond was forged, and fact of forgery established by evidence aliunde record, since no inquiry was made as to the genuineness of the signature, and the matter of jurisdiction was not adjudicated.—Simms Oil Co. v. Entire record considered

In determining whether court had jurisdiction, the whole record must be inspected, and, if the judgment itself recites service but the return found shows no service or a service which is insufficient or unauthorized by law, the judgment is void. Such a recital in the judgment is deemed to refer to the kind of service shown in other parts of the record, and must be read in connection with that part of the record which sets forth the proof of service; and it is presumed that the service found in the record is the same and the only service referred to in the general recital in the judgment, and that the court acted on the service appearing in the record.—Powell v. inconsistencies by construction, or by the aid of presumptions.[91] It has been held, however, that if the judgment contains satisfactory recitals of jurisdictional facts such recitals are controlling on the question of jurisdiction and the remainder of the record may not be considered,[92] and that it is only when the judgment is silent or ambiguous as to jurisdictional facts that other parts of the record may be considered in determining whether the judgment is void for want of jurisdiction.[93]

c. Recitals Showing Want of Jurisdiction

Where the facts recited in the record, on which the court assumes jurisdiction, are not such as would in law confer jurisdiction, the presumption of regularity and validity does not apply and the judgment may be collaterally impeached.

Where the facts on which a court assumes jurisdiction are recited in the record, and appear by it to have been such as would not in law confer jurisdiction, the judgment may be impeached collaterally, for in such a case there can be no presumption, in aid of the regularity and validity of the judgment, that the recitals of the record are incorrect or incomplete,[94] or that something was done which the record does not show to have been done,[95] the whole record being taken together for this purpose.[96] This rule applies where the record affirmatively shows the absence of conditions necessary to give the court jurisdiction[97] or that

Not showing or negativing jurisdiction

Where a judgment, undertaking to recite process or facts on which jurisdiction of court is based, does not show jurisdiction or negative it, judgment is void on its face.—Pumphrey v. Hunter, Tex.Civ.App., 270 S.W. 237.

As tantamount to proving judgment

Where the recitals in a judgment and the record proper show a judgment to be defective, showing the judgment to be defective by introducing the judgment and the record proper, this is tantamount only to proving what the judgment itself shows, and is not prohibited as a "collateral attack."—State ex rel. National Lead Co. v. Smith, Mo.App., 134 S.W.2d 1061.

Objection to record

If it affirmatively appears from record of probate court itself, either that court did not have jurisdiction of subject matter or of person, in case where such is required, or that jurisdiction did not attach in a particular case, jurisdictional question can be raised on objection to the record when offered in evidence in another proceeding, and no affirmative proceeding need be prosecuted to vacate judgment.—Buss v. the court did not have authority to grant the particular judgment.[98] Although the judgment recites that defendant was duly served with process, if the record shows that no service was made,[99] or shows a service which is insufficient and unauthorized by law,[1] the judgment may be collaterally impeached.

§ 427. —— Decision of Court as to Its Own Jurisdiction

The decision of a court, of either general or limited jurisdiction, as to the fact of its jurisdiction of a case generally is not subject to collateral attack unless it is in irreconcilable conflict with facts otherwise disclosed by the record of the proceedings.

Where a court of general jurisdiction judicially considers and adjudicates the question of its jurisdiction, and decides that the facts exist which are necessary to give it jurisdiction of the case, the finding is conclusive, as discussed in Courts § 115, and generally cannot be controverted in a collateral proceeding,[2] even though the decision or finding as to jurisdiction was erroneous,[3] and although the

Jurisdiction over subject matter

Where a court has jurisdiction over the parties and determines that it has jurisdiction over the subject matter, parties cannot collaterally attack judgment on ground that court did not have jurisdiction over subject matter.—Peri v. Groves, 50 N.Y.S.2d 300, 183 Misc. 579.

Where record shows evidence on which court acted in determining jurisdiction, no presumption of jurisdiction as to prior judgment can be considered.—Sharp v. Sharp, 164 N. E. 685, 333 Ill. 267.

ground on which the decision was rested has subsequently been overruled.[4] A judgment is not subject to collateral attack, where it is rendered under a decision of the court that it has jurisdiction, based on a special as well as a general appearance,[5] or on a writ or notice which, although defective, or the service of which was irregular or informal, has been adjudged sufficient,[6] or on service of process by publication.[7] However, a collateral attack may be made on such decision where it is in irreconcilable conflict with facts otherwise disclosed by the record of the proceedings,[8] or where the facts are admitted in the pleadings, or agreed on, and the court's determination is based on an error of law arising out of such state of facts.[9]

Where general jurisdiction over a particular class of cases is conferred on a certain tribunal, its decision on the facts essential to its jurisdiction in a case belonging to that class is generally not subject to a collateral attack,[10] as in the case of courts of the United States[11] and probate courts.[12]

Court or tribunal of inferior or limited jurisdiction. The rule is not confined to courts of general jurisdiction, but it has been held that if an inferior court or one of limited jurisdiction is charged with the ascertainment of a jurisdictional fact, and its proceedings show that the fact was ascertained, the finding cannot be collaterally attacked[13] unless want of jurisdiction is apparent on the face of the record.[14]

Error in exercise of jurisdiction see supra § 19.

Error in determination of questions of law or fact on which the court's jurisdiction in particular case depends, the court having general jurisdiction of the cause and of the person, is "error in exercise of jurisdiction" and affords no ground for collateral attack.—Burgess v. Nail, C.C.A.Okl., 103 F.2d 37.

§ 428. Errors and Irregularities

A judgment is not subject to collateral attack for errors and irregularities which do not render the judgment void.

When jurisdiction has once attached, the court has a right to decide every question arising in the case, and errors of judgment or irregularities, however gross, which do not render the judgment absolutely void, are not available on collateral attack,[15] and, moreover, this rule as to the nonavail-

Where a judgment is void, and not merely irregular and erroneous, because the court exceeded its jurisdiction and rendered a particular judgment which it was wholly unauthorized to render under any circumstances, as considered supra § 19, the rule against collateral attack does not apply.[20]

Special and statutory proceedings. The rule against collateral attack on the ground of mere error or irregularity applies not only in the case of formal suits at law or in equity, but also to the judicial determinations of the courts in special proceedings, out of the course of the common law, or founded wholly on statutes.[21]

Judgments of inferior courts. Although the validity of a judgment rendered by an inferior court is not sustained by any presumptions as to jurisdiction, when it is established that such a court had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter, it will be presumed to have proceeded in due order, and its judgment cannot be attacked in any collateral proceeding for mere error or irregularity.[22]

§ 429. —— Defects and Objections as to Parties

A judgment cannot be impeached in a collateral proceeding for some defects and objections as to parties, such as an alleged misjoinder or nonjoinder of parties.

A judgment may not be impeached collaterally for some defects and objections as to parties,[23] such as an alleged misjoinder or nonjoinder of parties,[24] or a misnomer,[25] or for objections to an amendment adding new parties.[26] In addition, the judgment may not be collaterally impeached for any technical objection to plaintiff's capacity to sue,[27] or because the judgment may be irregular or voidable as against another person who was a joint plaintiff or

§ 430. —— Defects and Objections as to Pleadings

A judgment may not be collaterally attacked because of defects in the pleadings which are amendable, even though such pleadings are bad on general demurrer.

A judgment may not be impeached collaterally because of any defects in the pleadings[31] which are amendable,[32] even though such pleadings are bad on general demurrer.[33] Thus the validity of a judgment cannot be impugned by showing that a wrong form of action was chosen,[34] or that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action[35] or stated the cause of action

Insufficient or illegal cause of action as ground for attack in general see supra § 417.

Unless it affirmatively appears from petition that no valid cause of action could be stated, judgment of court having jurisdiction of subject matter and of parties is not subject to collateral attack on ground that petition failed to state, or defectively stated, cause of action.—Schmid v. Farris, 37 P.2d 596, 169 Okl. 445.

Default judgment is not void on collateral attack, even though petition on which it was rendered did not state a cause of action.

Kan.—Brunbaugh v. Wilson, 107 P. 792, 82 Kan. 53.
Sufficiency on direct attack
Fact that complaint would be insufficient to support judgment when attacked directly does not necessarily make complaint vulnerable to defectively,[36] if the complaint contained sufficient matter to challenge the attention of the court as to its merits.[37] Even the absence of pleadings has been held not to render a judgment void and subject to collateral attack,[38] but there is authority for holding that the judgment will be void and impeachable collaterally if not supported by any pleadings.[39]

It is not ground for collateral attack that the complaint was not verified,[40] or was defectively verified,[41] that there was a misjoinder of causes of action[42] or a splitting of a cause of action,[43] or that the action appeared from the face of the papers to have been barred by the statute of limitations.[44]

§ 431. —— Irregularities in Procedure

Where the jurisdiction of the court has attached, the judgment rendered ordinarily is not subject to collateral attack for irregularities in procedure.

Where it is made to appear that the jurisdiction of the court has attached, and that the court has proceeded in the exercise of that jurisdiction, no irregularity in the subsequent proceedings can avail to avoid or annul the decree rendered on collateral attack,[45] especially if it would be subject to amend-collateral attack.—State v. Cragun, 20 P.2d 247, 81 Utah 457.

Fact that court of record errs in holding petition sufficient, if it has jurisdiction, does not render judgment subject to collateral attack.—Wistrom v. Forsling, 14 N.W.2d 217, 144 Neb. 638—In re Warner's Estate, 288 N.W. 39, 137 Neb. 25—Brandeen v. Lau, 201 N.W. 665, 113 Neb. 34.

ment.[46] Thus it is no ground of collateral objection that the action was tried by the court alone, where it was properly triable by a jury, or vice versa,[47] and the same rule applies to erroneous or irregular action with regard to continuances or adjournments,[48] dismissal,[49] consolidation,[50] amendments,[51] references,[52] change of venue,[53] security for costs,[54] or rulings on motions[55] or on a demurrer.[56]

It has been stated, however, that the mode of procedure, after jurisdiction of the person is obtained, must be in accordance with law, and a clear violation thereof, if fundamental, vitiates the judgment, and subjects it to collateral attack, where the violation is apparent on the face of the record proper.[57]

§ 432. —— Objections to Evidence

A judgment may not be collaterally attacked on the ground that it was based on illegal, inadmissible, or insufficient evidence.

A judgment of a court having jurisdiction cannot be impeached collaterally by showing that the evidence on which it was based was illegal,[58] inadmissible,[59] or insufficient to sustain the judgment.[60] Indeed, the courts have gone so far as to state that a judgment entered in the absence of any evidence is not subject to collateral attack.[61]

A judgment cannot be collaterally impeached because of the erroneous exclusion of evidence.[62]

§ 433. —— Defects in Entry or Contents of Judgment

Mere irregularities in the rendition or entry of judgments, including judgments by confession or consent, are not grounds for collateral attack.

A decree rendered in advance of the period at which the court may lawfully acquire jurisdiction over defendant is subject to collateral attack.[63] However, where no question of jurisdiction is raised, a judgment or decree cannot be collaterally impeached because it was prematurely rendered,[64] or not rendered within the time required by statute,[65] or entered in vacation without consent of the parties,[66] or because it was based on defective findings by the court, or given without any findings at all[67] or is inconsistent with the findings or conclusions of law.[68]

Also a judgment may not be attacked collaterally because it appears from the record or the opinion of the court that there was a mistake, and that the judgment should have been different from that actually rendered,[69] or because of any irregularity in the entry, record, or docketing of the judgment,[70] or for any informality or incompleteness in the judgment itself, provided its defects or omissions are not such as to render it absolutely unintelligible and therefore void for uncertainty;[71] neither can it be urged against a judgment collaterally that it was changed by way of amendment or correction after its entry or after the expiration of the term.[72]

Judgment beyond pleadings and issues. Where the court goes beyond and outside the pleadings and issues and assumes to adjudicate a matter not within the issues made up in the pleadings, and the judgment is to that extent void, as considered supra §§ 49, 50, the judgment may be attacked collat-

erally,[73] at least in default cases.[74] However, it has been held that a judgment or order is not subject to collateral impeachment because it was not warranted by the allegations of the pleadings.[75] A judgment relating to the subject of a proceeding, as stated in the pleadings, is not subject to collateral attack because the pleader has asked for other relief than that which may properly be awarded.[76]

Excessive recovery or relief. Where a judgment is merely erroneous, as considered supra § 54, because it is excessive,[77] either as being greater than the amount demanded,[78] greater than the facts or the evidence would justify,[79] or as improperly including interest,[80] penalties,[81] costs,[82] or counsel fees,[83] or as allowing excessive interest[84] or costs,[85] it may not be impeached in a collateral proceeding.

Judgments by confession or consent. The rule prohibiting the collateral impeachment of judgments for mere errors or irregularities in their entry or rendition applies equally to judgments by confession as to any others,[86] and to judgments entered on consent or agreement.[87] On the other hand, a judgment by confession may be attacked collaterally where the attorney exceeded his authority,[88] where defendant was not bound by the warrant of attorney,[89] where the statement on which it is entered is so essentially defective that the court acquired no jurisdiction or authority to enter the judgment,[90] or where the required affidavit of the execution of the power of attorney is lacking.[91]

§ 434. Fraud, Collusion, or Perjury

a. Fraud and duress
b. Collusion
c. False testimony or perjury

a. Fraud and Duress

A judgment may be collaterally attacked on the ground of fraud where the fraud goes to the jurisdiction of the court.

Where the fraud alleged was inherent in the cause of action, or in the character or procurement of the instrument sued on, it does not furnish a legitimate ground for impeaching the judgment in a collateral proceeding;[92] and there are many decisions stating the broad general rule that, where the court has jurisdiction, it is not permissible for a party or privy to attack a judgment in a collateral proceeding because of fraud,[93] such a judgment being voidable only, and not void.[94]

A judgment obtained by fraud may, however, be void under some circumstances, and subject to collateral attack,[95] as where such fraud appears on

There are two kinds of fraud to be considered: First, the kind of fraud which prevents the court from acquiring jurisdiction or which merely gives it colorable jurisdiction; second, that kind of fraud which occurred in the proceedings of the court after jurisdiction had been obtained, such as perjury, concealment, and other chicanery. The first variety of fraud will invalidate the judgment, while the second class has no such legal effect.—Wood v. First Nat. Extrinsic fraud

(1) Judgments obtained by extrinsic fraud may be attacked collaterally.

(2) Extrinsic fraud such as will render judgment subject to collateral attack is fraud which, rather than going to merits of judgment, has prevented cause from being fully considered on its merits, as by preventing party from attending hearing or from presenting his case fully.

Where fraud is regarded as having been perpetrated on the court as well as on the injured party, the judgment is a mere nullity and may be attacked and defeated because of the fraud in any collateral proceeding in the same court in which it was rendered.—State ex rel. Judgment may be collaterally attacked at subsequent term in court rendering it.—Horne v. Moorehead, 153 So. 668, 169 Miss. 362, overruling suggestion of error 152 So. 495, 169 Miss. 362.

ing a fair opportunity to present his case,[99] or where it gives an undue advantage to the prevailing party,[1] or where the judgment was obtained through corruption of the judge, induced by the opposite party,[2] notwithstanding the court had jurisdiction of the proceedings resulting in the judgment.[3]

Duress and coercion. Judgments obtained through duress and coercion are not necessarily, and in all cases, void and, as such, subject to collateral attack.[4]

b. Collusion

A judgment ordinarily may not be impeached collaterally by a party or privy to the judgment on the ground that it was obtained by means of collusion between the other parties to the action or the attorneys.

A party or privy to a judgment ordinarily is not permitted to impeach it collaterally on the ground that it was obtained by means of collusion between the other parties to the action or the attorneys in the case,[5] although, as considered supra § 414, this may be done by a stranger to the proceeding, when his rights or interests in a subsequent litigation are threatened by the judgment. A judgment procured through the collusion of plaintiff and the city and its agents is subject to collateral attack by a taxpayer whenever it comes into conflict with his rights as a taxpayer,[6] notwithstanding the rule that the taxpayer is in privity with the city.[7]

When the only collusion is a union of the adverse interests, and the facts are fully disclosed to the court having full and complete jurisdiction, there is no fraud and the judgment is binding on collateral attack.[8]

c. False Testimony or Perjury

False testimony or perjury ordinarily is not ground for a collateral attack on the judgment unless the falsity goes to the jurisdiction of the court.

It is no ground for impeaching a judgment collaterally that the testimony on which it was based was false or perjured[9] unless the fraud goes to the

§ 435. Defenses Available in Original Action

A judgment may not be attacked collaterally by setting up any matter which was, or might have been, raised as a defense in the original action.

A judgment cannot be impeached collaterally by setting up any matter which was or might have been raised as a defense in the original action[11] or on appeal.[12] Thus, when proceedings in mandamus are instituted to compel the levy and collection of a tax to pay a judgment against a municipal corporation, the judgment is conclusive as to the existence and validity of the debt, and cannot be controverted as to those facts.[13]

§ 436. In General

a. General rules of construction
b. Aids to construction

a. General Rules of Construction

An ambiguous judgment should be construed as a whole so as, if possible, to give effect to all parts thereof and to effectuate the intent and purpose of the court.

The legal operation and effect of a judgment must be ascertained by a construction and interpretation of its terms,[14] and this presents a question of law for the court.[15] If the language used in a judgment is ambiguous there is room for construction,[16] but if the language employed is plain and unambiguous there is no room for construction or interpretation,[17] and the effect thereof must be declared in the light of the literal meaning of the language used.[18] A court will not construe a judgment or decree in the absence of the assertion of some claim or right to be litigated in a proceeding which the court has jurisdiction to determine, and in which the questioned meaning bears on the question to be determined.[19]

The general rules of construction of written instruments have been held to apply to the construction of judgments.[20] The intention of the court must be determined[21] from all parts of the instrument,[22] and words and clauses thereof should be construed according to their natural and legal import.[23] The judgment must be read in its entirety,[24] and it must be construed as a whole[25] so as to

Court's construction of own judgment

(1) A court has the right to construe and clarify its own judgment.—Hofer v. Hofer, Ohio App., 42 N.E.2d 165.

(2) Construction of own judgment by trial court held conclusive on appeal.—Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Bankers, etc., Tel. Co., 28 N.E. 173, 119 N.Y. 15—Hubbell v. Buhler, 21 N.E. 176, 113 N.Y. 653.

Character of instrument

(1) Decrees are usually to be interpreted in accordance with their true character without much regard to their title.—Hays v. The Georgian, Inc., 181 N.E. 765, 280 Mass. 10, 85 A.L.R. 1251.

(2) Character of decree is determined by particular facts of case and equitable rights of parties.—Sanders v. Sheets, Mo.App., 287 S. W. 1069.

(3) The character of a particular judgment has been determined by construction of the judgment.—Mills Novelty Co. v. Spurdis, Tex.Civ.App., 29 S.W.2d 893, error dismissed.

Ejusdem generis

(1) In construction of judgment, rule of "ejusdem generis" is applicable where enumeration of specific things is followed by some general word or phrase in which case such general word or phrase is held to refer to things of the same kind.—Stevenson v. Record Pub. Co., Tex. Civ.App., 107 S.W.2d 462, error dismissed.

(2) The rule is inapplicable where general words or phrase precedes specific words and when language of judgment wholly fails to indicate intention to limit or qualify general descriptive language.—Stevenson v. Record Pub. Co., supra.

Meaning of undefined terms may be ascertained.—Anderson v. Palladine, 237 P. 758, 72 Cal.App. 433.

Intention as expressed in judgment

(1) Intention as expressed in judgment governs.—Gila Valley Irr. Dist. v. U. S., C.C.A.Ariz., 118 F.2d 507.

(2) The controlling intention of court's judgment is that expressed on its face and not an intention that may be deduced from evidence that court had before it.—Harrison v. Manvel Oil Co., 180 S.W.2d 909, 142 Tex. 669.

Judgments should be liberally construed[31] so as to make them serviceable instead of useless.[32] Necessary legal implications are included although not expressed in terms.[33] In construing a judgment, however, the adjudication should not extend be-

Intention of parties

A judgment which was ambiguous in certain respects due to some oversight or inadvertence either on part of court or counsel in drawing the judgment was to be liberally construed with a view to giving effect to real intention of parties.—Bank of America Nat. yond that which the language used fairly warrants,[34] since the purpose and function of construction is to give effect to that which is already latent in the judgment,[35] and the court may not by construction add new provisions to a judgment which were omitted or withheld in the first instance.[36] In construing judgments the legal effect, rather than the mere language used, governs.[37]

Doubtful or ambiguous judgments are to have a reasonable intendment[38] to do justice and avoid wrong.[39] Where a judgment is susceptible of two interpretations, that one will be adopted which renders it the more reasonable, effective, and conclusive[40] and which makes the judgment harmonize with the facts and law of the case and be such as

A judgment dismissing a complaint or cross complaint is in effect a judgment against the pleader on the claim presented by his pleading.

Ind.—Dickerson v. Dickerson, 10 N.E.2d 424, 104 Ind.App. 686, affirmed on rehearing 11 N.E.2d 514, 104 Ind.App. 686—Smith v. Linton Trust Co., 121 N.E. 92, 68 Ind.App. 691.

Silence

(1) Generally all claims not expressly disposed of are by implication disallowed by a judgment against the party asserting such interests or claims.

La.—Perot's Estate v. Perot, 148 So. 903, 177 La. 640—McMichael v. Thomas, 113 So. 828, 164 La. 233—Williams v. Ralph R. Miller Shows, App., 15 So.2d 249, adhered to 17 So.2d 67, amended 17 So.2d 389—Rains v. Thomason & Champion, 135 So. 92, 17 La.App. 120.

34 C.J. p 502 note 9 [a] (1).

(2) If two causes of action are alleged and put in issue, and judgment awards recovery on one but is silent as to the other, judgment is prima facie an adjudication that plaintiff was not entitled to recover on the other cause.—Keystone Copper Min. Co. v. Miller, Ariz., 164 P.2d 603—34 C.J. p 502 note 9 [a] (6).

(3) Failure of judgment to allow full amount of claim constitutes rejection of balance of claim, as much as though decree expressly so provided.—Merrill v. Louisiana Materials Co., 174 So. 349, 187 La. 259.

(4) Where judgment, in suit against owners of realty for judgment for amount advanced and paid for taxes by plaintiff and for lien and privilege on realty resulting from alleged tax subrogations, was for plaintiff for amount advanced, without any recognition being given to lien and privilege, demands with respect to the lien and privilege must be deemed to have been rejected.—Lacaze v. Hardee, La.App., 7 So.2d 719.

(5) However, judgment for debt without mention of lien does not constitute denial of fact that debt is secured by lien, where no demand was made for recognition of lien.—Perot's Estate v. Perot, 148 So. 903, 177 La. 640.

Time of payment

Where final decree did not fix time for payment, the implication was that payment was to be made forthwith.—Boyer v. Bowles, 54 N.E.2d 925, 316 Mass. 90.

34. La.—Schultz v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 186 So. 49, 191 La. 624.

34 C.J. p 502 note 10.

Absence of ambiguity

Where language of judgment was in the present tense and adjudged that plaintiff's inheritable interest in land "is found to be" an undivided interest, judgment was a determination as to plaintiff's present interest and not merely a determination that at some past time plaintiff inherited an interest therein.—Moore v. Harjo, C.C.A.Okl., 144 F.2d 318.

Correct application of law to facts

When language of decree is susceptible of two constructions, from one of which it follows that law has been correctly applied to facts and from other that law has been incorrectly applied, that construction should be adopted which correctly applies the law.

Grounds for judgment

Where a general judgment may have been based on two or more grounds, one of which would be erroneous, and the others proper, it is presumed that the judgment was based on the proper ground.—Western Paving Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Lincoln County, 81 P.2d 652, 183 Okl. 281.

Judgments of other courts

(1) In construing the judgment of another court of equal rank in the same system, it will be presumed, in the absence of clear expressions to the contrary, that such other court holds the same view of the law on which the judgment is based as that held by the construing court.—Adoue v. Wettermark, 68 S.W. 553, 28 Tex.Civ.App. 593.

(2) Courts in construing final judgments of other courts of competent jurisdiction will not go behind them or question the wisdom thereof.—Burton v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., D.C.Okl., 21 F.Supp. 62.

A judgment must be construed in light of the situation of the court,[44] what was before it,[45] and the accompanying circumstances.[46] In cases of ambiguity or doubt the meaning of the judgment must be determined by that which preceded it and that which it was intended to execute.[47]

A construction adopted or acquiesced in by the parties will not be changed without strong reason.[48]

Abbreviations. In construing a judgment the court may ascertain the meaning of abbreviations used therein.[49]

Party preparing decree. Where a decree is agreed on in open court, the fact that one of the parties prepared the decree does not require it to be construed more strongly against such party.[50]

b. Aids to Construction

In case of doubt or ambiguity a judgment may be construed in the light of the entire judgment roll or record.

As a general rule, the meaning, effect, and legal consequences of a judgment must be ascertained from its own provisions and language, if possible.[51] If, however, the judgment is ambiguous or obscure, or a satisfactory interpretation cannot be determined from the judgment itself,[52] the entire judg-

(3) They must presume that court rendering judgment would render proper judgment within limitations of statute fixing its jurisdiction.—Burton v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., supra.

(2) The full scope and meaning of a judgment is often determined by an examination of the pleadings, verdict, or findings.—Miller v. Madigan, 215 P. 742, 90 Okl. 17.

(3) In determining validity of judgment, resort may be had to judgment roll, or record, which includes the pleadings, and one is not restricted to face of judgment alone.

may be considered on the question of the construction and effect of the judgment,[56] and the judgment may be construed in the light of the opinion,[57] although its intent and effect are not to be determined from isolated passages in the opinion.[58]

Statutes affecting a judgment at the time of its issuance or entry become a part of such judgment and must be read into it as though express provision to that effect were inserted therein.[59]

§ 437. Recitals

Unless contradicted by the record, recitals in a judgment are presumed to be true. An express adjudication, however, prevails over recitals.

Recitals in a judgment are presumed to be true and correct[60] unless contradicted by other parts of the record.[61] Unambiguous recitals have even been held to be conclusive and controlling as to matters which must appear in the judgment entry.[62] Recitals will be construed according to the legal import of the terms used, considering the judgment as a whole,[63] but will not be extended by interpretation beyond that which is expressed or follows by necessary implication from the language employed.[64] Since, as is discussed supra § 71, a judgment rests on the mandatory parts thereof rather than on the recitals therein, express adjudication controls mere recitals.[65]

§ 438. Pleadings

In case of doubt or ambiguity the judgment may be construed in the light of the pleadings.

Where the language of a judgment is ambiguous or its meaning doubtful, reference may be had to the pleadings in the case, and the judgment interpreted in the light which they throw on it.[66] On the other hand, if the meaning of the judgment is clear and plain on its face, it cannot be changed,

Particular recitals construed

(1) Judgment, sending legatees into possession of decedent's estate and declaring it was rendered with inheritance tax collector's approval, showed inheritance taxes were paid. —Tridico v. Merenda, 120 So. 857, 167 La. 1063.

(2) A recital in a state court judgment dismissing action on note in accordance with stipulation referring to stipulation of specified date was merely descriptive of stipulation and not an adjudication of the date when it became effective.—Bair v. Legal effect of judgment is determined from its substance, not recitals therein.—Jacobs v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Soc., 40 P.2d 899, 4 Cal.App.2d 1.

Issues adjudicated

Since recitals of facts in judgment are merely foundational so that error with respect thereto will not vitiate judgment, issues which have been adjudicated must be determined from mandatory portion of judgment, and not recitals of fact.—Blaser v. Clinton Irr. Dist., 53 P.2d 1141, 100 Mont. 459.

Recital as to evidence and law

Where the judgment declares the evidence and law to be in favor of plaintiff, but the decree favors defendant, the decree controls making the judgment one for defendant.—Misita v. Inter-City Express Lines, La.App., 143 So. 677.

Recital as to findings

Pleadings as limiting judgment

On direct attack, judgments other than judgments by agreement are limited and controlled by the pleadings, irrespective of the nature or contents of the judgments.—Downey v. Downey, Tex.Civ.App., 117 S.W.2d 830.

extended, or restricted by anything contained in the pleadings.[67]

§ 439. Verdict or Findings

The judgment should be construed in the light of the verdict of the jury or the findings of the court.

Although it has been held that findings and conclusions of law in a case which are not carried into the judgment therein may not serve to limit the judgment in effect,[68] as a general rule, a judgment should be interpreted with reference to, and in the light of, the verdict of the jury[69] or the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the court or referee,[70] and, if possible, so as to harmonize them.[71] If the judgment is ambiguous or obscure, and fails to express the final determination of the court with clarity and accuracy, reference may be had to the verdict and findings for the purpose of ascertaining what was determined.[72]

The requirement that a judgment conform to the verdict or findings in the case is considered supra §§ 55–58.

§ 440. Parties

a. In general
b. Joint or several liability
c. Operation as between codefendants

a. In General

A judgment which is ambiguous or uncertain with respect to the parties will be construed in the light of the entire judgment roll or record.

If there is ambiguity or uncertainty in a judgment with respect to the party for or against whom it is rendered, or the capacity in which he recovers or is held liable, the judgment will be read in the light of the entire judgment roll or record.[73] Thus, where there are two or more defendants in the action, the pleadings, findings, and other parts of the judgment roll or record may be considered, in case of ambiguity or uncertainty, in determining against which defendant the judgment is rendered.[74] A plural designation will be read as singular, and vice versa, if necessary to make the judgment agree with the facts and law of the case.[75] Where a judgment provides for the payment of money to a particular person, it means to such person or to anyone whom he may legally and properly authorize to act for him.[76]

In case of several defendants who are jointly and severally liable, a judgment in favor of plaintiff without indication of which defendant it is intended to run against will be construed as being an award against all the defendants.[77] Also a judgment against a named defendant "et al." or "et als." includes all defendants in the action.[78]

A judgment will in general bind a party only in the capacity in which he appears in the action and is designated in the judgment,[79] and even though he is not described in the judgment in that capacity.[80] However, a judgment against a named person, administrator of a named deceased, is an individual judgment against the former, where it does not appear that the judgment is to be satisfied out of the estate of deceased.[81] In a suit by an attorney in fact, a judgment for defendant is a judgment against the attorney in fact.[82]

Persons not parties are not affected by the judgment.[83]

b. Joint or Several Liability

In the absence of express directions to the contrary, a judgment entered against two or more defendants jointly is a joint and several obligation, available against either of the judgment debtors separately.

In the absence of express directions to the contrary, a judgment entered against two or more defendants jointly is a joint and several obligation, available against either of the judgment debtors separately.[84] However, there is also authority that in the absence of a contrary indication each of the defendants is liable only for his proportionate share of the judgment obligation.[85] If a separate judgment is rendered against each of the defendants for a different amount, the judgments cannot be regarded as imposing a joint and several liability.[86]

c. Operation as between Codefendants

As a general rule a judgment against two or more defendants decides nothing as to their rights or liabilities inter sese.

As a general rule a judgment against two or more defendants decides nothing as to their rights or liabilities inter sese, but only their liability to plaintiff.[87]

Relief between codefendants is considered supra § 37.

tended to be decided,[89] and the scope of the judgment is not to be extended beyond the issues raised in the case, or the state of facts and situation of the parties existing at the time of the action.[90] If there is ambiguity in the judgment, the entire record may be examined to determine the issues decided.[91]

A judgment is to be construed as disposing of all the issues and controversies raised in the case,[92] unless questions are reserved or leave given to the parties to take further proceedings, in which case the unadjudicated matters are left entirely open, except in so far as their determination in a particular way would be inconsistent with the general tenor of the original judgment.[93]

§ 442. Recovery and Relief

A judgment which is ambiguous with respect to the amount of the recovery or the relief granted may be construed in the light of the other parts of the record, but it should not be construed as granting more than prayed for in the complaint.

If the judgment is ambiguous or silent as to the amount of the recovery or the relief granted, reference may be had to the pleadings, the verdict, findings, and other parts of the record, and the judgment will be presumed to be in accordance with what they show to be due.[94] It has been held, how-

General judgment

(1) Judgment for one party generally involves finding in his favor on all issues.—In re Evans' Estate, 291 N.W. 460, 228 Iowa 908.

(2) Recital that issues are found for plaintiff or defendant implies, in absence of evidence to contrary, that all issues are so found.—Sessa v. Barney, 37 A.2d 233, 130 Conn. 718.

Issues raised by complaint

In the absence of proof, it will be assumed that a litigation involved everything alleged in the complaint and that an adjudication covered the whole ground of the complaint.—In re Straut, 27 N.E. 259, 126 N.Y. 201—Jacob v. Oyster Bay, 96 N.Y.S. 626, 109 App.Div. 626.

Plea in abatement

A judgment in favor of plaintiff in a case tried on the merits was held to overrule a plea in abatement which was by agreement heard with the trial of the case on the merits.—U. S. Fire Ins. Co. v. Adams, Tex. Civ.App., 115 S.W.2d 788.

Determination of amount

In suit by remaindermen to assert right in land sold for taxes, judgment for rents and certain other amount for improvements, taxes, and interest will be construed to require rents to be deducted from the other item to determine amount due from plaintiffs.—Jones v. Fowler, 285 S.W. 363, 171 Ark. 594.

Judgment general in form

Where first count of petition was based on breach of contract and second count on quantum meruit for services rendered, and plaintiff abandoned first count and submitted case to jury on second count, judgment for plaintiff, although general in form, was deemed to have been based on second count.—Pemberton v. Ladue Realty & Construction Co., 180 S.W.2d 766, 237 Mo.App. 971.

Defendant's demands

(1) A judgment that cross complainants take nothing by their cross action was held not limited by a further provision in the disjunctive that they take nothing for reconvention for damages.—Ware v. Jones, Tex. Com.App., 250 S.W. 663.

(2) Where a set-off is pleaded as a defense to an action, a judgment for defendant is in effect a judgment for the amount of the set-off.—Shriver v. Bowen, 57 Ind. 266.

ever, that, in order to determine the extent of the relief awarded by a judgment, the judgment only may be looked to, aided by other instruments to which it refers,[95] and that the final judgment or decree itself is the only measure of the obligation of the defendants thereunder.[96]

The judgment should be construed, if possible, as not awarding more or other relief than was prayed for in the complaint,[97] or as granting relief beyond the power of the court to award.[98] A decree directing the sale of premises unless a specified sum is paid within a limited time is not to be construed as a personal decree for the payment of the money, but as in the alternative.[99] Where a judgment provides for periodical payments in the future, as long as a given relation or state of affairs continues, the amounts due from time to time may be fixed by successive applications to the court.[1]

§ 443. Conflict in Record

In general a conflict in the judgment record will be resolved in favor of the validity of the judgment. Provisions of the judgment itself usually prevail over other parts of the record.

It has been broadly stated that any doubt or ambiguity in the record should be resolved in favor of the validity of the judgment or decree.[2] In other words, where there is a conflict or inconsistency between statements in different parts of a judgment record, that one will govern which will sustain the validity and correctness of the judgment, when it is apparent from the face of the record that the other statement is a clerical error.[3] In case of conflict between provisions of a judgment, the first part thereof will be construed in the light of subsequent provisions.[4] Where there is a variance between an express provision of a judgment and the prayer for judgment brought into the judgment by reference, the former prevails.[5]

As between the judgment and other parts of the record, the terms of the judgment prevail over entries made by the clerk;[6] a formal judgment enrolled in the minutes of the court prevails over bench notes[7] or the judge's trial docket;[8] and jurisdictional recitals[9] and other declarations in the judgment[10] prevail over file marks on papers in the case. Jurisdictional recitals also prevail over a de-

Judgments construed together

(1) In order to determine what has been decided in a cause, all of the orders and judgments entered therein must be construed together. —Wilson v. Foster Creek Lumber & Mfg. Co., 99 So. 437, 134 Miss. 880.

(2) In determining whether probate court construed testator's will, both homestead order and decree of distribution, entered on same day as the homestead order, would be required to be considered, since both decrees were made at the same session of the court, regarding the same general subject matter and were intended to and did operate to make disposition of the estate as far as could be done at any time prior to the death of the testator's widow who was bequeathed the income from the testator's estate for life.—In re Taylor's Estate, 2 A.2d 317, 110 Vt. 80.

(3) Decree in taxpayer's suit enjoining town from levying taxes or expending moneys because of paving contract or lien certificates and decree in consolidated suit by town whereby chancellor refused to enjoin assignee of paving contract from suing thereon at law were required to be construed together and to confine such assignee to suing at law for reasonable worth of paving.—Town of Boca Raton v. Unambiguous order

A formal written order allowing fees to a receiver's attorney and reserving to trial court the right to consider any additional allowance was not ambiguous so as to be governed by minute order allowing fees for the calendar year and reserving to trial court the right to fix future fees for future services.—Mortimer v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co., 145 P.2d 733, 62 Nev. 147.

Date of rendition

Where no minute entry appeared

fective proof of service filed with the judgment roll,[11] although a mere recital that the court has jurisdiction contrary to what is shown by the record is insufficient to confer jurisdiction.[12] It has also been held that, where a recital or statement in a judgment constituting a mere conclusion directly conflicts with the record proper, the latter prevails.[13] Accordingly a judgment reciting that defendant admitted allegations in the complaint to be true,[14] or reciting the granting of a motion for judgment on the pleadings,[15] or purporting to have been entered on the verdict of a jury,[16] does not prevail over a record which discloses that such was not the case.

A recital in a judgment overruling a demurrer that the demurrer came on regularly to be heard has been held not to nullify an entry in the record showing that the demurrer was not filed until several terms after the pleading was opened to demurrer, the recital being considered as not in conflict with the record entry.[17] Similarly a recital in a judgment that defendant filed his demurrer to the complaint and that "said demurrers be and they are hereby dismissed" has been held not to change the fact shown by the record that the demurrer was addressed to each count in the complaint separately, and not to the complaint as a whole.[18] There is no inconsistency between a formal judgment dismissing a cause with prejudice and a minute entry reciting that the motion to dismiss is granted.[19]

Where the record contains two judgments, the last in point of time must be treated as the true and final judgment, and the other disregarded,[20] although there is authority to the effect that, where a judgment is entered and signed as of a certain date, a second judgment entry will be vacated, leaving the record of the case as originally authenticated to stand.[21]

As between different entries, an entry in the record book[22] or an entry in an appearance docket[23] has been held to prevail over an entry in the judgment docket. As between an entry in an order book and an original petition which is on file, the entry in the order book is controlling.[24]

Matters not properly a part of the record do not overthrow a judgment entry.[25]

B. OPERATION AND EFFECT

§ 444. In General

The operation and effect of a judgment are purely matters of law, and as a general rule a judgment does not directly affect the title to property.

The operation and effect of a judgment are purely matters of law[26] and are not affected by an un-in record showing when judgment was rendered, statement in written judgment, signed by trial judge, that he rendered judgment on a specified date is accepted as true, notwithstanding filing mark showed that written judgment was not filed until a later date.—Mosher v. Dye, 39 P.2d 639, 44 Ariz. 555.

Final judgment

(1) Use of term "judgment" ordinarily implies a "final judgment." —Hazzard v. Alexander, 178 A. 873, 6 W.W.Harr.,Del., 512.

(2) Final and interlocutory judgments distinguished see supra § 8.

"Adversary proceeding"

Proceeding instituted by order of supreme court for purpose of enabling court to inform itself on questions arising under statute providing for integration of state bar was not derstanding of the court or parties.[27] Although a judgment may in certain circumstances operate to create a title to property, or to transfer the title,[28] as a general rule judgments do not directly affect the title to property.[29] A money judgment does not give the judgment creditor an estate or interest in the judgment debtor's land,[30] although it may give him the right to have the land appropriated to the satisfaction of the judgment.[31] Every unsatisfied judgment is necessarily a liability.[32]

The doctrine of res judicata is discussed infra §§ 592–848.

§ 445. Conflicting Judgments

It is generally held that, of two conflicting judgments on the same rights of the parties, the one which is later in time will prevail.

Where there have been two former actions in which the claim or demand, fact or matter sought to be religated has been decided contrarily, the rule that, where there is an estoppel against an estoppel, it "setteth the matter at large" has been applied by some authorities, and in such case both parties may assert their claims anew.[33] Other authorities have held that, of two conflicting judgments on the same rights of the same parties, the one which is later in time will prevail,[34] although it has also been held that the judgment prior in time will prevail.[35] It has been held that a decision of a court of last resort is binding on the parties, although afterward, in another cause, a different principle was declared.[36]

"Contradictory judgment." In Louisiana this term is used to designate a judgment given after the parties have been heard, either in support of their claims or in their defense, as distinguished from a judgment by default.[37]

§ 446. Time of Taking Effect

A judgment generally takes effect on the rights and titles of the parties to the action as they exist at the time of the rendition of the judgment.

With respect to the rights and titles of the parties to an action, it is generally held that a judgment an "adversary proceeding," and effect of judgment is limited by nature of proceeding.—Integration of the Bar Case, 12 N.W.2d 699, 244 Wis. 8, 151 A.L.R. 586.

Statutory judgments

Presumption of merger or vacation

Where two judgments of the same purport are rendered in the same case at the same term of court, it will be presumed that the first judgment merged in the second or was constructively vacated by it, and in such case the first judgment will not sustain a plea of res judicata.—Johnson v. Hesser, 35 N.W. 894, 61 Neb. 631.

35. Tex.—Witty v. Rose, Civ.App., 148 S.W.2d 962, error dismissed.

New trial

Where a record showed two inconsistent verdicts and judgments in the same case, a new trial having been had without setting aside the first verdict and judgment, it was held that the proceedings subsequent to the entry thereof should be reversed on error.—Conrad v. Commercial Mut. Ins. Co., 81* Pa. 66.

takes effect on them as they exist at the time of the rendition thereof, and not as they existed at the commencement of the suit or before that time.[38] It has been variously held that a judgment becomes operative and effective when it is entered,[39] or when it is announced[40] or signed,[41] even though the judgment is not entered until a later date.[42] It has been held that a judgment does not become final until the end of the term during which it is rendered.[43]

The presumption, discussed supra § 113, that a judgment rendered during a term is presumed to have been rendered on the first day of the term will not be applied so as to cut off intervening rights acquired in good faith[44] or where it will not promote the ends of justice,[45] and it is not to be allowed to prevail over the substantial equities of third persons.[46]

§ 447. Conditions and Alternative Provisions

The party claiming the benefit of a judgment must comply with any terms and conditions which it may impose on him.

The party who claims the benefit of a judgment rendered in his favor must comply with any terms or conditions which it may impose on him, and failure to do so will destroy the effect of the adjudication.[47] Where the judgment is in the alternative, granting defendant an option to do a specified act or suffer judgment for a designated sum, his election eliminates the alternative, and is binding on both parties.[48]

Presumption is judgment is payable immediately, unless contrary appears.—Barber v. Warland, 247 N.Y.S. 455, 139 Misc. 398.

Time for rehearing

(1) Generally judgments and decrees are effective from date of entry thereof for most purposes, but such rule is inapplicable to judgments and decrees of supreme court of appeals during thirty-day period within which petitions for rehearing may be filed, particularly where order or decree is self-executing in its nature.—Shields v. Statutory change between dates of announcement and entry

In action to review order of state department of social security denying applicant his claim for old age assistance where trial court on Febr. 21, 1939, orally announced its decision in favor of claimant but did not sign and enter judgment until March 24, 1939, and existing old age assistance law was amended on Febr. 25, 1939, the amending act became effective prior to entry of judgment and hence was controlling of method and amount of assistance.—Adams v. Ernst, 95 P.2d 799, 1 Wash.2d 254.

Judgment is "entered" when it is signed by the court and delivered to the clerk for filing, and clerk's failure to perform the ministerial act of entering the filing of the judgment on the appearance docket or spreading the judgment on the journal would not affect the validity of the judgment or invalidate sale thereunder.—Cinebar Coal & Coke Co. v. § 448. Extraterritorial Operation

A judgment does not have extraterritorial effect.

Judgments of courts of a sister state or of a foreign country may be entitled to recognition by a domestic court, but they have no extraterritorial operation or effect as judgments.[49] No court may enforce its process beyond the limits of the sovereignty which ordained and established such court.[50]

§ 449. Void and Voidable Judgments

A void judgment is a nullity, but a voidable judgment is as operative as a valid judgment until properly set aside.

A void judgment is one that has merely the semblance of a judgment without some essential element or elements on which its validity as such depends.[51] It is only jurisdictional defects which render a judgment void; mere irregularities or errors in the exercise of jurisdiction may or may not render the judgment reversibly erroneous, or voidable, but they do not render it void.[52] A judgment is void on its face when that fact appears affirmatively from inspection of the judgment roll,[53] and it has been held that a judgment is void only where the invalidity appears on the face of the record.[54]

A judgment which is void, as distinguished from one which is merely voidable, or liable to be vacated

Accounting by plaintiff

Under judgment which provided that on defendant's failure to pay a certain sum within ninety days plaintiff would be entitled to decree, and which required an accounting by plaintiff as trustee, plaintiff was not entitled to decree on ground that defendant had not made an unconditional deposit to credit of plaintiff, where plaintiff was not ready to account and where in accordance with suggestion of plaintiff's attorney defendant deposited amount required in escrow and attorney was advised of such deposit.—Adams v. Bloom, 142 P.2d 775, 61 Cal.App.2d 94.

Essentials of validity of judgment see supra §§ 13–22.

Curable defects

Mere irregularity is amendable and is cured by judgment, and anything which, if objected to, could have been amended does not render judgment void.—Gray v. Riley, 170 S.E. 537, 47 Ga.App. 348.

Judgment based on unconstitutional statute

Where the unconstitutionality of a statute goes only to the merits of the cause of action and not to the jurisdiction of the court, a judgment in a civil suit based thereon is not a "void judgment" but merely an "erroneous judgment" and remains effective until regularly set aside or reversed.—Commonwealth of Massachusetts v. Davis, 168 S.W.2d 216, 140 Tex. 398, certiorari denied Davis v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 63 S.Ct. 1447, 320 U.S. 210, 87 L.Ed. 1848, rehearing denied 64 S.Ct. 31, 320 U.S. 811, 88 L.Ed. 490.

Judgment violative of statute or constitution

Where a judgment or any part thereof clearly violates the plain provisions of the constitution or statutes, such judgment or the part thereof that is in direct conflict with the constitution or statutes is to that extent void and cannot be enforced.—City of Norman v. Van Camp, 209 P. 925, 87 Okl. 182.

Okl.—Bradshaw v. Tinker, 264 P. 162, 129 Okl. 244.

34 C.J. p 510 note 23.

Recital of service of process

Where citation was served on defendant in original suit, judgment was not void on its face because it did not recite service of process and purported only to be judgment by confession of attorney and petition was not verified and no power of attorney to confess judgment was filed or its contents recited in judgment, where record showed that citation to defendant was duly issued and properly returned showing service, and officer's return was not successfully impeached.—Johnson v. or set aside for irregularity or other cause, or reversed for error, is a mere nullity[55] and has no force or effect.[56] It is not binding on anyone;[57] it raises no lien[58] or estoppel;[59] and it does not impair or affect the rights of anyone.[60] It confers no rights on the party in whose favor it is given, and affords no protection to persons acting under it;[61] and it does not even operate as a discontinu-

§ 450. —— Partial Invalidity

A judgment is wholly void where it is void in part and the part which is void is not separable, but it is generally held that the fact that a judgment is void in part will not invalidate a separable remainder of the judgment.

A judgment is wholly void where it is void in part and the part which is void is not separable and divisible from the balance.[71] It has been said that a judgment must be either valid or void as a whole,[72] and that a judgment cannot be bad in part and good in part, but is wholly void if void in part.[73] On the other hand, it has generally been held that a judgment may be valid in part and void in part[74] where the parts which are valid and void are separable;[75] the fact that part of the judgment is void does not necessarily invalidate the entire judgment,[76] nor does the fact that part of the judgment is valid validate the portion of the judgment that is void.[77] The court may treat the void part of the judgment as erroneous surplusage which may be disregarded, leaving the remainder of the judgment standing.[78] Where a judgment declares a personal liability, and also determines rights in property, the judgment may be good as a personal judgment, although bad in so far as it affects the property,[79] or it may be good as to the property involved and void as a personal judgment.[80] As to jurisdiction of the subject matter, it seems that, although the judgment may go beyond the issues and grant relief not asked for, or not within the competence of the court, yet it may be good for as much as the court had power and authority to include in it.[81] It has been held that a judgment in excess of the relief authorized is void only as to the excess.[82] The validity of a judgment which is void as to some of the parties is discussed supra §§ 31, 33.

§ 451. —— Validating Void Judgment

Generally, a void judgment cannot be validated and made operative, even by legislative or judicial action.

It has been held that the validity of a judgment is to be determined as of the date of its rendition, and, if void then, it remains so forever;[83] it is not validated and made operative by the lapse of time,[84] by subsequent proceedings based on the judgment,[85] by afterward supplying the elements which were lacking to its validity,[86] or by resulting equities in favor of third persons.[87] A void judgment cannot be made valid and operative by judicial action,[88] such as its subsequent approval by the judge,[89] by his approval of a sale on execution held under it,[90] by a subsequent proceeding instituted for that purpose,[91] by citing the party against whom it was entered to show cause why it should not be declared valid,[92] by a revival of the judgment,[93] or

Receivership

The court having jurisdiction to appoint a receiver for a corporation and place its assets in his hands and order sale thereof by him, as was done, such part of the proceedings were not invalidated by any invalidity in the part of the judgment dissolving the corporation, as being beyond the court's power under the pleadings and facts.—Yount v. Personal judgment

As much of a judgment of separation against a nonresident served by publication as decrees that, on personal notice to defendant or on such notice as the court shall direct, plaintiff may apply for her alimony and expenses payable out of his real and personal property within the state, must be reversed where no jurisdiction of the property was obtained by seizure before judgment and the portion of the decree appointing a receiver of such property and giving directions to him falls with it.—Matthews v. Costs

Where cost bill was not filed in time, inclusion in judgment of amount claimed in bill rendered judgment to that extent contrary to law.—Openshaw v. Openshaw, 12 P. 2d 364, 80 Utah 9.

Interest

The entry of judgment by confession in the amount confessed, plus interest from date of note set forth in statement, was unauthorized, but invalidated judgment only to the extent of the amount of interest included.—Keller v. Greenstone, 2 N. Y.S.2d 977, 253 App.Div. 573.

by the taking of an appeal from it, or even by an affirmance on appeal.[94] A void judgment cannot be cured and validated by a subsequent legislative enactment.[95]

§ 452. —— Ratification and Estoppel

While a void judgment cannot be validated by consent, ratification, waiver, or estoppel, one may, by his conduct, bar or estop himself from attacking the judgment.

Generally, a void judgment cannot be made valid by ratification, waiver, consent, or estoppel.[96] However, one may by his conduct bar or estop himself from attacking a void judgment,[97] and, as discussed infra § 453, one who accepts or shares in the benefits of a void judgment may be estopped from attacking it. One is estopped to attack as void a judgment which he has set up as a bar or defense to a subsequent action.[98] He is also estopped by a compromise and satisfaction of his liability under the judgment.[99] It has been held that one who makes payments on a judgment with knowledge of its defects cannot attack the judgment.[1]

It has generally been held that one who with full knowledge of the facts and after legal notice fails to interpose timely objection to the rendition of a judgment affecting his rights adversely will be held to have acquiesced therein and to have waived any right to object thereto unless the judgment is void or the circumstances show fraud, mistake, duress, or coercion.[2] Mere acquiescence in a judgment does not necessarily constitute a ratification thereof,[3] and still less can this result follow where the party affected moves to set it aside or moves for a new trial.[4]

§ 453. Acceptance by Prevailing Party of Part of Judgment

One may not attack a judgment as void where he has accepted the benefits of the judgment.

It has been held that a party is barred or estopped from attacking a judgment as void where he accepts or shares in the fruits or benefits of the judgment.[6] A party who successfully opposes an objection made by the adverse party that the court has no jurisdiction cannot question the jurisdiction after an adverse decision on appeal.[7]

XIV. LIEN OF JUDGMENT

A judgment lien on real property does not exist at common law and is a creature of statute.

At common law, in accordance with the policy of the feudal law introduced into England after the conquest,[8] the lands of a debtor were not liable to the satisfaction of a judgment against him, except for debts due the king,[9] and consequently no lien thereon is acquired under a judgment.[10] In England this common-law rule continued in force until the passage in 1285 of the Statute of Westminster II (13 Edward I), by which, in the interest of trade and commerce, the writ of elegit was for the first time provided for,[11] and by construction of the courts it was held under this act that the judgment was a lien on such lands from the date of its rendition on the first day of the term of the court at which it was rendered.[12] As a result of this act,[13] and also in some states as a result of the act of parliament of 5 George II c 7, subjecting lands in the colonies to execution as chattels in favor of British merchants,[14] the modern judgment lien has been developed, the Statute of Westminster having been substantially adopted in several jurisdictions in the United States at an early date.[15]

The judgment lien as it exists to-day is a creature of statutes which in express terms or by necessary implication give judgments such effect,[16]

Exercise of functions of judge under void judgment
In an action by removed county judge against a county judge on defendant's appointment to, and plaintiff's removal from, such office by a judgment of district court, subsequently reversed, defendant was estopped to deny validity of the judgment of district court, although the latter was without jurisdiction of the subject-matter, where that judgment was the source of authority under which defendant county judge executed the duties and enjoyed the benefits of that office.—Lowe v. and, in the absence of such a statute, a lien does not arise as the result of a judgment before an execution has been delivered to an officer authorized to execute it.[17] Accordingly, the terms and legal effect of the statute are controlling with respect to the existence of a judgment lien[18] and with respect to the rights of the judgment creditor under such a lien.[19] Generally speaking, a statute making provision for a judgment lien is construed strictly.[20]

§ 455. Nature of Lien

The lien of a judgment does not constitute or create an estate, interest, or right of property in real property subject to the lien; usually the lien is not a lien on specific real property of the judgment debtor, but is a general lien on all his real property.

It has been stated broadly that a judgment lien, which is a matter of public record, has always been regarded as the highest form of security to a creditor.[21] Usually, however, the lien of a judgment does not constitute or create an estate, interest, or right of property in the lands which may be bound for its satisfaction; it gives merely a right to levy on such lands to the exclusion of adverse interests subsequent to the judgment;[22] and the rule applies even where the judgment is declared a specific lien on a particular piece of property.[23] In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, until the real property subject to the lien is actually seized,[24] or, in some jurisdictions, until sale under execution and execution of the deed pursuant thereto,[25] the judgment debtor may continue in undisturbed possession, with full power to use such real property, and he may sell or otherwise dispose of it.[26] The lien is not a conveyance within the meaning of the

Lands held jointly or as tenants in common

A person entitled to the benefit of a judgment lien does not acquire an estate in, or become a joint owner of, lands held by the judgment debtor and a third person as joint owners or tenants in common. —Hargett v. Hovater, 15 So.2d 276, 244 Ala. 646.

Rights of some description

Rights of some sort vest in judgment creditor when his judgment lien attaches to realty, legal title to which is in judgment debtor, since prima facie legal title is evidence of beneficial interest also until contrary is established.—Smith v. Pattishall, 176 So. 568, 127 Fla. 474, 129 Fla. 498.

recording acts,[27] but it is an encumbrance for certain purposes.[28]

A judgment lien ordinarily is not a specific lien on any specific real property of the judgment debtor, but it is a general lien on all his real property,[29] although it has been held that, where mortgaged premises have been sold under a judgment junior to the mortgage and the time for redemption has not expired, the general lien of the judgment is turned into a specific lien on the premises, to the extent of the amount of the bid at the sheriff's sale and the interest thereon.[30] It has also been held that in a scire facias against the heir and a terre-tenant, on a judgment against the ancestor, a judgment entered generally, without specifying the lands which it is to affect, binds only the lands of the ancestor in the hands of such heir or terre-tenant,[31] and, if a judgment against executors for a legacy charged on land is entered against the land of certain only of the devisees, and the land of another devisee is sold on execution issued on such judgment, it will not pass by such sale.[32]

The lien of a judgment is merely an incident of the judgment,[33] and may not exist independently of the judgment;[34] nor does the loss of the lien necessarily impair the validity of the judgment as a personal security.[35] The lien of a judgment creditor on real property is a legal lien,[36] and is a right as distinguished from a remedy.[37]

The lien of a judgment is usually regarded as arising from the right to sell property thereunder,[38] and in general there is no lien where the right to sell may not be exercised.[39] In some jurisdictions, however, a judgment lien stands by itself and is not necessarily coextensive with the remedy by execution in the sense that it lies whenever execution may issue.[40] A judgment lien on land attached in the suit in which the judgment was rendered is not regarded as a mere continuance of the attachment.[41] The lien created by a mortgage or deed of trust has been distinguished from a judgment lien in that the former is confined to the specific land described in the mortgage or deed of trust, whereas a judgment lien covers every piece or parcel of land owned by the judgment debtor,[42] and the fact that a judgment lien is merely incidental to the judgment has been regarded as important in distinguishing such a lien from the lien of a mortgage.[43] The term "judicial mortgage" is, however, sometimes applied to a final or definite judgment, when duly recorded.[44]

Lien of verdict. Under a statute providing that a verdict may constitute a lien on real property and directing the verdict to be entered in the judgment docket, the lien of a verdict partakes of the nature of a judgment lien.[45]

§ 456. Control of Lien

Judgment liens, as creatures of statutes, are subject to the control of the legislature, but generally speaking are not subject to control or regulation by the courts.

Since the lien of a judgment is entirely the creature of statute, as shown supra § 454, it may be withheld or divested by the legislature at any time before rights have become vested thereunder,[46] and its character and extent, the nature or identity of the property to which it attaches, the steps necessary to secure it, and the means of enforcement are under the control of the legislature[47] and usually cannot be prescribed or regulated by the court pronouncing or rendering the judgment,[48] or by the court which is called on to enforce the lien.[49] So, also, as a general rule, the nature or extent of the lien or the property which shall be subject thereto may not be regulated or prescribed by the agreement of parties;[50] but it seems that the general lien of a judgment may by agreement be limited to specific lands.[51]

§ 457. Amount of Lien

In general a judgment lien is for a definite amount, unaffected by contingencies, or by changes in the value of the property subject to the lien.

A judgment lien is for a definite amount, and is not dependent on any contingency, or affected by changes in the value of the property to which it attaches.[52] As a general rule, a judgment may operate as a lien to the extent of the amount recovered in the judgment,[53] but not for a greater amount.[54] The interest accruing on a judgment recovered, in the absence of a statute authorizing it to be collected on execution, has been held not to become a lien on land until it is included in a fresh judgment;[55] but under statutes in some jurisdictions it has been held that the lien of a judgment covers the interest which may accrue on the judgment as well as on the principal debt.[56]

Costs. In some jurisdictions it has been held that the costs of the proceedings are included in the judgment lien.[57]

§ 458. What Judgments Create Lien

As a general rule, in order to create a judgment lien, there must be a judgment which is final, valid, and subsisting, rendered by a duly constituted court for the payment of a definite and certain amount of money which may be collected by execution on property of the judgment debtor.

It is essential to the creation of a judgment lien that there shall be a judgment[58] and it is essential,

Sufficiency

(1) An abstract of judgment which named G W A as defendant created a lien against land belonging to G M A, when identity of parties was fully established.—Mullins v. Albertson, Tex.Civ.App., 136 S.W.2d 263, error refused.

(2) A judgment against J Mc is not a lien against property held in name of J J Mc.—Union Trust Co. v. McCarthy, 10 Pa.Dist. & Co. 243, 76 Pittsb.Leg.J. 262, 15 West.Co. 92.

(3) Judgment merely reciting jury's findings that plaintiff was en-

under the authorities, that the judgment be final,[59] valid and subsisting,[60] and rendered by a lawfully and validly constituted court,[61] for the payment of a definite and certain sum of money,[62] capable of collection by execution against the debtor's property.[63] Where these conditions have been met, the lien may arise from a judgment by confession or consent as well as one rendered adversely,[64] or from a final judgment by default.[65]

The lien of a judgment against an executor or administrator is discussed in Executors and Administrators § 804, and the lien of a judgment against an insane person in Insane Persons § 151 e.

Judgment for costs. A final judgment of a court of record may be a lien on the debtor's land, even though the money judgment is for costs only.[66]

§ 459. —— Decrees in Equity

A decree in equity may create a lien on lands.

A decree in chancery may create a lien on lands equally with a judgment at law,[67] where it is for the payment of a definite and liquidated sum of money.[68] A decree merely setting aside a fraudulent conveyance of land without more does not give rise to a lien,[69] and a decree of foreclosure of a mortgage does not, like an ordinary judgment at law, create a general lien on the lands of the mortgagor, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Mortgages § 701, also 42 C.J. p 164 note 2.

While, in some jurisdictions, the court of chancery may not, in the absence of fraud or imposition, directly or indirectly impose the debt involved in a general judgment as a lien on the real property involved,[70] according to some cases, equity may create a lien directly by decree for that purpose[71] on personalty as well as on realty,[72] and all persons having notice of such a lien are bound thereby.[73] A decree providing that, if defendant does not in a given time pay plaintiff a designated sum of money, certain real and personal property of defendant, on which plaintiff has a specific lien, shall be sold is not a judgment which creates a lien on other real estate of defendant.[74] titled to described personalty and damages for its detention and directing execution created no lien thereon, in view of the fact that actually there was no judgment against any party or parties, in favor of any party or parties.—Reed v. Bank of Mulberry, 149 So. 609, 111 Fla. 577.

(4) Order approving borrowing by administrator for benefit of decedent's estate did not operate as a judgment lien against which statute of limitations would run, but simply determined amount due to lender, as step in the orderly administration of the estate pending final settlement and closing thereof.—In re Marsh's Estate, 139 P.2d 284, 18 Wash.2d 308.

Judgments or decrees specifically creating liens

Statute providing that judgments and decrees of courts of record shall be liens on real property does not apply to judgments and decrees which specifically create liens on real property, but only to judgments in personam.—Rosensweig v. Ferguson, 158 S.W.2d 124, 348 Mo. 1144.

Installment payments for indefinite period

Judgment for periodic installments for an indefinite time was not a lien on real property in the absence of a provision in judgment for a lien. —Yager v. Yager, 60 P.2d 422, 7 Cal. 2d 213, 106 A.L.R. 664—Bird v. Murphy, 256 P. 258, 82 Cal.App. 691, certiorari denied Murphy v. Bird, 48 S.Ct. 38, 275 U.S. 487, 72 L. § 460. —— Organization and Character of Court Judgments of a court of record may create a lien, whether or not the court is one of original jurisdiction.

The incident of a lien commonly attaches to the judgments of all courts of record,[75] whether or not the particular court is one of original jurisdiction.[76] Judgments of inferior courts do not in the first instance create liens under some statutes,[77] but provision is frequently made by statute for the transfer of such judgments by transcript to superior courts for the purpose of constituting such judgments liens, as discussed infra § 462, and under some statutes judgments of inferior courts operate as liens.[78]

§ 461. Statutory Requirements in General

There must be due compliance with statutory requirements in order to create a judgment lien.

Since judgment liens are the creatures of statutes, as discussed supra § 454, they can be obtained only by complying with the requirements of the statutes by which they are created.[79] While in general such statutes must be construed strictly,[80] they must be given full meaning that the language employed reasonably imports,[81] and it has been held necessary and sufficient to comply substantially with the provisions of the statutes.[82]

a. In General

Under some statutes a judgment lien does not attach unless a certified transcript, abstract, or certificate of the judgment is recorded or filed in a designated office.

Under some statutes the lien of a judgment does not attach to any real property unless a transcript, abstract, or certificate of the judgment or a transcript of the docket has been recorded[83] or has been

Indexing writ of scire facias

(1) Under a statute regulating scire facias to extend the lien of a judgment to after-acquired real property and providing that all such writs shall be properly indexed in the judgment docket, it was held that the writ was not effective to extend the lien to after-acquired property where the writ was not indexed.—Philadelphia Plumbing Supply Co. v. D'Appollo, 20 Pa.Dist. & Co. 21.

Purpose and effect of statute

(1) The purpose of statutes providing for the creation of a lien on real estate by recording a certified transcript of a judgment or decree is to establish and attach liens under judgments or decrees in cases in which no specific statutory or contract lien is the basis of the judgment or decree, and not to abrogate or destroy a lien which has become merged in a judgment or decree.—Nassau Realty Co. v. City of Jacksonville, 198 So. 581, 144 Fla. 754.

(2) The requirement of such statute with respect to recording the transcript does not apply to judgments enforcing liens theretofore existing as against specific property, such as decrees in foreclosure of statutory or contract liens.—Nassau Realty Co. v. City of Jacksonville, supra.

filed[84] in the proper office, after being certified by the clerk of the court wherein the judgment was rendered,[85] and some statutes require that the recorded abstract shall be indexed in order to create a lien.[86] On due compliance with statutory provisions of this type, the lien attaches[87] to property in the county in which it is filed.[88] The clerk's certificate authenticating an abstract need not be recorded where the statute does not so require.[89] It has been held that a certificate of a judgment lien is not invalid because it includes two distinct judgments.[90]

Filing transcripts of judgments in other courts in general is discussed supra § 129.

b. Judgments of Inferior Courts

Some statutes require the filing or recording in a superior court of a transcript or abstract of a judgment of an inferior court in order to render such judgment effective as a lien.

The filing, or filing and recording, in a superior court of transcripts or abstracts of judgments rendered by inferior courts are generally required in order to render such judgments effective as liens.[91] Where there has been due compliance with the stat-

(3) It has also been stated that the object of the statutory proceeding for abstract of judgment and recordation thereof is to put subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers of property sought to be charged on notice of lien thereby created.—Citizens State Bank of Clarinda, Iowa v. Del-Tex Inv. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W.2d 450, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Mere decision or opinion

Recording of a certified copy of mere decision or opinion directing entry of order allowing attorney's fees against estate was held not to create lien against realty.—Zagoren v. Hall, 10 P.2d 202, 122 Cal.App. 460.

Proper county

Registry of mortgagee's judgment against mortgagor in mortgage book of another parish than that in which land was situated according to boundary line commonly recognized for many years must be denied effect and title from mortgagor, as subsequently recorded in proper parish, given effect.—Commercial Bank v. Meaux, La.App., 158 So. 688.

In probate court

Such a statute was held not to authorize the filing and recording of judgments in the probate court, but authorizes a certificate of the clerk or register of the court by which the judgment was rendered to be filed and registered in the office of the judge of probate.—Saenger Theatres Corporation v. McDermott, 196 So. 265, 239 Ala. 629.

Erroneous certification

The filing and recording of abstract of judgment erroneously certifying that a judgment had been entered in guardianship proceeding against one ward in favor of another, although it created a cloud on first mentioned ward's interest in guardianship realty, did not create a lien thereon.—Gordon v. Vucinich, 142 P.2d 71, 61 Cal.App.2d 78.

Indexing record of judgment see infra §§ 463–465.

Purpose and effect of statute

(1) The object of statute requiring that names of plaintiff and defendant in judgment be indexed in their alphabetical order is that persons searching the record to determine the existence of judgment liens may have the means of ascertaining, with promptness and certainty, whether such liens exist, without having to search the entire record.—Womack v. Paris Grocer Co., Civ.App., 166 S.W.2d 366, error refused 168 S.W.2d 645, 140 Tex. 423.

(2) Recording and indexing abstract of judgment, as required by some statutes, do not merely give notice of preëxisting lien, but are statutory means by which previously nonexistent lien comes into being.—Spence v. Brown, 25 S.W. 413, 86 Tex. 430—Burton Lingo Co. v. Warren, Tex.Civ.App., 45 S.W.2d 750, error refused—McGlothlin v. Coody, Tex.Civ.App., 39 S.W.2d 33, affirmed Com.App., 59 S.W.2d 819—Wicker v. Jenkins, 108 S.W. 188, 49 Tex.Civ. App. 366.

Recording abstract pending appeal

Appellant's creation of lien on respondent's realty by recording abstract of judgment appealed from provided security for enforcement of judgment if it should become final on appeal.—Menges v. Robinson, 23 P.2d 526, 132 Cal.App. 647.

Several liens in same county

Under some statutes of the type here considered, more than one lien to secure same judgment may exist in same county.—Burton Lingo Co. v. Warren, Tex.Civ.App., 45 S.W.2d 750, error refused.

Failure of record to show seal

A clerk's certificate to abstract of judgment need not be recorded, and hence failure of the record to show seal by clerk is immaterial as respects validity of the lien created thereby.—Texas Building & Mortgage Co. v. Morris, Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W.2d 365, error dismissed.

90. Conn.—Parmalee v. Bethlehem, 18 A. 94, 57 Conn. 270.

utory requirements in this regard, the lien contemplated by the statute attaches to the property of the judgment debtor.[92] This requirement applies in some jurisdictions to judgments of probate courts,[93] but in other jurisdictions, in which probate courts are courts of record, their judgments may constitute liens as in the case of any other court of record.[94]

Under some statutes, where the transcript of the judgment of the inferior court has been duly filed in the proper superior court, the judgment becomes substantially a judgment of such superior court for purposes of a lien.[95] Only such judgments or decrees as are contemplated by the statute may constitute the basis for filing the transcript and imposing the lien,[96] and an invalid judgment of an inferior court is not sufficient to support a lien, notwithstanding the transcript or abstract is filed in the superior court.[97] The transcript must be certified and authenticated in accordance with the directions of the statute,[98] and under some statutes an execution must have been issued and returned nulla bona before the transcript may be made and filed.[99] Delay in filing the transcript until after the judgment has become dormant defeats the right to acquire a lien under some statutes.[1]

c. Fixing Lien on Property in Another County

Statutes frequently authorize the fixing of the lien of a judgment on real property of the judgment debtor in a county other than the county in which judgment is rendered by recording, docketing, or filing a transcript or abstract of the judgment in such other county.

Various statutes authorize a transcript or abstract of a judgment recovered in one county to be recorded, docketed, or filed in another, for the purpose of binding real property of the judgment debtor situated in the latter county,[2] and, in order to impose a lien on such real property, there must be due compliance with the statutory requirements.[3]

Transcript of original docket or record

(1) Where judgment roll is filed and judgment docketed in district court clerk's office, judgment becomes lien on judgment debtor's property in any county wherein transcript of docket is filed.—Finch, Van Slyck & McConville v. Jackson, 220 N.W. 130, 57 N.D. 17.

(2) The judgment of a court of common pleas may be transferred from the county in which it is entered to any other county of the commonwealth by filing of record in the prothonotary's office of such other county a certified copy of the whole record in the case and docketing it therein.—Shotts & Co. v. Agnew & Barnett, 81 Pa.Super. 458.

Filing of copy of judgment roll unnecessary

Where a judgment is transcripted and docketed in a county other than the one in which judgment was rendered, it is not necessary to file a copy of the judgment roll in such other county, in order to create a lien on real property in such other county.—Brown v. Harding, 89 S.E. 222, 171 N.C. 686.

Necessity for creation of deficiency judgment

Abstracting in another county a judgment foreclosing a lien on property described in such judgment creates a lien on property in the other county, irrespective of whether the property, lien on which was foreclosed, has been sold and deficiency judgment created.—Texas Building & Mortgage Co. v. Morris, Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W.2d 365, error dismissed.

Real property of married woman

Foreign judgment at law rendered in proceedings ex contractu against married woman cannot be made effectual as lien on lands of such married woman outside county in which judgment was rendered by mere filing and recording of certified transcript of judgment in county where her land lies.—Protective Holding Corporation v. Cornwall Co., 173 So. 804, 127 Fla. 252.

3. Ind.—Sullivan State Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 146 N.E. 403, 82 Ind.App. 419.

Under some statutes filing in another county of a certificate of a judgment which has become dormant does not create a lien on real property of the judgment debtor in such other county,[4] but, under other statutes, a judgment may be transferred to another county for the purpose of creating a lien on real property in such other county, even though it is not a lien on real property at the time of transfer,[5] or is not at that time immediately enforceable by execution,[6] or even though at the time of transfer the statutory period for the duration of judgment liens has elapsed.[7] Under the construction given some statutes, the transfer of a judgment to another county creates a new lien,[8] but, under other statutes, the docketing of a transcript in another county does not create a new lien, but at most constitutes a transfer of the lien.[9]

Inferior court judgments. With respect to judgments of inferior courts, under some statutes the transcript must be filed in the proper court of the county where the judgment was recovered, and cannot in the first instance be filed in the court of another county for the purpose of creating a lien on real property in such other county.[10]

(1) In General

There must be at least substantial compliance with statutory requirements for the creation of liens by recording or filing transcripts or abstracts of judgments.

In general there must be at least substantial compliance with statutory requirements for the creation of a lien by the recording or filing of a transcript or abstract of the judgment.[11] The transcript, abstract, or certificate must satisfy the requirements of the statute governing the creation of a lien,[12] and should contain all the essential particulars of the judgment, so as to give reasonably certain and definite information to subsequent purchasers or lienors.[13] While the rule has been announced that a statute prescribing the contents of a certificate of judgment is mandatory[14] and that there must be strict compliance with such statute in order to create a lien,[15] the provisions of some statutes prescribing the contents of a transcript or certificate have been regarded as directory rather than mandatory so that compliance therewith is not

Strict compliance
In order to create a lien by filing for registration a certificate of judgment, the existence of a certificate issued and registered in strict compliance with the statute is essential, since the provisions are in derogation of the common law.—Hargett v. Hovater, 15 So.2d 276, 244 Ala. 646—Morris v. Waldrop, 105 So. 172, 213 Ala. 435.

Transcript of docket
Under a statute requiring the docketing of the judgment and making the existence of a lien dependent on the filing in a particular office of a transcript of the docket of the judgment, merely filing an abstract of the judgment without docketing the judgment is not sufficient.—Breece v. Gregg, 13 P.2d 421, 36 N.M. 246.

Jurisdiction of court rendering judgment
The transcript of a judgment of a justice's court filed in a superior court must show the jurisdiction of the justice's court with respect to the residence of the parties.—Weintraub v. Rudnick, 143 A. 456, 4 W.W. Harr.,Del., 111.

an essential element of the validity of the transcript or certificate.[16] A certificate or abstract is sufficient if it can be rendered certain by the construction of its own terms and if within its terms it supplies the information required by law without looking elsewhere.[17] An immaterial defect in the clerk's certificate authenticating a transcript of a judgment docket has been held not to nullify the effect of such transcript where there has otherwise been due compliance with statutory requirements.[18] According to some cases the requirement of an authenticated abstract of a judgment is fulfilled by presenting an attested copy of the judgment in lieu of an abstract,[19] or by presenting an authenticated instrument which contains a copy of the judgment and also all matters of substance required by the statute.[20] Mere surplusage does not invalidate an abstract or certificate.[21]

Parties. There must be due compliance with a statutory requirement that the transcript, abstract, or certificate shall show the name of the parties, in order to create a lien,[22] and an error in the name of a party to the judgment may prevent the creation of a lien,[23] but a slight and immaterial error in describing a party does not necessarily prevent the creation of a lien.[24]

Amount, interest, and costs. Some statutes require a statement of the amount for which judgment was rendered,[25] and the balance or amount due,[26] and the rate of interest specified in the

Parties to judgment

Some statutes refer to a statement of the names of the parties to the judgment or decree and not necessarily to a statement of the names of the parties to the cause.

Names of all defendants

Where abstract did not contain names of all defendants, it was not sufficient, even though plaintiffs recovered no judgment for debt against defendants whose names were so omitted, but were allowed costs against one of such defendants, and another of such defendants was allowed costs against plaintiffs.—Shirey v. Trust Co. of Texas, Tex. Civ.App., 98 S.W.2d 243—Shirey v. Trust Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 69 S.W.2d 835, error refused.

Partnership as party

(1) Under a statute requiring the certificate of judgment to show the names of all parties to the judgment, a certificate which showed merely a firm name of a partnership as the name of a party was held insufficient.—Duncan v. Autauga Banking & Trust Co., 136 So. 733, 223 Ala. 434—Ladd v. Smith, 95 So. 280, 209 Ala. 114—Conn v. Sellers, 73 So. 961, 198 Ala. 606.

(2) Where, however, a partnership may be sued in the firm name, failure to state, in a certificate of judgment against defendant partnership, the names of the individual partners or whether defendant was a partnership or corporation was held not to render the certificate insufficient under such statute.—Reuf v. Fulks, 122 So. 14, 219 Ala. 252.

(2) However, the use of mere numerals in an abstract of judgment without any indication that they represent dollars or other denominations of money has been held not sufficient, and an omission in this particular cannot be supplied by reference to the record of the judgment.—Bush v. Showing credits

judgment.[27]

In some jurisdictions a certificate of judgment is insufficient if it fails to show the amount of costs as required by statute,[28] but failure of a transcript to show the amount of costs was held not to prevent the creation of a lien where the transcript shows that costs were awarded and it was not possible to determine the amount of costs at the time of filing the transcript,[29] and the only effect of failure to state the amount of costs, as required by some statutes, is to defeat the lien to the extent of the costs.[30]

(2) Recording and Filing

The transcript, abstract, or certificate of judgment must be properly recorded or filed in order to create a lien under some statutes.

In order to create a lien under some statutes, the transcript, abstract, or certificate of judgment must be properly recorded or filed,[31] and a substantial error on the part of the clerk in recording will prevent the creation of a lien,[32] even though the abstract itself is correct.[33] It has been stated broadly, however, that the true object of the statute is served if the record is such as to charge third persons with notice of the lien or to excite inquiry which, if reasonably or diligently pursued, would disclose the existence of the lien,[34] and that slight irregularities with respect to filing an abstract do not necessarily prevent the creation of a lien.[35]

(3) Indexing

A recorded transcript or abstract of judgment must be properly indexed in order to create a lien under some statutes.

In order to create a lien under some statutes, there must be due compliance with statutory requirements regarding the indexing of a recorded transcript or abstract of judgment.[36] Slight irreg-

(2) Where, however, a judgment was rendered for a certain amount, with interest, together with foreclosure of a lien on certain property, given to secure payment of the judgment debt, and the judgment creditor purchased the property at foreclosure sale, failure to show in the abstract a credit for the amount bid by the judgment creditor at such sale did not render the abstract insufficient in view of the fact that the sale was incomplete when the abstract was filed.—Texas Building & Mortgage Co. v. Morris, Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W.2d 365, error dismissed.

27. Tex.—Lemons v. Epley Hardware Co., Civ.App., 197 S.W. 1118. 34 C.J. p 575 note 60 [a].

Erroneous inclusion of interest

Where judgment did not bear interest, no lien was created by filing in another county an abstract of judgment reciting that judgment bore ten per cent interest and that balance due thereon included interest.—Midland County v. Tolivar's Estate, 155 S.W.2d 921, 137 Tex. 600.

Abstract held sufficient

Omission from an abstract of judgment in another county of recital that interest was to be calculated from the date of the judgment, on the amount of the judgment, did not invalidate the abstract, since interest was fixed by law.—Texas Building & Mortgage Co. v. Morris, Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W.2d 365, error dismissed—Willis v. Somerville, 22 S.W. 781, 3 Tex.Civ.App. 509—First Nat. Bank v. Cloud, 21 S.W. 770, 21 Tex.Civ.App. 627.

Entry as to credits

(1) In view of a statutory requirement that the abstract shall show the amount or balance due on the judgment, the record of an abstract was insufficient to create a lien where the record erroneously stated the date of a credit thereon, so that a proper calculation of the interest due on the judgment as recorded would not show the amount actually due.—Noble v. Barner, supra.

(2) Where clerk, in recording abstract of judgment, placed amounts totaling within eighteen cents of amount of judgment in credit column through mistake, which amounts apparently should have been entered in the column for rate of interest, the record was insufficient to establish judgment lien.—Askey v. Power, Tex.Com.App., 36 S.W.2d 446.

Error in name of party

The record of an abstract, in which the surname of plaintiff who recovered judgment was misspelled, was held insufficient to create lien.—Anthony v. Taylor, 4 S.W. 531, 63 Tex. 403.

Misnomer of court

Record showing name of court by which judgment was rendered as "92d District Court of Hidalgo County" was sufficient to render lien operative against subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers where the statute was otherwise complied with, notwithstanding the judgment was actually rendered by the ninety-third district court of such county and that fact was shown by the abstract.—Citizens State Bank of Clarinda, Iowa v. Del-Tex Inv. Co., supra.

ularities with respect to indexing do not, however, necessarily prevent the creation of a lien.[37] It is the intent of some statutes that the index should indicate merely the source from which full information may be obtained,[38] and it is not necessary to include complete information concerning the abstract.[39]

Parties. Under some statutes it is essential that the index shall show the names of the parties to the judgment,[40] and that the designation of the parties shall be accurate.[41] The index should be both direct and reverse, or, as sometimes stated, there should be a cross index, with respect to the names of the parties,[42] and it is essential that the index shall list the names of the parties in alphabetical order.[43] It has been laid down broadly, however, that a statute requiring the indexing of the names of parties should not be construed so technically as to impose unnecessary difficulties on a judgment creditor seeking to secure a lien,[44] and that an entry which is substantially correct, should be regarded as sufficient.[45]

Under some statutes, where there are several parties plaintiff or parties defendant to the judgment, the names of all parties to the judgment must duly be indexed in order to create a lien,[46] and a

The entry should be placed under the letter which begins the surname of a party to the judgment.—Avery v. Texas Loan Agency, Tex.Civ.App., 62 S.W. 793—34 C.J. p 580 note 19.

Names of both plaintiff and defendant

(1) The abstract must be indexed alphabetically in the names both of plaintiff and defendant.—Guaranty State Bank of Donna v. Marion County Nat. Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 293 S. W. 248—34 C.J. p 579 note 8.

(2) Where an abstract of a judgment was indexed in the name of each defendant against whom judgment was taken but was not indexed alphabetically in the name of any plaintiff, no lien was created.—Guaranty State Bank of Donna v. Marion County Nat. Bank, supra.

(3) In a comparatively early case, however, the view was taken that the index was sufficient to fix a lien on defendant's property if his name is correctly stated under the proper letter, even though plaintiff's name is indexed under a wrong letter.—Franke v. Lone Star Brewing Co., 42 S.W. 861, 17 Tex.Civ.App. 9.

Insufficient space under correct letter

Even where the name of a party is entered under the wrong letter in the index because of want of space under the correct letter, a lien is not created.—Cocke v. Conquest, Civ.App., 2 S. W.2d 992, affirmed, Com.App., 13 S.W. 2d 348, affirmed 35 S.W.2d 673, 120 Tex. 43—Fairmont Creamery Co. v. Minter, Tex.Civ.App., 274 S.W. 281.

34 C.J. p 581 note 36.

Separate listing of coparties

The statute requiring entry of abstract of judgment on alphabetical index showing the name of each plaintiff and each defendant does not require that, in indexing under the letter proper to one defendant, other defendant's name be shown.—Texas Building & Mortgage Co. v. Morris, Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W.2d 365, error dismissed.

Index held insufficient

(1) Where abstract of judgment did not contain names of all defendants and when recorded in another county was indexed only in names appearing in abstract, no lien was created, notwithstanding plaintiffs recovered no judgment for debt against defendants whose names were so omitted, but were allowed lien is not imposed on the property of a party whose name has duly been indexed where the name of a coparty in the judgment has not been indexed.[47] Where, however, the statute requires the indexing of the parties in the judgment, it is not necessary to index the name of a person who was made a coparty to the action, where he is not a party to the judgment.[48]

Where a partnership is a party to the judgment, under a statutory provision for an alphabetical index showing the name of each plaintiff and of each defendant, indexing in the firm name may be sufficient if the firm name consists of the full name of each of the partners,[49] but the rule is otherwise where the index does not show the names of the individual partners in the case either of a judgment in favor of a partnership,[50] or against a partnership.[51] Where the individual names of the partners are duly indexed, the index is not rendered insufficient by the fact that the firm name is omitted or is stated incorrectly.[52]

Where a corporation is a party to the judgment, the index of the recorded abstract should show the complete name of the corporation.[53] If a corporate name is composed of a surname preceded by initials, the name should be indexed under the first letter of the surname,[54] and, where the first word of the corporate name is the article "The," the name is properly indexed under the first letter of another word which actually identifies the corporation.[55] Indexing in the name of a company, which is actually a corporation, as judgment creditor, is not fatally defective because the index fails to show whether the judgment creditor is a corporation, joint stock company, or a partnership.[56] Where a judgment is recovered by the receiver of a corporation, it has been held not essential that the index contain the name of the corporation.[57]

§ 463. Recording, Docketing, and Indexing Judgment

Under various statutory provisions, it is generally held that the docketing or recording of a judgment creates a lien on the property of the judgment debtor, and that in the absence of due compliance with such statutory provisions there is no lien.

While at common law a judgment did not create a lien, as is discussed supra § 454, under many statutes a judgment which is recorded or docketed becomes a lien on the judgment debtor's realty.[58] On the other hand, unless the statutory requirement costs against one of such defendants, and another of such defendants was allowed costs against plaintiffs. —Shirey v. Trust Co. of Texas, Tex. Civ.App., 98 S.W.2d 243—Shirey v. Trust Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 69 S.W.2d 835, error refused.

(2) Where plaintiff recovered personal judgment against defendant landowner and judgment for foreclosure of a vendor's lien against defendant and codefendant, and where, on defendant's cross action against codefendant, latter recovered judgment for costs against defendant, failure to index judgment in codefendant's name prevented lien from arising in plaintiff's favor on defendant's land, notwithstanding the indexing complied with the statute in other respects.—McGlothlin v. Coody, Tex.Com.App., 59 S.W.2d 819.

Object of docketing

(1) The object of docketing is to create a judgment lien on realty.
N.Y.—Rosenthal v. Graves, 6 N.Y.S. 2d 766, 168 Misc. 845.
Or.—State ex rel. Tolls v. Tolls, 85 P.2d 366, 160 Or. 317, 119 A.L.R. 1370.

(2) The true purpose of statutes providing that where a judgment of a specified inferior court is docketed of recording and docketing is complied with, the judgment will not attach as a lien,[59] at least as against third persons acting in good faith and without actual notice,[60] such as subsequent purchasers[61] and subsequent attaching creditors,[62] although it may be otherwise as between the original parties,[63] and under some provisions protection is afforded only to purchasers but not to creditors.[64]

Under some statutes it is the duty of the judgment creditor to see to it that his judgment is rightly and properly recorded or docketed, under penalty of losing his lien,[65] although the failure properly to record or to docket the judgment is wholly the fault of the clerk,[66] the only remedy of the judgment creditor in such cases being against the clerk for any loss suffered.[67] Under other statutes, the lien of a judgment is not lost by the failure of the clerk to docket the judgment,[68] or by his delay in docketing it,[69] but he will be liable in damages to any person injured by reason of his default.[70]

Where subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers have actual notice of the judgment, they will be bound thereby, this being equivalent to the constructive notice required to be given by entry on the judgment docket.[71] The docketing of a judgment is constructive but conclusive notice to all the world of the lien of such judgment,[72] and has been said substantially to effect a seizure of the judgment debtor's land and to deposit it in custodia legis,[73] although it has been held that the docketing does not in itself sequestrate any property.[74] Where a court of equity decrees a lien on specified land, such lien exists independently of statutes providing for the docketing of money judgments,[75] and such a lien is no more dependent on such statute than a mechanic's lien or the lien created by a mortgage.[76]

Judgments affirmed on appeal. Where a judgment has been affirmed on appeal, it must be redocketed in order to make it a lien for the damages and costs in the appellate court,[77] although without such redocketing it remains a lien on real estate, by virtue of the original docketing, for the amount of the original judgment and accumulated interest.[78]

Cancellation of docket. The clerk is generally authorized by statute to cancel and discharge the docket of a judgment, on the filing with him of an acknowledgment of satisfaction, signed by the party in whose favor the judgment is obtained, and authenticated in the prescribed manner; without such acknowledgment the act of the clerk in canceling the docket is without jurisdiction, and is void as to the parties whose rights are affected by it.[79]

Place of docketing. A judgment has been held in a specified superior court, it shall become a judgment of the latter is to provide for making the judgment a lien on real estate.—Paley v. Solomon, D.C.D.C., 59 F.Supp. 887.

not a lien on real estate unless it is docketed in the county in which the land is situated.[80] Where the judgment does not affirmatively provide that it shall be a lien on real property, it is essential under some statutes that it be docketed in the county where it was rendered in order to become a lien on realty,[81] and that the judgment be docketed first in the county where it was rendered before it may be docketed in another county.[82]

§ 464. —— Indexing

The purpose of a judgment index is to afford constructive notice of the judgment to interested third persons, and under some statutes absence of such an index of the judgment precludes its attaching as a lien as far as concerns the rights of third persons lacking actual notice of the judgment.

The object of a judgment index is to furnish notice to purchasers, subsequent encumbrancers, and other interested parties of the existence of the judgment,[83] and due indexing serves as constructive notice of a judgment lien on the property involved.[84] Under the statutes of many states judgments will not operate as liens, except as against persons with actual notice,[85] unless they are not only docketed or recorded as discussed supra § 463, but are also indexed.[86] However, under a statute requiring merely that the judgment must be "docketed" before it can be binding as against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, indexing is not necessary even as against such a purchaser.[87] Under some statutes the judgment must be properly cross-indexed.[88]

§ 465. —— Sufficiency to Create Lien

a. In general
b. Names and descriptions of parties

a. In General

The record and index of a judgment should be sufficiently accurate and complete to afford due notice to the searcher of all essential facts, although minor inaccuracies may not be fatal to the lien. Ordinarily the entry should show the court in which the judgment was rendered, the date of docketing, and the amount of the judgment.

For the purposes of a lien, the record or docket of a judgment, and the index, should be sufficiently full, accurate, and explicit to inform intending purchasers or mortgagees of the facts which it is essential for them to know, and such that a reasonably careful search in the proper quarters will not fail to disclose the judgment;[89] and since the lien of a judgment is the creation of statute, it is necessary to its existence that statutes requiring certain formalities of docketing and indexing should be followed in all substantial particulars.[90] The judg-

Degree of accuracy required
(1) "The law places a burden upon one who would establish a lien to docket and index his judgment with a degree of accuracy sufficient to lead a reasonably careful searcher to conclude that the lien is against the object of his search, or to suggest to the searcher the necessity of inquiry to ascertain the fact."—Tioga Trust Co. v. Home Owners' Loan Corp., 42 Pa.Dist. & Co. 165, 167.

(2) The law merely requires an index that will naturally lead the investigator to a discovery of the judgment and the identity of defendant, and, if the index meets such requirement, it has served its legal purpose.—Coral Gables v. Kerl, 6 A. 2d 275, 334 Pa. 441, 122 A.L.R. 903.

Duty of inquiry
(1) Where indexing and docketing of judgment contains sufficient information to put an ordinarily prudent person upon guard, inquiry becomes a duty, and, if an investigation, reasonably pursued, would disclose identity of judgment debtor, subsequent lienor is bound by notice of previous judgments, even though inaccurately recorded.—Coral Gables v. Kerl, supra.

(2) A purchaser of land is affected with such notice as the judgment docket and index entries afford, and is under a duty to make such investigation as the entries would suggest to a prudent man.—Henry v. Sanders, 193 S.E. 15, 212 N.C. 239.

90. Or.—Western Loan & Savings

ment should be entered in the proper book,[91] and in the proper county or district,[92] and the record should show, among other things, the court in which the judgment was rendered,[93] the date of docketing,[94] and the name of the judgment creditor or owner of the judgment, and that of the debtor, as discussed infra subdivision b of this section. Requirements that the judgment docket show the nature of the case, and the name of the attorney for the creditor, have been held to be directory only.[95]

Immaterial inaccuracies are not fatal to the lien.[96] If a judgment was by mistake rendered and enrolled against the wrong party, it cannot be corrected except as between the real parties to the judgment, and before the rights of bona fide purchasers intervene.[97] The recording of the judgment or order of the court, and not of its mere opinion or direction to enter an order, is required to create a lien on real property.[98]

Amount of judgment. The entry should show the amount of the judgment debt.[99] This requirement involves the necessity of showing the kind of money in which it is payable,[1] and the amount or rate of interest.[2] Failure of the record of the judgment to include the amount of the costs will defeat the lien only to the extent of the costs.[3] The use of numerals without a dollar sign or other indication that the figures represent dollars in stating the amount of the judgment is not fatal where the omission is supplied by an accompanying entry, which is properly a descriptive part of the judgment, showing that the figures refer to dollars;[4] and it has been held that such an omission is not fatal if the columns of figures are separated by a vertical line marking off the cents from the dollars according to the practice of bookkeepers.[5]

b. Names and Descriptions of Parties

Generally, the docket and index should name and describe the parties to the judgment with a degree of accuracy sufficient to afford constructive notice of the judgment, and the surname and Christian name of the party should be given with substantial correctness, although initials may sometimes be used for first and middle names.

As between the judgment creditor and judgment debtor a judgment may afford a valid lien despite inaccuracies or omissions in the docket or index in respect of the names or descriptions of the parties.[6] In order to make the lien of a judgment effective as against third persons, however, it is ordinarily necessary that the docket and index should disclose the names of both parties, plaintiff as well as defendant, and designate them with such a degree of accuracy as to charge persons searching such records with notice of the judgment or to put them on inquiry.[7] An entry substantially correct is sufficient especially as against a person who has not been misled thereby.[8] Generally speaking, the question

Appearance in transcript insufficient
Where name of judgment creditor did not appear in judgment entered on docket of superior court of county in which debtor's realty was situated, or in cross index of such docket, judgment was not valid lien on such land, although judgment creditor's name appeared in caption and body of transcript from county in which judgment was rendered.—Jones v. Currie, 129 S.E. 605, 190 N.C. 260.
Same name in which asset registered
If a judgment creditor desires to bind a particular asset of the debtor as against a future purchaser or a mortgagee, the burden is on him to see that his judgment is recorded and indexed in the same name as that in which the asset is registered.—Tioga Trust Co., to Use of v. Home Owners' Loan Corporation, 42 Pa. Dist. & Co. 165.
Basis of judgment
Where a judgment is correctly indexed in the name of the judgment debtor, the indexing constitutes legal notice of the lien of the judgment, even though the latter was rendered on a note signed by the judgment debtor by an undecipherable, although genuine, signature.—Adelson v. Kocher, 36 A.2d 737, 154 Pa.Super. 548.

whether an error, omission, or variance in the docket or index in respect of the names of the parties is of such material or substantial character as to render it ineffective as constructive notice of the judgment is one on which it is difficult, if not impossible, to formulate a rule;[9] each case is dependent on its peculiar facts, and the question whether the name found in the index is such as to put the searcher on inquiry is, as a rule, one of fact and not of law.[10]

Alphabetical order. It has been held that a judgment will not be deemed to have been indexed if the names are not listed in alphabetical order;[11] there is, however, authority to the contrary.[12] The surname should precede the Christian name and it determines the alphabetical order.[13]

Joint plaintiffs or defendants; firm name. Where there are several plaintiffs or defendants, the names of all the parties should be indexed correctly,[14] although, if the names of all the defendants are not indexed, the judgment has been held to operate as a lien on the property of defendant against whom the index is made.[15] Where the judgment is against a firm, the names of the individual partners must be set out.[16]

Surnames. A misspelling of the surname has been held to defeat the lien,[17] although in other cases such a misspelling may be immaterial because of the application of the rule of idem sonans, where the names would be pronounced alike,[18] and the variance to the eye is not substantial.[19] While the term "junior" or "senior" may be a means of distinguishing between a father and son who bear the same name, it has been held no part of either's name, and hence not required to be included in the docket entry of a judgment against either, although the other bearing the same name resides in the same county.[20] There is, however, authority to the effect that, if such term is used, it becomes matter of material description and will operate to postpone the lien of a judgment so entered and indexed to judgments subsequently entered and indexed without such suffix.[21]

Christian names. Although there is some authority to the contrary,[22] it is the general rule that the index and docket must show the correct first or Christian name[23] or the first initial thereof.[24] This

Where a judgment was obtained against five defendants, but was entered in judgment dockets only once, and was not repeated under name of each defendant in alphabetical order, as required by statute, the judgment not indexed under judgment debtor's name did not become a lien on his real estate located in such county.—Sullivan State Bank v. Incorrect Christian name
(1) A judgment recorded and indexed in the name of "Mikola Borys" did not constitute "constructive notice" of a judgment against "Nikolai Borys."—Jaczyszyn v. Paslawski, 24 A.2d 116, 147 Pa.Super. 97.

(2) The indexing of a judgment against "Lucy" Christopher is not constructive notice of a judgment against "Lucille" Christopher so as to afford a lien against the land of the latter.—Troffo v. Camione, 16 Pa. Dist. & Co. 92, 79 Pittsb.Leg.J. 51, 21 Del.Co. 234, 45 York Leg.Rec. 83, 13 Erie Co. 25.

34 C.J. p 580 note 24.

Sufficiency of initial
A judgment indexed and docketed against the judgment debtor's correct surname and initial of Christian name is sufficient to constitute constructive notice to subsequent encumbrancers, at least where debtor is well known by the shortened designation, but, if initials are employed instead of Christian names, errors therein are as fatal as in the names themselves.—Coral Gables v. Kerl, supra.

rule, however, must have a reasonable construction.[25] While the indexing of the Christian name by which defendant is generally known is not, as a general rule, sufficient,[26] it is generally known that certain first or Christian names are interchangeably used, and the initial and dominant letters of each are identical, indicating to the eye that they are the same and giving the same sound and substance to each, and the judgment index must be searched for each;[27] and it has been suggested that, where two Christian names are in original derivation the same, and are taken to be the same in common use, although they differ in sound or spelling, a judgment entered under one is notice of a lien against property held under the other.[28] Where the judgment debtor has ceased to use the first of his two Christian names, a judgment docketed against him by the second of such names only has been held insufficient, even though the judgment itself was rendered in that form;[29] but it has been held otherwise where it appeared that the person attacking the lien knew that the judgment debtor's name was used in several forms and it also appeared that he had not been prejudiced by the fact that only the second of the debtor's names was used in docketing.[30]

Middle initial. The erroneous omission or introduction of a middle initial in defendant's name, or a mistake in such middle initial, has been held to prevent the judgment from having effect as a lien,[31] although such an error or omission may be immaterial where the circumstances are such that the identification is sufficient,[32] and some decisions follow the view that middle initials are generally unimportant.[33]

Married women. If defendant is a married woman, the docket and index must show her own Christian name, the use of that of her husband being insufficient,[34] except as against a person who knows her identity.[35] A subsequent innocent purchaser from a judgment debtor, conveying by her married name property acquired under such married name, takes title freed from the lien of a judgment docketed against the debtor by her maiden name,[36] and it has been held that this is the rule, even though the purchaser knew of her maiden name,[37] but it has also been held that such knowledge permits the judgment to operate as a lien.[38] The rule requiring use of a party's middle initial to render the judgment effective as a lien has been applied to invalidate a claimed judgment lien against property held by husband and wife as tenants by the entirety where the husband's name was correctly indexed in the judgment docket but the wife's middle initial was omitted.[39]

Letter perfect

In order to constitute constructive notice, it is not necessary that the name of the judgment debtor as docketed and indexed be letter perfect.—Coral Gables v. Kerl, 6 A.2d 275, 334 Pa. 441, 122 A.L.R. 903.

Unusual name

A judgment docketed and indexed in the name of "Caroline Kerl" constituted constructive notice of a judgment against "Caroline C. Kerl," in view of fact that name was unusual and used by no other person in the county and that debtor was not more generally known by name with initial than without it; and hence judgment creditor owning judgment docketed in name of "Caroline Kerl", was entitled to a prior lien on judgment debtor's real estate as against owner of a subsequently acquired judgment docketed against "Caroline C. § 466. Commencement of Lien

a. In general
b. Relation back

a. In General

The date when a judgment lien commences is generally fixed by statute, and may attach on rendition, filing, or recording of the judgment. A judgment lien ordinarily attaches to after-acquired property on the date of its acquisition.

Statutes may validly fix the time of commencement of a judgment lien,[40] and, depending on the provisions thereof, the lien of a judgment may commence from the date of its actual rendition or pronouncement,[41] or entry,[42] or from the time of filing the judgment for record,[43] or from the day on which it is recorded, docketed, or registered,[44] or from the date of filing or recording of an abstract of the judgment.[45] Under some practice, where two or more judgments are rendered against the same person at the same term, the liens may be regarded as concurrent and as commencing on the last day of the term.[46] Where two judgments rendered between the same parties at different times are entirely distinct from one another and the lien of the earlier judgment has expired before the recovery of the other, the latter judgment does not become a lien on land subject to the earlier judgment but conveyed prior to the entry of the later judgment.[47]

Fractions of day. Where justice so requires, the law will take account of the fraction of a day in determining when the lien of a judgment took effect.[48]

Judgments against nonresidents. The statutes of some jurisdictions provide that in the case of judgments rendered in a county other than that in which the debtor resides the lien takes effect only from the time when a certified copy of the judgment is registered in the county where he resides or, if he does not reside in the state, in the county where the land lies.[49]

The judgment of an appellate court does not become a judgment of the court appealed from so as to effect a lien in the jurisdiction of the lower court until the judgment is adopted by the lower court and entered on its minutes, the mere filing of the mandate to the lower court directing a decree being insufficient.[50] Where an appellate court renders such judgment as the lower court should have rendered, the lien, in some jurisdictions, dates from the filing in the lower court of a special mandate from the appellate court.[51]

Lien on after-acquired lands. Ordinarily, the lien on after-acquired property attaches at the time of the acquisition of the property, not as of the time of docketing of the judgment.[52] The date of docketing the judgment rather than the date of acquiring the property may, however, be considered the date of commencement for purposes of computing the duration of the lien, as discussed infra § 489. The lien of a judgment at law on an equitable interest in land attaches only as of the date of filing a bill in chancery.[53]

b. Relation Back

Under varying local practice, the lien of a judgment may relate back and attach at some time previous to the date of its rendition, entry, or enrollment, as where a judgment rendered during the term becomes a lien as of the first day thereof; but exceptions to the rule of relation back may be made where necessary for the protection of the intervening rights of innocent third persons.

Under some practice, either by deduction from the common-law rule that judgments of a court of record, on whatever day of the term they may in fact be rendered, relate to and are considered as judgments of the first day of the term, or under express statutory enactments, judgment liens relate back to the first day of the term at which they were rendered.[54] Under other practice a judgment may relate back to the date of its rendition on due enrollment within the time limited by statute,[55] but, where a judgment is enrolled after expiration of the time limit, the lien of the judgment does not relate back but dates only from the time of enrollment.[56] It has also been held that as between the parties the effective date of a judgment rendered on one day and entered on another may relate back to the date of rendition by an order nunc pro tunc, as discussed infra § 469, and that, under particular statutes and rules of court, judgment entered five days after rendition is a lien from the date of rendition notwithstanding an order giving plaintiff four days in which to enter judgment.[57] Where at the time of the filing of an abstract of judgment the judgment debtor no longer owns certain property, the filing cannot relate back and make the judgment a lien on the property theretofore owned by the debtor.[58]

While as a rule the lien of a judgment does not relate back to the time of the accrual of the cause of action,[59] it may relate back to the time of a lien obtained under another proceeding or transaction, as in the case where there has been an attachment,[60] likewise as in the case where there has

Finding for defendant on attachment
If, after an issue on a traverse to plaintiff's affidavit is found for defendant, judgment is obtained on merits, it does not date from time of levy as provided by statute but takes lien on property attached from date of judgment only.—Blakely Milling & Trading Co. v. Thompson, 128 S.E. 683, 34 Ga.App. 129.

Tardy filing
Where statute provides that, if a judgment lien be placed on real estate attached in the suit within four months after such judgment was rendered, it shall hold as a lien from the date of the attachment, filing of a lien based on the judgment is too

been a statutory lien,[61] or mortgage,[62] where a judgment is rendered on a bond payable to the state,[63] on a forfeited writ of error bond,[64] or on a scire facias to revive an original judgment.[65]

Exceptions to the doctrine that a judgment relates back may be made in the case of default judgments,[66] or judgments rendered prior to the statute creating the lien,[67] or where it is held that a judgment could not relate back to the first day of the term because the case was not then in condition for judgment,[68] or because the court was not then in session,[69] and, generally, the doctrine of relation back may be held inapplicable where it is necessary to protect the rights of an intervening purchaser in good faith.[70] A judgment by confession ordinarily becomes a lien from the date of confession,[71] or from the date of the confirmation of the confession,[72] and the rule that a judgment becomes a lien as of the first day of the term at which it was entered has been held inapplicable to a judgment by confession on the theory that the date of signing a confession judgment controls as the date on which the lien attaches.[73]

§ 467. —— Lien of Transferred Judgment

The lien of a transferred judgment ordinarily attaches as of the date of transfer, provided there has been due compliance with statutory requirements.

Where, in order to render the judgment a lien on property in a county other than that in which the judgment was rendered, a statute requires an abstract or transcript of the judgment to be filed, entered, or docketed in such other county, the lien will not commence in such county until the statute is complied with.[74] It has been held that a transferred judgment becomes a lien in the county to which it has been transferred as of the date of transfer,[75] even though the lien in the county where the judgment was entered has expired from lapse of time.[76]

§ 468. —— Necessity of Issue of Execution

Under many statutes a judgment is a lien against the debtor's realty, but not his personalty, irrespective of the issuance of execution, but, where the judgment has not been duly filed or docketed, etc., in compliance with statutory requirements, levy of execution may be essential to subject realty to a lien.

Except in the few jurisdictions where a judgment does not of itself bind land,[77] it has generally been late to relate back to the date of the attachment where the filing occurs more than four months from the date of the original trial court judgment, even though within four months of its affirmance by an appellate court.—City Nat. Bank v. Stoeckel, 132 A. 20, 103 Conn. 732.

Mechanic's lien

(1) While a fieri facias issued on a special judgment would cover the entire estate which an owner had in lands at the time when building was begun, or which he thereafter acquired, a general judgment cannot relate back to the date of the statutory mechanic's lien or become a lien on the lands of the owner and defendant prior to the date of entering such judgment.—McKibbin v. Pekarsky, 143 A. 553, 103 N.J.Eq. 450.

(2) Where a laborer, mechanic, or material furnisher files notice of claim in the clerk's office, and judgment is subsequently entered in an action by him in his favor, but only as a general creditor, his right to a statutory lien being specifically denied, the lien of such judgment does not relate back to the date when the notice of claim was filed, but the lien attaches only from the date of the judgment.—Francisco v. In Georgia

(1) It is provided that a judgment shall not constitute a lien on the property of defendant from the ren-

the rule under the statutes that a judgment attaches as a lien without the use of any process,[78] except as to property which is not usually subject to the lien of a judgment, but can be made so by the levy of an execution, as trust property or personalty,[79] or where the lien is to be extended to the property of a person other than the principal defendant, such as a surety,[80] or, in some jurisdictions, against property in a foreign county.[81] Where, however, there has been a failure to comply with statutory requirements as to docketing or filing the judgment or an abstract thereof, issuance of execution, and in some instances levy thereof, may become essential to creation of a lien even on real property.[82]

As discussed supra § 454, in the absence of statute, no lien results from a judgment before issuance of execution.

§ 469. —— Judgment or Amendment Nunc Pro Tunc

A judgment entered nunc pro tunc may afford a lien as of the earlier date as between the immediate parties; but as respects the intervening rights of third persons the lien will generally be held to run from the later date, and an amendment of judgment will not as a rule affect the rights of such persons.

As between the parties a judgment entered nunc pro tunc has the same force and effect as if entered at the time the judgment was rendered,[83] and the effective date of a judgment rendered one day and entered on a later day may relate back to dition thereof, as against third parties acting in good faith and without notice, who may have acquired a transfer of the property, unless the execution shall have been entered on the general execution docket of the court within ten days from the time the judgment was rendered.—Bradley v. Booth, 9 S.E.2d 861, 62 Ga.App. 770—34 C.J. p 584 note 84 [a].

(2) Removal of a judgment debtor from county of rendition of judgment will not require entry of an execution issued on such judgment on general execution docket of county to which judgment debtor has removed, but if within ten days from date of judgment execution is entered on docket, in county of rendition, judgment lien attaches to all judgment debtor's property in the state, but, if such entry is postponed beyond ten days, judgment lien attaches from date when entry of execution is actually made.—Bradley v. Booth, supra.

(3) Judgment must be entered on verdict within time required and execution must be duly and properly issued and recorded, since a verdict in itself is not a lien on any property of defendant against whom it is returned.—Tanner v. Wilson, 192 S.E. 425, 184 Ga. 628.

(4) Where judgment was followed by execution duly issued thereon and appropriate entries of nulla bona on execution, each within seven years, which were also entered on execution docket, judgment was a lien from its date on all property owned by judgment debtor or thereafter acquired.—Howell v. Farmers Bank, 196 S.E. 387, 185 Ga. 768.

Lien from date of execution
Under some practice the lien on personalty dates not from the obtaining of the judgment, but from the issuance or levy of the execution.

Rights of purchaser
Where no lien on personalty exists until the levy of an execution, an innocent purchaser's rights are not subject to a prior judgment under which no execution has been issued.—Brown v. Deal, Mo.App., 256 S.W. 114.

Statutes affording lien without execution
Under a statute providing that "where execution shall be stayed on any judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, such judgment shall be a lien on all the personal property subject to execution belonging to the defendant at the time of the rendition of the judgment," on the giving of a stay bond, whether or not execution had issued on the judgment, it becomes a lien, but only for the term of six months, to which the time of stay is limited.—McBride v. Mullinix, C.C.A.Ark., 299 F. 162.

Necessity of execution to continue lien see infra § 493.

Necessity of levy
(1) The rule that issuance of execution and return thereof unsatisfied create no lien on property in absence of levy applies to realty as well as to personalty, and becomes material in case of realty where no lien has been created by properly docketing judgment.—Southern Dairies v. Banks, C.C.A.N.C., 92 F.2d 282, certiorari denied Banks v. Southern Dairies, 58 S.Ct. 368, 302 U.S. 761, 82 L.Ed. 590.

(2) Generally, a judgment with execution issued thereon, but not levied on any property and not otherwise satisfied and no abstracts of which have been filed for record under statute, does not constitute a "lien" on any property real or personal.—C. I. T. Corporation v. Haynie, Tex.Civ.App., 135 S.W.2d 618.

the date of rendition by an order nunc pro tunc.[84] As far, however, as it affects intervening rights of third parties a judgment entered nunc pro tunc does not relate back, for the purpose of a lien, to the day as of which it is entered, but takes effect only from the time of its actual entry.[85] Under a statute providing that a judgment is a lien from the first day of the term at which it is entered, a judgment rendered nunc pro tunc, at a term of court succeeding that at which the record was complete up to and including verdict, is as operative, as between the parties, as if it had been rendered at the previous term, but as to other parties, it is effective, as a lien, only from the first day of the term at which it was actually entered.[86]

The amendment of a judgment will not as a rule affect intervening rights of third parties,[87] and a judgment by confession, invalid for want of a sufficient statement or for other defects, cannot be amended nunc pro tunc so as to make it effective from its original date, as against intervening purchasers or encumbrancers.[88] Where, however, a judgment as originally entered created a lien and, taken together with the record, carried notice of the right to the amended judgment, the amendment may relate back to the date of the original judgment.[89]

§ 470. —— Effect of Stay of Execution

Ordinarily a stay of execution does not postpone or destroy a judgment lien.

Since the lien of a judgment on realty is not ordinarily dependent on the issuance of an execution or other act of the judgment creditor, as discussed supra § 468, the attachment of the lien is not postponed by a stay of execution;[90] nor is the lien of a judgment destroyed by such a stay, as considered infra § 503.

§ 471. Property Affected by Lien

The statutory lien of a judgment attaches only to property against which the judgment can be enforced.

A judgment is a lien on all property of the debtor subject thereto.[91] Accordingly the statutory lien of a judgment attaches only to property not exempt from execution,[92] and, under statutes providing that the judgment shall be a lien on all property of defendant which is subject to levy and sale under execution, the lien applies to and covers only property which is subject to levy and sale under execution.[93]

§ 472. —— Nature of Property

Under statute in some jurisdictions the lien of the judgment attaches to real property, but not to personal property, of the judgment debtor.

Except as provided by statute, a mere judgment is never a lien against the real estate of the judgment debtor.[94] Thus at common law land was not subject to the lien of a judgment,[95] but under the statutes of most jurisdictions the lien attaches to

(2) Judgment lien on land was a lien on the timber thereon before and after the timber was cut, and, in equity, followed the proceeds of sale thereof.—Stuart v. Pickett, 10 So.2d 207, 193 Miss. 455.

(3) A contract whereby a judgment debtor sold standing timber on land and allowed purchaser twenty years for removal did not create an immediate severance and conversion of the timber such as to withdraw timber from lien of judgment creditor, the standing timber continuing to be realty as to the judgment notwithstanding a sale of personalty was intended as between judgment debtor and purchaser; fiction of immediate severance as between vendor and vendee did not operate to permit judgment debtor to remove standing timber from judgment creditor's lien against land by purported sale to third person.—Havens v. Pearson, 6 A.2d 84, 334 Pa. 570, 122 A.L.R. 512.

Minerals on land

An agreement by which landowners "granted, bargained, sold, let and leased" limestone under land, with right of ingress to mine to remove limestone, in consideration of royalty for limestone mined, was a "sale of limestone in place as land," and landowners retained interest in limestone to which lien of judgment against landowners attached.—Burke v. Kerr, 19 A.2d 332, 341 Pa. 304.

Oil royalty interest

The recording and indexing of judgment against grantor of oil royalty interest, which is realty and which was transferred to grantee by conveyance that was not recorded until after recording of the judgment, caused judgment lien to attach to the royalty interest under statute providing that, when any judgment has been recorded and indexed, it shall, from date of such record and index, operate as a lien on all "realty" of defendant in the county.—Munzesheimer v. Leopold, Tex.Civ.App., 163 S.W.2d 663, error refused.

except where a statute so provides,[3] as where the statute makes the judgment a lien on all property of the judgment debtor which is subject to levy and sale under execution,[4] although it has been held that a chancery decree may, in terms, establish liens on personalty so as to bind all persons having notice thereof.[5] In jurisdictions where the lien does attach to personal property, such property has been held not subject to the lien unless it is also subject to execution,[6] and therefore that the lien does not attach to choses in action,[7] except as provided by statute.[8] The lien attaches to chattels real in some jurisdictions,[9] although not in others.[10]

Crops. Under some statutes the lien of a judgment attaches to mature crops ready for harvest, but not to growing crops.[11]

§ 473. —— Location of Property

The lien of a judgment extends to property of the judgment debtor located in the county in which the judgment is entered, and under statutes generally in force is ordinarily confined to the limits of the county in which it was rendered and docketed.

The lien of a judgment extends to property of the judgment debtor located in the county in which the judgment is entered or docketed[12] and, although under some statutes the lien may extend to all property of the debtor in the state,[13] under the statutes generally in force the lien of a judgment is confined to the limits of the particular county in which it was rendered and docketed, and does not affect lands of the judgment debtor lying in another county,[14] unless it be a judgment in favor of the state,[15] or unless the land in such other county is seized in execution,[16] or, as considered supra § 462, unless it is transferred to such other county by filing a transcript of the judgment there. Where, however, a judgment lien attaches on lands in a certain county, and afterward a new county is set off, within which these lands or part of them fall, the lien does not cease by reason of such new organization, but, on the contrary, it holds during the full statutory period without any further record.[17] Where a judgment is docketed in two counties it becomes a lien on the land of the judgment debtor in both counties.[18]

§ 474. —— Property Previously Transferred

A judgment does not attach as a lien on property which formerly belonged to the judgment debtor but which, before rendition of the judgment, had been sold or aliened in good faith.

A judgment does not attach as a lien on property which before its rendition had been sold or aliened by the owner in good faith,[21] or given away by him under a valid donation,[22] or, except as otherwise provided in the decree for sale,[23] sold at judicial sale,[24] or which had passed under an assignment for the benefit of his creditors,[25] or which had been transferred to liquidating trustees in accordance with a plan of reorganization for the purpose of liquidation,[26] or which had come into the custody or possession of the court in another proceeding;[27] but a deed given as "collateral security" does not divest the grantor of interest in the land so as to prevent a subsequent judgment against him from becoming a lien against it,[28] nor does a void deed to a dissolved corporation have this effect.[29]

Generally the fact that the prior conveyance by the judgment debtor was not recorded before the entry of judgment does not make the judgment a

Application pending at time of filing of abstract of judgment

Record of abstract of judgment against corporation was ineffective to secure to judgment creditor preference lien on corporation's land, where corporation was insolvent long before abstract of judgment was filed for record, and at time of filing of abstract application for general receiver of corporation on ground of insolvency was pending and receiver was afterwards appointed and qualified, since appointment of receiver related back to presentation of application.—Baylor University v. Chester Sav. Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 82 S.W.2d 738, error refused.

After order of conversion by chancery court, a judgment creditor cannot acquire a lien on land as such, and, where circuit court in partition proceeding had previously ordered land sold, judgment creditor of party interested in land obtained no lien on the land or proceeds thereof by filing in circuit clerk's office judgment that had been obtained in different county.—P. lien on the land so conveyed,[30] at least where the grantee is in possession, thus affording notice,[31] although the opposite view prevails in some jurisdictions,[32] and the lien has been held to attach where the prior conveyance contained a wrong description of the property so that, at the time of the judgment, the judgment debtor, rather than the vendee, appeared on the record to be the owner.[33] However, if the circumstances were such as to give the judgment creditor notice of the conveyance notwithstanding the misdescription, the judgment is invalid as a lien on the land.[34] If real estate is transferred while a judgment is dormant, the lien of the judgment cannot, on revivor thereof, be asserted against such real estate.[35] Where the lien of a judgment did not originally attach to certain property because it had been conveyed prior to the judgment, revival of the judgment prior to a decree setting aside the conveyance did not make the judgment a lien upon the property.[36]

Effect of nunc pro tunc entry of judgment. A judgment entered nunc pro tunc cannot create a lien on the debtor's lands sold or mortgaged prior to the date of its actual entry.[37]

§ 475. —— Property Fraudulently Conveyed

In some jurisdictions, but not in others, a judgment rendered after a fraudulent transfer becomes a lien on the property that has been fraudulently conveyed.

There is some dispute among the authorities as to whether or not a judgment rendered after a fraudulent transfer becomes a lien on the property that has been fraudulently conveyed.[38] Thus it has been held in some jurisdictions that an after-acquired judgment against the vendor attaches as a lien on property fraudulently conveyed,[39] and this is the rule generally applied where, in accordance with the principles discussed in Fraudulent Conveyances § 56, a conveyance in fraud of creditors is regarded as void.[40] In other jurisdictions, however, it has been held that a judgment is not a lien on lands fraudulently conveyed before rendition of the judgment,[41] particularly where such conveyance is regarded as merely voidable,[42] although this rule does not apply to a case where there is a secret trust and the grantor is still the real owner.[43] If a judgment lien does exist against land held fraudulently it ceases to operate when such land is transferred to a bona fide purchaser.[44]

The lien of a judgment against the fraudulent grantee attaches subject to the rights of the grantor's creditors.[45]

§ 476. —— Lands Instantaneously Seized

Where a person parts with a freehold estate at the same time and as a part of the same act or transaction by which he acquires it, his seizin for an instant does not subject the estates conveyed to him to the lien of a judgment against him.

It results from the doctrine limiting the judgment lien to the actual interest of the judgment debtor, discussed infra § 478, that as a general rule, where a person parts with a freehold estate at the same time and as a part of the same act or transaction by which he acquires it, his seizin for an instant does not subject the estates conveyed to him to the lien of a judgment against him.[46] Thus, where a third person is made a medium for the conveyance by a husband to his wife, a judgment lien against such third person does not attach to the property.[47]

§ 477. —— After-Acquired Property

Although in a few jurisdictions the rule is otherwise, generally the lien of a judgment attaches not only to property owned by the debtor at the time of the judgment, but also to all that he may subsequently acquire during the life of the lien.

In a few jurisdictions a judgment is not a lien on after-acquired property,[48] but under the statutes of most jurisdictions the lien of a judgment attaches, not only to property owned by the debtor at the time of the rendition of the judgment, but also to all that he may subsequently acquire during the life of the lien.[49] The lien of a judgment does not attach to property acquired by the judgment debtor after the lien has ceased to be effective.[50] The lien has been held to attach to after-acquired real estate although the instrument by which the title is acquired is unrecorded,[51] but there is also authority holding that the lien attaches only after the debtor's title is disclosed of record.[52] The lien on after-acquired property is superior to any equity which the grantor could retain by a parol agreement or subsequent recorded conveyance.[53]

Under the rule as to instantaneous seizin, discussed supra § 476, it has been held that if one sells and conveys real estate to which he has no title or an imperfect title at the time of the sale, and subsequently acquires a perfect title, it inures

Commencement of judgment lien as to after-acquired property see supra § 466.

Property held not "acquired" by debtor on his death

Where, at time of recovery, docketing, and recording of judgment on debtor's separate indebtedness, realty involved was community property of debtor and his wife and debtor died within five years after the docketing of the judgment, the lien of judgment did not attach on debtor's separate interest in the community realty on death of debtor since when debtor passed away his interest in the community which during his lifetime was exempt from the lien of judgment was not "later acquired" by him within statute providing that, after recording, a judgment shall become a lien for period of five years on all real property of the debtor whether the property is then owned by debtor or is "later acquired."—Tway v. Payne, 101 P. 2d 455, 55 Ariz. 343.

Joint tenancy

When a creditor has a judgment lien against interest of one joint tenant he can keep his lien alive and wait until joint tenancy is terminated by death of one of joint tenants, and, if judgment debtor survives, judgment lien immediately attaches to entire property.—Zeigler v. Bonnell, 136 P.2d 118, 52 Cal.App.2d 217.

Judgment lien reaches every interest of judgment debtor in land which record of title shows he had, either before or after judgment was docketed.—Miller v. Kemp, 160 S.E. 203, 157 Va. 178, 84 A.L.R. 980.

immediately to the benefit of the grantee, and, if between the date of the conveyance and the acquisition of the perfect title a judgment is rendered against the grantor, the title of the grantee is superior to that of the judgment creditor, since there is no moment of time at which the lien of the judgment could attach;[54] but there is some authority to the contrary.[55]

a. In General

Except as modified by registration laws, the lien of a judgment attaches to the precise interest or estate which the judgment debtor has actually and effectively in the property, and only to such interest.

The lien of a judgment attaches to the precise interest or estate which the judgment debtor has actually and effectively in the property, and only to such interest; the lien cannot be made effectual to bind or to convey any greater or other estate than the debtor himself, in the exercise of his rights, could voluntarily have transferred or alienated,[56] except, according to the decisions on the

A judgment lien holder is not in the same attitude as an innocent purchaser for value without notice.

Minn.—Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank of Thief River Falls v.

question, as modified by registration laws,[57] as where, by reason of the language and construction of the recording acts, a judgment creditor is put substantially on the basis of a bona fide purchaser, if without actual notice, and protected against such unrecorded conveyances, encumbrances, and the like as fall within the operation of the recording acts.[58]

Generally it is immaterial whether or not the judgment debtor's interest appears of record; whatever it is, it is bound by the lien.[59] Under some statutes, however, the judgment debtor's title must appear of record, or the judgment lien will not attach thereto.[60] The interest of a tenant in possession is not bound by the lien of a judgment against the holder of the legal title, because possession is notice of the tenant's rights,[61] but a judgment against the tenant in possession attaches as a lien to his interest, whatever it may be.[62] If the debtor's interest is subject to any infirmity or condition by reason of which it is eliminated or ceases to exist, the lien attaching thereto ceases with it.[63]

After the death of the judgment debtor, the filing of a transcript of a judgment does not render the judgment a lien on land belonging to the estate of such debtor.[64]

Judgment against vendee; legal title in vendor
A vendor by expressly reserving vendor's lien in deed retained legal title to land and, where land was reconveyed to vendor by vendee in consideration of cancellation of purchase money notes and vendor's lien, title was never in vendee so as to make land subject to lien of judgment obtained against vendee.—Mostyn v. Griffith, Tex.Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 906, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Lands owned by persons not parties to judgment
Judgment can attach only against lands owned by judgment debtor and not in first instance against lands owned by parties who were not parties to judgment.—Oakwood State Bank of Oakwood v. Durham, Tex. Civ.App., 21 S.W.2d 586.

Affiliated corporations
Where one corporation acquired controlling interest in other, judgment against former did not become lien on latter's property.—Steinfeld v. Copper State Mining Co., 290 P. 155, 37 Ariz. 151.

Judgment against administrator did not entitle judgment creditor to equitable lien as against proceeds of insurance on real estate belonging to deceased.—First Carolinas Joint Stock Land Bank of Columbia v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 158 S.E. 273, 160 S.C. 164.

Deed wrongfully recorded
Third person extending credit in reliance on borrower's record title to realty and without any notice or knowledge of defect in title occupies position of innocent purchaser for value, and by reducing claim to judgment during borrower's record ownership acquires valid judgment lien thereon. So, where deed executed and deposited by grantor with person of his own choice for delivery to grantee on grantor's death was wrongfully recorded deed was valid and absolute as to subsequent judgment creditor of grantee who extended credit in reliance on grantee's record title to property.—Micklethwait v. Fulton, 196 N.E. 166, 129 Ohio St. 488.

Lien on lands. A judgment lien attaches only to an estate in lands, not to a lien on lands.[65]

b. Curtesy and Dower

It has been held that a judgment against a husband is a lien on his life interest in the wife's lands; but an unassigned dower or an inchoate right of dower has been held not subject to the lien of a judgment against a married woman.

A judgment against a husband is a lien on his life interest in the wife's lands, although execution is suspended until her death,[66] but binds only the tenant's actual interest, and therefore is liable to be extinguished by the breach of a condition subsequent which divests the life estate[67] or by the exercise of a power to sell.[68] It has also been held, however, that during the wife's lifetime the husband has no interest in her lands to which the lien of a judgment can attach.[69]

An unassigned dower[70] or an inchoate right of dower[71] has been held not subject to the lien of a judgment against a married woman; and an answer by the holder of an inchoate right of dower, in proceedings to sell realty, waiving assignment of such right by metes and bounds and asking that she be awarded the same in money has been held not to transfer a judgment lien to the purchase money in favor of the judgment creditor.[72]

c. Interests Derived from Judicial Sale

The inchoate or inceptive title of a purchaser at a judicial sale, in advance of its confirmation or before issuance of a deed, is subject to the lien of a judgment against him; but the judgment creditor of one who has caused a sale pursuant to execution against a third person has no lien against the fund so created.

The inchoate or inceptive title of a purchaser at a judicial sale, in advance of its confirmation by the court, or before the issuance of a deed, may be bound by the lien of a judgment against him;[73] but the judgment creditor of one who has caused a sheriff's sale to be held pursuant to execution against a third person has been held to have no legal or equitable lien against the fund so created.[74]

d. Interests of Cotenants

A judgment against a tenant in common is a lien on the interest of the debtor in the land.

A judgment against a tenant in common is a lien on the interest of the debtor in the land,[75] but not on that of the debtor's cotenant,[76] and, in case of partition, the lien will attach to the part allotted to defendant,[77] or, if the land is sold on partition, to his share of the fund,[78] the purchaser under a decree for partition taking the land discharged of the lien.[79] According to some authority, however, the lien does not attach while the debtor's title is undisclosed of record.[80] A voluntary partition made by tenants in common will not prevail against the lien of a judgment rendered against one of the cotenants prior to the partition.[81]

e. Lands Subject to Power of Appointment

Where a person has a general power of appointment, and executes the power, the property appointed is deemed, in equity, part of his assets and subject to the demands of his judgment creditors; but a judgment has been held, in equity, to be subordinate to a power of appointment in a third person.

At common law, a judgment against a party having a power of appointment, with the estate vested in him until and in default of appointment, is defeated by the subsequent execution of the power;[82] but where a person has the general power of appointment, either by deed or will, and executes this power, the property appointed is deemed, in equity, part of his assets, and subject to the demands of his

Even though defendant had vendor's lien for balance grantee paid for delivery of escrow deed, plaintiff's judgment lien did not attach, since vendor's lien is not interest in land subject to execution.—Snow Bros. Hardware Co. v. Ellis, supra.

judgment creditors in preference to the claims of his voluntary appointees or legatees.[83] A judgment has been held in equity to be subordinate to a power of appointment in a third person, as, for instance, a power of sale vested in executors by will;[84] and the same principle has been applied to a power of appointment resting in the discretion of trustees, qualified only by the necessity of obtaining the consent of the judgment debtor to the exercise of that discretion.[85]

f. Life Estates

A judgment lien attaches on a vested life estate.

A judgment lien attaches on a vested estate for life.[86]

g. Property Acquired by Descent or Devise

The interest of a judgment debtor as heir or devisee and legatee before distribution has been held subject to the lien of the judgment, and, in case of sale of the property before distribution, the right of the judgment creditor is transferred from the property to the proceeds.

Before distribution, a creditor may obtain a judgment lien on the interest of his debtor as heir or devisee and legatee,[87] but where the executor, to pay debts of the testator, or pursuant to a power contained in the will, sells realty devised to a judgment debtor, such sale deprives the devisee of his interest in the land, and also deprives the judgment creditor of any right to proceed against the land itself for satisfaction of the judgment.[88] In the case of sale of land under order of a probate court[89] or under a testamentary power,[90] the lien has been held to be transferred from the land and to attach to the interest of the judgment debtor in the proceeds. Under a statute providing that the surplus of proceeds of such sale over and above the debts of the deceased shall belong to the person owning the premises at the time of the sale, the surplus must

Restriction on use of principal

Where life tenant's use of principal of the estate was restricted to use for her comfortable maintenance, the estate could not be charged with debts incurred for benefit of business conducted by life tenant and her husband and not for life tenant's maintenance and support, and realty which remained unconverted by sale at death of life tenant could not be subjected to lien of confession judgment on such debt.—In re Stannert's Estate, 15 A.2d 360, 339 Pa. 439.

Judgment confessed prior to acquisition of status

Even though mother and daughter as successive life tenants of father's residuary estate had unlimited power to consume principal, where judgment by confession was entered against daughter during mother's lifetime and therefore before daughter had acquired status of life tenant, daughter's confession of judgment could not constitute a consumption of principal by her so as to subject realty contained in residuary estate to judgment lien.—In re Stannert's Estate, supra.

Interest of debtor in testator's contract to sell

Where vendor under contract for deed had not executed deed at time of death, lien of judgment against devisee was held to attach to extent of share of unpaid purchase money on share of contract devised to devisee by vendor.—Bauermeister v. McDonald, 247 N.W. 424, 124 Neb. 142.

(3) The lien of a judgment against an heir to the real estate of an intestate attaches only to that portion of the real estate of the intestate, if any, distributed by the county court to the judgment debtor, and, when any portion of such real estate is so distributed, the lien of the judgment relates back to the time of its entry on the judgment docket.—Oil Well Supply Co. v. h. Remainders and Reversions

Vested estates in reversion or remainder are subject to the lien of judgments against the reversioner or remainderman or against the ancestor from whom the estate immediately descended, and in some states this is true of contingent remainders.

Estates in reversion or remainder, if vested, are legal estates subject to the lien of judgments against the reversioner or remainderman[95] or of judgments against the ancestor from whom the estate immediately descended;[96] and in some states this is true of contingent remainders,[97] although elsewhere this is denied.[98]

§ 479. —— Equitable Interests in General

a. In general
b. Equity of redemption

a. In General

The lien of a judgment ordinarily does not attach to an equitable title or interest in real estate held by the judgment debtor, although in some states the rule has been changed by statute or court decision.

The lien of a judgment ordinarily does not attach to or bind an equitable title or interest in real estate held by the judgment debtor,[99] but attaches only to real property in which the judgment debtor has a vested legal interest.[1] In several states, however, this rule has been changed by statute, or by the decisions of the courts assimilating legal and equitable remedies, so that an equitable estate is subject to the lien of a judgment;[2] but in some of such states it is held that a judgment is not a lien on an equitable interest in such a sense as to affect a bona fide purchaser without notice.[3] It has always been held by the courts of chancery that for their purposes such an estate is just as much bound by the judgment as any legal estate, and may be subjected to its satisfaction through the process of equity.[4]

b. Equity of Redemption

In many jurisdictions a judgment debtor's equity of redemption in encumbered property or his right to redeem property from judicial sale or foreclosure of a mortgage is subject to the lien of a judgment against him.

Formerly at common law an equity of redemption, being regarded as a mere equitable interest, was not an interest on which a judgment lien attached,[5] but in many jurisdictions, as a result either of statutes making judgments liens on equitable interests or of departures by statute or otherwise from the common-law view as to the equitable nature of the mortgagor's interest, the mortgagor's interest is subject to the lien of a judgment,[6] and the lien cannot be cut off by a conveyance of the equity to a prior mortgagee.[7] The judgment creditor has, however, no lien on money paid by the mortgagor to the assignee of the mortgage in excess of the amount due on such mortgage,[8] or on the proceeds of the sale of the equity of redemption,[9] although the judgment has been held to be a lien on the proceeds of a judicial sale of the interests of both the mortgagor and mortgagee.[10] A judgment obtained against the owner of an equity of redemption in mortgaged premises, after a decree of foreclosure but before the sale, has an equitable lien on the surplus moneys produced by the sale;[11] it is otherwise where the judgment was recovered after the property had been struck off to the purchaser.[12] Ordinarily, however, where land covered by a judgment lien is sold, the lien remains on the land, and does not attach to the fund received.[13] Even though the equity is not subject to the lien, the land passes under the lien when the title thereto is reinvested in the mortgagor on payment of the mortgage debt.[14]

The lien attaches to the equity where the encumbrance is created by a transaction lacking the essentials of a mortgage at law, but treated in equity as a mortgage,[15] and also, it seems, where it is created by a deed absolute in form, but intended by the parties merely as a security,[16] although the last mentioned transaction does not come within the rule in jurisdictions where such a deed is held to pass the legal title.[17] The interest of a grantor in a deed of trust to secure a debt is subject in some jurisdictions to the lien of a judgment against

Sale of debtor's interest
Judgment created no lien on debtor's equity of redemption in cotton for which negotiable warehouse receipts were in pledgee's hands until judgment creditor enjoined negotiation thereof; and creditor's rights in debtor's interest in price of cotton were controlled by debtor's contract to sell cotton, title to which passed to buyers before creditor enjoined negotiation of warehouse receipts, as against contention that value of debtor's interest should be determined by value of cotton when debtor filed exemption claim or amendment thereto, subsequent rise in value being for buyers' benefit. Debtor's interest in price received from buyers of cotton was exempt from payment of creditor's judgment, notwithstanding debtor did not file exemption claim until after creditor began suit to enjoin negotiation of warehouse receipts and to subject cotton to payment of judgment.—Warrick v. Lands received in exchange
Where landowner executed deeds, in effect mortgages, his equitable title was subject to lien of subsequent judgments, which attached also to land received in exchange therefor and to proceeds thereof over amount secured by deeds.—Everist v. Carter, 210 N.W. 559, 202 Iowa 498.

In Georgia
(1) A judgment against the vendor in a security deed after its execution in favor of a third person is a lien on his interest in the property thereby conveyed.—Kidd v. Kidd, 124 S.E. 45, 158 Ga. 546, 36 A.L.R. 798—O'Connor v. Georgia R. Bank, 48 S.E. 716, 121 Ga. 88—Shumate v. McLendon, 48 S.E. 10, 120 Ga. 396.

(2) It has been held, however, that, as the grantor divested himself of the legal title, he had no interest in the land which could be seized on execution, and that a judgment rendered against the grantor subsequent to the conveyance could not be enforced while the legal title was outstanding and unredeemed.—Phinzy v. Clark, 62 Ga. 623—Gibson v. Hough, 60 Ga. 588.

him,[18] although not so subject in others,[19] but, in those jurisdictions where the lien of a judgment does not attach to the reversionary or equitable interest of the grantor in such a deed of trust, the judgment creditor, by filing a bill in equity for that purpose, may secure a quasi lien, which will give him an interest in any surplus which may remain from the estate after discharging the trusts and which would result to the grantor's benefit, paramount to that of the latter.[20] Where the transaction is an absolute conveyance with a conditional agreement for reconveyance, the grantor retains no present interest in the realty, and a judgment against him cannot be a lien thereon,[21] although in such case the judgment creditor may acquire a lien by having the amount necessary to pay for the reconveyance determined and paying or properly tendering that amount.[22]

A judgment lien will attach to the debtor's right of redemption from a sale under a prior judgment[23] or execution,[24] or, although some statutes have been construed to require a contrary holding,[25] from a sale of the land for unpaid taxes.[26] A judgment debtor's right of possession and right to redeem after foreclosure of a mechanic's lien has been held not subject to a judgment lien;[27] and a judgment rendered against the mortgagor after the foreclosure sale is not in some states a lien on a statutory right to redeem from such sale,[28] but in other states a contrary rule has been adopted.[29]

§ 480. —— Interests of Parties to Executory Contract of Sale

a. Vendor's legal title

b. Vendee's equitable title

a. Vendor's Legal Title

A judgment recovered against a vendor of land after the execution of a contract for its sale but before the making and delivery of a deed generally is a lien on the legal title remaining in him, and binds the land to the extent of the unpaid purchase money; but, where all the purchase money has been paid at the date of the judgment, the lien does not attach to the mere naked legal title in the vendor.

While in a few jurisdictions when an owner of land has entered into an executory contract of sale no lien is acquired by his judgment creditors against the land,[30] especially where the vendee has entered into possession,[31] the rule generally followed is that a judgment recovered against a vendor of land, after the execution of a contract for its sale, but before the making and delivery of a deed, is a lien on the legal title remaining in him and binds the land to the extent of the unpaid purchase money;[32] and on a sale under such judgment the sheriff's vendee stands precisely in the situation of the original vendor, and is entitled to the unpaid purchase money.[33]

The mere docketing of the judgment, however, is not notice of the lien to the purchaser in possession, and payments subsequently made by him to the judgment debtor, pursuant to the contract, without actual notice of the judgment, are valid as against the lien on the land,[34] although the rule has been held to be otherwise where the vendee pays the balance of the purchase money to the vendor with actual notice of the judgment[35] or with full knowledge of the pendency of a suit against the vendor which might result in judgment against him.[36] The equitable right of the vendee to require a conveyance on fulfilling his part of the contract is not cut out or set aside by the attaching of the judgment lien,[37] even though none of the purchase money has been paid.[38] In some states, however, a contract for the sale of lands will not prevail against a subsequent judgment lien unless recorded,[39] although actual possession of the land, on the part of the vendee under a valid contract, will be sufficient to secure his equitable rights as against the lien of the judgment.[40] It is not an unusual practice for courts of equity to control the operation of a judgment obtained against a vendor subsequent to a contract for the sale of lands, and where the unpaid purchase money is brought into court equity may, on a proper showing, restrain proceedings to enforce the judgment by execution sale of the land.[41] Where all the purchase money has been paid at the date of the judgment, there remains nothing but a naked legal title in the vendor, to which the lien does not attach.[42]

Parol contract

(1) "One who occupies under a parol contract of purchase cannot set up as against the judgment-creditor of the parol vendor a title acquired after the enrollment of the judgment, though made in pursuance of an antedating parol sale. The rights of the creditor are fixed by the condition of affairs as they existed at the time of the inception of his lien, and cannot be varied by any subsequent conveyance which the debtor could not have been coerced by the courts to make."—Niles v. Davis, 60 Miss. 750, 753.

(2) It has been held that a purchaser of land by parol contract, which has been so far executed as to vest in him the right to compel his vendor to execute the contract in a court of equity, has an equitable right in the land which a court of equity will fully protect as against the lien of a subsequent judgment creditor of the vendor.—Farmers' Transp. Co. v. Swaney, 37 S.E. 592, 48 W.Va. 272—Snyder v. Botkin, 16 S.E. 591, 37 W.Va. 355—34 C.J. p 599 note 38 [a] (2).

(3) It has also been held that, where one purchases land by parol and is put in possession, he is not protected to the extent of the purchase money paid as to subsequent judgments against the vendor until he has acquired a perfect equitable title by paying the entire price.—Fulkerson v. Taylor, 46 S.E. 309, 102 Va. 314.

(4) An equitable title held by a bona fide purchaser, although by parol contract, who has paid the entire purchase money and received possession, will be preferred in equity to the liens of judgment creditors subsequently acquired against the vendor, provided the parol contract relied on is certain and definite in its terms, and is sustained by satisfactory proof.—Hurt's Adm'x v. Prillaman, 79 Va. 257—Trout's Adm'r v. Warwick, 77 Va. 731—Floyd v. Harding, 28 Gratt. 401, 69 Va. 401.

Notes for balance of purchase price. If a part of the purchase money has been paid, and the purchaser's note given for the balance, the lien of a judgment will still attach to the vendor's interest;[43] but if the note given for such balance of the price is transferred before maturity to a bona fide holder for value without notice, the real estate cannot be subjected to the payment of a judgment rendered against the vendor, retaining the legal title, after such assignment,[44] although it has been held otherwise where the judgment was obtained by the transferee of the notes.[45] Where a deed reserving a vendor's lien for a purchase-money note was recorded, and such lien assigned by an unrecorded instrument, the original deed was notice to the vendor's creditors only until the purchase-money note was outlawed, and liens of judgments against the vendor secured after the note was barred by the statute of limitations are superior to the assignee's rights under the vendor's lien.[46]

b. Vendee's Equitable Title

While it has been held in some jurisdictions that the lien of a judgment will not attach to an interest in land held by the debtor under a contract for its purchase where no deed has been made, the rule is otherwise in jurisdictions where a judgment is a lien on an equitable estate in land.

In pursuance of the common-law rule, stated supra § 479, that equitable estates are not subject to the lien of judgments, it has been held in several jurisdictions that the lien of a judgment cannot attach to an interest in land held by the debtor under a contract for its purchase, where no deed has been made, although part of the purchase money may have been paid, but that the only remedy of the judgment creditor is in equity.[47] In some jurisdictions, however, where by statute or otherwise a judgment is a lien on an equitable estate in lands, it is the rule that a vendee who holds under a contract of purchase, but who has not received a conveyance, acquires an interest on which a judgment will attach as a lien to the extent of such interest as measured by the amount of his payments already made and by his improvements on the premises,[48] and this rule has been applied not only where the whole or a part of the purchase money has been paid,[49] but also where no payment whatever has been made.[50] If the vendee, before completion of the purchase, sells and assigns his interest under his contract to a third person, the land will not be bound in the hands of the latter by a judgment thereafter rendered against the assignor,[51] at least not where the contract of sale or assignment was recorded.[52] The lien created by entry of a judgment against the vendor does not attach to the interest created in the vendee by the prior contract to purchase.[53]

Conditional sale of personalty. Where one makes a conditional sale of personal property, retaining the title in himself to secure the purchase money, a failure to record the contract as required by statute does not render the property subject to a judgment rendered in favor of a third person and against the vendee of the personalty prior to the making of the conditional sale.[54]

Apart from statute, a judgment against the equitable estate which a vendee holds under articles of agreement for the sale and purchase of land attaches to and binds the legal estate the instant it vests in the vendee, this doctrine being an exception to the general rule established in Pennsylvania that the lien of a judgment does not affect a subsequently acquired interest of the debtor by revival.—Brumbach v. a. In General

As a general rule, the lien of a judgment does not attach to the mere legal title to property existing in the judgment debtor when the equitable and beneficial title is in another, at least in the absence of an estoppel.

The lien of a judgment does not attach to the mere legal title to property existing in the judgment debtor, when the equitable and beneficial title is in another,[55] as where land is conveyed to the judgment debtor by a deed absolute in form, but intended merely as a security, or subject to a parol agreement to reconvey,[56] or where there is a mere transitory seizin of lands by the judgment debtor in trust for another,[57] or where a third person pays the purchase money, but the deed is taken in the name of the judgment debtor,[58] although a judgment lien on lands cannot be defeated by the fact that the purchase money for the lands was paid by a third person subsequent to the vesting of title in the judgment debtor, so that no resulting trust was created.[59]

Roff, 61 P.2d 1041, 178 Okl. 71.

In Pennsylvania
(1) Prior to the act of June 4, 1901, a judgment creditor was not entitled to the protection of a purchaser of the legal title against an equitable owner. Such act changed the law by providing that a resulting trust arising from payment of purchase money by a person other than the one taking the legal title shall be void as to bona fide judgment or other creditors; but such act is not applicable to trusts arising where a conveyance is made without any consideration and it appears that the grantee was not intended to take beneficially.—Loughney v. Page, 182 A. 700, 320 Pa. 508 —34 C.J. p 596 note 6 [j].

(2) The statute has application only to one particular type of trust, that which arises by reason of a payment of the purchase money by one person and the taking of title in the name of another.—Davis v. Commonwealth Trust Co., 7 A.2d 3, 335 Pa. 387—Loughney v. Page, supra—34 C.J. p 596 note 6 [j].

(3) As to real estate to which the debtor holds only the bare record title, the judgment is no lien; and a judgment creditor of a trust company could not secure a lien on realty held by the trust company as trustee for others.—Fortna v. Commonwealth Trust Co., 19 A.2d 57, 341 Pa. 138—Davis v. Commonwealth Trust Co., 7 A.2d 3, 335 Pa. 387.

(4) So, where claim against trust company for unlawful distraint was nothing more than a common or secondary claim against the assets of the trust company in possession of liquidating trustees, the securing of a judgment on such claim could not give the claim a higher status than it primarily had.—Davis v. Commonwealth Trust Co., supra.

In some jurisdictions, however, it has been held iat the beneficial owner may be estopped to assert tle against the lien of a judgment obtained by one ho extended credit to the holder of the legal title ithout knowledge of the equities.[60] When the ust does not extend to the entire interest in the nd, as where the title is taken in the name of the dgment debtor and part only of the purchase mony is paid out of trust funds in his hands, the judgent against him will be a lien on the land to the xtent of his interest therein.[61] Where a trustee olds the legal title, and that title is of record, a dgment on default entered simply against the rustor does not affect the right or title held by the rustee or the beneficiary for whom the title is so eld.[62]

b. Judgments against Cestui Que Trust

It has been held that a judgment against a cestui ue trust does not attach as a lien on his equitable estate, but under some circumstances such an interest may e subject to a judgment lien.

Under the rule denying to judgments the effect f liens on equitable estates, it has been held that a udgment does not attach as a lien on the interest f a cestui que trust, as, for instance, where land as been purchased with the money of a judgment lebtor, but the title has been taken in the name of . third person;[63] and, in some jurisdictions where judgment is held to be a lien on both legal and quitable estates, the judgment gives no lien on the and so purchased if the transaction was in fraud of creditors.[64] However, a distinction has been made between active and passive trusts, it being held that where the legal title to lands is in trustees for the purpose of serving the requirements of an active trust, a judgment creditor of the cestui que trust has no lien and can acquire none at law,[65] although he may obtain relief in equity, on a bill to subject the beneficiary's interest to the satisfaction of his judgment,[66] but that the equitable estate or interest of a cestui que trust may be subject to the lien of a judgment against him where the trust is merely a dry or passive one.[67]

Termination of trust. Where a trust provides for the collection of income up to a certain time, and then for the division of the property among the beneficiaries, the trustee having no power to sell the trust property, judgments which have been recovered against the beneficiaries will become liens on their interests in the property on the arrival of the time of division.[68]

§ 482. —— Leaseholds

Leasehold interests are bound by judgment liens where such interests are treated as real estate, or where statutes expressly so provide.

At common law a leasehold interest or estate in land for years was regarded as only a chattel interest, and therefore not subject to the lien of a judgment, and this view is still held in some states;[69] but in others leasehold interests are regarded and treated as real estate, and as such bound by judgment liens.[70] Judgments are also liens on

A judgment creditor had no lien against land purchased by judgment debtor with proceeds of land derived to judgment debtor's daughters on ground that judgment creditor had loaned to judgment debtor on strength of his holdings, where there was no recorded deed to judgment debtor which might have gone into an estimate of judgment debtor's solvency; and the judgment creditor could not urge lapse of time and laches of daughters in not bringing their affairs to an earlier settlement and not having accounts filed and approved and proper conveyance of lands made to them, where there was no evidence that judgment debtor denied trust or refused to execute it, and if he had, matter would still be between parties to trust.—Jackson v. § 483. Priority of Liens

A judgment creditor has a right to strengthen his lien against the property of his debtor by purchasing other claims, valid or invalid, which were asserted as superior to the judgment lien.

A judgment creditor has a right to strengthen his lien against the property of his debtor by purchasing other claims, valid or invalid, which were asserted as superior to the judgment lien.[72]

The priority of liens as between judgments generally is considered infra § 484; as between judgments and attachment liens in Attachment § 272; as between judgments and garnishment liens in Garnishment § 183; and as between judgments and other liens or conveyances generally infra § 485.

§ 484. —— Between Judgments

a. In general
b. As against after-acquired property
c. Judgments entered on same day
d. Priority by superior diligence
e. Judgments for future advances
f. Judgments for purchase money

a. In General

In general the liens of different judgments affecting the same property take rank and priority according to the dates when they were respectively entered or docketed.

In some jurisdictions, the docketing of a judgment is necessary in order that the lien may attach as against subsequent judgment creditors;[73] in others, a prior judgment, whether docketed or undocketed, has priority over a subsequent judgment.[74] In the absence of countervailing equities, or the establishment of a different rule by statute, and subject to the rules hereinafter stated, the liens of different judgments affecting the same property take rank and priority according to the dates when they were respectively entered or docketed, the elder being first entitled to satisfaction,[75] without regard to the date of acquisition of the land to which they attach,[76] and the same rule of priority obtains as between a judgment at law and a decree in equity where the law requires both to be docketed or enrolled.[77] In fixing this priority, the relative position of the judgments on the docket, although raising a presumption as to their seniority, is not controlling.[78]

Since the lien of a judgment is dependent on the condition of the record at the time of its entry, it cannot be affected by a subsequent revival of an earlier judgment, giving the holder thereof rights which did not exist at the time of the entry of the junior judgment.[79] If the last of three or more judgment liens in the order of their succession is superior to the first, but inferior to the second, it gains no practical advantage from its superiority, because it could not be preferred to the first without being preferred also to the second, to which it is subsequent.[80] In some jurisdictions it has been held that a subsequent judgment creditor is entitled to priority over an earlier judgment of which the docket gives no notice,[81] as where it fails to dis-

Judgment against married woman
A judgment on a confession entered of record against woman twice married in her first married name, entered several years after her marriage to second husband, did not afford such "constructive notice" in public record as to give judgment priority over a subsequent judgment on a mortgage signed by woman in close the Christian name of the debtor;[82] but the rule has been held not to apply to a junior judgment holder who fails to search the judgment records and hence was not misled.[83] Actual notice of a defectively entered judgment is as effective to give priority to such judgment over a subsequent judgment as is the constructive notice given by the judgment docket.[84]

Judgments entered at same term. Where the doctrine of relation to the first or last day of the term, as discussed supra § 113, prevails, or where so provided by statute, there is no priority between judgments entered at the same term;[85] but even where this rule has been given statutory form, it has been held not to affect the priorities of transcripts of judgments filed in a county other than that in which the judgments were recovered.[86] Where the doctrine of relation does not apply, and in the absence of statute, the priority of judgments is not affected by the fact that they were rendered at the same term.[87]

b. As against After-Acquired Property

As a general rule there is no priority between judgments as to property acquired by the judgment debtor after the judgments have been entered.

Although there is some authority to the contrary,[88] it has generally been held that, if several judgments are entered against the same debtor at different times, and he afterward acquires the legal title to real estate, the liens of the several judgments attach together on the property at the same instant, and there are therefore no priorities between them;[89] nor can one judgment creditor obtain priority by obtaining execution and sale of such property.[90]

c. Judgments Entered on Same Day

As between judgments entered on the same day, in some jurisdictions there is no priority of lien. In others, priority depends on priority of execution, while in still others, fractional parts of the day may be considered.

In some jurisdictions, courts are bound to look to the fractional parts of a day in order to determine the priority of judgment liens where several are entered, filed, or registered against the same debtor on the same day.[91] In other jurisdictions, the rule in respect of such judgments is that the creditor who first takes out execution will have a preference.[92] In still other jurisdictions, there is no priority of liens between judgments entered on the same day, and, when the fund is insufficient to discharge them all, they are to be paid pro rata,[93] unless some one judgment creditor has a superior equity.[94]

d. Priority by Superior Diligence

Under the statutes and decisions in some jurisdictions, and in a proper case, priority may be gained for a judgment by a creditor exercising superior diligence in obtaining execution.

Where several judgments are of equal rank or date, it has been held, as discussed in Fraudulent Conveyances § 451, that a priority is gained by that creditor who exercises superior activity and diligence, as where one is the first to discover and avoid a fraudulent conveyance of property by the common debtor; or to levy an attachment on the property, as considered in Attachments § 272; and one who by supplementary proceedings discovers property of the judgment debtor in the hands of third persons has a legal preference enforceable in a court of equity.[95]

Priority by prior levy. In some jurisdictions, particularly where the statutes so provide, priority is given to judgments in the order in which executions are issued thereon,[96] such priority being undisturbed by any subsequent judgment, levy of execution, or sale thereunder.[97] In other jurisdictions, however, the fact that an execution is first issued on a junior judgment does not give the lien of such judgment priority over that of a senior judgment against the same land;[98] but priority for a junior judgment may thus be gained where the land affected was not subject to the lien of either judgment.[99] A statute requiring the recording of executions on the general execution docket, amended to provide that the lien of a judgment shall date only from the time the execution is so recorded, has been held to have no application in a contest between mere judgment liens, it being intended for the protection of third persons.[1]

Although there is authority to the contrary,[2] it has generally been held that, where liens of judgment are equal, one judgment creditor may acquire a priority over another by superior diligence in executing his judgment.[3] Thus, where there is no priority between the liens of judgments in favor of different persons and against the same defendant rendered or recorded on the same day, it has been held that the judgment creditor first issuing execution and levying on the debtor's property acquires a prior right to satisfaction;[4] and the same rule has been applied to judgments rendered at the same term where such judgments are equal liens on the defendant's real estate.[5] So the rule has been applied in a case where two liens on real estate were created by the same decree.[6] Commencement of a suit to partition the property will not prevent the holder of a judgment lien thereon from obtaining priority over another judgment creditor by causing execution to issue and levy to be made after institution of the action, where the other creditor failed to do so.[7]

Priority between judgments as against equitable interests. It has been held that, if several creditors having judgments of different dates resort to a court of equity for satisfaction out of an equitable interest of their debtor in real estate, they are to have satisfaction out of the fund according to the order of their judgments in point of time, the elder being entitled to priority over the younger.[8] On the other hand, it has been held that the judgment creditor who first files his bill to enforce an equitable lien on land obtains a priority in relation to the land named in his bill, and it is not necessary that the action be prosecuted for the benefit of all the creditors.[9]

e. Judgments for Future Advances

In some jurisdictions the lien of a judgment for future advances is superior to liens attaching after the judgment but before the advances; in others, it is superior only as to advances made before the subsequent lien.

Some decisions hold that the lien of a judgment given to secure advances to be made will be good against intervening liens attaching after the judgment but before the advances.[10] Under other de-

f. Judgments for Purchase Money

The mere fact that a judgment is for purchase money does not make it superior to judgments for other debts.

The mere fact that a judgment is for purchase money does not make it superior to judgments for other debts;[13] and a judgment recovered or confessed for the purchase money of land has no priority over older judgments which attached as liens on the same land at the time of its transfer to the debtor,[14] unless the execution and delivery of the deed for the land and the giving of a judgment for the purchase money were inseparably connected as parts of the same continuous transaction.[15] The judgment of a transferee of a bond for title to land, although obtained subsequent to a general judgment against the transferor of the bond, is superior to the latter judgment, and has a superior claim to the fund derived from the sale of the land covered by the bond, where the transfer of the bond antedated the latter judgment.[16] It has, however, an inferior claim to a fund derived from the sale of land of the transferor not covered by the bond for title.[17]

ment is given priority.[19] Where a lien is general, it must be subordinated to the superior equity of a prior specific lien,[20] although this rule cannot avail against a specific statute to the contrary.[21] The lien of a subsequent judgment has been held to take priority over an alleged mortgage lien claimed by one whose name has been substituted as a grantee without authority of the original grantor for the purpose of defrauding creditors.[22] A mortgagee lending money for construction has been held entitled to priority over subsequent judgment creditors, although the construction was on a lot not covered by the mortgage.[23] Where a deed is to a dissolved corporation, which is incapable of receiving title, a subsequent judgment has a lien prior to the interest of a grantee from the corporation.[24]

Where a mortgage given to secure a note mistakenly secures only a small portion of the amount intended, judgment creditors obtaining judgments after the mortgage is recorded have a lien on the mortgaged land subject to the amount stated in the

Equitable mortgage

(1) Equitable mortgages generally prevail over liens of subsequent judgments.—Reidy v. Collins, 26 P.2d 712, 134 Cal.App. 713—41 C.J. p 548 note 98.

(2) Instrument assigning and transferring interest in estate, and recorded in county where real property was located, was held equitable mortgage, entitled to priority over judgment lien asserted against realty.—Gamble v. Consolidated Nat. Bank of Tucson, 262 P. 612, 33 Ariz. 117.

(3) Equitable mortgage created by mortgage assignee's promise to execute new mortgage to party, with whom assignee had pledged mortgage as collateral security, if permitted to purchase property at mortgage foreclosure sale, was held superior to lien of assignee's judgment creditor acquired after foreclosure sale, but before recordation of new mortgage.—Rutherford Nat. Bank v. H. R. Bogle & Co., 169 A. 180, 114 N.J.Eq. 571.

Stipulation fixing equitable lien

A judgment confirming a stipulation, in partition suit, fixing equitable lien on proceeds, established existence of lien, although not its priority against judgment lien, but judgment creditor not showing that judgment was docketed before stipulation fixing equitable lien in partition suit, or that stipulation was fraudulently entered into, is not entitled to priority.—Bennis v. Conley, 231 N.Y.S. 635.

A judgment on a note secured by a second mortgage gives the judgment creditor no better rights in respect of the property than the judgment debtor who fails to redeem from foreclosure of the first mortgage, but amounts to merely a general lien on the land of the debtor, subject to prior liens, and gives the judgment creditor the right to levy on land to the exclusion of subsequent adverse interests only.—Stiles v. Bailey, 219 N.W. 537, 205 Iowa 1385.

Transfer in escrow

Judgment lien did not attach to land which defendant had before judgment conveyed under deed in escrow which was delivered on performance of condition, thereby eliminating interest.—Snow Bros. Hardware Co. v. Ellis, 21 S.W.2d 162, 180 Ark. 238.

Oral contract for conveyance

Where parties made valid oral contract for conveyances of real estate in consideration of extinguishment of existing indebtedness, obligations of parties became fixed, and grantors had no interest subject to subsequent judgment lien, regardless of time of delivery of deed.—Richardson v. Estle, 243 N.W. 611, 214 Iowa 1007.

Defectively registered deed

Where notary public signed certificate of acknowledgment on original deed but the signature was omitted by register in recording deed, the deed was entitled to registration and had priority over subsequent judgment and levies of execution against the grantor of the land described in the deed.—Tennessee Barium Corporation v. Williams, 133 S.W.2d 1015, 23 Tenn.App. 398.

Lien for rent

(1) A landlord's lien for rent is ordinarily paramount to the lien of a judgment.—Staber v. Collins, 100 N.W. 527, 124 Iowa 543—36 C.J. p 506 note 9.

(2) Landlord's lien for rent relates back to levy of distress on landlord's recovering judgment and takes precedence over common-law judgment rendered after levy, but before judgment for landlord.—Corley-Powell Produce Co. v. Allen, 157 S.E. 251, 42 Ga.App. 641.

mortgage, with interest,[25] but the owner of the note has the right to credit payments made by the makers on the unsecured amount as against the judgment creditors.[26] Where the true owner of land is estopped to assert his title as against the grantee in a deed made by a person having no title, and a creditor of the true owner reduces his debt to judgment, the lien thereof is superior to the equity of a third person having neither lien nor title from the true owner.[27] A judgment in a suit for breach of a covenant in a deed does not relate back to the date of the deed so as to take priority over a mortgage executed subsequent to the deed.[28] A judgment against a partner for an individual debt, since it binds only his interest in the firm property, is subordinate to junior judgment creditors of the partnership;[29] and the same rule applies as to real estate of the firm, the legal title to which is in the name of the partner against whom a judgment is recovered for an individual debt.[30]

Lien for wages. Laborers' liens do not have priority over judgment liens of record at the time of an employer's insolvency, where the statute expressly so provides,[31] or where the statute gives laborers' liens priority over purchasers and creditors with notice,[32] and even where the statute gives the laborer a lien and not merely a preference.[33]

Mechanics' liens. A judgment lien has been held superior to a prior mechanics' lien which, although enforceable under the doctrine of estoppel, is legally defective.[34] Violation of a building ordinance has been held not to affect the validity of a mechanics' lien so as to give a judgment creditor the right to question its priority.[35] Under some statutory provisions the only judgment which can have priority over a mechanics' lien is a judgment founded on a claim based solely on materials furnished, labor performed, or money advanced for improvement of realty.[36]

Mortgages to secure future advances. A mortgage to secure future advances takes priority over a judgment obtained after the advances were made,[37] but, where a mortgagee makes optional advances after notice of a junior judgment lien, his lien for such advances will be postponed to that of the owner of the junior judgment lien.[38] A grantee in a deed intended as a mortgage for future advances has been held entitled to a priority over subsequent judgment creditors of the grantor as to future advances made after rendition of the judgments but without actual notice of the judgments.[39] The filing and entry of a judgment has been held of itself insufficient notice to the judgment debtor's mortgagee holding a mortgage for future advances, as respects the mortgagee's right of priority for advances made after the filing of the judgment,[40] but, where the mortgagee has actual notice of the judgment, the latter will take preference over subsequent advances, where the mortgage, while given for a certain sum, obligated the mortgagor only for money actually advanced by the mortgagee.[41] A mortgagee holding a mortgage for advances on an incompleted building advancing additional money for its completion and taking a second mortgage has been held to have a lien superior to that of a subsequent judgment creditor as against a contention that the advances were made when the debtor was insolvent.[42]

Receivers. A judgment against a receiver which merely fixes the amount of the claim is not entitled to priority over other creditors who have proved their claims;[43] nor is a judgment, obtained after the appointment of a receiver in an action which had been previously instituted, entitled to priority where, the estate being that of an insolvent, the rights of creditors are fixed at the date of the appointment of the receiver.[44] Where liens have attached on commencement of the suit in which assets have been impounded by a proceeding begun before proceedings for a receivership, a judgment obtained in such proceeding after the appointment of the receiver does not, by reason of the receivership, lose its claim to priority.[45]

(2) Prior Conveyance or Lien Not Recorded

In the absence of a statute to the contrary a judgment lien is subordinate to prior conveyances and encumbrances even where these are not recorded; but statutory provisions generally require, expressly or by construction, recording of such conveyances or encumbrances if their priority is to be maintained.

The rule that a judgment lien is subordinate to prior conveyances and encumbrances and all existing liens and equities in favor of third persons applies, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, even though the previous conveyance has not been recorded.[46] Some recording statutes expressly include judgment creditors among the persons as against whom a prior conveyance will be void unless recorded;[47] and, even where the statute is not so specific but merely provides that no conveyance shall be good or effective unless recorded,[48] or unless recorded within a limited time,[49] or that a deed shall be invalid as against subsequent creditors, unless duly recorded,[50] it has generally been held that the lien of a judgment is to be preferred to a conveyance executed before the rendition of the judgment but not recorded until afterward, provided the judgment creditor was without notice of the conveyance, as discussed infra subdivision a (3) of this section. Such rule, however, does not apply where

Retroactive effect

(1) Amendment to statute to protect judgment lien creditors against unrecorded deed was held not retroactive.—Fulghum v. Madrid, 265 P. 454, 33 N.M. 303.

(2) An act making unrecorded deeds invalid as against subsequent judgment creditors was required to be construed prospectively since a retrospective construction would deprive holders of unrecorded deeds of vested rights in realty without due process of law, since it did not give holders of deeds theretofore executed a reasonable time to comply with statute, and hence entry of judgment on Febr. 3, 1933, did not give judgment creditor a lien against land conveyed by judgment debtor to third person in 1928, notwithstanding deeds were not recorded until 1934. —Farmers Nat. Subsequent creditor

Under a statute requiring recording of a conveyance within a certain time, one who receives a note as a renewal of a note executed prior to the conveyance is not a subsequent creditor.—Little v. Mangum, C.C.A. S.C., 17 F.2d 44.

An equitable title acquired independently of the legal title is not subject to the registration statute so that the superiority of the equitable title may be asserted against the judgment creditor of the holder of the legal title, even though the creditor had no notice thereof at the time of fixing the creditor's lien.—Roeser & Pendleton v. Stanolind Oil & Gas Co., Tex.Civ.App., 133 S.W.2d 250, error refused.

Priority over trust

(1) It has been held that a recording statute does not preclude a cestui que trust from asserting his superior equity to land in the absence of a showing that the trustee has conveyed the legal title to the cestui que trust prior to the time that the creditor fixed his lien.—Roeser & Pendleton v. Stanolind Oil & Gas Co., supra—34 C.J. p 607 note 14 [a] (2).

(2) Even though the legal title has been transferred to the cestui que trust, if the deed is not of record at the time the creditor fixes his lien, the cestui que trust may assert his original equity acquired independently of the lien in a suit against the creditor, as the statute requires that such unrecorded deed shall be treated as void.—Roeser & Pendleton v. Stanolind Oil & Gas Co., supra.

the judgment is obtained against a grantor whose title is not recorded.[51] A subsequent judgment lien does not take priority where the statute merely provides that an unrecorded conveyance shall be void as against "purchasers;"[52] or that it shall be void as against purchasers and encumbrancers who acquire title by an "instrument" duly recorded;[53] or that it shall be void as against persons who in good faith have acquired a transfer or lien binding the property;[54] or, according to some authorities, that it shall be void as against third persons,[55] although other authorities hold that the term "third persons" includes judgment creditors.[56] Under a statute providing that deeds shall not take effect as to creditors and subsequent purchasers until their delivery for record and shall be void as to all creditors and subsequent purchasers whose deeds and other instruments are first recorded, a prior unrecorded deed will take precedence of a judgment lien unless a deed based on the judgment is recorded before such prior deed is recorded.[57] Under other statutes an unrecorded deed or mortgage takes priority as against a subsequent judgment lien if it is recorded before the execution sale, and, if not filed until after such sale, the purchaser at the execution sale acquires title.[58] Where land was sold to obtain money to pay an outstanding mortgage, the deed and mortgage release being executed before, but recorded together after, the vendor's creditors had secured judgments against him, the purchaser's title was held superior to such judgment liens.[59]

The fact that an assignment by a debtor of an equitable estate to an assignee holding legal title was not recorded until after entry of a judgment against the debtor does not result in the lien of the judgment attaching to the title of the assignee where the judgment debtor's interest could have been subjected to the lien of the judgment only by proceedings in the chancery court.[60] A statute providing that all deeds shall take effect on record as to creditors without notice means creditors of the grantor, not of the grantee, and does not give prior judgment creditors of the grantee the rights of bona fide purchasers.[61] Where property has been conveyed to the judgment debtor by an unrecorded deed, and thereafter, when the judgment creditor sought execution on the property, the grantor conveyed the premises to another who was not a bona fide purchaser, the debtor's title under the unrecorded deed was superior to the title of the second grantee as respects the judgment creditor's rights.[62] A statute providing that the unrecorded conveyance of an interest in land is void as against a judgment lien has been held not to apply to the conveyance of equities requiring the aid of a court of equity to establish.[63] Inscription of a judgment after sale of land was filed for record but before the sale was actually inscribed in the conveyance records does not operate as a judicial mortgage so as to give the judgment creditor a claim to the land prior to that of the purchaser.[64]

Defective conveyance. Where the subsequent judgment creditor is not misled or his rights impaired, a defective conveyance prior to the judgment may be corrected thereafter, as where by mistake the land described in the original deed was not that intended to be conveyed,[65] especially where the grantee went into immediate possession of the property he intended to buy,[66] and it has been held that the latter rule should be applied where the grantor corrects the mistake without the intervention of equity.[67]

Delivery to a stranger, for a third person, of an intended deed, of which delivery such third person is not informed, does not, by relation, when such third person accepts the deed, operate to defeat a right acquired under a judgment lien against the grantor between the time of delivery to the stranger and acceptance by the grantee.[68]

(3) Effect of Notice

A judgment lien ordinarily is subordinate to a prior conveyance or encumbrance of which the judgment creditor has notice, actual or constructive, even though such conveyance or encumbrance has not been recorded.

The rule that a judgment lien is subordinate to prior conveyances and encumbrances and all existing liens and equities in favor of third persons generally applies where the judgment creditor has actual or constructive notice of such prior conveyance, lien, encumbrance, or equity.[69] The judgment creditor is generally regarded as having such notice where there is an actual, open, and notorious possession of the premises on the part of the grantee[70] or his tenant;[71] but the judgment creditor has been held not chargeable with notice where a tenant in possession at the time of the execution of the unrecorded deed has not recognized the grantee as his landlord,[72] or, according to some authorities, even where such tenant in possession has agreed to hold under the grantee.[73] As against a third person in possession the judgment creditor stands in the relation of a subsequent purchaser as far as notice of the rights of such person are concerned,[74] but such possession must be exclusive and unequivocal, and does not constitute notice where the record owner is also in possession.[75]

The judgment creditor will be charged with notice of a previous unrecorded deed if he had knowledge of such fact as would put a reasonable man on inquiry, which, if diligently pursued, would have led to knowledge of the fact that the land did not belong to the judgment debtor.[76] It has been held that if a mortgage is recorded within the time prescribed by law, although not recorded at the time of recovery of a judgment, the lien of the judgment is postponed to the rights of the prior mortgagee, without regard to the question of actual notice of the mortgage.[77]

Although under the provisions of a statute an unrecorded deed may be absolutely void as against a subsequent judgment creditor whether or not he has notice of it,[78] statutes which make the lien of a judgment creditor superior to the interest of a grantee or mortgagee under a prior unrecorded

Escrow agreement

Where mortgagor's escrow deed conveying title to second mortgage holder, and trustee's escrow satisfaction of third mortgage were to become absolute on failure to pay second mortgage by date specified, rights of second mortgage holder under escrow instruments were held superior to judgment lien of assignee of note, originally secured by third mortgage who took with knowledge of facts.—Ruden v. Kirby, 241 N.W. 791, 59 S.D. 631.

Recitals in recorded deeds

(1) Where recorded deeds and mortgage contained general description of land by reference to its adjoining owners and to river which bound land, which description was sufficient to cover entire tract, but contained reference to prior deeds which did not embrace entire tract, subsequent judgment creditor was put on notice that entire tract was intended to be covered and could not levy execution on part of tract not covered by prior deeds referred to.—Phœnix Mut. Possession under contract of purchase, alleged to be fraudulent as to creditors, was held sufficient to put subsequent judgment creditor of record owner on inquiry as to his rights, even though prior to contract he had been a tenant of record owner, where thereafter his possession was exclusive, it being immaterial whether record owner claimed to own property.—Union Bank of Chicago v. Priority determined by recording

Where third persons purchased judgment debtor's realty Friday afternoon and deed was mailed to recorder's office on Saturday and arrived there Monday morning when it was filed for record, but the judgment was filed for record Saturday morning, purchaser took realty subject to judicial mortgage.—Robin v. Harris Realty Co., 152 So. 573, 178 La. 946.

conveyance usually contain the proviso that, in order to be entitled to priority, the judgment creditor shall be without notice of the unrecorded deed or mortgage,[79] and, even though such statutes do not contain any express provision as to notice, it has been held that the fact of such notice will prevent the judgment creditor from obtaining priority.[80] The burden of proving that the judgment creditor had notice is on the party seeking to assert rights as against him.[81]

Notice must be brought home to the judgment creditor at or before the time the judgment was rendered,[82] or at or before the time his judgment lien attaches, and his rights are not affected by the fact that he acquires knowledge of the prior deed after such time.[83]

Defective deed. Where by statute a judgment creditor's lien is given precedence over an unrecorded deed of which he has no notice, it has been held that the equity of the grantee under a recorded deed to have it reformed so as to include land omitted from the description therein cannot displace the lien of the judgment.[84] The fact that a mortgage of which the judgment creditor has notice is defectively acknowledged has been held not to affect its superiority over a subsequent judgment,[85] but, where the recording of an improperly authenticated mortgage is regarded as no record, such a mortgage is postponed to a judgment lien;[86] and the recording of a mortgage which is not only defective but contrary to law will not make the mortgage a lien superior to that of a subsequent judgment, as against the contention that the subsequent creditor had constructive notice by reason of the recording, and could have learned the true situation by inquiry.[87] It has been held that where a person makes a conveyance of land, which is defective by reason of a wrong description of the premises, the lien of a judgment against the grantor subsequent to the conveyance and prior to the reformation of the deed will not attach to the lands.[88] A judgment creditor seeking to subject to his judgment lands conveyed prior thereto, because of an alleged defect in the deed, is chargeable with such information as was contained in the deeds and furnished by the records at the date when the judgment was obtained.[89] Where a grantor's judgment creditor was not made

Sufficiency of notice

(1) Whatever charges purchaser with notice as to possession of land charges judgment creditor with notice.—Majewski v. Greenberg, 136 A. 749, 101 N.J.Eq. 134—34 C.J. p 609 note 34 [a] (1).

(2) A letter from the judgment debtor to the judgment creditor disclosing the facts was sufficient to give notice of debtor's unrecorded deed, barring priority under recording act.—Myers v. Hayden, 257 P. 351, 82 Colo. 98.

(3) Judgment debtors' recorded deed, conveying tract of land to bank receiver, who conveyed smaller tracts to corporation in satisfaction of its equity in former tract, which receiver took in satisfaction of bank's mortgages on smaller tracts, did not give judgment creditor, subsequently recording judgment, notice of corporation's claim of right of subrogation to such mortgages, record of which was not notice that corporation had contributed to satisfaction thereof.—Sutley v. Dothan Oil Mill Co., 179 So. 819, 235 Ala. 475.

(4) Where a judgment creditor released his judgment to enable the judgment debtor to borrow money on a mortgage, the judgment creditor was chargeable with notice of such mortgage and could not claim priority over it because it was not recorded before entry of his subsequent judgment.—Hutchinson v. Bramhall, 7 A. 873, 42 N.J.Eq. 372.

(5) Other cases see 34 C.J. p 609 note 34 [a].

Notice by reference in other conveyance

A judgment creditor must take notice of what appears on face of deed in chain of title to, or executed by one having record interest in, land on which execution is levied, but is not bound to inquire into collateral circumstances growing out of conveyances of land not claimed by him.—Sutley v. Dothan Oil Mill Co., 179 So. 819, 235 Ala. 475.

Assignee of judgment

Where a judgment creditor assigns a prior judgment lien not having notice of an unrecorded mortgage, his assignee, although having notice of the mortgage, takes priority over it.—McCandless v. Klauber, 155 S.E. 141, 158 S.E. 32.

Description of property

Va.—Blair v. Rorer's Adm'r, supra.

Notation on record

Under the statute authorizing and requiring the clerk of the county court to record deeds and contracts for the sale of real estate, a notation on the margin of the record of a deed, signed by the grantor and acknowledged before the clerk, and purporting to correct a mistake in the description, was an instrument

a party to a suit to reform and correct a deed, he is not bound by such proceedings, and a commissioner's deed correcting the mistake will be void as to him when not admitted to record until after the judgment was docketed.[90]

Defective recording. Notice to a subsequent judgment creditor is not imparted by an illegal, unsuccessful, or incomplete attempt to record a prior deed,[91] but a mere irregularity in recording a deed will not affect its priority.[92] Where, in order that an instrument evidencing a lien on real estate shall import constructive notice, it must be recorded in the proper book as required by the recording act, an instrument recorded in the wrong book does not constitute constructive notice as to a subsequent judgment creditor.[93]

Trusts. Judgment creditors have been held not protected against trusts of which they have no notice, or allowed in equity to hold against the cestui que trust.[94] Under a statute providing that resulting trusts of realty shall be void as to bona fide purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors without notice unless a written declaration of trust is recorded or ejectment brought by the real owner, it has been held that the words "without notice" are to be construed with "judgment creditors" and hence the notice contemplated is actual, and not constructive.[95]

b. Subsequent Conveyance or Lien

The lien of a judgment ordinarily is superior to all conveyances of, and liens on, the debtor's property which are made or accrue after the judgment lien has attached.

The lien of a judgment is superior to all conveyances of, and liens on, the debtor's property which are made or accrue after the judgment lien has attached,[96] provided, however, the judgment will not prevail against a subsequent sale or lien on the entitled to be recorded, whether considered as a part of the deed or as a contract describing the land conveyed by the deed, and constituted constructive notice.—Blair v. Rorer's Adm'r, supra.

Recording under wrong name

The failure of register of deeds to enter on grantor's side of index the name of "J. Frank Crowell" and instead indexing deed as if it were one from "J. L. Crowell," who was the grantor in more than one hundred conveyances on the same page, did not give notice to grantor's subsequent judgment creditor that title to realty was no longer in him, and, in absence of evidence that creditor had knowledge or notice of transfer of title otherwise than shown by record, deed was not indexed and registered with respect to him.—Dorman v. Bill of sale of personalty

A debtor's bill of sale of mules to creditor in consideration of the preexisting debt did not give creditor right to mules which was superior to right of another creditor who obtained judgment against debtor prior to bill of sale, where preëxisting debt was not a "valuable consid-

property unless it has been docketed, filed, registered, or otherwise made a matter of public record, as the local statute may provide,[97] even though the purchaser has actual notice of the undocketed judgment.[98]

An innocent purchaser is protected against a judgment erroneously recorded and indexed,[99] and a judgment docketed under the wrong name does not constitute a lien on the property as against a grantee who is a purchaser in good faith.[1] If the judgment is actually recorded, the fact that a party is ignorant of it is due to his own negligence, against the consequences of which a court of equity cannot relieve him by interfering with the rights of others who are without fault;[2] and under the rule in some jurisdictions the purchaser of realty is bound to ascertain at his peril whether there are judgments against the debtor.[3] It has been held that a judgment, although docketed, will not have a prior lien on a mere equitable interest in lands over a subsequent bona fide purchaser without actual notice from the holder of the legal title.[4]

The fact that no execution was issued, or that no levy was made after an execution was issued, has been held not to affect the priority of the lien of a judgment over subsequent deeds and mortgages,[5] except in so far as failure to issue execution may result in postponement of the lien, as discussed infra § 486; but the rule is otherwise under statutory provisions requiring the entry of execution in order that the judgment shall have a lien attaching to the property,[6] and a partner who, for cash and in good faith, buys and takes a transfer of his partner's entire interest in the firm after a third person has obtained a judgment against the selling partner individually but before garnishment or other collateral proceeding is taken to seize the selling partner's interest has been held not charged with the eration" for bill of sale and was insufficient to constitute the creditor a "bona fide purchaser," and mules and other personal property conveyed by bill of sale amounted to much more than the preëxisting debt.—Duncan v. Jones, Tex.Civ.App., 153 S.W.2d 214.

A deed to secure borrowed money paid for land is but a parol mortgage, and as such is inferior to a judgment against the purchaser, and a sheriff's sale under the judgment will pass a clear title and any surplus left after satisfying the judgment belongs to the purchaser, and not to the lender.—Fredericks v. Corcoran, 100 Pa. 413.

Judgment prior to sale by receiver

Where grantee obtained decrees rescinding land contracts one week before confirmation of sale of corporate grantor's realty in stockholder's receivership suit, purchaser at receivership sale was held to take with notice of liens of grantee's decrees and subject to grantee's right to levy execution, especially in absence of publication of notice to creditors after liquidation of corporation was determined.—Eppes v. A judgment is not docketed against any particular property, but solely against a name, and if that name is incorrectly set forth, the one to suffer should not be a purchaser in good faith but rather judgment creditor, who should see to it that the docketing is in the correct name of the debtor, so that a judgment docketed against Mary A. Pender did not constitute a lien on real property of Alice Mary Pender and it did not constitute constructive "notice" to purchaser, who acted in good faith, in acquiring title from Alice Mary Pender.—Grygorewicz v. lien of such judgment.[7] A mechanic's lien for work commenced before a judgment was entered has been held entitled to priority even though filed after judgment was rendered.[8] Where the property against which the judgment lien is sought to be enforced did not stand in the name of the judgment debtor, the judgment lien will be subordinate to the rights of a subsequent purchaser under a contract for deed entered into in good faith and for a valuable consideration.[9]

A defect in a mortgage, in failing to name a mortgagee, cannot be availed of by a subsequent judgment creditor of the mortgagor before levy and sale as against one who had contracted to furnish the money for the payment of the mortgage debt in consideration of his being subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.[10]

Conveyance in trust to secure specified debts. It has been held that, where land is conveyed in trust to secure certain specified debts, the beneficiaries of such trust deed will have a lien on the land so conveyed superior to that of ordinary judgment creditors.[11] Where a deed of trust is executed to secure certain debts, and thereafter a judgment is rendered against the grantor who contracts with a third person to advance the amount secured by the deed of trust and gives him a mortgage as security, on payment of the debts secured by the deed of trust it becomes inoperative and the mortgagee cannot be subrogated to the rights of the cestui que trust so as to gain priority over the judgment.[12]

c. Contemporaneous Judgment and Conveyance or Lien

Where a judgment and a conveyance or encumbrance are entered against the debtor on the same day, the general rule is that priority of right will be determined by priority in time.

Where a conveyance or encumbrance and a judgment against the grantor are entered on the same day, some of the cases hold that the lien of the judgment will begin from the earliest hour of that day, and so override the conveyance;[13] but the generally accepted doctrine is that fractions of the day may be inquired into, and priority of right will be determined by actual priority in time,[14] and that, in order to affect lands in the hands of a purchaser, a judgment must have been not merely simultaneous with, but anterior to, the conveyance.[15] The precise time at which the judgment was entered may be proved, according to some authorities, by evidence dehors the record,[16] although other authorities have refused to adopt this rule.[17]

Where there is no proof of the actual time of rendition or entry of the judgment, it has been held by some authorities that the judgment will have priority over a conveyance on the same day, the presumption being that the judgment was rendered or entered at the earliest hour of the day when an actual rendition or entry of a judgment may be made in the usual course of business,[18] although other authorities hold that under such circumstances the liens are equal.[19] Under the rule that a judgment lien relates back to the first day of the term at which it was rendered, a judgment lien overreaches all conveyances or encumbrances on the debtor's lands executed on or after the first day of the term during which the judgment was rendered.[20] Where a deed is received for recording on a certain day but is not recorded because costs of registration did not accompany it, and on the same day a judgment is docketed, the judgment is entitled to priority.[21]

d. Judgment for Purchase Money

A judgment given or confessed for the purchase money of land will have priority of lien on the land over subsequent mortgages or other encumbrances where the giving of the judgment and the execution and delivery of the deed for the land were simultaneous or parts of the same continuous transaction, but not otherwise.

A judgment given or confessed for the purchase money of land will have priority of lien on the land over subsequent mortgages or other encumbrances

where the giving of the judgment and the execution and delivery of the deed for the land were simultaneous or parts of the same continuous transaction, but not otherwise.[22] However, a judgment for the balance due on the purchase price of realty, on which the judgment was declared to be a specific lien, gives the judgment creditor no lien prior to that of a third person under a mortgage executed before entry of the judgment;[23] and, although the judgment debtor may not be permitted to claim homestead as against a purchase-money judgment, such fact does not affect the rights of a mortgagee acquiring his interest in the property before the entry of the judgment.[24]

e. Purchase-Money Mortgage

A mortgage or trust deed given to secure the purchase price of land and executed simultaneously with the conveyance has priority of lien over judgments obtained before the conveyance.

A mortgage[25] or trust deed given to secure the purchase price of land,[26] and executed simultaneously with the conveyance,[27] has priority of lien over judgments obtained against the purchaser anterior to the conveyance, whether the mortgage is given to the vendor himself or to a third person who advances the purchase money for the vendee,[28] and as well where part of the purchase money is paid, and the mortgage given to secure the balance, as when the mortgage is given for the whole purchase money.[29] Some authorities have held that the mortgage will not be entitled to priority unless it is recorded;[30] others that the mortgage takes priority over a prior judgment, even though it is not recorded immediately,[31] or at all,[32] but that this rule has no application to a subsequent judgment,[33] although even in the latter case some authorities give priority to the unrecorded mortgage.[34] The fact that a portion of a mortgage to secure the purchase price was given to secure the mortgagee against liability on his indorsement of the judgment debtor's note to the judgment creditor does not affect his right to priority over the judgment creditor for the full amount of the mortgage where, in a suit by the judgment creditor to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance by the judgment debtor, no personal judgment was asked against the mortgagee and the mortgagee remained liable on his indorsement.[35]

Mortgage not for purchase money. A mortgage to an attorney, given to secure payment of the amount due for legal services rendered, cannot be considered as a purchase-money mortgage, as against a prior judgment lien,[36] nor can a mortgage given to secure not only the balance of the purchase price but also debts to third persons.[37]

f. Contemporaneous Mortgage to Secure Other Debts

Where a judgment debtor on acquiring property executes a mortgage to secure debts other than for the purchase money of the property, a judgment lien takes precedence over the mortgage.

Where a judgment debtor at the same time he acquires title to land executes a mortgage thereof to a third person, to secure any debt other than for the purchase money of the land, the judgment lien will take precedence of the mortgage,[38] but there is authority to the contrary where such mortgage was given as part of the one continuous transaction by which title was acquired.[39]

by a judgment recovered against the vendor subsequent to the execution of the contract of sale, nor are the rights of the vendor affected by a judgment recovered against the vendee.

The rights of the vendee under an executory contract for the sale of land are not displaced or impaired by the subsequent accruing of a judgment lien against the vendor,[40] especially where the vendee is in possession under such contract.[41]

The lien of a judgment creditor of the vendee is inferior to a vendor's lien where a lien is expressly reserved by the vendor in the deed or contract of sale[42] or is reserved under a statute,[43] or where the vendor has retained title until payment of the purchase money,[44] although the instrument reserving the lien is not recorded.[45] It is also the general rule that the vendor's implied lien is superior to that of a judgment creditor,[46] and this rule has been followed by some courts where the judgment creditor had no notice of the vendor's lien.[47] It has been held in some jurisdictions, either in compliance with recording statutes or otherwise, that a vendor's implied lien is inferior to that of a judgment creditor without notice,[48] and is superior to the lien of the judgment creditor only where such creditor has notice of the vendor's lien,[49] and that a vendor's lien is inferior to a judgment lien prior in time and duly recorded.[50]

It has been held that a lien stipulated for in a separate instrument, both the deed of conveyance and the instrument reserving the lien being recorded, will not give preference to the vendor's lien over subsequent judgment creditors of the purchaser.[51] In a jurisdiction where the vendor's implied lien is not recognized until the vendor has filed a bill to fix and enforce his claim on the land, it has been held that any creditor of the purchaser may attach or cause execution to be levied on the land and prevail on the lien thereof over the vendor,[52] and, although the land has been reconveyed to the vendor by the purchaser, the vendor does not stand in the same position as though he had brought an action for the enforcement of his implied lien, and, until the deed of reconveyance is recorded, the right of a judgment creditor of the purchaser levying on the land under an execution will be superior to that of the vendor.[53]

Where a vendor's lien is prior to a judgment lien, a subsequent taking of a deed of trust to secure the vendor's lien notes, and foreclosure of such deed, does not render the vendor's lien a subsequent lien.[54] In a suit to foreclose a vendor's lien, a judgment rendered previously but not recorded until after the suit was commenced cannot be relied on to support rights claimed by the original vendor's wife against plaintiff.[55] The recording of an abstract of judgment against the vendor and vendee of an executory contract of sale of realty does not impair the right of a prior holder in due course for valuable consideration before maturity of vendor's lien notes to rescind the vendor's lien contract and recover possession of the property.[56] The lien of a judgment creditor of a purchaser under a land contract has been held subordinate to the title of the grantor to whom the purchaser reconveyed in consideration of cancellation of notes given for the purchase price of the land.[57]

Rescission of the contract, after a judgment against the vendee but before levy, has been held not to affect the lien of the judgment creditor, where the judgment lien has attached before the rescission.[58] A judgment lien attaching to realty after a vendor's lien has been barred by limitations is superior to title acquired by the grantors from a deed reconveying the property[59] and to their title as unsatisfied vendors in possession.[60] A judgment in favor of an original vendor establishing a vendor's lien cuts off the claim of a subsequent mortgagee named in a trust deed so that a purchaser at a sale foreclosing the trust deed acquires no rights in the realty.[61] Where a grantor conveys property by deed providing for revocation of the transfer on breach of a condition subsequent, the rights of the grantor on breach of the condition are superior to the general lien of a judgment against the grantee.[62]

Creditor purchaser at trust sale. It has been held that a vendor's implied lien is inferior to the claim of a creditor of the purchaser who acquired a specific lien on the property under a deed of trust and who purchased the property at trust sale.[63]

h. Government Claims

In the absence of statute; ordinary debts due the government are not entitled to priority over a prior judgment.

Ordinary debts due to a state government have no priority over judgment liens previously attaching.[64] As discussed in Bankruptcy § 453, the statutory priority in favor of claims of the United States in cases of bankruptcy or insolvency does not cause such claims to override judgment liens attaching to the debtor's property before the insolvency or before the institution of bankruptcy proceedings.

§ 486. Postponement of Lien

a. In general
b. Stay of execution; appeal
c. Entry of satisfaction without actual satisfaction
d. Modification of judgment

a. In General

The lien of a judgment may be postponed and made subordinate to later liens by failure to keep the judgment alive as required by statute, or by conduct of the judgment creditor amounting to fraud, waiver or estoppel.

Unless otherwise provided by statute,[65] where a judgment is a senior lien its priority is not lost by mere delay in enforcing it, in the absence of circumstances warranting an inference of fraud,[66] or unless the delay amounts to gross negligence;[67] nor will neglect to satisfy a judgment out of the debtor's personal property subordinate the judgment lien on the debtor's land to that of a junior judgment.[68] However, the postponement of a judgment lien to a junior lien will result from anything which invalidates or destroys the judgment[69] or amounts to a satisfaction of it,[70] or from conduct on the judgment creditor's part which amounts to fraud on the rights or interests of junior lienors[71] or estops him to assert his priority,[72] or from his voluntary release of his lien or agreement to postpone it,[73] or from conduct constituting a waiver thereof.[74]

Under a statute authorizing a junior judgment lienholder to give a senior judgment lienholder written notice requiring him to execute his judgment, and depriving him of his priority if he fails to do so, failure to give such notice is deemed acquiescence in the delay,[75] but, where such notice is given and execution is sued out and placed in the hands of the proper officer, the senior judgment creditor need not go further and point out property of the debtor subject to the execution in order to preserve his priority,[76] and a junior lienor cannot gain priority by finding and pointing out property subject to execution.[77] Where the purchaser of land fails to sue within the time required by statute for bringing an action for specific performance of the contract, a judgment against the vendor, acquired after the contract was made, takes priority over the rights of the purchaser.[78]

An injunction awarded at the instance of a stranger to prevent the collection of a judgment by sale of the property levied on does not impair the lien of the judgment; on dissolution of the injunction the judgment will be entitled to priority as against judgments whose liens attached during the injunction.[79] One who takes a mortgage on attached property may rely on the failure of the attaching creditor to file his judgment lien within the time required by the statute.[80] The fact that a judgment creditor was not a party to foreclosure proceedings has been held not to render his judgment superior to a previously recorded mortgage.[81] Where, after a judgment is obtained, a mortgage is released of record, the judgment creditor's right to a lien and priority become fixed when the mortgage is released, even though a new mortgage is recorded later.[82]

Where the holder of a trust deed forecloses, purchases at the trustee's sale, and takes a purchase certificate, and in the meanwhile a judgment lien attaches to the property, when the holder surrenders the purchase certificate and accepts a new trust deed the judgment lien becomes entitled to priority since the new deed is not a continuation of the old one.[83] Where a mortgage given to secure valid notes is set aside because of invalidity of the mortgage, this will not invalidate or affect the priority of judgments taken on the notes secured.[84] Where a sale on an execution is set aside for irregularity, and the land is ordered to be resold for the benefit of the purchaser, the lien of the original judgment continues in force as against the lien of any intervening judgment.[85] Where a mechanic does not pursue his remedy by a lien but seeks a personal judgment, such judgment will rank as any other judgment rendered on a personal claim.[86]

Failure to revive. In jurisdictions where, as discussed infra § 494, the lien of a judgment will not continue unless the judgment is periodically revived, the lien of a judgment not revived within the statutory time will be superseded by the lien of junior judgments in full original life or which have been duly revived,[87] even though the senior judgment was for purchase money.[88] Priority may be lost by a revival improperly accomplished.[89]

b. Stay of Execution; Appeal

A stay of execution has been held to have, and also not to have, the effect of postponing a judgment lien. An appeal does not affect a postponement of the judgment to judgments or liens attaching while the appeal is pending.

An extension of time for payment, or a stay of execution on a judgment, whether by agreement of parties, order of court, or injunction, for any time short of the statutory period of limitations, has been held not to have the effect of postponing the lien of the judgment to other and junior judgment liens,[90] although there is also authority to the contrary.[91]

Appeal. An appeal from a judgment does not discharge its lien, although it may stay its enforcement; hence it does not postpone the judgment to judgments or other liens attaching while the appeal is pending.[92] Where a plaintiff appeals from an award in his favor, and recovers a judgment more favorable to himself, the lien of such judgment does not relate back to the date of the award.[93] A judgment in full force and effect at a time when a subsequent mortgage is executed with constructive and actual notice of the judgment does not lose its priority by reason of a reversal by an intermediate court and the final affirmance of the judgment by a higher court after reversal of the intermediate court.[94]

c. Entry of Satisfaction without Actual Satisfaction

Entry of satisfaction without actual satisfaction may operate to postpone a judgment lien.

A judgment creditor who enters satisfaction of his judgment, or permits it to be done, although without actual satisfaction, authorizes others to consider the property as unencumbered, and will be postponed to their rights or liens.[95] A subsequent cancellation of the entry of satisfaction will restore the judgment to full activity, but it will not restore its priority of lien as against purchasers or encumbrancers whose rights attached after the entry of satisfaction and before its cancellation,[96] although it seems that the priority of the senior judgment may thus be regained as against junior judgment creditors whose judgments were recovered prior to the entry of satisfaction, and who were not in any way misled by such entry.[97]

d. Modification of Judgment

Under statutes so providing, modification of the judgment will not affect the lien existing under it.

A statute which provides that when a judgment is modified all liens under it shall be preserved to the modified judgment applies to judgment liens on personalty as well as to those on real property,[98] even though in form the old judgment was vacated and a new one entered.[99] If, on the revival of a judgment, substantial additions are made thereto the continuity of its lien has been held to be broken in favor of other liens existing at the date of the revival.[1]

§ 487. Proceedings for Determination of Priority

Conflicting claims to priority may be determined in proceedings brought for that purpose, or in various other proceedings in which the question may appropriately be considered.

Conflicting claims to priority as between judgments, mortgages, and other liens may be determined on a bill in equity for the purpose,[2] or in an action or suit for a decree declaring the conflicting liens void[3] or plaintiff's lien superior,[4] or in an action by one claimant against another to fix relative rights,[5] or in a suit to quiet title as against an adverse claimant,[6] or on a rule to show cause why the alleged conflicting lien should not be stricken off,[7] or an issue framed between judgment creditors to test the validity and rank of their respective judgments,[8] or in receivership proceedings,[9] or in proceedings to distribute the funds raised by execution sale of the property affected.[10] So a judgment creditor, if made defendant to a mortgage foreclosure suit, may set up the priority of his lien and have it determined.[11] It has been held that a judgment creditor's right to assert priority over a prior judgment can arise only on distribution of the funds from the sale of the land on which the lien is claimed.[12]

As a general rule a question of this kind should be determined from the records, and not left to a jury to decide by extraneous evidence,[13] but where the issue is as to the priority of a judgment on a note entered by confession, the note having authorized any attorney to confess judgment, it has been held proper to permit the attorney who confessed the judgment to testify that he possessed no authority not contained in the note.[14] Third persons asserting title to the property affected by the judgment under a conveyance thereof from the judgment debtor have the burden of showing that they are innocent purchasers without notice.[15] In a suit to establish the priority of a judgment lien over a warranty deed, the burden is on the judgment creditor to prove affirmatively that the deed from the debtor was not delivered before the transcript of judgment was filed,[16] and he must prove his case by a preponderance of the evidence.[17]

a. In general
b. Successive or contemporaneous transfers of different tracts
c. Subjection of vendor's remaining property

a. In General

The lien of a judgment is not affected by a transfer of the property by the judgment debtor to a purchaser having actual or constructive notice of the judgment.

According to general principles and apart from any statutory provisions to the contrary, when a judgment lien has once attached to land it remains until legally removed, and a purchaser from the judgment debtor who has actual or constructive notice of the judgment lien will take the estate charged therewith[18] to the extent of the amount of

Discharge of lien
Under some statutes any person who has purchased real property, in good faith and for a valuable consideration, and has been in possession of the same for four years, holds it discharged from the lien of any judgment against his grantor.—Reynolds v. Hardin, 200 S.E. 119, 187 Ga. 40—34 C.J. p 616 note 25 [n].

Sufficiency of notice
Generally the purchaser of realty need not look beyond judgment docket for liens thereon, unless it shows something that should reasonably put him on inquiry, which would lead to knowledge of requisite facts; but he is affected with notice of whatever judgment record reasona-

the judgment as recorded at the time of his purchase,[19] although the amount of the judgment is larger than was represented to the purchaser by the judgment debtor at the time of the transfer,[20] unless the judgment creditor will waive or release his lien.[21] However, the lien does not attach to the fund received from the sale.[22]

Where a judgment creditor has made an election to receive part of his debt out of the proceeds from the sale of lands on which his judgment was a prior lien, he cannot afterward enforce the lien against the land,[23] and, where a sale of the debtor's property is effected by order of court, it is competent to direct that it shall be sold free of encumbrances, the liens being then transferred to the fund.[24] A purchaser at a sheriff's sale under the judgment will succeed to the rights of the judgment creditor in these respects.[25] The purchaser of property against which a judgment lien has attached does not become personally liable for the amount of the lien,[26] even though the amount of the lien was considered by him in fixing the price he was willing to pay.[27] However, where the lien attaches to personalty, a purchaser of the personalty who removes it from the county where the lien attached may be liable to the judgment creditor for thereby defeating the lien.[28] It is not within the power of the judgment debtor to defeat or displace the judgment lien by repudiating the title or attorning to a third person,[29] or otherwise transferring his interest, to which the judgment lien has attached.[30] A conveyance expressly subject to the lien of all mortgages, attachments, and judgments of record is subject only to such judgments of record at the time of the transfer which are valid liens.[31]

Land held in trust. Under some statutes a judgment against a debtor attaches to land conveyed by him to another to be held in trust for him and is superior to a mortgage subsequently executed by the debtor.[32]

b. Successive or Contemporaneous Transfers of Different Tracts

Where property subject to the lien of a judgment is sold or encumbered by the debtor at different times to different persons, the general rule is that there is no contribution among the successive purchasers and the property is liable to the satisfaction of the judgment in the inverse order of alienation.

Although there are some decisions to the contrary,[33] where lands subject to the lien of a judgment have been sold or encumbered by the owner at different times to different purchasers, the general rules is that there is no contribution among the successive purchasers, but the various tracts are liable to the satisfaction of the judgment in the inverse order of their alienation or encumbrance, the land last sold being first chargeable,[34] even though the last purchaser secures a conveyance before the first bly suggests, and notice naturally leading investigator to discovery of judgment and debtor's identity is sufficient.—Lambert v. K-Y Transp. Co., 172 A. 180, 182 Pa.Super. 82.

Assignment of interest in estate

A voluntary assignment by heir to another heir of his interest in an estate, prior to institution of probate proceedings wherein estate was subsequently probated and wherein interest assigned was distributed to assignee, did not exclude judgment lien against interest of assignor in property, obtained prior to assignment.—Walters Motor Co. v. Musgrove, 75 P.2d 471, 181 Okl. 540.

purchaser,[35] and although the lands conveyed were acquired by the judgment debtor at different times and from different sources,[36] unless the order of liability is affected by the conduct of a purchaser[37] or is broken by a voluntary release by the judgment creditor of one or more of the tracts.[38]

It has been held that the release of the lien on a portion subsequently conveyed will not discharge the lien on a portion previously conveyed, unless the judgment creditor is distinctly notified before the release of the prior conveyance, and cautioned against doing any act by which the rights of the grantee in such prior conveyance will be diminished.[39] A judgment creditor, having released or by his conduct waived or lost his right to subject the land first liable to satisfy his judgment, is not entitled to subject the lands next liable for the whole amount of his judgment, but only for the balance after crediting thereon the value of the land first liable.[40] Where the judgment creditor himself becomes the owner of one of the tracts of land liable to the lien of his judgment, the other having been sold to a third person, he cannot release his own tract, with the effect of throwing the entire burden of the judgment upon that held by such third person.[41]

Where the different parcels of land are sold contemporaneously, they must contribute pro rata to the satisfaction of the judgment.[42]

c. Subjection of Vendor's Remaining Property

While the sale of property to which a judgment lien has attached does not divest the lien, ordinarily the judgment creditor must enforce his lien first against property remaining in the hands of the debtor.

Although a judgment lien is not divested by the subsequent sale or encumbrance of the land, where only part of the judgment debtor's land has been sold[43] or mortgaged,[44] the general rule is that equity will require the judgment creditor seeking to enforce his lien to proceed first against that portion remaining unsold or unencumbered, provided this can be done without injustice to him and without involving him in litigation or danger of loss,[45] and the rule extends to a purchaser of the remaining land from the debtor.[46] If there is not sufficient land of the debtor remaining unsold to satisfy the judgment entirely, the creditor is entitled in equity to resort to the land of the purchaser or encumbrancer to the extent only of his debt which may remain unpaid after the estate of the debtor has been exhausted.[47]

Where part of the land has been mortgaged and part aliened in fee, the judgment creditor must first proceed to sell the debtor's equity of redemption in the mortgaged lands before coming on the property conveyed in fee.[48] One who purchases land charged with the lien of a judgment, which is specifically excepted from the covenants of warranty in the deed, cannot insist that his grantor's chattels shall be exhausted before such land is sold for the satisfaction of an execution on the judgment.[49] If a judgment creditor voluntarily releases the debtor's remaining property, of sufficient value to satisfy the

Duty of purchaser to protect himself

A judgment creditor owes no duty to a terre-tenant of land bound by his judgment to prosecute his judgment against other lands. The terre-tenant can protect himself either by giving proper notice of demand that the creditor proceed first against other property of the debtor, or by obtaining an assignment of the judgment to himself. If the terre-tenant does nothing to protect himself, he is not in position to object when the creditor proceeds against the lands which he holds.—Ruff v. § 489. Duration of Lien

a. In general
b. Duration as against judgment debtor

a. In General

A judgment lien ordinarily ceases to exist after the expiration of the time fixed by statute for its continuance.

Where no period of time is provided by statute for the continuance of the lien of a judgment, the lien ceases when the right to sue out execution on the judgment or to revive it by scire facias is barred by the statute of limitations:[51] In most jurisdictions, however, the period during which a judgment continues to be a lien is restricted by express statute to a fixed number of years after the rendition or docketing of the judgment,[52] and, unless the time for the duration of the lien has been extended, as considered infra §§ 492–498, the lien ceases to exist after the lapse of the statutory period,[53] although

In Georgia
(1) Under Code § 110-511, and similar statutes, where any person has in good faith and for valuable consideration purchased real or personal property, and has been in possession of it for four years, the property shall be discharged from the lien of any judgment against the person from whom he purchased.—Page v. Jones, 198 S.E. 63, 186 Ga. 485—34 C.J. p 620 note 57 [e] (1).
(2) Statute is for benefit of buyer and not vendor.—Calhoun v. Williamson, 18 S.E.2d 479, 193 Ga. 314.
(3) Conveyance in payment and discharge of existing debt is "valuable consideration."—Calhoun v. Williamson, supra.
(4) Personal residence on the purchased realty is not necessary.—Page v. Jones, 198 S.E. 63, 186 Ga. 485.
(5) Possession by defendant in fieri facias as tenant of the purchaser will not per se prevent the possession from being that required by the statute, but is merely a circumstance for the consideration of the jury in determining bona fides of the transaction or the possession.—Page v. Jones, supra—34 C.J. p 620 note 57 [e] (3).
(6) Where defendant in fieri facias was parent of claimant and resided with claimant on premises, whether possession was held jointly by both or severally by either, and, if severally, which of the two had possession and exercised acts of ownership over the property, was for jury.—Page v. Jones, supra.
(7) Possession must be actual, open, notorious, in good faith, and exclusive, and to make possession such as would displace lien of the judgment, some sort of notice of adverse possession should appear, or at least such circumstances as to put the plaintiff in fieri facias on inquiry, such as visible signs of dominion.—Page v. Jones, supra—34 C.J. p 620 note 57 [e] (4).
(8) Facts that defendant in fieri facias exercised acts of ownership over premises, even though with consent of claimant and that actual holding by defendant was at least as much for defendant as for claimant, would not authorize finding of possession required by statute.—Page v. Jones, 198 S.E. 63, 186 Ga. 485.
(9) Lien of judgment was not divested by four years of possession where person in possession during such time did not have title.—Carnes v. American Agr. Chemical Co., 123 S.E. 18, 158 Ga. 188.
(10) Knowledge of existence of judgment against grantor, did not, standing alone, constitute prima facie evidence of mala fides on part of grantee, if transaction was in good faith, but such knowledge was a circumstance which jury should consider along with other evidence bearing on question of good faith; statute places burden of proving good faith on purchaser, but does not encumber purchaser with further burden of making such proof while bearing badge of fraud solely because he purchased with knowledge of existence of lien.—Hardin v. Reynolds, 6 S.E.2d 913, 189 Ga. 589.

the duration of the lien is fixed at a period much shorter than that barring action on the judgment itself.[54] The time fixed by statute may not be shortened[55] or prolonged[56] by the courts, and, as considered infra § 510, the lien cannot be enforced in equity after it has ceased to be enforceable at law by the expiration of the statutory period.

A statute limiting the life of a judgment lien does not apply to a decree establishing a specific lien on particular property or ordering its sale[57] or to a judgment or decree for the foreclosure of a mortgage.[58]

Application of statute to existing judgments. A statute abridging the time for the duration of judgment liens may constitutionally apply to existing judgments, where a reasonable time is accorded to the holders of such judgments in which to enforce their liens.[59] However, it has been held that such a statute cannot apply to an existing judgment where the whole of the new period of limitation would have run before the passage of the act, so that its lien would instantly be cut off.[60]

Judgments in favor of state. Statutes limiting the time during which a judgment lien shall continue to exist have been held to be applicable to judgments in favor of the state,[61] although there is some contrary authority.[62]

Transfer of judgment to another court or county. Where a judgment is transferred from an inferior to a superior court for purposes of lien, or a transcript of it is filed in another county, it is the rule in some states that the statutory period begins to run against the lien of the judgment from the date of such transfer or filing,[63] but in other jurisdictions the lien runs from the date of the original rendition or docketing of the judgment, nothing being added to its duration by the transfer.[64]

Laches as barring lien. It has been held that the lien cannot be barred by the equitable doctrine of laches.[65]

b. Duration as against Judgment Debtor

Under some statutes the lien of a judgment continues against the judgment debtor although it may have expired as against subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers.

Under some statutes it has been held that, although the lien of a judgment may have expired as against subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers, by the lapse of the statutory period, it will still continue, the judgment remaining unsatisfied, for the purpose of levying execution against the judgment debtor or his heirs or devisees,[66] or a grantee without valuable consideration.[67] Other statutes confine the execution, under such circumstances, to the personal property of the debtor.[68]

§ 490. —— As against Junior Judgments

When the period of limitations has run against a judgment lien, it yields to junior judgments.

When the period of limitations has run against the lien of a judgment, without its revival, it gives way to junior judgments, which thereupon succeed, in their order, to its priority.[69]

§ 491. —— Death of Judgment Debtor

A judgment lien attaching to the lands of a judgment debtor during his lifetime continues against such lands for the same length of time as though he had remained in life, unless some contrary provision is made by statute.

A judgment lien obtained against a debtor during his lifetime ordinarily continues against his lands in the hands of his heirs or devisees for the same length of time as though he had remained in life.[70] In some jurisdictions, however, statutory provisions have been enacted which extend or restrict the lien after the death of the judgment debtor,[71] such as a provision that no lien on the realty of decedent shall remain for more than a year after his death, unless within such period an action for the recovery of the debt shall be brought against the executor or administrator of decedent and such action shall be indexed, etc.,[72] or a provision that all judgment liens shall continue to bind the real estate of decedent during the term of five years from his death, and after the expiration of five years the judgments shall not continue liens on decedent's realty, unless revived by scire facias, or otherwise,[73] or a provision that, when the judgment creditor is delayed because of the death of defendant either from issuing execution or selling thereon, the time he is so delayed is not to be considered as a part of the statutory period during which the lien continues.[74] To preserve the lien against decedent's estate there must be a compliance with the requirements of the statute.[75]

Death of joint tenant. On the death of a joint tenant the lien of a judgment against his interest is extinguished.[76]

§ 492. Extending Lien

The life of a judgment lien ordinarily may not be extended except for the causes and in the manner prescribed by statute.

In the absence of statutory authority the lien of the judgment ordinarily may not be extended beyond the period of time fixed by statutory regulations.[77] In some jurisdictions the statutes specify the causes for which the life of the judgment lien shall be extended,[78] and such statutes should be strictly construed[79] and the lien ordinarily may not be extended except for the causes and in the manner prescribed by the statute.[80] A statutory provision that execution may be had on real estate after the expiration of the statutory period for which the lien continues by filing a notice, subscribed by the sheriff, describing the judgment, the execution, and the property levied on, does not extend the original lien of the judgment.[81]

Revival of judgment distinguished. The right to revive a judgment is to be distinguished from the right to keep the lien of the judgment in life in that the former is a right of action while the latter is not.[82]

§ 493. —— Issue and Levy of Execution

Unless permitted by statute, a judgment creditor ordinarily cannot extend the lien of a judgment by the issuance and levy of an execution.

In several states the statutes prescribe that after the lapse of a certain time the lien of a judgment shall be lost, unless within that time steps have been taken to enforce it, as by the levy of an execution on property of defendant.[83] Some statutes which prescribe a period for the continuance of the lien also require execution to be taken out within a certain shorter time, as, for instance, within one year after the rendition of the judgment, in order to keep the lien alive during the whole statutory period.[84] Under other statutes, failure to issue an execution within such shorter period does not de-

Where judgment transferred
A judgment lien created by filing a transcript of the judgment in county where realty is situated may be extended beyond a year from the time the judgment became a lien only by the issuance of an execution in the county where transcript was filed, and such extension cannot be accomplished by the issuance of an execution from county where judgment was originally entered directed to county where transcript was filed.—Reconstruction Finance Corporation v. Maley, C.C.A.Ill., 125 F.2d 131.
Failure to return execution within ninety days as required by statute was held not to affect a judgment lien on real estate.—Davis Bros. Drug Co. v. Counter, 225 P. 245, 75 Colo. 239.
Pendency of bank's mortgage foreclosure action, filed within year after entry of another bank's judgment against, mortgagor, was sufficient, under "lis pendens doctrine," to create equitable lien on mortgaged realstroy the lien but subordinates it to other judgment liens against the same judgment debtor.[85]

In the absence of statutory provision therefor, a judgment creditor generally cannot extend his lien by issuing and levying an execution, even during the continuance of the lien, and if the sale does not take place until after the expiration of the statutory period the priority of lien and title is gone.[86] However, a provision for so extending the life of the lien is to be found in some statutes,[87] and even in the absence of express statute to that effect it has been held that the levy of an execution during the life of the lien has the effect of continuing the lien beyond the statutory period of its existence and until the writ is executed.[88] If the statute requires no more than the issue of an execution, it is satisfied by that act, although the sole purpose of taking out the writ was to preserve the lien, and there was no expectation of collecting the money.[89]

Laches in issuing execution. The creditor may take all the time allowed him, and the lien of a judgment which has not become dormant is not lost or impaired by laches in issuing execution.[90]

§ 494. —— Revival of Judgment

The lien of a judgment may be extended by a revival of the judgment.

Provision is sometimes made by statute for the extension of the statutory period for the continuance of a judgment lien as between the parties to the judgment by a revival of the judgment by scire facias or otherwise.[91] Where such action is taken before the expiration of the statutory period, the lien of the judgment is continuous from the date of its rendition or entry, and its priority, relative to other liens, is preserved;[92] but where a period is ty as far as judgment creditor was concerned, and such judgment constituted a lien, inferior to mortgage lien, against realty, as against contention that judgment lien was lost by failure to have execution issued within such year.—First Nat. Bank of Marissa v. Heintz, 51 N.E.2d 333, 320 Ill.App. 403.

In Texas

(1) Originally the statute required that execution be issued within twelve months after the date of the judgment, or the judgment would become dormant.—Jackson v. (2) Under a later statute, execution may be issued on the judgment at any time within ten years after the date of the judgment.—Christian v. Sam R. Hill Lumber Co., Civ. App., 113 S.W.2d 616.

Lien continues for additional period of ten years.—Rayborn v. Reid, 138 S.E. 294, 139 S.C. 529.

Commencement of period on recording of deed by terre-tenant

(1) Under some statutes, when a judgment had been regularly revived between the original parties, the period of five years, during which the lien of the judgment continued, commenced to run in favor of the terre-tenant from the time that he had placed his deed on record unless the terre-tenant was in actual possession of the land bound by the judgment, by himself or tenant.—Farmers Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Barrett, 184 A. 128, 321 Pa. 273—Kefover v. Hustead, 144 A. 430, 294 Pa. 474—Frank Di Berardino Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. De Gregoria, 45 A.2d 378, 158 Pa.Super. 516—Ellinger v. (2) Where land, subject to a valid judgment was conveyed by deed, which was at once recorded, lien of the judgment bound the land in possession of terre-tenant for a period of five years from date of recording of deed, even though judgment was not subsequently revived against judgment debtor by scire facias within five years of entry of judgment.—Simmons v. Simmons, 29 A.2d 677, 346 Pa. 52—Behler v. Loch, 36 A.2d 234, 154 Pa.Super. 399.

(3) A scire facias proceeding to revive a judgment against terre-tenants would be excepted from the operation of the act of 1943 repealing the act of 1849 imposing a limitation of lien against terre-tenants on a revived judgment if the judgment sought to be revived was a lien under the act of 1849 when the scire facias was issued.—Frank Di Berarprescribed for the continuance of the judgment lien, and the right to enforce execution exists for a shorter period unless such right is revived by scire facias, the revivor of a judgment by scire facias within the time prescribed for the continuance of the lien will not extend the statutory period as against purchasers or encumbrancers whose rights accrued subsequent to the entry of the original judgment.[93]

Revival after lien has expired. After a judgment lien has expired, the period during which the lien of a revived judgment exists is, it is usually held, to be computed from the date of the judgment or order of revivor, and not from the date of the writ instituting the proceedings for its revival.[94] Ordinarily the lien cannot be revived so as to overreach conveyances or encumbrances subsequent to the entry of the original judgment and prior to its revival,[95] but it has been stated that a purchaser of a judgment debtor's land at a time when the judgment is dormant takes the land subject to the judgment lien on its revival by scire facias.[96] It has been held to be immaterial that the purchase was made or the encumbrance accepted with full knowledge that the judgment remained unpaid,[97] provided the grantee gave valuable consideration[98] and did not collude with the debtor to deprive the judgment creditor of his lien or take with a fraudulent intention toward such creditor.[99] It has been held that a dormant judgment does not, by revivor, become a lien on land acquired by the debtor after its original recovery, unless a levy is made thereon, either before it became dormant or after its revivor.[1]

§ 495. —— Suit to Enforce Lien or to Subject Property; Action on Judgment

The statutory life of a judgment lien generally is not extended by the institution of action to enforce the lien or by a creditor's bill.

Although there are some decisions to the contrary,[2] as a general rule where a statute fixes a definite limitation to the lien of a judgment it is not saved or extended by the bringing of an action to enforce the lien,[3] or by a creditor's bill, where such action or bill remains undetermined when the statutory period expires,[4] especially where the statute expressly prohibits the bringing of a direct action or proceeding for the purpose of prolonging the lien.[5]

Under some statutes an action on a judgment is the only means of extending the judgment lien;[6] other statutes prohibit its extension by such means.[7]

§ 496. —— Absence of Debtor from State

Unless extended by statute, the life of a judgment lien is not prolonged by the absence of the judgment debtor from the state.

In the absence of a statutory provision therefor, the absence of the judgment debtor from the state will not extend the duration of a judgment lien.[8]

8. N.C.—Osborne v. Board of Educa-

Under some statutes, a debtor's departure from, and residence out of, the state after judgment recovered against him will suspend the running of the statute and preserve the lien of the judgment, although its enforcement has not been obstructed thereby and although the wording of the statute is that, if by departing from the state a person shall obstruct the prosecution of a right which had accrued against him, the time of such obstruction shall not be computed as a part of the time within which the said right might or ought to have been prosecuted.[9]

§ 497. —— Agreement of Parties

The life of a judgment lien may not be prolonged by agreement, unless an extension in such manner is authorized by statute.

Except where a statute so provides,[10] a judgment lien cannot be extended beyond the statutory period by an agreement between the judgment creditor and his debtor.[11]

§ 498. —— Matters Preventing Enforcement of Judgment

a. In general
b. Injunction, adverse proceeding, and receivership
c. Effect of appeal

a. In General

A stay of execution or of further proceedings on a judgment ordinarily extends the lien of the judgment.

Although there are decisions which hold that a stay of execution or of further proceedings on a judgment does not suspend the running of the statutes of limitations against it,[12] if at least the stay does not continue beyond the period fixed by the statute,[13] as a general rule such a stay does extend the lien, whether the stay is by order of the court,[14] or by specific provision included in the record entry of the judgment,[15] or by act of the legislature,[16] and whether the time of the stay of execution is less or more than the period fixed by statute for the expiration of the lien of judgments.[17] The latter rule is sometimes expressly adopted by statute.[18]

A state of war has been held not ground for extending the lien of a judgment beyond the time fixed by law,[19] at least where there is no proof that process could not be issued or executed during the war.[20]

b. Injunction, Adverse Proceeding, and Receivership

The lien of a judgment ordinarily is extended by an injunction restraining the issuance of execution, but the appointment of a receiver does not continue the lien.

Although there are decisions to the contrary,[21] as a general rule the fact that the creditor, at the suit of the judgment debtor, is enjoined from issuing execution, has the effect of prolonging the judgment lien beyond the statutory period;[22] and in some jurisdictions it is expressly provided by statute that the time covered by an injunction is to be excluded from the period limited by law for the duration of judgment liens.[23]

Where judgment creditor is not restrained by injunction, statute is inapplicable.—Petrovitch v. Witholm, 152 N.E. 849, 85 Ind.App. 144.

Adverse proceeding. In some jurisdictions the life of the judgment lien is extended by an adverse proceeding,[24] provided the proceeding is adverse in the sense of restraining the sale, by analogy to an injunction.[25]

Appointment of receiver. The appointment of a receiver does not continue the lien of the judgment beyond the statutory period,[26] although it has been held that a statute providing that a judgment lien is lost if execution is not taken out within a certain time does not apply where, during such time, the property of the judgment defendant is in the hands of a receiver in another action.[27]

c. Effect of Appeal

An appeal or writ of error with a supersedeas generally extends the life of the judgment lien.

Although there is some authority to the contrary,[28] it has been held, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, that an appeal or writ of error with a supersedeas prolongs the judgment lien beyond the statutory period.[29] Where there is no supersedeas an appeal does not of itself prolong the life of the lien;[30] and it has been held that, where a new judgment is rendered, it merges the original judgment, and the lien dates only from such new judgment.[31]

§ 499. Loss, Release, or Extinguishment of Lien

Various matters may destroy or extinguish the lien of a judgment, such as a levy on personalty of the judgment debtor or the merger of the lien, but ordinarily the arrest of the debtor merely suspends the operation of the lien.

As a general rule, a judgment creditor does not lose his lien unless it is by some act of his own, either of omission or of commission.[32] Nevertheless the lien of a judgment may under certain circumstances be subordinated, or entirely lost, by sale under order of court free from liens,[33] by the operation of a statute divesting the lien,[34] by the termination of the estate or interest subject to the lien, as in the case of an estate for life or a leasehold or other limited interest,[35] by a foreclosure of the lien in statutory proceedings for that purpose,[36] by a discharge of the debtor in bankruptcy, as considered in Bankruptcy § 582 b (6) (b), or, where a statute so provides, by the destruction of

Issuance of general execution

Under a statute prescribing the kinds of executions, and declaring that the execution, if on a judgment to enforce a lien on specific real property, may direct a sale of all the interest which defendant had therein at the time the lien attached, the issuance of a general execution to enforce a judgment does not release the specific lien decreed by the judgment.—Schultz v. the record of the judgment,[37] or, under some statutes, by failure to redeem after redemption by a junior judgment lienholder.[38] The lien of a contingent judgment against the land of a deceased's guarantor of bonds has been held to be discharged where the coguarantors, without the consent of the owners of the land subject to the lien, secure an extension of time for payment of the bonds.[39]

On the other hand, the lien is not destroyed by the execution of a forthcoming bond, or a bond to try the right of property,[40] by the performance of an unnecessary act by another creditor,[41] by the withdrawal from the records of the certificate of the judgment on which the lien was founded,[42] or by any transfer of the property other than a sale free from liens under order of the court.[43]

Arrest of debtor. The taking out of a body execution suspends the lien of the judgment on lands,[44] but does not absolutely extinguish it; for if this process fails to produce satisfaction, under circumstances which permit the creditor to resort to other remedies, the lien of the judgment on lands may then be enforced, as against the judgment debtor himself,[45] although not as against the intervening rights of third persons.[46]

Levy on personalty. As far as the rights of third persons are concerned, a levy on personal property sufficient to satisfy a fieri facias is an extinguishment of the judgment on which it is issued, as considered infra § 573, and the judgment therefore ceases to be a lien on real estate,[47] even where the creditor abandons or releases the levy, fails to make the money, or applies it to other debts,[48] although the rule is otherwise where the levy is insufficient to satisfy the execution.[49]

Merger. It has been held that, where a creditor has obtained a lien on real estate by judgment at law, if he subsequently brings an action of debt on his judgment and recovers a new judgment, he will lose his first lien,[50] but there is also authority to the contrary.[51] The mere fact that the judgment creditor purchases lands on which the judgment is a lien will not merge the judgment lien and thereby prevent it fram attaching to other lands of the judgment debtor;[52] but it has been held that, if a judgment creditor becomes the owner of the land on which the judgment is a lien, the lien as to that specific land in the hands of his grantee becomes extinct in the absence of an agreement or intention to continue it manifested at the time he became owner,[53] although, in equity, if it is for the interest of the parties that the lien shall be kept alive, it will be regarded as still subsisting.[54]

Under a statute providing that if two estates in the same property shall unite in the same person in his individual capacity, the lesser estate shall be merged in the greater, the acceptance by the holder of a judgment lien of a bill of sale from the judgment debtor conveying personalty as security for a loan has been held not to merge the lien of the judgment into the bill of sale.[55]

§ 500. —— By Release

The lien of a judgment may be released by the judgment creditor.

The holder of a judgment may release the lien of the judgment,[56] even by a parol release.[57] An agreement to release the lien of a judgment must be of a precise and definite character in which no element of the agreement is left to conjecture or supposition.[58] As between the debtor and creditor a release by the creditor of part of the lands bound by the judgment will not prevent its enforcement against the rest;[59] but the holder of a judgment lien cannot release land of his debtor, taken on execution on a junior judgment, so as to preserve his lien for its full amount against other land of the debtor, where the debtor files a refusal to accept the release.[60]

Where portions of the land have been sold to different purchasers, or encumbered with subsequent mortgages, the creditor cannot release his lien on the lands primarily liable, or release or surrender other securities primarily liable, without releasing at the same time the lands in the hands of such purchasers or encumbrancers, at least in proportion to the value of the portion first liable;[61] but this rule is qualified by the requirement that the judgment creditor shall have had notice of the subsequent sale or mortgage, before making the release, and the recording of a mortgage is not sufficient notice.[62]

A release by an executor of a judgment which is a lien on realty is valid, where it is supported by a sufficient consideration, and no fraud, collusion, or wasting of the assets of the estate is shown.[63]

§ 501. —— Payment or Satisfaction of Judgment

The lien of a judgment ordinarily is discharged by the satisfaction of the judgment.

The lien of the judgment ordinarily is discharged by the satisfaction of the judgment,[64] as by payment of the amount due under it,[65] although not by a mere unaccepted tender[66] or an unperformed promise of payment.[67] While the rule has been laid down that, when once paid, the judgment lien cannot be restored or continued by any mere agreement of the parties,[68] although equity may keep it alive for the benefit of a surety who has made the pay-

Effect of mistake
Where assignee of judgment, constituting prior lien on land, executed release under belief that if release was executed title would be accepted by government and proceeds would be paid over to assignee without delay, but government refused to accept deed and resorted to condemnation because assignor of judgment asserted that cost item had not been assigned, the release did not extinguish the assignee's claim to priority and assignee was entitled to receive payment from proceeds of land.—U. ment,[69] it has been held that as between the parties themselves the lien may be kept alive by agreement of the parties for the purpose of securing further advances, provided the rights of third persons are not affected.[70]

When a judgment creditor enters satisfaction of his judgment or causes an execution to be returned satisfied, a third person is justified in treating the real estate of the judgment debtor as released from the lien of the judgment;[71] but a junior judgment creditor will not gain priority over a senior judgment creditor by the fact that there has been an erroneous entry of satisfaction on the judgment of the latter and a subsequent order of the court striking it off, in the absence of evidence that the junior creditor has been misled to his injury.[72] Where an agreement between the judgment debtor and creditor to have execution on the judgment returned satisfied is procured by misrepresentations of the judgment debtor, it will not operate as a release in favor of a purchaser of part of the debtor's land, who had no notice of the return.[73]

Where a transcript of judgment has been filed in a county other than that of its rendition, the lien in the county where the transcript was filed is discharged by satisfaction in the county where it was rendered, and not by the filing of a copy of the docket of the clerk of that county.[74]

§ 502. —— Sale under Execution

The lien of a judgment is discharged by a sale of lands under execution for the full amount of the judgment.

A sale of lands under execution for the full amount of a judgment extinguishes the lien of the judgment on which the execution issued,[75] and although such sale is only in partial satisfaction of the judgment it discharges the lien on the land sold as against the execution purchaser.[76] Where land has been sold in part satisfaction of a judgment and redeemed by the judgment debtor, the balance of the judgment at once attaches as a lien on the property in his hands,[77] but when redemption is made by a lienholder the land does not again become liable for the unsatisfied judgment.[78] If a judgment creditor exhausts all the real property of the debtor by execution sale, and part of the judgment remains unsatisfied, and the debtor afterward acquires other real estate, the unsatisfied part of the judgment attaches thereto as a lien.[79]

§ 503. —— Stay of Execution

A stay of execution ordinarily does not destroy or suspend the lien of the judgment.

The fact that a judgment is rendered with a stay of execution, or that a stay is afterward made by order of court, does not destroy or suspend the lien so as to give priority to intervening creditors or purchasers,[80] and, although there is authority to the contrary,[81] the rule has been applied even though the stay was by the direction or with the consent of the judgment creditor,[82] as well as to a direction or agreement to stay execution not entered of record.[83]

§ 504. —— Injunction against Judgment

The lien of a judgment is not destroyed by an injunction restraining the enforcement of the judgment unless the injunction is made perpetual.

An injunction stops an execution, but the lien of the judgment is not lost or suspended during the continuance of the injunction,[84] even though the injunction was granted on the condition of the execution of a bond furnishing the judgment creditor additional security for his debt.[85] A perpetual injunction against the collection of a judgment will destroy its lien,[86] but, where an injunction restraining the collection of a judgment is perpetuated as to a part of it only, the lien of the part not affected continues from the date of the judgment.[87]

§ 505. —— Receivership

The effect of the appointment of a receiver for the judgment debtor on the lien of the judgment is considered in the C.J.S. title Receivers § 135, also 34 Corpus Juris page 631 note 95 and 53 Corpus Juris page 129 note 93.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 506. —— Opening or Vacating Judgment

The vacation of a judgment, absolutely and finally, extinguishes the judgment lien; but the lien is not destroyed by the opening of the judgment to permit a defense.

The setting aside of a judgment and entering of a new one will not destroy the lien of the first when the new judgment is but a modification of the first.[88] Opening a judgment merely to let in a defense does not destroy its lien;[89] and, where the judgment is set aside for irregularity or error, the court may order the lien retained for such amount as plaintiff may ultimately recover, or order the judgment to stand as security.[90]

The lien is extinguished where the judgment is vacated absolutely and finally,[91] or canceled and stricken off the record,[92] or reversed on appeal, as considered infra § 509, and in such cases the court has no power to continue the lien so that it may attach to such judgment as subsequently may be rendered.[93] When an order vacating a judgment is set aside the lien is revived in all its pristine vigor[94] except as to the rights of third persons acquired in the meantime.[95]

§ 507. —— Waiver and Estoppel

The lien of a judgment may be lost by waiver or estoppel.

A judgment creditor may waive, or may be estopped to assert, the lien of his judgment.[96] A judgment creditor may waive or lose the benefit of his lien by failing to comply with the conditions of the judgment,[97] or by such conduct or representations to purchasers or subsequent encumbrancers as induce the belief that he has no claim on the land, or has abandoned his claim, so as to make it inequitable that he should thereafter set up his lien in prejudice of their rights.[98]

On the other hand, the lien is not waived or abandoned by the mere failure to enforce or to attempt to enforce it for a period short of the statutory bar,[99] by the taking of a mortgage for the same debt,[1] by the creditor's acceptance of a sum of money paid to him by the clerk of the court to make good a fault or omission of his which was supposed to have invalidated the judgment,[2] by an unsuccessful attempt to obtain payment from another fund,[3] by filing a claim against the estate of a deceased debtor,[4] from the fact that the creditor brings suit in equity to avoid a fraudulent transfer of the debtor's lands,[5] or causes his judgment to be docketed in another county,[6] or because purchasers of the land after judgment was entered have made improvements, where such purchasers were bound to know that such judgment was unsatisfied, and that the tax deed under which they claim was not duly recorded.[7]

§ 508. —— Destruction, Removal, or Concealment of Property

A judgment lien on personal property may be extinguished by the destruction, removal, or concealment of the property.

A judgment lien on personal property may be destroyed, so that it cannot be enforced against the property by the lienholder, by a destruction of the property itself,[8] by removing it from the state,[9] by hiding or concealing it,[10] by removing it to other parts of the same county, city, or state, so that a creditor does not know where it is, although it is not concealed,[11] by selling to a bona fide purchaser,[12] or by any other act of interference with the property to such an extent that the lien on it is lost, destroyed, or impaired, and cannot be enforced.[13]

§ 509. —— Appeal or Writ of Error

Unless contrary provisions are made by statute, the lien of a judgment ordinarily is not discharged by the pendency of an appeal or writ of error.

Except where provisions to the contrary are made by statute,[14] the general rule is that the lien of a judgment is not discharged, but the right to enforce the lien is merely suspended, by the pendency of an appeal or writ of error, and on the affirmance of the judgment the lien is restored with full force so that no priority is acquired by a purchase or encumbrance made while such appeal or writ of error is pending;[15] and by statute in some states the lien remains unimpaired until the judgment is reversed or modified by the appellate court.[16]

Where a judgment is vacated or reversed on appeal, the lien previously acquired is destroyed;[17] but a simple judgment of affirmance does not disturb the lien of the judgment from the time of its entry below.[18] Where a judgment is reversed in part and affirmed as to the residue, the partial reversal will not affect the lien of as much of the judgment as remains unreversed.[19] The subsequent rendition of another judgment in the same cause will not revive the lien of a judgment reversed on appeal, so as to make it effective from the date of the original judgment.[20]

Appeal from justice's judgment. It has been held that the lien created by filing or recording the transcript of a justice's judgment is destroyed where an appeal is entered within the time limited by law; the cause then goes to the higher court for new trial and judgment, and the lien of that judgment can date only from its rendition, and does not relate back to the time of entry of the transcript of the justice's judgment;[21] but there is also authority to the contrary.[22]

§ 510. Remedies of Creditor after Termination of Lien

After the lien of a judgment has expired at law it may not be enforced in equity, but the judgment itself, if still operative, may be enforced, as by execution against the property of the judgment debtor.

After the lien of a judgment has expired at law it may not be enforced in equity[23] or made the basis of a creditor's bill or a bill to subject property;[24] nor can the lien be revived or continued by the mere act of issuing an execution.[25] Also such a lien may not be enforced or foreclosed by action,[26] at least as against an inferior lien.[27] It has been held that the lien may not be enforced after its expiration even though the action was begun before its expiration,[28] although there is also authority to the contrary.[29]

Unless by reason of statute the judgment becomes inoperative coincident with the termination of the lien, the judgment continues a valid claim against the debtor,[30] and, although it has no lien, it may be filed as a claim against his estate after his death[31] or collected by means of an execution against property the title to which remains in the judgment debtor;[32] and it will entitle the creditor to redeem from a sale under a junior judgment[33] or to take the money from the junior judgment creditor where the senior lien was not enforceable only because of possession by a bona fide purchaser for value for the statutory period.[34]

Any wrongdoer in the chain of acts by which a judgment lien is destroyed, whether his act results directly or indirectly in the destruction, is responsible to the lienholder.[35] A cause of action for destroying a judgment lien on personalty has been held not to be established by proof of mere conversion.[36]

§ 511. Enforcement of Lien

a. In general
b. Proceedings to enforce lien

a. In General

Where authorized by statute, the lien of a judgment may be enforced by an action for foreclosure, and, in proper cases, the lien may be enforced in equity.

In addition to a sale under execution of property bound by the lien of a judgment, as considered in Executions § 33, there exists in some jurisdictions a statutory method for enforcing the lien by an action for foreclosure.[37] Under its jurisdiction to enforce liens, as considered in Equity § 60, and in the C.J.S. title Liens, § 20, also 21 Corpus Juris page 118 note 36 et seq and 37 Corpus Juris page 340 note 39 et seq, equity may in proper cases enforce judgment liens[38] where the judgment creditor has no adequate remedy at law,[39] and statutory jurisdiction to enforce judgment liens has sometimes been conferred on courts of equity.[40] The lien of a judgment may be enforced in equity where it is not possible to issue an execution[41] or, notwithstanding the right to execution, the judgment creditor is impeded from realizing thereon.[42]

Redemption. A debtor who has sold his interest in the realty has no right to redeem from the foreclosure of the judgment lien.[43]

b. Proceedings to Enforce Lien

A suit to enforce a judgment lien against land is not a suit to recover the land or a suit on the judgment.

The suit of a judgment creditor to enforce his judgment lien against the land is not a suit to recover the land itself,[44] nor is it a suit on the judg-

Enforcement of judgments in equity see infra § 587.

Acceleration of lien on default in payment of taxes

Where judgment giving plaintiff a lien on mining claims provided that failure of corporate defendant owner to pay taxes assessed against property before they became delinquent should accelerate lien and make it foreclosable as a mortgage, plaintiff had right, on defendant's default in paying taxes, to foreclose lien, and such foreclosure would not be unconscionable as working a forfeiture in view of defendant's available remedies.—Sparks v. Rowley Mines, 149 P.2d 673, 61 Ariz. 370.

Effect of fraud in inducing execution of another instrument

Where agreed judgment awarded attorney's fee, secured by lien on property of client, who subsequently executed notes therefor, attorney's alleged fraud in inducing execution of trust deed securing notes did not prevent foreclosure of judgment lien by attorney's transferees, including associate counsel aiding in obtaining judgment.—Keels v. First Nat. Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 71 S.W.2d 372.

Jurisdiction extends only as far as may be necessary to satisfy lien.—Tackett v. Bolling, 1 S.E.2d 285, 172 Va. 326.

Living debtor

Statute applies to suit brought to subject land of living debtor to lien of judgment thereon, and has no application to suit in equity to subject lands of decedent to payment of his debts.—Morrison v. Morrison, 14 S.E.2d 322, 177 Va. 417.

Effect of death of judgment debtor pending suit

After death of judgment debtor against whom suit for enforcement of judgment lien on his real estate was pending at his death, it is proper and necessary to require a settlement of his estate in such suit, if he left any personal property applicable to the payment of his debts, but such settlement is merely incidental to the accomplishment of the purpose of the suit, and does not alter its character, although it is susceptible of enlargement and extension to a purpose not strictly within its original scope, namely, sale of real estate to satisfy unsecured indebtedness.—First Nat. Bank v. De Berriz, 105 S.E. 900, 87 W.Va. 477.

No money judgment

Where judgment expressly created lien on particular property but no money judgment was entered in favor of lienholder, and no requirement made for sale of the property, execution would not lie for enforcement of lien, but an equitable action was required to enforce it.—Wellborn v. Wellborn, supra.

Enforcement in probate court after death

Where judgment debtor conveyed to another all his title in certain land prior to his death, nothing remained in his estate relative to land subject to orders of probate court, and hence judgment creditor seeking to enforce his judgment lien against land did not have to seek relief through probate court.—W. T. Rawleigh Co. v. Childers, Tex.Civ.App., 132 S.W.2d 434.

Where execution may issue, an equitable action is unnecessary.—Corporation of America v. Marks, 73 P.2d 1215, 10 Cal.2d 218, 114 A.L.R. 1162—34 C.J. p 634 note 60.

ment.[45] A judgment creditor who comes into a court of equity to enforce his lien on land is not asserting an equitable right or seeking equitable relief; his judgment is a legal lien.[46] After the death of the judgment debtor the lien may be enforced in equity without revival of the judgment.[47] The tender to the senior mortgagee of the amount of the mortgage debt is not a prerequisite to the foreclosure of a junior judgment lien.[48]

The suit must be brought within the time limited by statute;[49] and laches in instituting the suit may bar relief.[50] Such notice must be given to the judgment debtor as is prescribed by statute.[51] Thus, where required by statute, the judgment creditor in advance of suit must give the specified notice that suit will be instituted.[52] In the absence of special statutory regulations, the general rules control as to parties[53] and pleadings.[54] In accordance with

Statute inapplicable
Statute providing that no action shall be brought on any judgment against a defendant within nine years after rendition thereof without leave of court applies to the extension or renewal of a judgment, and not to an action to enforce a lien established thereby.—Lackender v. Morrison, 2 N.W.2d 286, 231 Iowa 899.

Where decree of distribution of decedent's estate created lien in favor of decedent's widow against interests of other distributees, and within six years after entry of the decree a partition suit was instituted wherein, after defining interests of respective parties and confirming widow's lien, all lands were directed to be sold at public auction, partition decree initiated new rights in favor of widow as regards time in which she was required to bring action to enforce her lien, as against contention that partition decree merely constituted a recognition of the subsistence of a lien at such time.—Castanier v. Purpose of statute providing that no bill to enforce lien of judgment not exceeding twenty dollars shall be entertained unless judgment debtor has been given thirty days' notice that suit would be instituted is to spare judgment debtor expense of suit brought to enforce lien of judgment in such a small amount until he shall have been given a final opportunity to pay claim.—Sutherland v. Necessary parties
(1) Where land had been conveyed by judgment debtor, the only necessary parties to action for foreclosure of lien were judgment creditor and grantee of judgment debtor.

(2) Where judgment, in awarding divorce and certain property to wife, imposed lien thereon to secure attorney's fee, and wife subsequently executed notes therefor secured by trust deed, children, although living with wife on property as homestead, were not necessary parties to suit to foreclose liens.—Keels v. Proper parties
(1) Fact that creditor's bill to subject property to lien of recorded judgment prayed discovery separating debtor's interest from coöwners authorized joining them as defendants.—Griffith v. First Nat. Bank, 128 So. 595, 221 Ala. 311.

(2) Judgment creditor seeking to enforce lien against debtor's undivided interest in land was not entitled to have land sold for division among joint owners, and the joint owners, other than debtor, were not "proper parties" to bill.—Hargett v. Hovater, 15 So.2d 276, 244 Ala. 646.

(3) Other cases.—Decker v. Gilbert, 80 Ind. 107—34 C.J. p 634 note 60 [b], p 635 note 62 [b].

Intervention of interested persons
(1) Persons beneficially interested in judgments, not already parties to actions to enforce them, may come in by leave of court, making themselves parties.—Brown v. Harding, 89 S.E. 222, 171 N.C. 686.

(2) In suit to enforce judgment lien against lands, on behalf of plaintiff and all other lien creditors of defendant who will make themselves parties on the usual terms, one has a right to file his petition, and become a party plaintiff, without maintaining a separate suit to mature his bill, since, having acquired jurisdiction of the cause on equitable grounds, the court may go on to a complete adjudication of the rights of the various parties.—Kane v. Mann, 24 S.E. 938, 93 Va. 239.

(3) Petition construed as one to enforce existing judgment lien and not to establish lien.—Stephenson v. Lichtenstein, 160 P. 1170, 24 Wyo. 417.

the general rules of evidence which usually apply in proceedings to enforce a judgment lien,[55] where a third person claims ownership of the property on which the judgment creditor seeks a foreclosure of the judgment lien, such third person may not show title to the property in a stranger unless he connects himself with such title.[56]

Trial or hearing. General rules ordinarily apply to the trial or hearing of an action or suit to enforce the lien of a judgment.[57] The merits of the cause in which the original judgment was rendered will not be considered;[58] nor may the validity of the original judgment be questioned[59] unless it is void.[60]

Judgment or decree. General rules usually are applicable to the judgment or decree in an action or suit to enforce a judgment lien.[61] A sale of land for the payment of the lien should not be decreed until there has first been an account of all the liens on the land and their relative priorities, if any.[62] A sale may be ordered without reference to a contingent right of dower.[63] Where the statute

(1) Defendant could, under general denial, prove any matter tending to show that plaintiff had no enforceable lien.—Payne v. Bracken, 115 S.W.2d 903, 131 Tex. 394.

(2) In suit to enforce judgment lien against grantor of realty and corporation to which realty was conveyed and its vendee, equities in favor of corporation and its vendee could be established under general denial without pleading facts out of which they arose, notwithstanding equities consisted in part of right to assert estoppel as against grantor, since land was subject to equitable rights of corporation and its vendee. —Payne v. so requires, before ordering the sale of the land to satisfy the judgment, it must appear to the court that the rents and profits of the real estate will not satisfy the judgment within five years;[64] but an inquiry as to rental value is not necessary where the bill charges that the judgment lien cannot be paid within five years from rental proceeds and that charge is not denied.[65]

Where the land is subject to a deed of trust subordinate to the lien of the judgment, the judgment foreclosing the lien and ordering sale should fix the right of the holder of the deed of trust to satisfy the encumbrances and retain the land.[66] Under some statutes where the judgment creditor holds a mortgage on realty as security for the debt that has gone into the judgment, which mortgage is a first charge on the property mortgaged, the court shall order such mortgaged property to be first applied to the debt secured by it and a foreclosure of the judgment lien shall be granted only as to the portion of said judgment that shall remain unsatisfied.[67]

Sale. A sale is not void because of a defective description of the land in the judgment of foreclosure and in the sheriff's deed under the foreclosure sale;[68] nor, in the absence of fraud or irregularity in the conduct of the sale, is the sale void because the price was grossly inadequate.[69] When real estate, divisible in parcels, or owned in severalty, is sold to satisfy a judgment lien, authority to sell additional parcels is exhausted when a sufficient amount has already been realized to satisfy the lien and the costs of the proceeding.[70]

XV. ASSIGNMENT OF JUDGMENTS

a. In General

As a general rule, a judgment is as assignable as any other chose in action. While under the common law a judgment is not assignable so as to pass the legal title to the assignee, such an assignment is permissible by virtue of statute in many jurisdictions.

A judgment has been said to have the assignable quality of a chose in action,[71] deriving its assignability from the fact that it constitutes a debt or property right made of record in favor of the party who obtains the judgment against his adversary.[72] At common law, and in the absence of statute changing the rule, a judgment is not assignable so as to vest the legal title in the assignee;[73] but such an assignment operates to vest an equitable interest in the assignee which the law will protect,[74] if it is made in good faith[75] and, as discussed infra § 517, for a valuable consideration.

reference to any statute,[76] under statutes which are now in force in practically all jurisdictions, a judgment, provided it is final,[77] may be assigned so as to pass the legal title[78] and, as discussed infra § 522, give the assignee the right to enforce it in his own name, although even now the assignment may be such that the assignor remains the equitable owner.[79]

An assignment of a judgment may be made at any time after its entry in the trial court,[80] even pending an appeal,[81] although, as discussed infra § 522, it cannot be enforced, unless and until the appellate procedure is finally terminated in favor of the judgment.

b. Particular Judgments

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a judgment which does not survive to the personal representative of the beneficial owner, or which does not constitute a debt or right in property capable of being reduced to possession, is not assignable.

In accordance with the general rule discussed in Assignments §§ 5, 30, which sets up as a test of assignability of a chose in action the survivability of the chose in action, in the absence of statutory authority therefor, a judgment which does not survive to the personal representative of the beneficial owner is not assignable.[82] Where a judgment is considered as deriving its assignability from the fact that it constitutes a debt or property right, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, a decree which in no sense represents a debt or which creates no property right in anything capable of being reduced to possession is not assignable.[83]

A decree in equity, although not assignable at law, may be transferred for a valuable consideration, and the transfer will be supported by a court of chancery.[84]

Satisfied judgments. A judgment once fully paid off and satisfied is not thereafter capable of assignment.[85]

Judgments for torts. While, as discussed in Assignments § 32, a cause of action for a tort, which dies with the party and does not survive to his personal representatives, is generally not capable of passing by assignment, after such cause of action has been merged into a judgment it assumes a different footing, and such judgment, sometimes by reason of express statutory provision, may be assigned,[86] and, according to the decisions on the question, at least in equity,[87] in the same manner as any other judgment, provided the judgment has become final in the sense that the action in which it is recovered is no longer pending or in the sense that it finally determines the rights of the parties to such action.[88]

Statutory prohibition. The legislature, pursuant to a scheme of remedial legislation, may prohibit the assignment of a judgment which is ordinarily assignable.[89]

§ 513. —— Future Judgments

An assignment may be made of a judgment to be recovered in the future if the cause of action itself is assignable. Such an assignment becomes operative when the judgment is recovered.

Where the cause of action is of an assignable character, as in the case of actions ex contractu, a valid assignment may be made before the rendition of the judgment which will become operative as soon as the judgment is recovered.[90] Where, however, the cause of action is in tort, there can be no assignment until the claim has been merged in an actual judgment, even though a verdict has been given for plaintiff, as discussed in Assignments §§ 33, 36, and an interest in a judgment to be recovered in such a case is not assignable,[91] although it has been held in some cases that such assignment before judgment gives to the assignee an interest in the judgment, when perfected, which may be enforced in equity,[92] on the principle that in equity that which is agreed to be done will be considered as done.[93] The assignment of the verdict and judgment to be recovered in a pending action for tort has also been supported as not an assignment of a mere right of action, but of property having a potential existence, that is to come into existence in the future.[94]

be conferred by power of attorney,[98] which need not be recorded in order to render the assignment effective as between the parties, the recording of such power being material only where notice to third persons is necessary.[99] Where a contract is made with an agent in his own name for the benefit of his principal, he is the real owner of a judgment recovered thereon in an action brought by him in his own name, and has power to dispose of it for the benefit of his principal.[1]

Subject to the rule as to the necessity of a beneficial interest, any person who is the actual owner of the judgment,[2] or who has the right to enforce and collect it,[3] may make an assignment thereof. Thus an assignment may be made by an administrator or executor,[4] a bank,[5] a corporation[6] or its receiver,[7] or a municipality.[8] A partner may assign in the name of the firm a judgment rendered in favor of the firm,[9] and a joint owner of a judgment may assign his undivided interest therein.[10]

As discussed in Attorney and Client, § 93 c, an attorney at law has no implied authority as such to assign a judgment recovered in favor of his client.

b. Who May Take Assignment

As a general rule any person, natural or artificial, may become the assignee of a judgment.

As a general rule, any person, natural or artificial, may become the assignee of a judgment.[11] While ordinarily the payment of a judgment by one primarily liable on it is an absolute satisfaction, although the judgment is assigned to him,[12] a surety on the debt for which the judgment was recovered may hold the judgment under an assignment, after paying its amount, if his intention not to satisfy the judgment is clear,[13] and the same rule applies to a surety on an obligation given in payment of the judgment.[14]

(2) Purported assignment of judgment to plaintiff as receiver of a bank by individual signing assignment as "president" was incompetent to prove assignment, even if it could be presumed that individual was president of assignor bank and acting as such at time of purported assignment, where there was no proof that individual had authority to make assignment.—Cumberland Bank & Trust Co. v. a. In General

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, no particular mode or form is required to give effect to the assignment of a judgment.

It has been said that a judgment may be assigned by any method competent and sufficient for the assignment of any other chose in action.[15] Accordingly, in the absence of statutory directions as to the mode of assigning a judgment, no particular form of assignment is necessary to give effect to such an assignment,[16] as long as the assignment is definite and absolute.[17]

The assignment may be accomplished by a writing,[18] as by an indorsement on the record,[19] or by a separate written instrument[20] which need not be under seal[21] or, as discussed infra § 518, recorded. The assignment may be executed under a power of attorney.[22] In all such cases, however, there must be a delivery of the instrument of assignment to the assignee or some one authorized by him to accept it,[23] except where an assignment is not denied.[24]

A written assignment will not be vitiated by mistakes in the description of the judgment or in other particulars if it is capable of being made certain,[25] and, if an entry of record is so ambiguous as not to show whether an assignment or a satisfaction was intended, it may be explained by parol.[26]

A judgment may be assigned by parol[27] provided

Requisites, modes, and validity of assignments generally see Assignments §§ 41–81.

16. No formal deed of assignment is necessary.—Owen v. Interstate Mortg. Trust Co., 211 P. 87, 88 Okl. 10, 30 A.L.R. 816.

Transfer of transcript
Where a transcript or certificate of the judgment is filed in a higher court for the purpose of creating a lien on real estate, it is not necessary to transfer such transcript or certificate in order to effect an assignment of the judgment.—Travis v. Rhodes, 37 So. 804, 142 Ala. 189.

17. Ala.—Pike v. Bright, 29 Ala. 332—Bain v. J. A. Lusk & Son, 109 So. 187, 21 Ala.App. 442.

Acknowledgment of indebtedness
Where printing firm executed acknowledgment of indebtedness to corporation's judgment creditor, which allegedly "represented and evidenced" corporation's judgment indebtedness, judgment creditor's assignment of such instrument to his wife and wife's similar assignment thereof to son did not carry with it the corporation's judgment indebtedness or right to collect such indebtedness from estate of corporation's sole stockholder, notwithstanding alleged intent with which assignments were made.—Allen v. National Bank of Commerce & Trust Co. of Providence, 19 A.2d 311, 66 R.I. 373.

18. Okl.—Owen v. Interstate Mortg. Trust Co., 211 P. 87, 88 Okl. 10, 30 A.L.R. 816.

Legal or equitable judgments

Assignment before signing of judgment
Where, after hearing on a contested garnishment and announcement by the court of a finding for plaintiff, plaintiff assigned "the amount recovered by me this day in the case of G. P. v. C. and W., being cause 145480," etc., he intended to and did assign the final judgment and not a chose in action, nothing remaining to be done but to present such judgment for signature, although appeal was thereafter taken.—Premier Wrench Co. v. Pearson, 225 P. 49, 129 Wash. 326.

Judgment as included in sale of property
(1) It is not necessary specifically to include a judgment in bill of sale of a business or all of the assets thereof, where judgment was part of such business or assets.
Colo.—Bright v. Schmitt, 231 P. 159, 76 Colo. 320.
Tex.—Kahn v. Ilitzky, Civ.App., 107 S.W.2d 1015, error refused.

(2) Writing reciting "sale" of realty by one having only a judgment lien thereon to judgment debtor was held sufficient to transfer judgment lien.—Sowards v. Sowards, 61 S.W.2d 609, 249 Ky. 742.

Partial assignment
Kan.—Tharp v. Langford, 222 P. 135, 115 Kan. 135.

Proof of assignment
Where a written assignment, claimed to include both of two judgments recovered by the judgment creditor, refers to but one of them, it was held that the presumption that an instrument correctly expresses parties' intention was sufficient to support implied finding that assignment did not include the other judgment.—Welk v. Conner, 282 P. 963, 102 Cal.App. 286.

Authority to assign under power of attorney see supra § 514.

23. Ill.—Williams v. West Chicago St. R. Co., 85 Ill.App. 305.

Presumption as to delivery
Where judgment creditor executed a written assignment of judgment in blank and transmitted it to its attorney to be filled out and delivered on receipt of money, possession of assignment by a third person raised presumption that assignment was properly delivered according to instructions.—Power Mfg. Co. v. Tindall, C.C.A.Ark., 100 F.2d 463.

Legal or equitable judgments
Tex.—Blanks v. Radford, Civ.App., 188 S.W.2d 879, error refused.

Manual delivery
While a judgment may not be manually delivered, it may be assigned by parol.—Kahn v. Ilitzky, Tex.Civ.App., 107 S.W.2d 1015, error dismissed.

the intention to assign and the terms are clearly shown,[28] unless the statute under which the assignment is made prohibits a parol assignment,[29] or requires the assignment to be in writing.[30] It has been held, however, that a judgment on a written contract must be assigned in writing in order to constitute a valid assignment, so that the judgment, when satisfied by defendant, will operate as a bar to another action on the contract against defendant.[31]

An assignment by delivery merely has been held insufficient to pass even an equitable title,[32] although there is also authority to the contrary,[33] and it has also been held that the delivery of an execution with intent to transfer the debt for a valuable consideration is a sufficient assignment of the judgment.[34]

In order to constitute an assignment there must be enough done or said to indicate an intention to make a present transfer, as distinguished from a mere offer or purpose to do so.[35] An assignment is not constituted by a mere authority to collect the judgment[36] or by an order to pay the amount thereof to a named person.[37]

Acceptance by assignee. The assignment of a judgment is not effective unless accepted by the assignee,[38] although subsequent ratification or affirmance thereof is sufficient where the assignee was ignorant of the assignment at the time it was made.[39]

Notice. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a valid assignment of a judgment may be made without notice to any party thereto,[40] or to any other person;[41] but it has been held that an assignment without such a notice vests in the assignee the beneficial interest in the judgment, the legal title remaining in the assignor in the nature of a trust for the benefit of the assignee.[42]

Effect of mistake of law. Since, as discussed in Contracts § 145, a mistake of law does not relieve the parties to a contract from their obligations thereunder unless an unconscionable advantage is gained by one party over the other, a mistake by an assignee of a judgment with respect to the prospective action of the court on the judgment in a pending proceeding seeking the enforcement thereof does not invalidate the assignment where the assignor acquired no unconscionable advantage thereby.[43]

Agreements to assign. The operation and effect of an agreement to assign a judgment are governed by the general rules relating to contracts.[44] An executory agreement to assign a judgment for a specified price, which agreement is never performed by either party, does not amount to an assignment,[45] and does not vest any title in the assignee.[46] On breach of an agreement to assign the aggrieved party is entitled to recover the resulting damages,[47] provided he has performed, or is ready, willing and able to perform, on his own part.[48] One agreeing to purchase a judgment at a specified sum is not entitled to an assignment if he has defaulted under the agreement.[49] The mere issuance of an execution at request of the judgment creditor,[50] or an execution sale thereunder to one refusing to accept title to the seized property,[51] does not constitute a breach of an agreement to assign a judgment.

What law governs. The validity of an assignment of a judgment is determined by the law of the state in which the judgment is recovered.[52] Hence, an assignment of a judgment made in conformity to the laws of the state where the judgment was rendered is valid everywhere.[53]

b. Statutory Requirements

Where the statute authorizing the assignment of a judgment provides a mode of assignment, its requirements must be followed in order to pass the legal title and secure to the assignee any rights which depend solely on the statute.

Where the statute authorizing the assignment of a judgment provides a mode of assignment, its requirements must be followed in order to pass the legal title and secure to the assignee any rights which depend solely on the statute.[54] Where, however, such a statute does not expressly exclude other modes, it is regarded as cumulative merely, and does not prevent the making of an assignment in any other way which is recognized as sufficient in equity.[55]

§ 516. —— Equitable Assignments

No particular form is necessary to constitute an equitable assignment of a judgment.

In order to constitute an equitable assignment of a judgment, no particular form is necessary,[56] it being sufficient that the assignee has such evidence of title as, although it does not pass a legal title to enforce the judgment in his own name, authorizes him to receive the proceeds thereof, and protects the judgment debtor in making payment to him.[57] Thus, provided the intent to assign is clear and some act is done between the parties amounting to an appropriation, or a constructive delivery,[58] an equitable assignment of a judgment may be made by a writing,[59] or by parol,[60] even though a statute requires a writing to effect a legal assignment of a judgment.[61] Where an attempted assignment of a judgment, made in good faith, fails of its legal effect because of some irregularity or informality, it may be given effect in equity where it amounts to an equitable assignment,[62] and, even where there

Noncompliance with statute
(1) An assignment of a judgment has been no attempt to effect an assignment, equity will sometimes give effect to the transaction as an assignment in order to protect the rights of the assignee.[63] An order from the judgment creditor to his attorney to pay to a third party the money collected on the judgment creates, when delivered to the attorney, an equitable assignment of, and a lien on, the proceeds of the judgment,[64] even though it is not accepted by the attorney.[65] On the other hand, an order on a court clerk to pay to a third person the amount due on a judgment does not amount to an assignment, since such order cannot operate until the judgment has been extinguished by payment.[66]

An assignment may be presumed to have been executed on the day of its date.[67]

Proof of assignment. While no formality is required in an equitable assignment of a judgment, when the fact of the assignment is called in question, sufficient evidence of title must be produced to protect the judgment debtor in making payment to the assignee as against the assignor,[68] and evidence of delivery merely has been held insufficient.[69] The fact that the assignment has been filed of record with the papers will not dispense with the necessity of calling the subscribing witness to prove it.[70]

§ 517. —— Consideration

As a general rule, as between the assignor and the assignee, a valuable consideration is essential to support an assignment of a judgment.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary,[71] as between the assignor and the assignee, or persons claiming under them, a valuable consideration is essential to support an assignment of a judgment.[72] Any consideration sufficient to support a contract will suffice to support such an assignment,[73] and the rights of the assignee to payment, as discussed in any form passes an equity which the courts will recognize and protect, notwithstanding it fails to comply with statute.—Brown v. Reinke, supra.

Compelling assignment

Where purchaser at tax sale recovered judgments against tenant in possession for use and occupation of premises and owner thereafter sold premises to purchaser, crediting him with all he was entitled to under the tax sale, purchaser was not thereafter entitled to hold judgments against tenant and would be directed to assign them to the owner.—Pyle v. Altshul, 4 A.2d 377, 125 N.J.Eq. 143.

On avoidance of execution sale

Assignment by municipality

Municipality may assign judgment recovered on bail bond for fair and full value.—Wilkinson v. Hutto, 128 So. 93, 157 Miss. 358.

Consideration held insufficient

Transfer of judgment to clerk and sheriff to secure costs in other cases was held void, as without consideration or promise of service not their duty to perform.—Bain v. J. A. Lusk & Son, 109 So. 187, 21 Ala.App. 442.

73. La.—Kentwood Bank v. McClendon, 93 So. 748, 152 La. 489.
34 C.J. p 640 note 45.

Assignment as security or collateral

(1) An assignment given as collateral or security for a loan is based on a sufficient consideration.—State ex rel. McConnell v. Peoples Bank & Trust Co., 12 Tenn.App. 242.

(2) It is a sufficient consideration, even though given to secure a pre-existing debt.—McMillan v. Rutherford, Tex.Civ.App., 14 S.W.2d 132—34 C.J. p 640 note 45 [a] (3).

(3) Because of this it was unnecessary to a valid assignment of judgment to pay notes held by assignee that they be marked paid and delivered to assignor to constitute consideration.—McMillan v. Rutherford, supra.

Executed contract

Landowners' assignment of a proportional interest in judgment recovered in condemnation action as security for payment of plaintiff's services in the condemnation action was an "executed contract" requiring no consideration.—Rowe v. Holmes, 146 P.2d 45, 63 Cal.App.2d 46.

Failure of consideration

Where assignment of judgment was consideration for cancellation of mortgage, reversal of judgment merely for modification, leaving judgment as valuable as before, was not a failure of consideration.—Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco v. Hansbrough, 292 P. 222, 49 Idaho 747.

Past consideration

Debtor's antecedent obligation to his assignee was held not to constitute a valuable consideration for the assignment of a judgment obtained by debtor.—London & Lancashire Indemnity Co. of America v. Cromwell, 190 S.E. 337, 118 W.Va. 318.

Proof as to consideration

(1) Any evidence which impeaches the bona fides of the assignment puts the assignee to full proof of consideration.—Rettig v. Becker, 11 Pa.Super. 395.

(2) Burden is on assignee to prove payment for assignment.—Power Mfg. Co. v. Tindall, C.C.A.Ark., 100 F.2d 463.

(3) Where judgment creditor executed a written assignment in blank and transmitted it to its attorney with instructions to deliver, on receipt of certain sum, possession of assignment by third party, created infra § 522, or otherwise, are not affected by the fact that the consideration was less than the face of the judgment.[74]

§ 518. —— Recording

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, as between the assignor and assignee, filing or recording is not essential to the validity of an assignment of a judgment.

In the absence of a statute so requiring,[75] as between the assignor and the assignee, filing or recording is not essential to the validity of an assignment of a judgment.[76] Thus, while it may be desirable that the assignment of a judgment appear of record, an entry thereof on the records of the court rendering it is not usually necessary to complete the assignment,[77] the mere filing thereof among the papers in the case being sufficient,[78] although under some statutes recording is necessary as against third persons.[79] A statute requiring assignments to be recorded refers only to domestic judgments, and does not affect the proof of an assignment of a foreign judgment.[80]

§ 519. Operation and Effect

a. In general
b. Assignment as security or for collection
c. Effect of fraud

a. In General

A valid assignment of a judgment transfers to the assignee all of the rights of the assignor therein, but the assignee stands in no better position than his assignor in relation thereto.

On a valid assignment of a judgment, the assignee succeeds to the ownership of the judgment and all the rights, interests, and authority of his assignor therein,[81] including the debt or claim on which the judgment is based[82] and any security therefor,[83] presumption that such sum had been paid.—Power Mfg. Co. v. Tindall, supra.

(4) In such a case the assignee's burden of proving payment was sustained by production of assignment in his possession and recital in assignment acknowledging receipt of consideration of one dollar and other good and valuable consideration paid to the judgment creditor by the assignee.—Power Mfg. Co. v. Tindall, supra.

(2) Thus an assignment of a judgment which, in addition to awarding a money recovery, declared the status of the assignor's title to certain property which had theretofore passed to him under a will transferred the money judgment, but did not transfer the assignor's title to the property.—Ingram v. Effect of vacation of judgment

If an assignment of a judgment assigned the claim on which it rested, notwithstanding subsequent vacation of judgment on appeal, the assignor could not complain of a levy of execution against the claim, since the only person interested under such circumstances would be the owner or assignee.—Johnson v. Dahlquist, 225 P. 817, 130 Wash. 29.

83. N.Y.—Pattison v. Hull, 9 Cow. 747.

provided the claim is assignable.[84] The effect of such an assignment is to divest the assignor of all interest in, and all control over, the judgment,[85] even though the assignment is a fraud on creditors,[86] and the assignor cannot thereafter pass title to it by any subsequent assignment.[87] The death of the assignor does not impair the rights of the assignee.[88] The assignment of a decree will not necessitate making the assignee a party to further proceedings.[89]

An assignment, however, does not confer on the assignee any greater right, interest, or equity than the assignor had,[90] and the assignee stands in no better position that his assignor stood at the time of the assignment.[91] Hence, if the latter has no title to the judgment, he can convey none to the assignee[92] whether or not the assignee had notice.[93] It has been held that, if the judgment is void in the hands of the judgment creditor, it is void and without effect in the hands of an assignee for value.[94] However, it has also been held that, if the judgment is void, the assignment nevertheless transfers the original debt or claim on which the judgment was based.[95]

Caveat emptor. An assignment of a judgment has been held to be subject to the rule of caveat emptor.[96]

As satisfaction of judgment. Irrespective of how often a judgment may be transferred, it does not become functus officio, where the intention of the parties to the transfers is evidently to keep it alive.[97] If, however, as discussed infra § 562, a judgment is assigned to the judgment debtor himself, or to a stranger for his benefit, the judgment is satisfied. It is otherwise where the judgment debtor causes an assignment to be made to a third person who advances the funds necessary to pay the judgment under circumstances showing the absence of any intent to satisfy the judgment.[98]

b. Assignment as Security or for Collection

The assignment of a judgment as security for a debt confers on the assignee the right to control and enforce the judgment and satisfy his claim out of the proceeds. An assignee for collection obtains no vested right in the judgment.

A third person taking an assignment of a judgment as collateral security for a debt acquires the right to control and enforce the judgment,[99] and to satisfy his claims out of the proceeds.[1] However, where a judgment is assigned to secure advances, the assignee cannot include within the lien other advances made to the assignor, as to which there was no agreement on making the assignment.[2] The assignee obtains no better rights than his assignor had, and takes the judgment subject to any equities or disabilities effective against it in the latter's hands.[3] If he in turn sells or assigns the judgment, his assignee must hold it subject to the right of the original owner to redeem it on paying the amount for which it was pledged as security.[4] On the payment or release of the debt for which the judgment was pledged, the assignee's rights terminate by operation of law, and the judgment reverts to the original owner without a reassignment.[5]

One taking an assignment of a judgment merely under an authority or as a power to collect it for the assignor has no vested right in it other than as the assignor's agent, in whom the ownership remains.[6] On the other hand, a written assignment giving the assignee full authority to collect and discharge the judgment and binding the assignor not to do so is a valid assignment.[7]

An assignment to an attorney for the purpose of, inter alia, paying his own fees gives him an interest in the judgment.[8]

c. Effect of Fraud

Fraud vitiates an assignment of a judgment as between the parties to the assignment.

As between the parties to it an assignment of a judgment may be vitiated by fraud or bad faith,[9] but the judgment debtor cannot impeach the assignment for fraud unless he can show that he was injured by the fraud.[10]

§ 520. —— Partial Assignments

As a general rule a partial assignment of a judgment, while valid as between the parties, is of no effect against the judgment debtor unless he consents thereto or ratifies it.

While, as between the assignor and the assignee, the assignment of a part of a judgment is valid and binding, even when made without the judgment debtor's consent,[11] as against the debtor a judgment cannot be partially assigned without the debtor's consent,[12] such an assignment without the consent of the debtor having no effect against the debtor,[13] unless it is subsequently ratified by him.[14]

In accordance with the general rule governing partial assignments of choses in action, as discussed in Assignments § 39, a partial assignment will not change the legal title to the judgment[15] and, except as otherwise provided by statute,[16] cannot be enforced at law unless the judgment debtor consents thereto[17] or unless the assignment is ratified by him.[18] Thus the assignee cannot obtain a separate process to enforce payment of the part assigned,[19] unless the judgment debtor has ratified the assignment, as by voluntarily paying the portion of the judgment retained by the judgment creditor.[20] The fact, however, that a judgment creditor has agreed to pay, or has assigned, part of the judgment to a third person, is no reason why the judgment debtor should not be compelled to pay the judgment;[21] and, if the debtor refuses to consent to the assignment, the judgment creditor may maintain an action at law on the judgment for the full amount thereof.[22]

A partial assignment to which the judgment debtor has assented creates a distinct and separate interest in the assignee, which the debtor is bound to recognize,[23] and which cannot be destroyed by acts of the assignor or debtor, or both;[24] it is not a joint obligation extinguishable by performance rendered to either the assignor or the assignee.[25]

The rule against partial assignments applies where the judgment is in favor of joint plaintiffs[26] or against joint defendants.[27] However, where judgments against two or more defendants are several and not joint, they may be separately assigned[28] where no question of payment by either debtor has arisen.[29]

In equity. It has generally been held that a partial assignment constitutes an equitable assignment pro tanto[30] which conveys to the assignee an equitable interest in the judgment[31] enforceable in equity,[32] although the doctrine has been laid down that the assignment of part of a judgment without consent of the debtor is no more enforceable in equity than at law.[33]

§ 521. Rights and Liabilities of Parties

An assignee's rights with respect to the judgment are governed by any conditions or reservations contained in the assignment.

The rights of the assignee with respect to the judgment are governed and controlled by any conditions or reservations contained in the assignment.[34]

Holmes, 146 P.2d 45, 63 Cal.App.2d 46.

Judgment entitles the assignee to demand and receive payment thereof.

As a general rule a judgment debtor is in no position to complain of an assignment of a judgment against him,[35] unless the assignment was taken for his benefit or paid for with funds advanced by him for that purpose,[36] although, as discussed infra § 524, the assignee's rights under the assignment may be subject to equities, defenses, and agreements between the parties to the judgment.

The assignment of a judgment transfers to the assignee the right to demand and receive payment of the judgment,[37] to the exclusion of all other persons,[38] including the assignor,[39] unless the assignment is subject to a reservation.[40] The assignee's right to receive the full amount remaining unpaid on the judgment is not affected by the amount he paid for the assignment,[41] unless he occupies a fiduciary relation to the judgment debtor[42] or has become the assignee at the debtor's request and for his benefit,[43] or purchases a compromised judgment at the amount agreed on in the compromise,[44] in which cases he cannot recover more than the amount paid for the assignment with interest.

Where a surety for the judgment debtor buys the judgment from the judgment creditor and assigns all of his claim against the debtor, his assignee suing as plaintiff in interest is entitled to recover on the judgment all that is still due thereon as between the principal and the surety.[45] The assignee of a judgment which was paid in part before the assignment is entitled to demand and receive payment of the unpaid balance only,[46] since in such a case, as discussed supra § 519, the effect of the assignment is to transfer to the assignee the judgment creditor's interest in the unpaid balance.

b. Right to Enforce Judgment

Although at common law the assignee of a judgment may not enforce the judgment at law in his own name, he may use the name of the judgment creditor for such purpose. An assignee of a judgment is usually permitted by statute to enforce the judgment in his own name.

It has been stated generally that an assignment of a judgment passes to the assignee all rights and remedies for collection of the judgment which the assignor possesses.[47] At common law, since the assignment of a judgment does not pass the legal

Defenses not available against creditor

A mortgagor was not entitled to raise, as against assignee of deficiency judgment on foreclosure of mortgaged property, the question of inadequacy of price for which property was sold at foreclosure sale, since mortgagee could have enforced deficiency judgment against mortgagor to full extent of deficiency, and there was no reason for denying his assignee the same right.—Marsh v. Bowen, 6 A.2d 783, 235 Pa. 314.

Materialman's lien decree

Surety on building contractor's bond as assignee of materialman's lien decree against property owner was held entitled to enforce decree with like effect as materialman, unless some special equity existed, which was not theretofore capable of being put in issue, and which would entitle property owner to relief by way of equitable set-off or counterclaim against surety's money demand.—Bear v. Standard Accident Ins. Co., 168 So. 18, 124 Fla. 9.

Person secondarily liable

Where decree was rendered against individual defendant primarily and banking company secondarily and trust company, assuming liabilities of banking company, paid judgment and took assignment thereof, the trust company was not precluded title, the assignee may not sue on the judgment, in his own name and behalf,[48] except in equity,[49] and even in equity it has been held that the assignor in whose name the judgment or decree was recovered must be made a party to the suit.[50] The assignment, nevertheless, generally vests in the assignee the exclusive right to control the judgment and to use the name of the assignor, independently of the latter's consent, for the purpose of enforcing his rights,[51] as in the issuance of process to collect the judgment,[52] or in an original suit thereon.[53] Where the assignee may use the name of the judgment creditor to enforce the judgment, he may also use the name of the creditor's personal representative after the latter's death.[54] It has been held that, if the assignee may sue at law in the name of the judgment creditor, he has an adequate remedy at law which, in the absence of other equitable factors, bars him from proceeding in equity.[55]

An agreement between the assignor and other creditors of the debtor not to enforce the judgment is binding on an assignee of the judgment with notice.[56]

Under statutes. Under statutes of various types the assignee of a judgment is usually permitted to sue on the judgment in his own name,[57] regardless, under some statutes, of whether or not a legal title has passed to the assignee.[58] Under such statutes, after an assignment which transfers the legal title, the assignor may not sue thereon,[59] and the assignor's death does not deprive the assignee of the right to sue in his own name.[60] If the statute makes no exception in case the assignee is an attorney at law, an attorney may sue in his own name as assignee,[61] at least where the assignor was not his client.[62] A statute permitting the assignee to sue in his own name has been held not to preclude him from suing in the name of his assignor, if he so elects,[63] and the rule does not mean that the name of the action shall be changed, but it does mean that the proceedings and pleadings subsequent to the assignment shall be carried on in the name of, or at least by, the real party in interest.[64] Under a statute providing that the trustee of an express trust may sue without joining with him the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted, the assignor of a judgment may sue as trustee for the assignee without joining the assignee.[65]

Assignment pending appeal. An assignment of a judgment pending an appeal therefrom may not be enforced unless and until the appeal is finally terminated in favor of the judgment.[66]

§ 523. —— As Affected by Notice to Debtor

a. Necessity for notice
b. Form of notice
c. Effect of notice

a. Necessity for Notice

The judgment debtor is protected by payments he may make on the judgment to the judgment creditor before he has notice of the assignment of the judgment.

Although, as discussed supra § 515, as between the parties thereto notice is not essential to an assignment, notice to the judgment debtor is necessary to effectuate the assignment,[67] and until such notice is given a perfect and indefeasible title to the judgment does not vest in the assignee.[68] Unless and until such notice is given, the judgment debtor is not bound by the assignment,[69] and will be protected, as against the assignee, with respect to any payments he may make to plaintiff in the judgment,[70] or with respect to any release or satisfaction the judgment debtor may procure from the judgment creditor before receiving such notice,[71] irrespective of whether or not the assignment is subsequently filed or recorded.[72] However, a failure to notify the debtor will not subject the assignee to merely equitable claims of the debtor which accrue after the assignment and do not attach to the judgment itself.[73]

Payment to third persons. The protection extended to a judgment debtor who makes payment before notice of the assignment applies only where the payment is made to the judgment creditor; when the debtor voluntarily makes payment to a person other than the holder of the legal title, he must see to it that he pays the one to whom he is really indebted, and payment to a third person will not be valid as against the assignee,[74] even though such third person is in equity entitled to require the judgment creditor to account to him, as his agent, for the proceeds of the judgment.[75]

b. Form of Notice

In the absence of a statute providing how notice of an assignment of a judgment shall be given, notice of such an assignment need not be in any particular form, provided it is sufficient to inform the debtor that the judgment creditor is no longer the owner of the judgment.

Unless a statute provides how notice of the assignment shall be given,[76] the notice need not be in any particular form; it is sufficient if it advises the debtor that the person who recovered the judgment is no longer the owner of it or entitled to collect it,[77] or if the information is given under circumstances and in terms calculated to arrest the attention of the debtor and put him on notice.[78] Direct notice of the assignment is unnecessary if the assignee can bring home to the debtor knowledge of such facts as should have put him on inquiry.[79] Notice may be served on the debtor like ordinary civil process.[80]

The requirement of notice imports notice by some person entitled to give it to some other person entitled to receive it.[81]

Assignment on record. Although there are jurisdictions in which the rule does not prevail,[82] the general rule is that entering the assignment on the judgment record or appearance docket, or filing it among the papers in the case, is not constructive notice to the debtor, as he is under no obligation to search the records,[83] even though a statute provides that, when an assignment is filed, the clerk shall make a record of the assignment.[84]

c. Effect of Notice

After the judgment debtor has received notice of the assignment, the assignee will be protected in equity against any and all acts of the parties.

After the judgment debtor has received notice of the assignment, the assignee will be protected in equity against any and all acts of the parties.[85] Thus the debtor's liability to the assignee will not be discharged by a subsequent payment made to the judgment creditor,[86] or by a subsequent release given him by the judgment creditor,[87] and the judgment debtor cannot compromise thereafter with the assignor and thus defeat the claim of the assignee,[88] although, where an assignment was made for the convenience and benefit of the assignor, it was held that a subsequent settlement between him and the judgment debtor was valid as against the assignee.[89] If a satisfaction of the judgment has been entered after notice of the assignment, equity will set it aside as fraudulent at the suit of the assignee.[90]

§ 524. —— As Affected by Equities, Defenses, and Agreements between Original Parties

Generally the assignee of a judgment takes subject to equities and defenses existing between the judgment creditor and the judgment debtor at the time of the assignment.

In accordance with the rule governing assignments of choses in action generally, as discussed in Assignments § 114, and in the absence of any estoppel,[91] the assignee of a judgment takes it subject to all the equities, defenses, and agreements existing between the original parties,[92] at the time of the assignment,[93] whether or not he had notice of them,[94] unless they arise from other and independent transactions.[95] Thus, as discussed infra § 568, he takes the judgment subject to any right of set-off which existed in the judgment debtor before the assignment. However, the assignee is not affected by any equities which would not affect his assignor,[96] and issues which became res judicata by rendition of the judgment may not be raised again against the assignee of the judgment.[97]

Assignment as collateral: An exception to the general rule that the assignee takes subject to equities and defenses has been made in the case of an assignee of a judgment taken as collateral security for a promissory note, who has been held to take the judgment free from all defenses except those which might be set up against the promissory note.[98]

§ 525. —— As between Assignor and Assignee

The assignee of a judgment, as a general rule, may hold the assignor liable for subsequently receiving payment or entering satisfaction of the assigned judgment, or for breach of an implied warranty of title or validity.

The rule generally followed is that, except as to defects known to the purchaser,[99] there is an implied warranty on the part of the assignor of a judgment that such judgment is a valid, subsisting obligation against the debtor for the amount specified therein,[1] that the assignor is the owner of it,[2] and that no payments have been made on it other than such as he discloses at the time,[3] although in some jurisdictions the implied warranty does not extend to the validity of the judgment, or its freedom from error or irregularity,[4] especially where it is agreed that the assignor is in no event to be liable on the assignment.[5] No implied warranty arises as to the solvency of the judgment debtor,[6] and, in the absence of fraud or express agreement, the assignee cannot come back on the assignor because of his failure to make the amount on the judgment.[7]

Where the assignment is by the judgment creditor, he cannot, without express agreement, limit his liability on the implied warranty merely by assigning "without recourse."[8] Where, however, an assignee of a judgment, without knowledge of any defect therein or defense thereto, transfers simply his "right, title, and interest, without recourse," he will not be held liable on such implied warranty.[9]

The implied warranty that the judgment assigned is valid is broken by the transfer of a voidable judgment;[10] hence, as discussed infra § 528, where the judgment is afterward reversed, vacated, or set aside, the purchaser may recover back the price paid for the assignment. a judgment from an assignee takes it subject to any equities between the judgment creditor and his assignee.[11]

The assignor is liable in damages to the assignee if the assignor does not in fact own the judgment, or if it has been extinguished wholly or partially before the assignment,[12] or if he afterward receives payment of the judgment or enters satisfaction of it,[13] or if it is reversed or set aside after the assignment.[14] The rule as to the damages recoverable in case of breach of warranties in the sale of chattels applies to breach of a covenant contained in the assignment of a judgment,[15] and, therefore, the assignee is entitled to recover the difference between the value of the judgment as it was and its value if the covenant had not been broken,[16] or, if the judgment is entirely lost to him, the amount which he paid for it,[17] together with the costs, if any, paid by him in defending the judgment.[18] The assignee of part of a judgment is entitled to recover the amount due to him from the assignor who has received a conveyance of property in satisfaction of the judgment debt.[19]

Instead of suing the assignor for damages because of the reversal or setting aside of the assigned judgment, the assignee may continue the original action to a final decision if, notwithstanding such reversal or vacation, the original action is still pending.[20]

Liability of assignee. A person who takes in form an assignment of a judgment other than the one contemplated between him and the assignor has no right to it, and becomes at once a trustee for the person entitled thereto, and, his trust being a naked one, a court of equity will require him at once to reconvey.[21]

§ 526. —— As to Third Persons

It is generally held that an assignee of a judgment takes it free from latent equities of third persons of which he has no notice at the time of the assignment.

In accordance with the rule supported by the weight of authority with respect to assignments of choses in action generally, discussed in Assignments § 118, many authorities hold that the assignee of a judgment takes it free from latent equities of third persons, not parties to the judgment, of which he has no notice at the time of the assignment.[22] Under this rule an assignee who has no notice that his assignor has notice of an unrecorded conveyance made before the rendition of the judgment is not affected by the notice of his assignor.[23] An assignee is not bound by an agreement of which he has no notice between a stranger to the judgment and the judgment creditor[24] or judgment debtor,[25] and an innocent assignee of a judgment, without notice, actual or constructive, of an injunction not yet served against its assignment, has been held to be entitled to retain the judgment.[26] To protect himself against such equities the assignee must also show that he is a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration[27] and that he paid the purchase money before the adverse equity was asserted.[28]

Creditors of judgment creditor

As between several creditors of a common debtor, who had obtained a judgment, the proceeds of which were in the hands of a receiver, one creditor, who took an assignment of part of the judgment without notice to the other creditors, and for a pre-existing debt and as mere collateral therefor, acquired no right of priority over the other creditors.—Zane v. Brown, 8 A.2d 367, 126 N.J.Eq. 200.

28. N.Y.—Christie v. Bishop, 1 Barb. Ch. 105.

On the other hand, in some jurisdictions the doctrine of caveat emptor has been applied, and it has been held that the assignee occupies no better position in this respect than his assignor.[29] In any event, the assignee is chargeable with equities of third persons of which he has actual notice,[30] or such constructive notice as may be obtained from an inspection of the record of the judgment.[31]

As affected by statute. Since a statute regulating the assignment of a judgment is in derogation of the common law, it has been held that it must be strictly complied with if the assignee is to obtain protection against third persons subsequently acquiring an interest in the judgment.[32]

Notice to judgment debtor. It has been held that the assignee does not take title as against a creditor of the assignor where the assignee fails to give notice of the assignment to the judgment debtor,[33] and in some jurisdictions there are statutes which require notice to be given to the debtor to make the assignment effective against third persons.[34] Under such a statute the giving of notice to the debtor renders it effective as against a creditor of the assignor notwithstanding the assignee fails to have it recorded or judicially recognized.[35]

§ 527. —— Rights Incidental to Assignment

In general a valid assignment of a judgment carries with it all incidental or collateral rights, remedies, and advantages existing and available to the judgment creditor as such at the time of the assignment.

A bona fide purchaser of a judgment stands in the judgment creditor's shoes.[36] Hence on a valid assignment, in addition to succeeding to the ownership of the judgment and all rights and interest therein, as discussed supra § 519 a, the assignee also succeeds to all incidental or collateral rights, remedies, and advantages existing at the time of the assignment and then available to the judgment creditor,[37] even though the parties to the assignment

Lien of person furnishing consideration

Evidence in suit involving ownership of judgment was held to sustain court's conclusion that sale and transfer of judgment was to assignee named in assignment thereof, notwithstanding claim that judgment was bought with money furnished by assignee's son, and that assignment to assignee on margin of judgment book was by mistake; hence chancellor properly awarded assignees' son a mere lien on the judgment.—Lemons v. Wilson, 172 S.W.2d 67, 294 Ky. 439.

Benefit of appeal or supersedeas bond

(1) Right to sue on supersedeas bond passes as incident to assignment of judgment, although no reference is made to bond in assignment.—Cope v. Johnson, 251 P. 985, 123 Okl. 43—34 C.J. p 650 note 90 [a] (1).

Tex.—De Zavala v. Scanlan, Com. App., 65 S.W.2d 489.
Wash.—Wright v. Seattle Grocery Co., 172 P. 345, 101 Wash. 266.

(3) The filing of supersedeas bond by garnishor, appealing from judgment for garnishee, after garnishee's assignment of portion of judgment awarding it attorneys' fees to one of its attorneys in trust, deprived assignee of right to issue execution on judgment pending appeal, but gave him right to proceed against garnishor and surety on bond, if appeal were not prosecuted with effect.—Casray Oil Corporation v. Royal Indemnity Co., Civ.App., 165 S.W.2d 244, affirmed 169 S.W.2d 955, 141 Tex. 33.

may have agreed otherwise between themselves,[38] including the lien or security of the judgment on specific property,[39] the right of proceeding with an attachment already issued,[40] and the right where the judgment is for money wrongfully appropriated to have the judgment debtor arrested.[41] However, independent and personal rights of the assignor not incidental to his status as judgment creditor in the particular judgment assigned do not so pass unless expressly included by the assignment.[42] Thus it does not confer on the assignee, unless expressly provided for, the additional right to subject to liability on the judgment others who were not parties to the original action, although the assignor might have had a cause of action against them but forebore to pursue it.[43]

The assignee can acquire no other or superior rights than those vested in his assignor;[44] and, if

Bond to discharge garnishment

The right to bring suit on a bond given to discharge a garnishment which is conditioned that the bondsmen will pay the money judgment rendered in the main action passes as an incident to the assignment of the judgment, although no reference is made to the bond in the assignment.—Conoway v. Carnall, 224 P. 523, 101 Okl. 172.

Decree in rem

Assignment of decree in rem carries with it the money decree therein as well as the assignor's right to the lien created by an attachment sued out and levied on the lands decreed to be sold and the right to enforce this attachment.—Hines v. Fulton, 140 S.E. 537, 104 W.Va. 561.

(2) Where property of principal debtor was attached, assignee of judgment in trust for surety on bond given to release attachment by one secondarily liable for debt should resort to principal debtor's property before resorting to property of principal in attachment bond or property of others secondarily liable for original debt, although principal debtor was only a cojudgment debtor on face of judgment.—Nelson v. Century Indemnity Co., C.C.A.Cal., 65 F.2d 765, certiorari denied Century Indemnity Co. v. Nelson, 54 S.Ct. 120, 290 U.S. 683, 78 L.Ed. 588.

Collusive entry of judgment on attachment

Where the claim of the assignor, carried into a decree in rem against the property attached after the assignment, has been thereafter fraudulently compromised between the debtor and creditor for much less than the amount decreed in rem against the property, and the sum agreed on fraudulently paid over to the assignor, the amount to which the assignee is entitled may, in his suit to set aside the collusive decree, be corrected on the record of the original decree in the cause, and decreed accordingly.—Hines v. Judgment for stockholder's statutory liability

(1) Assignee of judgment against estate for amount of a bank stock assessment could not in a subsequent proceeding bring in as defendants executor of estate in his capacities as an individual and a trustee, even if assignor could have sued them originally, where any rights of assignor as against executor in such capacities were not expressly included in assignment.—Jones v. T. S. Franklin Estate, supra.

(2) The assignment of a judgment against holder of bank stock which was procured under statute creating additional stockholder's liability, as part of assets of insolvent bank transferred to newly organized bank in consideration for discharge of all debts of insolvent bank, did not confer on assignee right to subject another to liability on judgment as alleged real owner of stock.—Hood ex rel. United Bank & Trust Co. v. Richardson Realty, 191 S.E. 410, 211 N.C. 582.

(3) Assignee of judgment for bank stock assessment was held not entitled to reformation of judgment so as to hold defendants liable therefor as real owners of bank stock at time of assessment, in view of enactment of statute after assessment relieving holders of bank stock of their double liability.—Fidelity Security Co. v. Hight, 189 S.E. 174, 211 N.C. 117.

the judgment was fraudulently or wrongfully entered or obtained, he will take nothing under it.[45]

The distinction as to what does and what does not pass as incidental to the assignment is in some instances difficult to draw.[46] Thus it has been held that the mere assignment of a judgment obtained by an indorsee against the maker of a promissory note does not transfer to the assignee of such judgment the cause of action theretofore existing against the indorsers,[47] and it has been held that, in order for a right to pass as an incident, it must in a legal sense constitute a security for the debt,[48] and not be a mere litigious right against a third person to recover damages for an injury which accrued prior to the assignment,[49] although on the last point the contrary view has been upheld,[50] or a right of action for a fraud of the judgment debtor with respect to an agreement in pursuance of which the judgment was entered.[51]

Money previously collected on judgment. While it has been held that the assignment does not pass any interest in money which the sheriff had previously collected on the judgment,[52] it has also been held that if at the time of the assignment the sheriff holds an execution on the judgment, or the proceeds of an execution, the assignee is entitled to receive the proceeds on notifying the sheriff of his rights in the premises.[53] If the assignee permits the attorneys who recovered the judgment to issue and control an execution on it he is bound by the act of the sheriff in paying over to such attorneys the money realized on the execution.[54]

§ 528. Effect of Reversal or Vacation after Assignment

Reversal or vacation of an assigned judgment defeats the assignee's rights therein, and entitles him to a return of the consideration paid for the assignment, unless he has assumed all risks of collection. At least in equity, he becomes entitled to the proceeds of a second judgment entered in the case in favor of the assignor after reversal of the assigned judgment.

The general rule, discussed in Appeal and Error § 1950, that on the reversal or vacation of a judgment the parties to the suit are restored to their original rights and liabilities is not affected by the fact that the judgment is in the hands of an assignee for value.[55] The assignee stands in no better position than the original plaintiff, and the judgment may be reversed, vacated, set aside, or enjoined in the assignee's hands for the same reasons which would justify such action if it remained in the hands of the original plaintiff,[56] and on a reversal or vacation the assignee's interests are defeated,[57] except where they are protected as against the assignor by the peculiar terms of the assignment.[58]

34 C.J. p 652 note 10.

It has been held that the assignee seeking to enforce the judgment is the only necessary party to an action by the judgment debtor to enjoin its collection, the assignor not being a proper or necessary party, as he no longer has an interest in the judgment.[59]

Since, as discussed supra § 519, the assignment of a judgment confers on the assignee all rights of the assignor, including the claim or cause of action on which the judgment was based, the assignee becomes entitled, at least in equity, to the proceeds of a second judgment entered in favor of the assignor after reversal of the assigned judgment.[60]

Recovery of consideration. Where the judgment is reversed or vacated after assignment, the assignee is entitled to recover the price paid therefor on the ground of failure of consideration or breach of implied warranty[61] except where he has undertaken to assume all risks of collection.[62]

§ 529. Priority of Assignments

Priority between successive assignees for value and without notice is, by some authority, determined by the order of the assignments, the first in time being first in right; but other authorities accord priority in the order in which notice of the assignments is given to the judgment debtor.

Where a judgment is regularly assigned for value, the rights of the assignee are paramount to those of a subsequent attachment or execution creditor of the assignor,[63] and the rightful assignee may enjoin the collection of the judgment by one who claims under a simulated assignment.[64]

In so far as notice to the judgment debtor is not necessary to the validity of the assignment, as discussed supra § 515 a, such assignments take priority in the order in which they are made, the first assignee in point of time taking priority in point of right,[65] regardless of the order in which such notice is given or the fact that the prior assignee has failed to give notice while the subsequent assignee has,[66] and notwithstanding the later assignment was first recorded on the judgment docket,[67] unless the first assignment is tainted with fraud.[68] According to some authority, however, priority as between successive bona fide assignees for value of the same judgment is determined by the order in which notice of the assignments is given to the judgment debtor, so that an assignee first giving notice to the debtor may take priority over another assignee whose assignment is first in the point of time.[69] Under this rule, if the subsequent assignee or the creditor has not perfected his right by notice to the debtor, it is a contest between equities and the first assignee must prevail, on the maxim that he who is first in time is first in right.[70]

Priorities as between assignees generally are considered in Assignments § 91.

Partial assignments. As between successive assignees of portions of a judgment, their rights, if conflicting, will depend on priority of assignment, subject to their compliance with the directions of the statute as to making the assignment effectual.[71] Where the proceeds of the property bound by the judgment are insufficient to pay all the assignees, it has been held that they take pro rata and not by priority.[72] An assignment of a judgment which excepts therefrom a specific portion thereof previously assigned to another as security for a debt is not equivalent to an assignment subject to the interest of the first assignee.[73] Where a judgment is assigned as security for an obligation to the assignee, the assignee may in good faith compromise and settle the judgment for less than the face amount thereof as against a subsequent assignee of the judgment creditor whose assignment provides that the prior assignee is to pay such assignee out of the proceeds of the judgment if the full amount of the judgment is collected.[74]

§ 530. Setting Aside Assignment

The assignment of a judgment may be set aside in an appropriate proceeding if proper grounds therefor appear.

An action will lie to cancel or set aside an assignment of a judgment if proper grounds therefor appear.[75] Such an action will lie where the assignment was made by a person having no right or authority to sell the judgment,[76] or was procured by false and fraudulent representations with respect to the validity of the judgment, the amount due on it, or the property available for its satisfaction, made by either party to the other,[77] or where it was fraudulently procured for an inadequate consideration,[78] or where it was made with a view to defraud creditors of the assignor.[79]

Mere inadequacy of consideration is not alone sufficient to warrant vacating or setting aside the assignment;[80] but the amount of consideration is important in determining whether a purchaser from the original assignee paid value so as to come within the rule in favor of purchasers in good faith for value and without notice,[81] and it is also important on the question of notice and good faith,[82] unless the assignee has waived his right to have the assignment set aside.[83]

Venue. It has been held that an action to set aside an assignment of a judgment to the grantee of land of the judgment debtor, and to reinstate the lien of the judgment, must be brought in the county where the land lies,[84] but, on the other hand, it has been held that an action to set aside a docketed judgment is not one for the recovery of an interest in land, within the meaning of a statute which provides that such an action shall be brought in the county in which the subject matter thereof is situated.[85]

Parties. In accordance with the general rule discussed in Fraudulent Conveyances § 331 a, a mere creditor of the assignor, not an attachment or judgment creditor, has no standing to maintain an action to set aside the assignment as a fraudulent conveyance.[86] The assignee must be made a party to any action[87] or motion[88] to set aside an assignment.

Evidence. As in actions generally, only proper evidence should be admitted in actions or proceedings to cancel or set aside assignments of judgments.[89]

89. Evidence as to matters not in issue should not be admitted.—Haynes v. Tyler, Mo.App., 123 S.W.2d 609.

In the absence of statutory prohibition[90] the enforcement of a judgment may generally be suspended or stayed by the operation of subsequent proceedings taken in the case,[91] by an agreement with the creditor obtained fairly and in good faith,[92] by the death of plaintiff,[93] or by an order of the court, under statutory authority or in the exercise of its discretionary power, when justified by the circumstances of the particular case and necessary to do justice between the parties.[94]

Where the enforcement of a judgment is suspended or stayed by order of the court, the order may be made conditional or on terms,[95] which must be complied with to render the stay effective.[96] If necessary, the stay may be made final and perpetual, as where the judgment debt has been paid in full.[97] The order of suspension may give leave to apply for a further suspension,[98] and under such circumstances the granting of a second extension does not constitute an amendment of the judgment[99] but serves only to regulate the manner in which the rights fixed by the judgment shall be enforced.[1] Where a judgment is suspended for a definite period with the right to apply to the court for an extension thereof, the court cannot grant the extension unless the application therefor is made before the expiration of the time of the original suspension.[2]

Moratorium. A judgment debtor, granted a moratorium subject to the fulfillment of certain conditions precedent, may not stay the enforcement of the judgment if he refuses to fulfill such conditions.[3]

b. Time for Making Order

In the absence of a statute otherwise providing, a court usually cannot order the suspension of a judgment after the close of the term at which it was rendered unless it expressly reserves the power to do so in the entry of the judgment or retains jurisdiction of the case.

Usually the suspension of a judgment cannot be ordered after the close of the term in which it was rendered[4] unless the power to do so is expressly reserved in the entry of the judgment[5] or unless the court still retains jurisdiction of the case.[6] By virtue of statute, however, a court may be authorized to order the suspension of a judgment at any time within a specified period after the end of the term,[7] and, where the court does so, the order of suspension, entered within such period, has the same force and effect as though it had been entered during the term.[8]

e. Acknowledgment or agreement between parties
f. Death of party or assignee

a. In General

Although a dormant judgment is temporarily inoperative for purposes of execution, it is a valid obligation of the judgment debtor.

A judgment not satisfied or barred by lapse of time, but temporarily inoperative as far as the right to issue execution is concerned, is usually called a dormant judgment.[9] Such a judgment has validity[10] as a still subsisting debt of the judgment debtor.[11]

b. Construction and Operation of Statutes

Dormant judgment statutes are to be strictly construed and generally they apply only to final judgments for money which are enforceable by execution.

The dormant judgment statutes which exist in the various jurisdictions are to be strictly construed and the courts generally refuse to engraft exceptions to them other than those contained in the statutes themselves.[12] The statutes are to be considered procedural and binding on all judgment creditors.[13] These statutes, however, generally do not impose a limitation on the enforcement of judgments or decrees which are not for the payment of money[14] or which are not enforceable by execution,[15] and they do not apply where a lien exists independent of the judgment and is not created by it.[16]

Such statute will not run against a judgment where the failure to comply with the statute is justified[17] or where collection is prevented without fault,[18] nor will it run against a judgment during any time when it is impossible to enforce it by final process[19] or until the judgment becomes final.[20]

Appeal from judgment or order in separate cause of action
(1) Where only one party appeals from a judgment on separate causes of action, such judgment becomes final as to the parties not appealing, within the rule as to the issuance of execution to prevent a judgment from becoming dormant.—Noble v. Empire Gas & Fuel Co., Tex.Civ.App., 20 S.W.2d 849, affirmed Empire Gas & Fuel Co. v. Noble, Com.App., 36 S. W.2d 451.

(2) Similarly, the statute is not tolled by an appeal from a final order, or judgment rendered subsequent to the principal judgment and on issues ancillary to the issues of the principal judgment.—Hoskins v. Peak, 228 P. 478, 100 Okl. 124.

(3) However, where recovery in a cross action depends on recovery in the main action, the judgment in the cross action does not become dormant by the failure to issue execution until after the disposition of the appeal in the principal action. —Noble v. Empire Gas & Fuel Co., Tex.Civ.App., 20 S.W.2d 849, affirmed Empire Gas & Fuel Co. v. Noble, Com.App., 36 S.W.2d 451.
Motion for new trial
The statute begins to run from the date a motion for a new trial is overruled and not from the date of a judgment entered before the overruling of such motion.—Price v. Sanditen, 38 P.2d 533, 170 Okl. 75.
Grant of writ of error
A judgment does not become final so as to start the statute running, where a writ of error is granted, although the application for such writ is not made within the statutory time allotted therefor and although the lower court renders judgment declaring that such writ was improvidently granted and that the higher court was without jurisdiction to do so.—Long v. Martin, Civ.App., 260 S.W. 327, error dismissed 278 S.W. 1115, 114 Tex. 581.

It has been held, however, that a party by delay in taking out a mandate from an appellate court, when he is entitled to it after the judgment has become final, cannot prevent the judgment from becoming dormant within the statutory period.[21]

c. Issuance of Execution

Under some statutes a judgment becomes dormant when a specified period of time elapses without the issuance of an execution or without the issuance of a subsequent execution when a former execution remains unsatisfied.

While at common law a judgment lost its force as a lien on the judgment debtor's realty, and no execution could be issued thereon when it had lain dormant for a year and a day,[22] under the statutes in many jurisdictions, judgments become "dormant," that is, incapable of execution by ordinary process, if a specified length of time, generally considerably greater than the common-law period, is allowed to elapse without the issuance of an execution, or without the issuance of a subsequent execution when a former execution remains unsatisfied.[23] The proper issuance of an execution or of successive executions is usually sufficient to arrest the running of the statute and to prevent the judgment from becoming dormant[24] and may keep the judgment alive indefinitely[25] or, as discussed infra § 854, until it is barred by the statute of limitations. This is true even though the execution is returned without a levy,[26] or although the sheriff merely makes a levy

The purpose of the statute is to clear real estate of liens within what has been construed by the legislature as a reasonable time for a judgment to remain a lien on such property, and such statute is not a statute of limitations which must be pleaded before advantage can be taken of it.—Kline v. Falbo, 56 N.E.2d 701, 73 Ohio App. 417.

Under Florida law, a judgment is not "dormant" after three years.—Spurway v. Dyer, D.C.Fla., 48 F.Supp. 255.

In Texas

(1) If no execution is issued within ten years after the rendition of a judgment the judgment becomes dormant, but if the first execution is issued within the ten-year period, the judgment does not become dormant, unless ten years elapse between the issuance of executions thereon and execution may issue at any time within ten years after the issuance of the preceding execution.—Gartin v. Furgeson, Civ.App., 144 S.W.2d 1114.

(2) Under the prior statute, the first execution had to be issued within twelve months after the rendition of the judgment, but the provisions as to the issuance of successive executions thereafter were similar to the present statute.—Commerce Trust Co. v. Ramp, 138 S.W.2d 531, 135 Tex. 84—Grissom v. F. W. Heitmann Co., Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 1054, error refused—McClaflin v. Winfield, Civ.App., 279 S.W. 877—Long v. 34 C.J. p 657 note 80.

A single execution issued against a codefendant has been held to be sufficient to keep a judgment alive as against each judgment debtor where the judgment is predicated on the joint liability of the defendants.—Korber v. Willis, 274 P. 239, 127 Kan. 587.

Inaccuracies in writ

(1) Since mistakes in its recitals will not vitiate a writ of execution, as long as the judgment can be identified, the issuance of execution inaccurately reciting the date of the judgment, without misleading the parties, and the failure of the writ to recite a partial payment on behalf of the judgment debtors, will not render the execution ineffective to keep the judgment alive.—Korber v. Willis, supra.

(2) Recital and description of judgment in execution generally see Executions § 73.

A statute providing a method of reviving a judgment by scire facias does not pertain to a judgment creditor's right of enforcement or the matter of keeping his judgment alive by merely having executions issued as provided by statute.—Commerce Trust Co. v. Ramp, 138 S.W.2d 531, 135 Tex. 84.

Assignee

The issuance of execution or of successive executions on a judgment by one having an interest therein as assignee prevents such judgment from becoming dormant.—Rodgers v. Smith, 58 P.2d 1092, 144 Kan. 212—Tharp v. Langford, 222 P. 135, 115 Kan. 135.

Voidable execution

(1) An execution irregularly issued, which is voidable but not void, is sufficient to prevent the judgment from becoming dormant.—Cabell v. Orient Ins. Co., 55 S.W. 610, 22 Tex. Civ.App. 635.

(2) However, a voidable execution will not, as against a direct attack, prevent a judgment from becoming dormant.—Patton v. Crisp & White, Tex.Civ.App., 11 S.W.2d 826, error dismissed.

Order of sale

Although an order of sale is usually considered an execution within the statute, the force of an execution cannot be attributed to it, if both the judgment and the order of sale provide otherwise.—Carlton v. Hoff, Tex.Civ.App., 292 S.W. 642.

and advertises,[27] or although the writ is afterward quashed,[28] or although the execution is levied on defendant's homestead.[29] However the mere commencement of garnishment proceedings within the statutory period does not toll the running of the statute, where during the pendency of such proceeding and before service of the writ the statutory period expires.[30] Similarly ancillary proceedings occurring prior to the dormancy of a judgment do not prolong its life, in the absence of the issuance in connection therewith of an execution or some equivalent writ, seeking to enforce the judgment, within the statutory time.[31]

Delivery of writ for enforcement to proper officer. The general rule, discussed in Executions § 67, that the writ of execution must be actually or constructively delivered to the sheriff or other proper officer before it can properly be said to have been issued applies to the issuance of the execution within the meaning of the dormant judgment statutes.[32] Thus, in order to prevent a judgment from becoming dormant, there must be an unconditional delivery of the execution to an officer for enforcement in the manner provided by law,[33] and merely showing that an execution was sent to the sheriff, without showing how it was sent, by whom it was sent, or whether or not it was received by the sheriff, does not prevent the judgment from becoming dormant.[34]

d. Return or Entry on Execution and Record Thereof

Where the statute so requires, entries on the execution must be properly made and recorded within the statutory time to prevent the dormancy of the judgment.

In the absence of a statute so requiring it is not necessary, in order to prevent a judgment from becoming dormant, to have the execution recorded or the return thereof entered.[35] Under some statutes, however, the mere issuance of an execution will not suffice to keep a judgment alive; but it becomes dormant if seven years elapsed from the time of the last entry on the execution by an authorized officer and the recording of such entry on the execution docket.[36] This requires the entry and recording of a sufficient indorsement on the execution at least as often as once in every seven years[37] unless the statute has been arrested by the active conduct of proceedings to vacate or enjoin the judgment.[38] The entry which will avail to keep the judgment in force may be a written and signed statement of the officer that the writ is placed in his hands with orders to collect the money, or a return or other proper indorsement, of a character to show that the creditor is still endeavoring to enforce it,[39] but it must in all cases be made by an officer authorized to levy

34 C.J. p 657 note 79.

Reason for rule
The term "issue," within the meaning of the statute, means more than the mere clerical preparation and attestation of the writ, and requires that it should be delivered to an officer for enforcement.—Schneider v. Dorsey, 74 S.W. 526, 96 Tex. 544—Cotten v. Stanford, Tex.Civ.App., 147 S.W.2d 930.

33. Tex.—Harrison v. Orr, Com. App., 296 S.W. 871, modified on other grounds 10 S.W.2d 381.

Instructions to hold and return writ without levy
(1) The issuance of an execution to the sheriff with instructions to hold and return it without making a levy usually will not prevent the judgment from becoming dormant.—Commerce Trust Co. v. Ramp, 138 S.W.2d 531, 135 Tex. 84—Harrison v. Orr, Tex.Com.App., 296 S.W. 871, modified on other grounds 10 S.W.2d 381.

(2) However, if the sheriff cannot find any property of defendants subject to the writ, such instructions will not have such effect, and the issuance of the execution will prevent the judgment from becoming dormant.—R. B. Spencer & Co. v. Harris, Tex.Civ.App., 171 S.W.2d 393.

Absence from state
A statute providing that, in certain cases, the time of defendant's absence from the state shall not be counted in his favor does not refer to the period of time in which a judgment becomes dormant when not kept in life in any manner specified by law, since his removal from the state does not prevent a judgment creditor from keeping the judgment in life.—Tift v. Bank of Tifton, 4 S.E.2d 495, 60 Ga.App. 563.

and return the execution.[40] Where the entries are regularly made they are sufficient to prevent the judgment from becoming dormant although the execution is voidable but not void,[41] or although the writ is afterward quashed[42] or levied on property not then owned by defendant,[43] or although the levy is dismissed by the court.[44] The time when the record on the execution docket was made by the clerk must appear from an inspection of such docket.[45]

If there is no compliance with the statute as to recording entries on the execution dockets, the recordation of facts on the public dockets of the courts, showing a bona fide public effort to collect the debt, may prevent the judgment from becoming dormant.[46]

e. Acknowledgment or Agreement between Parties

The running of a dormancy statute may be arrested by an acknowledgment of the judgment and promise to pay it, or by an agreement of the parties as to the issuance of execution.

The running of a dormancy statute against a judgment may be arrested by an acknowledgment of the judgment and a promise to pay it, or by an agreement of the parties as to the issuance of execution.[47] In the absence of a statute to the contrary, however, a mere partial payment[48] or a payment of the costs of the action to the clerk[49] will not prevent the statute from running. An agreement to stay execution on a final judgment does not prevent the judgment from becoming dormant if execution is not issued within the statutory period.[50]

f. Death of Party or Assignee

Usually a judgment becomes dormant on the death of a party, although the death of an assignee or of a party acting in a representative capacity does not have this effect.

Usually a judgment becomes dormant on the death of a party thereto,[51] so that ordinarily the death of a judgment creditor will have this effect,[52] even though the deceased creditor is one of two or

An unrecorded levy and sale do not prevent the dormant judgment act from running, although the funds arising from the sale were retained by the sheriff on another execution against the same party and paid over to the holder of the other execution, if the funds were not so applied by an order of the court appearing on its public dockets.—Citizens' Bank of Plains v. Hagerson, supra.

Effort to enforce execution

(1) If there is a bona fide effort to enforce execution made within the statutory time, the judgment does not become dormant, although such enforcement is prevented by court proceedings.—Pie v. Hardin, 195 S.E. 165, 185 Ga. 331—Ryals v. Widencamp, 190 S.E. 353, 184 Ga. 190—Towers v. City Land Co., 121 S.E. 701, 31 Ga.App. 612.

(2) If the legality of a levy of execution is duly contested and no action in opposition to such contest is taken until the statutory period expires, there is no such bona fide public effort to enforce collection in the court, so as to toll the statute and prevent dormancy.—A. B. Farquhar Co. v. Myers, 21 S.E.2d 432, 194 Ga. 220.

(3) A contest of the legality of a levy of execution as against one party does not prevent the dormancy of the judgment as against those who are not parties to the contest, even though the pendency of the contest may keep the judgment from becoming dormant as against the contesting party.—Rogers v. Jordan, 132 S. E. 233, 35 Ga.App. 131.

(4) The filing of an equity suit in aid of execution does not prevent the statute from running where the suit is abandoned pursuant to a compromise agreement, since the rule that statutes of limitations will not be suspended by the commencement of a suit that is voluntarily abandoned, discontinued, dismissed, or not proceeded with for a considerable period of time, is applicable to such statute.—General Discount Corporation v. Chunn, 3 S.E.2d 65, 188 Ga. 128.

The payment of costs and the issuance of execution to the levying officer after the rendition of judgment, in the absence of anything further, are not bona fide public efforts to enforce execution so as to prevent the judgment from becoming dormant.—U-Driv-It System of Macon v. Reason for rule

An agreement to stay execution on a final judgment for a specified time constitutes an agreement to forego such portion of the statutory period within which execution may issue.—Commerce Farm Credit Co. v. more judgment creditors under a joint judgment.[53] However, a judgment obtained by a party acting in a representative capacity does not become dormant on his death.[54] Moreover, judgments may be prevented from becoming dormant by the issuance of executions at the instance of one having an interest in them as assignee, even though a judgment creditor dies.[55] Also a judgment debtor's death will usually render the judgment dormant,[56] and, although it has been held that where a judgment debtor, under a joint and several judgment, dies such judgment is not ipso facto dormant,[57] it has been held that such judgment does become dormant on the death of such debtor.[58]

Death of assignee. An assigned judgment will not become dormant on the death of the assignee.[59]

B. REVIVAL OF JUDGMENTS

§ 533. Necessity

When a judgment has become dormant, it cannot be enforced until it has been duly revived.

When a judgment has once become dormant, it cannot be enforced until it has been duly revived, as provided by the statute.[60] Generally speaking, the necessity for reviving a judgment arises only where the judgment creditor seeks to extend the lien of the judgment[61] or to issue execution thereon.[62] As discussed infra § 849, the fact that a judgment has not been revived, and so has become dormant, does not prevent the maintenance of an action on it where plaintiff does not seek to maintain its lien, and is no obstacle to writ of inquiry[63] or to an amendment of the judgment nunc pro tunc.[64]

A judgment which is not dormant needs no revival.[65] Accordingly a revival is unnecessary as long as a judgment is kept from becoming dormant by the timely issuance of executions, as discussed supra § 532, and there has been no change of parties,[66] and the right to enforce the executions is entirely unobstructed.[67]

a. Survival of Judgment

Generally a judgment does not abate on the death of a party but survives in favor of or against the representatives of the deceased.

While it has been said that at common law a judgment does not survive a defendant against whom it is rendered,[68] it is the general rule, sometimes by virtue of express statutory provision, that a judgment does not abate on the death of a party and that such judgment survives in favor of or against the representatives of the deceased.[69] In the absence of a provision therein to the contrary, a statute providing for survival of a judgment after death of a party applies to all judgments without regard to the character of the action on which they are founded.[70]

b. Revival of Judgment

Revival of a judgment is necessary where it becomes dormant as a result of death of a party, but revival is not required if the judgment does not become dormant.

Ordinarily, where a judgment does not become dormant on the death of a party, no revivor thereof is necessary to render it enforceable.[71] On the other hand, if the judgment becomes dormant by reason of death of one of the parties, it must be revived within the time prescribed in the revivor statutes,[72] and it has been held that a dormant judgment, which is not revived or renewed pursuant to statute, dies,[73] although it has also been held that the statutory method of revivor is not indispensable and that the judgment may be renewed by an action to recover a second judgment thereon commenced within the time in which revivor may be had.[74]

Without reference to whether or not a judgment becomes dormant, it has been held under some statutes that the death of plaintiff after affirmance of judgment on appeal does not make revival necessary.[75] A judgment that has been revived against the personal representative of a deceased defendant need not again be revived on the death of such representative.[76] It has also been held that, where the judgment debtor dies during pendency of a suit to enforce the judgment, it is unnecessary to revive the judgment against the heirs or personal representatives of deceased in order to prosecute the suit.[77] While it is the rule, apart from statute, that execution may not issue after the death of a party to the judgment without first reviving the judgment, as discussed in Executions § 65, the lien of a judgment continues after the death of the judgment debtor, as discussed infra § 491, and may be enforced in equity without revival of the judgment, as considered supra § 511.

Joint parties. The interest and rights of joint plaintiffs are joint and not several, and on the death of one the judgment becomes dormant and cannot be enforced at the instance of the living plaintiff or plaintiffs without a revival of the judgment.[78] Where, however, a judgment is obtained against joint debtors, and one of such debtors dies, it is unnecessary for the judgment creditor to revive the judgment in order to enforce it against the remaining defendant or defendants, since the liability is both joint and several.[79]

§ 535. Right to Revive

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, a dormant judgment may be revived as a matter of right.

Since, as discussed supra § 532, a dormant judgment is a valid obligation of the judgment debtor, ordinarily it may be revived in a proper case,[80] at least under statutes expressly providing therefor.[81] In the absence of statutory inhibition, a dormant judgment may be renewed as a matter of right[82] by appropriate proceedings, such as scire facias, as discussed infra § 548, or suit, as considered infra §§ 849–887. However, the revival of a judgment so as to prolong its life is sometimes expressly prohibited by statute.[83]

§ 536. —— Grounds for Revival

The general ground for revival of a judgment is that it has become dormant without being satisfied.

The general ground for revival of a judgment is that it has become dormant without being satisfied.[84] It is sufficient ground for proceedings to revive a judgment that there has been a change of parties by death, as discussed supra § 534, that the lien of the judgment has expired or is about to expire,[85] that an execution issued and levied under the judgment failed to produce satisfaction because the property seized did not belong to the judgment debtor, or was not subject to execution, or because the execution purchaser failed to get possession,[86] or that the judgment debtor has wrongfully caused the execution to be returned satisfied.[87]

§ 537. —— Who May Revive

Proceedings for revival of a judgment ordinarily should be brought in the name of the plaintiff in the original judgment, although an assignee may sue in his own name if the statute so permits.

Proceedings to revive a judgment ordinarily should be brought in the name of plaintiff in the original judgment[88] or in the name of the person for whose use the judgment was entered,[89] although even in the latter case it has been held that the proceedings must be in the name of the nominal plaintiff.[90] If the revival is in the name of a nominal plaintiff, the usee may be deemed the real plaintiff and treated as such.[91]

It has been held that the owner of a judgment has the right to invoke the process of revivor.[92] Proceedings for revival may also be maintained by sureties, or a joint defendant, on paying the judgment debt,[93] by the original plaintiff's trustee in bank-

Proceeding against estate
Actions, instituted within statutory time, against deceased judgment debtors' estates on rejected claims, filed with administrators within time given by notice, for amount of joint and several judgment for money only, were proper and not subject to dismissal on ground that one judgment debtor's death rendered judgment dormant and that failure to revive it within year thereafter extinguished judgment and lien thereof.—Tucker v. ruptcy,[94] or by the personal representatives,[95] heirs, or devisees[96] of a deceased judgment creditor.

In some states a judgment in favor of personal representatives may be revived by their successors in office.[97] A proceeding to revive a judgment entered in favor of a partnership should, after the death of one partner, be brought in the name of the surviving partner alone.[98] Where the judgment was obtained by a surviving partner as such, he alone may revive it.[99] A married woman may revive a judgment against her husband which was entered in her favor before they were married.[1]

Assignees. While equitable title alone may not permit an assignee to procure the revival of a judgment,[2] the subsequent acquisition of legal title may give him such right,[3] but in case of partial assignment of a judgment the assignee may not obtain a separate process to revive the part assigned.[4] As a general rule, proceedings to revive a judgment which has been assigned must be brought in the name of the original plaintiff,[5] except where a statute provides otherwise,[6] as where the statute authorizes such proceedings to be maintained in the name of the real party in interest,[7] in which case it may be revived in the name of the original creditor if living[8] or in the name of the assignee.[9] Even though a statute provides that the revival should be in the name of the original plaintiff suing for the use of the assignee, a judgment obtained by revival in the name of the assignee will not be treated as void where the court rendering it has jurisdiction.[10] It has been held, independently of statutory authorization, that proceedings to revive a judgment may be maintained in the name of the assignee of a judgment creditor where such creditor has gone out of business.[11]

§ 538. —— Against Whom Revival May Be Had

a. In general
b. Joint defendants

a. In General

All parties to the original judgment must be made parties to a proceeding to revive it, and, if the original judgment debtor is dead, the representatives whose property rights will be affected must be joined.

All parties to the original judgment must be made parties to a proceeding to revive it,[12] and, in particular, the original judgment debtor, if living, must be made a defendant.[13] Under statute, it has been held that a dormant judgment may be revived against a defunct corporate defendant.[14] A judgment debtor who has paid a judgment may not revive it against a mortgagee or judgment creditor who had a lien at the time of payment, or prior to the act by which it is sought to affect the lien.[15]

Terre-tenants may and should be joined as defendants.[16]

After death of judgment debtor. As a general rule, on the death of a judgment debtor, the judgment should be revived against the representatives whose property rights will be affected by revivor.[17] If the revivor would affect only personal property, the proceedings should be taken against the deceased debtor's personal representatives,[18] but if the revivor is intended to affect real property which passed, on the death of the judgment debtor, to his heirs or devisees, then it should be revived against such heirs or devisees,[19] even though their estate vested after the lien of the judgment was lost or interrupted.[20] Where the judgment is to affect, or does affect, both personalty and real estate, it should be revived against both the personal representatives and the heirs.[21] A judgment against personal representatives may be revived against their successors in office,[22] but a judgment against an executor or administrator cannot be revived after his death against his own personal representative[23] unless such judgment was binding on him in his individual capacity.[24]

b. Joint Defendants

A judgment may be revived against all the judgment debtors in the original judgment; but there is a conflict of opinion as to whether or not it may be revived against one of several joint debtors without joining the others.

A judgment creditor is entitled to revive his judgment against all the judgment debtors in the original judgment as it appears of record.[25] According to some decisions, where the judgment was recovered against two or more defendants jointly, proceedings for its revival must be against them all, if living.[26] However, on the ground, as discussed supra § 440, that a judgment against joint defendants is the joint and several obligation of each and not merely a joint obligation, it has been held that a judgment may be revived and enforced against one of several judgment debtors without bringing in or giving any attention to the others.[27] Under either rule where one defendant pleads such matter as constitutes a bar to the action against himself only, and of which his codefendants could not take advantage, such a defendant may be discharged and the judgment revived against the other defendant or defendants.[28]

§ 539. —— Judgments Which May Be Revived

All judgments within the terms of statutes authorizing revival may be revived, and ordinarily it is required that the judgment be valid, final, and for a definite sum which has not been fully paid or satisfied.

All judgments within the terms of a statute providing for revival may be made the subject of a proceeding for that purpose.[33] Ordinarily, in order to be subject to revival, a judgment must be in the nature of a final judgment[34] for a definite sum,[35] and in some jurisdictions,[36] although not in others,[37] the judgment must originally have been capable of enforcement by execution. It must also be a valid judgment[38] which has not been fully paid or satisfied,[39] or barred by the statute of limitations,[40] or reversed.[41]

Subject to these conditions, there may be a revival of a judgment which is merely erroneous[42] or which has been suspended by injunction,[43] or to review which a writ of error is pending[44] or the lien of which has expired.[45] Also, in a proper case, proceedings may be brought to revive a default judgment,[46] a delivery bond judgment,[47] a stay bond

Under validating statute
A statute authorizing the reinstatement of liens and judgments on tax and municipal claims which have lost their lien is in the nature of a "validating statute" and hence must be restricted to claims and judgments which have lost their lien at the date when the statute takes effect, and it cannot be extended to claims and judgments the liens of which are thereafter lost by inaction and neglect.—Petition of Miller, 28 A.2d 257, 149 Pa.Super. 142.

judgment,[48] a tort judgment,[49] or a judgment which has been transferred from one county to another county.[50] A judgment or decree in a case of equitable cognizance is deemed to be within a statute authorizing a revivor of judgments.[51] A probate judgment or decree may be revived in some jurisdictions[52] but not in others.[53] It has been held that a judgment of revivor cannot be revived.[54]

§ 540. Defenses or Grounds of Opposition

a. In general

b. Payment, release, satisfaction, discharge, and set-off

c. Existence and validity of judgment

d. Defenses by heirs, executors, administrators, and terre-tenants

a. In General

In proceedings to revive a judgment, no inquiry into the merits is permitted, and defenses are generally limited to matters arising after the entry of the judgment.

As a rule, in a proceeding to revive a judgment, no inquiry into the merits is permitted,[55] and no matter may be pleaded in defense which was,[56] or might have been,[57] set up in defense to the original action, or which might have been interposed as a defense to a prior proceeding to revive the same judgment.[58] In other words, defenses as to matters arising prior to entry of judgment ordinarily are not available in a proceeding for revival.[59]

On the other hand, proper and sufficient matters of defense, arising after the entry of judgment, may be urged,[60] and, as considered infra subdivisions b

Failure to serve process in revivor proceeding

Ga.—American Nat. Bank v. Hodges, 154 S.E. 653, 41 Ga.App. 717.

On scire facias to revive a revived judgment, the only defenses available are matters arising since its entry. —O'Connor v. Flick, 118 A. 431, 274 Pa. 521.

and c of this section, the nonexistence or invalidity of the judgment sought to be revived, or its payment, release, satisfaction, or discharge may constitute good defenses.

Particular defenses permitted. Defendant may show that his position with respect to the judgment is that of a surety only,[61] or that the proceedings are prematurely brought,[62] and, as discussed infra § 542, the statute of limitations may also be used as a defense. Persons made defendant to a scire facias, founded on a judgment against a corporation, on the allegation that they are stockholders and personally liable for its debts, may show that they are not stockholders, or that the debt on which the judgment was recovered was not of the kind for which stockholders are liable.[63] It is also permissible to plead specially the incapacity of plaintiff to maintain the proceeding.[64]

Particular defenses not available. Numerous particular defenses urged in proceedings for revival of a judgment have been held unavailable.[65] A general denial of each and every allegation of the writ not admitted in the answer is not a form of defense permitted in such a proceeding.[66] It is not permissible to show in defense want of consideration,[67] coverture of defendant,[68] usury,[69] fraud in procuring the original judgment,[70] duress in the procuring of a prior revival of the judgment,[71] or recovery of another judgment on the same debt.[72] Other matters disallowed as defenses include the pendency of an action of debt on the judgment,[73] or of probate court proceedings incidental to a claim based on the judgment,[74] or the pendency of an appeal in a suit to enjoin enforcement of the judgment[75] or of an appeal by plaintiff from judgment in his favor.[76] The assignment of the judgment to a third person,[77] the existence of liens on a judgment,[78] and adverse possession[79] are other unavailable pleas. Where the motion for revival is brought promptly, under all the circumstances of the case, the claim of laches may be disallowed.[80]

Except in some jurisdictions,[81] it is not a valid objection to a proceeding to revive that at the time of its commencement plaintiff could have proceeded by execution.[82] The unauthorized discharge of the judgment debtor from arrest under an execution is not a defense to an action to revive the judgment on which the execution was issued.[83]

b. Payment, Release, Satisfaction, Discharge, and Set-Off

In defense to a proceeding to revive a judgment, it may be shown that the judgment was paid, released, satisfied, or discharged, but, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, it is not proper to interpose a set-off or counterclaim.

Defense rejected

Defendant, obtaining judgment on plea that former judgment against him was res adjudicata, cannot set up second judgment as defense in suit to revive former judgment.—Polk v. S. H. Churchill & Co., Tex.Civ.App., 286 S.W. 900.

Action similar to revival

Generally, suit on judgment by scire facias proceedings or action of debt will not lie, unless judgment has become dormant because of failure to have execution issued, but action similar to revival may be brought on judgment which is not dormant, when it would give holder of judgment additional advantage to which he is legally entitled under circumstances.—Elliott v. In defense to a proceeding to revive a judgment, defendant may plead that it has been paid[84] wholly or in part,[85] or he may plead the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time,[86] or both payment and presumption of payment.[87]

Release,[88] such as a voluntary release of the judgment without full payment,[89] discharge,[90] satisfaction,[91] and accord and satisfaction[92] may also be pleaded.

Set-off or counterclaim. Ordinarily, in a proceeding for revival of a judgment, a set-off[93] or a counterclaim[94] is not a proper defense, unless it is proved that the item offered as a set-off was accepted and acknowledged by plaintiff as a credit on the judgment in suit;[95] but under some statutes proceedings to revive a judgment are subject to a counterclaim based on contract.[96]

c. Existence and Validity of Judgment

In defense to a proceeding for revival of a judgment, it is proper to plead nul tiel record or to deny the existence of the judgment or to show that it is absolutely void.

As a general rule, in defense to a proceeding for revival of a judgment, the plea of nul tiel record, or the denial of the existence of the judgment,[97]

under which defendant may show the judgment's invalidity,[98] is permissible. It is also a good defense that the judgment is absolutely void,[99] as for want of jurisdiction,[1] or because of the invalidity of the statute on which it was based,[2] provided, in some jurisdictions, the judgment record shows affirmatively that it is void,[3] although in other jurisdictions, the record may be impeached in the revival proceedings,[4] at least with respect to the return of an officer to the service of a summons.[5] On the other hand, it is not a good defense that the judgment was irregular[6] or erroneous.[7]

d. Defenses by Heirs, Executors, Administrators, and Terre-Tenants

Generally, any defenses which would have been open to the original defendant may be pleaded by heirs, executors, administrators, or terre-tenants in a proceeding against them to revive a judgment.

As a general rule, heirs, executors, administrators,[8] or terre-tenants[9] may plead any defenses which would have been open to the original defendant. Such defendants may deny the character in which they are sued.[10] Except in some jurisdic-

Determination of validity

34 C.J. p 664 note 25.

Particular irregularities disregarded

(1) Failure to file affidavit, required by rule of court, on entry of original judgment and fact that one of several parties plaintiff was deceased at time of such entry, are not available as defenses in scire facias proceeding.—Smith v. Bald Hill Coal Co., 23 A.2d 466, 343 Pa. 399, 138 A.L.R. 859.

(2) Fact that record of judgment against two defendants referred to judgment against "defendant" was held not to prevent revivor of judgment.—Van Horne v. Harford, 6 N. E.2d 887, 289 Ill.App. 121.

Discharge

Since allegation that judgment was destroyed is equivalent to allegation of discharge, if probate proceedings allowing judgment as claimed against estate destroyed judgment, that defense could be interposed in proceeding against heirs to revive judgment.—Wolford v. Scarbrough, 21 S.W.2d 777, 224 Mo.App. 137.

Payment

Where estate had no means of paying judgment against it, and one of two executors bought judgment with own money and had it assigned to third person who issued scire facias thereon, naming both executors and also heirs as defendants, plea of payment by the executors did not estop the executor who had bought the judgment from showing that it was in fact paid but that it was intended to be kept alive for his use.—McKerrahan v. Validity of original judgment

(1) In scire facias to revive a judgment, a terre-tenant may make no inquiry, into the validity of the original judgment, as long as the original judgment stands unimpeached.—Smith v. Bald Hill Coal Co., 23 A.2d 466, 343 Pa. 399, 138 A.L.R. 859.

tions,[11] an heir or administrator may plead want of assets or "nothing by descent."[12]

A plene administravit, when supported by the facts, may be sufficient in a proceeding to revive a judgment against a personal representative,[13] but such a plea is bad on demurrer where it appears that there is real estate which might be sold to pay debts, since the administrator is bound to sell such real estate for that purpose.[14] To a scire facias to revive a judgment against a testator, executors may not plead that they have not accounted to the surrogate,[15] although such a plea has been considered good as against a scire facias issued on a judgment against the executors themselves.[16] Personal representatives may not defend on the ground that a note, on which the judgment is based, was signed by deceased as an accommodation maker.[17]

A terre-tenant may plead that the judgment was never a lien on his land,[18] or that the judgment debtor had parted with title to the realty before the entry of the judgment,[19] or that the lien has been extinguished.[20]

§ 541. Jurisdiction and Venue

As a general rule, proceedings to revive a judgment should be brought in the court in which the judgment was rendered.

A proceeding to revive a judgment must be brought in the court[21] and county[22] wherein it was rendered. The rule applies even where, under statutory authority, a transcript of the judgment is filed in a court of another county,[23] or in another court of the same county,[24] or where a transcript of a judgment of a federal court is filed in a state court,[25] unless the statute providing for the transfer authorizes a revivor in the court to which the transfer is made.[26] However, in the case of judgments of inferior courts removed by transcript to a superior court, jurisdiction to revive the judgment has been held to reside in the latter court.[27]

§ 542. Time for Revival

a. In general
b. Computation of period of limitation

a. In General

A judgment may and should be revived within the time limited by law.

As a general rule, a judgment may and should be revived within the time limited by law.[28] As discussed in the C.J.S. title Limitations of Actions § 102, also 34 C.J. p 665 notes 41, 42, the general law as to the limitation of actions does not apply to proceedings to revive a dormant judgment, except in a few jurisdictions. Such proceedings are governed only by the special statutory provisions, if any, applicable to proceedings of that character.[29] Such special statutory provisions are valid[30] and may be given a retrospective operation.[31]

Motions to revive. In some jurisdictions, the statute of limitations applicable to an action or writ of scire facias to revive a judgment will also bar a motion for the same purpose.[32] Where there is a special statute applicable to such motions, the motion must be made within the time limited,[33] but it has been held that, where the motion to revive is under a statute which imposes no restriction as to time, the court has no authority to insert such a restriction.[34]

b. Computation of Period of Limitation

The period of limitation for revival of a judgment ordinarily begins to run from the rendition of the judgment or other time specified by statute, and, in the absence of a provision to the contrary, proceedings must be begun before the last day of the period unless the running of the statute has been tolled.

As a general rule, the limitation of the time of bringing proceedings for the revival of a judgment begins to run from the rendition of the judgment,[35] or other time specified by statute,[36] such as from the time when the judgment first becomes dormant,[37] or an execution might first be issued on

Statutes not in pari materia

The statute relating to dormancy of judgment and execution thereon is not in pari materia with statute authorizing revival of a judgment, so that provision that a judgment on which no execution is issued does not become dormant until ten years after its rendition does not render nugatory provision that an action to revive or for debt must be brought on the judgment within ten years after date of rendition and both provisions must be given effect.—Gillam v. Matthews, Tex.Civ.App., 122 S.W. 2d 348, error dismissed.

Type of judgment affected

(1) Generally, statutes relating to revival of judgments have reference to money judgments capable of enforcement by execution, and are not generally regarded as imposing time limitation on enforcement of judgments which are not for payment of money or which are not enforceable by execution.—Kelly v. City of Cape Girardeau, 89 S.W.2d 693, 230 Mo. App. 137.

(1) Generally.—Shareff, to Use of Olney Bank & Trust Co. v. Wolf, 132 A. 115, 120 Pa.Super. 227.

(2) The limitation of one year for revivor of actions has no application to revivor of dormant judgment.—Rich v. Cooper, 286 N.W. 383, 136 Neb. 463.

(3) Suit to revive judgment which gave incorrect middle initial of judgment debtor and to have person named in original judgment and revived judgment decreed to be the same person, was governed by ten-year statute of limitations and not by five-year statute which applies to action to reform an instrument.—Jaubert Bros. v. Landry, La.App., 15 So.2d 158.

The term "issue" of execution in statute of limitations for revival of judgments means more than the mere clerical preparation and attestation of the writ and requires that it should be delivered to an officer for enforcement.—Cotten v. Stanford, Tex.Civ.App., 147 S.W.2d 930.

Effect of appeal

Under a statute which permits revivor within one year after a judg-

the judgment,[38] or from the time of issuance of the last execution on the judgment.[39] Under some statutes, where the judgment has once been revived, the limitation period runs from the date of the revival,[40] but other statutes bar a revival after lapse of the prescribed period commencing from the date of rendition of the judgment notwithstanding the judgment has once been revived within the period.[41] In a case where a terre-tenant is involved, the period of limitations commences from the date of the recording of the terre-tenant's deed[42] or from the time of taking of possession of the land by the terre-tenant.[43]

While the running of the statute of limitations for revival of a judgment may be interrupted by some sufficient cause,[44] in the absence of such interruption, the right to institute the proceeding will expire on the last day of the statutory period,[45] or, if that day is dies non, on the next succeeding business day.[46] Ordinarily, the statute is saved by beginning the proceedings within the limited time,[47] although the judgment of revivor does not follow ment becomes dormant, where a judgment has been appealed, the limitation on a motion for revivor does not begin to run until the mandate has come down from the appellate to the trial court.—Aaron v. Morrow, 50 P.2d 674, 174 Okl. 452.

Failure to name terre-tenant as party

Causes held insufficient

(1) Seizure of property under scire facias did not suspend prescriptive period against judgment, statutory revival being exclusive.—McDaniel v. Smith, 127 So. 108, 13 La.App. 61.

(2) Order of referee in bankruptcy, which could not be construed as adjudication that judgment be paid, did not interrupt running of limitation statute.—Yerby v. Kerr, C.C.A. Tex., 143 F.2d 58.

(3) Fraudulent concealment of property and false representations made to judgment creditor by judgment debtor as to extent of his property, whereby judgment creditor failed to issue executions or to revive judgment, did not toll limitations on judgment, where no proceedings were had in aid of execution.—Thomas v. Murray, 49 P.2d 1080, 174 Okl. 36, 104 A.L.R. 209.

(4) Neither an appeal nor supersedeas bond filed on appeal tolled statute of limitations.—State v. Hart Refineries, 92 P.2d 766, 109 Mont. 140, 123 A.L.R. 555—34 C.J. p 666 note 52 [f].

Injunction

(1) It has been held that issuance of temporary injunction, preventing levy and sale under execution issued on dormant judgment, does not interrupt running of limitations on judgment.—Commerce Trust Co. v. Ramp, 138 S.W.2d 531, 135 Tex. 84.

(2) However, it has also been held that injunction against the enforcement of the judgment stays the running of the statute against it.—Hutsonpiller v. Stover, 12 Gratt. 579, 53 Va. 579—34 C.J. p 666 note 52 [d].

Filing petition

(1) Where time limitation within which petition must have been filed had not expired on date of filing of petition but had expired before date of filing of motion made by plaintiff at subsequent term of court to amend writ of scire facias and for order directing perfection of personal service on defendant, court had jurisdiction to amend writ and order service perfected.—Stahle v. Jones, 3 S.E.2d 861, 60 Ga.App. 397.

(2) Where petition for writ of scire facias to revive judgment was filed and court order directing that the writ issue was obtained within limitation period, right to revival of judgment was not barred merely because of clerk's failure to issue writ within period.—City of St. Louis v. Miller, Mo.App., 155 S.W.2d 565—City of St. Louis v. Miller, 145 S. W.2d 504, 235 Mo.App. 987.

Suing out or issuance of writ

Where præcipe was filed with prothonotary who prepared writ and delivered it within five-year period to plaintiff's attorney, to procure service by acceptance, writ was "sued out" or "issued" within statute requiring scire facias to be "sued out" or "issued" within five years, although acceptance of service was until after the expiration of the statutory period,[48] but in some jurisdictions the statutes expressly limit the time for making or rendering the order or judgment of revivor, as distinguished from the commencement of the proceedings.[49]

Death of party. In some states the death of a judgment defendant starts the running of a new period of limitations, and proceedings to revive the judgment must be brought within a limited time after that event,[50] at least where the revival is without the consent of the representatives of defendant.[51] In other states the death of the judgment defendant does not interrupt the statute, but the revival proceedings must be instituted within the period originally limited after the rendition of the judgment.[52] Under some statutes, the death of a judgment plaintiff introduces a new limitation period within which his representatives may revive a judgment without the consent of the judgment debtor.[53]

§ 543. Mode of Revival

The mode of revival of a judgment is sometimes provided for by statute, and generally revival must be accomplished by means of a judicial proceeding involving notice and an opportunity to be heard.

The mode of reviving a judgment is sometimes provided for by statute,[54] and in some jurisdictions it has been held that the prescribed methods are exclusive,[55] but in other jurisdictions the statutory procedure is merely cumulative and not mandatory or exclusive.[56] Informal methods of revival have not returned until after five-year period.—Luzerne Nat. Bank v. Gosart, 185 A. 640, 322 Pa. 446.

In Pennsylvania

(1) Where judgment debtor, owner in fee of lot, died in 1936, and deed conveying lot was recorded in 1938, scire facias proceeding in 1943 to revive judgment against grantees as terre-tenants, brought more than seven years after death of judgment debtor but within five years of recording of deed, was too late, since, under Fiduciaries Act which was applicable and not act of 1849, lien was lost in 1941 from failure to revive it within five-year period of the debtor's death.—Frank Di Berardino Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. De Gregoria, 45 A.2d 378, 158 Pa.Super. 516.

(2) Under statute providing that unless revived within five years from death of judgment debtor judgment should not constitute lien against real estate, judgment may be revived after five years from death of judgment debtor, although thereafter it will not constitute lien against real estate.—Shareff, to Use of Olney Bank & Trust Co. v. Wolf, 182 A. 115, 120 Pa.Super. 227.

General statute inapplicable

General statute, providing for exclusion of period of one year from death of any party, from computation of time within which proceeding, to preserve any right or remedy, must be commenced, was held not to modify statute of limitations relative to the bringing of scire facias on a judgment.—Barley v. Duncan, 13 S.E.2d 293, 177 Va. 202—Barley v. Duncan, 13 S.E.2d 294, 177 Va. 192.

Appointment of executrix

Mere fact that special administrator of deceased plaintiff's estate could have been appointed and obtained revivor of dormant judgment within year after plaintiff's death was insufficient reason for holding invalid the revivor thereof within year after appointment of executrix of plaintiff's will.—Jersak v. Risen, supra.

Reference to procedure

Statute providing that dormant judgments may be revived in same manner as is prescribed for reviving actions before judgment refers to procedure rather than to the substantive right of revivor.—Bourman v. Bourman, 127 P.2d 464, 155 Kan. 602.

Relief provided by common-law writ

Statute requiring revival of original judgment where execution sale is irregular and purchaser fails to obtain possession, judgment so revived to have same effect as would original judgment of date of revival, is intended to afford relief provided for by common-law writ of scire facias pertaining to revival of judgments.—Continental Nat. (4) Filing judgment in court of another county.—Kline v. Falbo, 56 N.E.2d 701, 73 Ohio App. 417.

(5) Ex parte orders.—Park v. Markley, La.App., 17 So.2d 459, rehearing refused 18 So.2d 73.

(6) Statutory procedure for contesting claim against decedent's estate.—Gant v. Gilmer, 18 So.2d 542, 245 Ala. 686.

(7) Chancery decree declaring law judgments valid and payable by debtor's administrator, and establishing judgments as liens on debtor's estate.—Blair v. Rorer's Adm'r, 116 S.E. 767, 135 Va. 1, motion denied 43 S. Ct. 704, 262 U.S. 234, 67 L.Ed. 1206.

been permitted in some cases without reference to statute.[57]

Generally a revival of a judgment is deemed to be a judicial act, in the sense that it requires the action of the court in some form of proceeding involving notice to the adverse party and an opportunity to contest the application,[58] and a judgment cannot be revived by a mere parol promise to pay it.[59] The revival of a judgment by a written agreement of the parties properly filed and entered of record, as discussed infra § 548, is authorized by some statutes. Where requirements as to notice and opportunity to be heard are complied with, a revival may be brought about in a collateral action;[60] but a judgment will not be kept alive by supplementary proceedings thereon[61] or by the amendment of the judgment nunc pro tunc.[62]

Ordinarily relief by way of revivor may be awarded only on personal service,[63] although, under statute, it has been held that in reviving a judgment against a nonresident defendant the law is satisfied by service by publication,[64] and does not require, nor can the courts insist on, actual notice to local counsel.[65] A judgment of revival may be entered on default.[66]

It has been held that a proceeding to revive a money judgment is not a new suit, but is a part of the original action.[67]

§ 544. —— Action to Revive

In some jurisdictions a judgment may be revived by a formal action brought for that purpose.

In a number of jurisdictions a judgment may be revived by a formal suit or action brought for that purpose,[68] and such an action may be brought even where a summary method of revival has been provided by statute.[69] Some statutes providing a remedy by action of revivor have been held to supersede the remedy of scire facias[70] and to furnish the only permissible means of reviving a judgment.[71]

In an action to revive a judgment, it is sufficient and necessary that the proper persons are made parties,[72] that process is properly served,[73] and that the pleadings are sufficient.[74] The general rules concerning evidence in civil actions are to be observed.[75] Revivor in such an action may be based on the consent given in open court by counsel for defendant.[76] The judgment of revival should be in proper form.[77] Costs are not enforceable against defendant as a personal obligation where the judgment revived is one in rem.[78]

Scope of proceeding
Validity of assignment of dormant judgment could not be adjudicated in proceeding to revive it.—Baker Steel & Machinery Co. v. Ferguson, 290 N.W. 449, 137 Neb. 578, 131 A. L.R. 798.

§ 545. —— Action of Debt

Revival of a judgment usually may be accomplished by an action of debt on the judgment.

An action of debt on a judgment is usually a proper form of proceeding effectually reviving the judgment,[79] even where a special remedy for the revival of judgments is provided by statute.[80] A judgment in such an action is not rendered void by the joinder[81] or nonjoinder[82] of unnecessary parties.

§ 546. —— Motion to Revive

In some jurisdictions the revival of a judgment may be ordered on motion, application, or affidavit, provided the judgment debtor, or person against whom revival is sought, is given due and sufficient notice of such motion or application and an opportunity to contest it.

In some,[83] but not all,[84] jurisdictions the revival of a judgment may be ordered on motion, application, or affidavit, provided the judgment debtor, or person against whom the revival is sought, is given due and sufficient notice of such a motion or application and an opportunity to contest it.[85] As a general rule this remedy is not a substitute for, but is

Partial revival
Where assignee is entitled to revival of unpaid judgment, it should be revived in its entirety.—Orchard & Wilhelm Co. v. Sexson, 229 N.W. 17, 119 Neb. 370, followed in Askew v. Sexson, 229 N.W. 19, 119 Neb. 369.

Remedy for void execution sale
Purpose of statute providing that, under stated circumstances, the court must, on motion, revive a judgment is to restore a creditor, whose judgment has been satisfied of record because of error of law which has deprived him of the property applied to its payment, to the position he occupied before void execution sale.—Betty v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 116 P.2d 947, 18 Cal.2d 619.

Affidavit unnecessary
Notice of hearing of motion to revive a dormant judgment, served personally on judgment debtor in another state, was not void on ground that no affidavit to obtain such service was filed as in case of service by publication.—Richardson v. Barnhart, Okl., 162 P.2d 1021—Shefts v. Oklahoma Co., 137 P.2d 589, 192 Okl. 483.

Effect of appearance
A judgment debtor, who received notice of motion to revive dormant judgment two days before hearing, could not complain that he was not given a "reasonable time" where he appeared in person and asked no continuance.—Shefts v. Oklahoma Co., supra.

Form of notice
Notice for revival of judgment is not such "writ" or "process" as is required by constitution and statute to run in name of state.—Dunlap v. Bull Head Oil Co., 29 P.2d 108, 167 Okl. 277.

Irregular issuance of notice
(1) Where notice of application for revivor of judgment was signed and delivered to sheriff by attorney for judgment creditor instead of by a clerk of district court as required by statute, motion to quash service was improperly overruled, and judgment should not have been revived.—Klema v. Neuvert, 135 P.2d 557, 156 Kan. 633.

(2) Quashing of service of application to revive dormant judgment was not error, where notice was not issued by clerk as a summons would be issued and delivered to sheriff and served as prescribed by statute.—Smith v. Henry, 124 P.2d 448, 155 Kan. 283.

in addition to, an action on the judgment[86] or bill of revivor,[87] and has been regarded as a continuation of the original suit.[88] A motion to revive a judgment is to be distinguished from one to obtain leave to issue execution, as stated in Executions § 59 b (2) (a).

General rules of procedure on motions,[89] such as with respect to the determination of the application and issuance of orders thereon,[90] usually apply to motions to revive a judgment.

In a proceeding brought under a statute the statutory procedure should be strictly followed,[91] but minor irregularities will not affect the validity of the proceeding.[92]

Revival after death of debtor or creditor. It has been held that if revival is sought against the heirs of a deceased judgment debtor, plenary proceedings must be brought, and it is not permissible to proceed by motion or rule.[93] Under some statutes, however, on the death of the judgment creditor the judgment may be revived on motion.[94]

§ 547. —— Summons to Show Cause

Under some statutes revivor of judgment may be had by means of a proceeding commenced by a summons to show cause why the judgment should not be revived.

The proceeding prescribed by some statutes for reviving a judgment partakes both of the nature of a formal action and of a scire facias, since it is begun by a summons, but requires defendant to show cause why the judgment should not be revived or enforced, as the case may be.[95]

a. In General

In some jurisdictions, although not in others, a judgment may be revived by means of a writ of scire facias which is a judicial writ to aid in the recovery of a judgment debt, and the proceeding is most widely regarded as a continuation of the suit in which the judgment was obtained rather than as an original action.

At common law the remedy by scire facias was confined to judgments recovered in real actions.[96]

Payment of tax on judgment

Motion to revive judgment in name of deceased judgment creditor's sole legatee is merely special statutory proceeding to give life to dormant judgment, and is not an "action or suit for the collection" of judgment within statute requiring prior payment of intangible taxes, and hence order of revivor prior to such payment was proper.—Holden v. Barringer, supra.

96. Iowa.—Von Puhl v. Rucker, 6 Iowa 187.

The writ of scire facias was first permitted to revive a personal judgment by the Statute of Westminster II,[97] which authorized and required a scire facias in all cases where plaintiff desired to sue out an execution on his judgment after the expiration of a year and a day from its final recovery.[98] In many states the provisions of this statute have been adopted as a part of their common law, or incorporated in their statutes, so that the proper method of obtaining a revival is by a proceeding begun by the issue of a scire facias requiring defendant to show cause why the judgment should not be revived and its lien continued,[99] although, as discussed in Executions § 66, the new acts have generally extended the time within which execution may issue without revival by scire facias.

In some jurisdictions it has been held that scire facias is the only mode of reviving a judgment.[1] In other jurisdictions, however, the writ has been abolished by code or statute, either expressly[2] or impliedly, as by providing for one form of action and not authorizing scire facias.[3]

Nature and scope of proceeding. A scire facias to revive a judgment is a judicial,[4] but not an original,[5] writ. Although it is in the nature of an action because defendant may plead to it,[6] and has been held to come within the meaning of "action" in statutory provisions relating to actions,[7] and in some cases has been classified in substance as a new action,[8] it is more widely held that a proceeding by scire facias to revive a judgment is not an original proceeding, but a mere continuation of the former suit,[9] or, in other words, it is merely a supplementary remedy to aid in the recovery of the debt evidenced by the original judgment.[10] It has been stated that in a scire facias proceeding to revive

(1) Scire facias is a writ for revival of a judgment which has come to enjoy the dignity of a lien on realty so that execution may issue on revived judgment.—Spurway v. Dyer, D.C.Fla., 48 F.Supp. 255.

(2) Scire facias is only a step in the original cause of a remedial nature to effectuate the lien already in existence.—B. A. Lott, Inc., v. Padgett, 14 So.2d 667, 153 Fla. 304.

a judgment the only question to be determined is whether or not plaintiff has a right, as against defendant, to have the judgment executed.[11]

b. When Remedy Lies

The remedy of scire facias lies to revive dormant judgments and may be pursued even though there is a present right to issue execution on the judgment or there is available another means of rendering the judgment effective.

The remedy of scire facias to revive a judgment lies where the judgment has become dormant,[12] as for failure to issue execution within the time specified by statute.[13] The judgment creditor may pursue the remedy, however, even though he has a present and immediate right to issue execution on the judgment,[14] and in some jurisdictions,[15] although not in others,[16] it may be resorted to although an execution has already been issued, provided it has not resulted in full satisfaction of the judgment. When an execution has issued under which property of defendant has been levied on, and there is not sufficient to discharge the debt, a scire facias issued afterward should be special quoad residuum.[17]

A judgment against one who dies subsequent to its rendition may be revived against his personal representative by scire facias,[18] and it has been held that this is the only mode in which the judgment may be enforced against the estate.[19]

The remedy by scire facias is not rendered unavailable by the existence of other remedies or means of making the judgment effective,[20] but may be pursued concurrently with them,[21] although, as discussed supra § 544, some statutes providing for revivor of judgment by action have been held to supersede the proceeding by scire facias. In the few jurisdictions where, as discussed infra subdivision k (1) of this section, a judgment of revival is deemed to be a new judgment, and where, as further discussed infra § 549, such new judgment bars recovery on the original judgment, each successive writ of scire facias must be founded on the judgment which immediately preceded it.[22] In other jurisdictions it has been held that a judgment of revivor cannot be revived by scire facias.[23]

A scire facias has been held not to lie to revive a judgment which has been fully satisfied as to principal, for the purpose of aiding in the collection of interest claimed to be due.[24] A scire facias against the heirs and terre-tenants of the judgment debtor will not reach property never owned by the latter, but inherited by his children after his death from a third person.[25] It has also been held that judgments entered by confession under a warrant of attorney cannot be revived by scire facias.[26]

Consolidation of judgments. In a proceeding by scire facias several judgments may be consolidated, where all of them are for the use of plaintiff, although some of them were obtained in the names of other persons,[27] or where the judgments are all against the same defendant, although one of them is also against another person.[28]

c. Necessity for, and Requisites of, Writ

(1) In general

(2) Recital and identification of original judgment

(1) In General

In a scire facias proceeding, it is essential to the revival of the judgment that a writ be issued setting forth all the facts on which the right of revivor depends, and calling on the defendant to show cause why execution should not be issued against him; but irregularities not going to the jurisdiction will be waived if an objection is not seasonably made. An alias or pluries scire facias may issue in a proper case.

In a proceeding by scire facias to revive a judgment the issuance of a writ of scire facias is essential to the validity of the judgment of revival.[29] As discussed infra subdivision h (1) of this section, the writ takes the place and performs the office of a declaration. Although it has been held that the same particularity is not required in the writ as in stating a cause of action in the original complaint,[30] it is well settled that the writ should set forth, at least in substance, any fact on which plaintiff's right to have his judgment revived depends.[31] Accordingly it should show the legal title of plaintiff to have execution on the judgment,[32] and name or correctly describe the parties to be charged,[33] the court from which it issues and to which it is returnable,[34] and, as discussed infra subdivision c (2) of this section, the judgment on which it is founded.

The writ must also state the purpose for which it is issued, or the demand against which defendant is required to show cause,[35] and the amount for which it is issued,[36] and should, in conclusion, call on defendant to show cause why execution should not issue against him.[37] On the other hand, the writ need not aver the performance of all things essential to the validity of the judgment,[38] or negative matters of defense,[39] or allege that execution had not been issued within a year and a day or the statutory period, if any, substituted therefor.[40]

Death of defendant and survivorship. A scire facias against one of the three defendants in a judgment, which does not aver the death of the others and the survivorship of the one pursued, is bad on demurrer.[41] A scire facias against an executor to revive a judgment against the testator should contain a suggestion of the death of the judgment debtor,[42] and also show the appointment of defendant as his executor.[43] A scire facias against the administrator of a joint debtor who survived the other debtors should aver the survivorship.[44]

Where heirs or terre-tenants involved. It has been held that the terre-tenants ought to be named, and, if all are not named in the writ, it may be pleaded in abatement,[45] but it has also been held that a scire facias against terre-tenants may be either general against all the terre-tenants, or against certain named parties as terre-tenants, and although it is necessary that all be summoned, it is not necessary that they be named in the scire facias.[46] It has also been held that a scire facias which issues against the heirs and devisees of one deceased and does not name them, but only describes them, is not bad on that account.[47] In the case of heirs or terre-tenants the writ should specifically describe the lands sought to be charged,[48] and show when the terre-tenant's title to the land vested[49] or that the heir is in possession of lands of which his ancestor died seized,[50] but it need not allege proceedings taken ineffectually against the personal representatives.[51] Where heirs are only liable jointly with the personal representative, unless the ancestor has been dead a year without the appointment of such representative, a failure to allege that a year has passed without such appointment renders a writ, brought against the heirs alone, fatally defective on demurrer.[52]

Informalities in the writ or irregularities not going to the jurisdiction may be cured by the statute of jeofails,[53] or, in the absence of seasonable objection, will be deemed to be waived.[54] They cannot be taken advantage of by a stranger to the judgment.[55]

Alias and pluries writs. An alias or pluries scire facias may issue where service of the first writ was not effected,[56] where it was served on some of the joint defendants and returned not served as to the others,[57] or where plaintiff desires to proceed against an additional party, such as terre-tenant,[58] executor,[59] or administrator.[60] An alias or pluries scire facias may also issue where plaintiff is nonsuited on the first scire facias.[61]

(2) Recital and Identification of Original Judgment

A writ of scire facias should completely and correctly describe the judgment sought to be revived; but only a material variance in the description will render the writ vulnerable to a plea of nul tiel record.

As a general rule it is necessary that the scire facias shall correctly set forth and describe the original judgment on which it is founded,[62] and this requirement is applicable to an amicable scire facias as well as to other scire facias to revive a judgment.[63] Thus the judgment must be described with respect to the amount of the recovery,[64] the date of the judgment,[65] the parties plaintiff and defendant,[66] and the court in which it was entered;[67] but it is sufficient that the original judgment is substantially described[68] with such certainty that defendant must know what judgment is meant.[69]

A mere immaterial variance or irregularity in the description of the judgment, which does not tend to mislead, will not avoid the scire facias;[70] but where the variance between the original judgment and the writ is material it will be fatal on a plea of nul tiel record[71] and will break the continuity of the lien.[72]

d. Application and Affidavit

Application for a writ of scire facias, although generally unnecessary, is not improper, and may be required after the lapse of a designated period of time from the rendition of the judgment.

While generally the writ of scire facias may issue without any application to the court,[73] it is entirely proper that a petition, motion, præcipe, or other application should be filed,[74] and, in some jurisdictions, the writ cannot issue to revive a judgment after the lapse of a designated time from its rendition except on leave of court first obtained on a motion or other application supported by an affidavit that the judgment remains in force and unsatisfied.[75] Where the allegations of the affidavit are sufficient to repel the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time, the scire facias may be ordered as a matter of right,[76] although it has been held that, after the lapse of twenty years, defendant must have notice of the motion and affidavit,[77] and the court may exercise its discretion, and allow or refuse the motion, as may seem proper in the case.[78] Although an affidavit is required, an objection on the ground of its omission[79] or that the affidavit is defective[80] should be made in limine, or it will be held to have been waived.

e. Service and Return

As a general rule, there can be no valid judgment on a scire facias to revive a judgment unless the writ was served on the persons sought to be bound by the revived judgment.

As a general rule there can be no valid judgment on a scire facias to revive a judgment unless the writ was served on defendants[81] and on heirs, terre-tenants, or other persons sought to be bound.[82] If defendant is within the jurisdiction, the service must be personal,[83] and after the manner of serving a writ of summons,[84] but constructive service may be sufficient where defendant cannot be found.[85] Where the judgment to be revived is against two defendants jointly, the scire facias must be served on both.[86] Defendant may waive a defect or failure in the service of process by conduct which indicates submission to the court's jurisdiction.[87]

Service on nonresidents. Where, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, the proceeding by scire facias for reviving a personal judgment is treated as merely a continuance of the original suit, jurisdiction duly obtained in the original suit over the person of defendant will endure for the revival of the judgment,[88] and if defendant is a nonresident the service may be constructive.[89] If, however, the scire facias to revive a judgment is treated as a new action for debt on the judgment and there is no appearance by the judgment debtor and he resides in another state, service on him in such other state does not give the court jurisdiction to render a judgment of revivor,[90] even though the revival is sought in a court in the state in which the judgment was rendered at a time when the defendant was resident therein,[91] and it is immaterial that the court which rendered the judgment and in which the revival is sought was a federal court.[92] A revival of a judgment for purposes of execution by scire facias without service of the scire facias on, or appearance by, defendant, who was outside the state, cannot operate to remove the statutory bar of the law of another state, in which he resides, and in which the action on the judgment is brought.[93]

Return of service. The officer's return should set forth correctly the facts of the service,[94] but may be aided by reasonable intendments.[95] In a proper case the return may be corrected or amended.[96]

f. Amending and Quashing or Vacating Writ

A writ of scire facias for the purpose of reviving a judgment may be amended for the purpose of correcting irregularities, but amendments which will deprive an adverse party of some substantial right will not be allowed. An insufficient writ may be quashed.

A writ of scire facias for the purpose of reviving a judgment may be amended as in the case of other such writs, and its amendment is governed by similar rules.[97] Amendments are not permitted, however, which prejudice the opposite party or deprive him of some substantial right,[98] such as the defense afforded by a statute of limitations.[99] The writ may be amended with respect to informalities or irregularities[1] or to make it conform to the record of the judgment,[2] but not as against parties not served with the writ.[3] An amendment alleging that a judgment which was not dormant at the time the scire facias was sued out has become dormant pending the scire facias will not prevent the dismissal of the scire facias.[4]

Quashing or vacating writ. The writ of scire facias may be quashed on motion for failure to state a legal cause of action;[5] for want of the supporting affidavit of nonpayment of the judgment,[6] when that is required by law, as discussed supra subdivision d of this section; for disability or defect of parties;[7] or, under statute, where it was issued against a person in military service.[8] While the merits of plaintiff's claim will not be decided on a motion to quash the writ on jurisdictional grounds,[9] if a scire facias has been improperly issued and a judgment rendered thereon, it is still competent for the court to review both on motion.[10]

(1) Parties Plaintiff

Generally the plaintiff named in the original judgment, or his legal representative or successor, should be the plaintiff in a scire facias proceeding to revive the judgment; but, where statutes authorize assignees or real parties in interest to sue, an assignee of a judgment may institute the proceeding in his own name.

As a general rule, plaintiff in a proceeding by scire facias to revive a judgment should be the same person who was plaintiff in the original judg-

Granting appropriate relief
On petition to strike scire facias from record on ground that proceeding had not been commenced within five years from death of judgment debtor, court had inherent power to order that revival should not create lien against real estate although petitioner did not so pray.—Shareff, to Use of Olney Bank & Trust Co. v. Wolf, 182 A. 115, 120 Pa.Super. 227.

ment[11] or his legal representative.[12] Where one of a firm of partners has died after the rendition of a judgment in favor of the firm, scire facias to revive the judgment is properly brought by the surviving partner and not by the surviving partner and the personal representative of the deceased partner.[13] A judgment rendered in favor of a public trustee may be revived by scire facias in the name of his successor when appointed.[14] Where the disability of coverture exists, the husband must join with the wife although she recovered judgment before the marriage.[15]

After assignment of judgment. Where a statute provides that assignees may bring actions in their own names, assignees of a judgment may sue out scire facias for its revival.[16] In those code states where scire facias to revive a judgment is still in use, it seems that the assignee may sue out the writ in his own name under the code provision as to the maintenance of actions by the real party in interest.[17] In the absence of such statutory authorization, scire facias to revive an assigned judgment should be prosecuted in the name of the assignor.[18]

(2) Parties Defendant

(a) In general

(b) Joint defendants

(a) In General

Persons who are not parties to the judgment and who are not beneficially interested in the property involved are not necessary parties to a scire facias to revive the judgment.

Persons who are not parties to the judgment and who are without beneficial interest in the property involved need not be made parties defendant to a scire facias to revive the judgment;[19] but persons whose interests may be adversely affected by the proceedings are necessary parties.[20]

Death of judgment debtor. Where the judgment debtor dies, and it is sought by the proceeding to reach personalty only, it is generally held proper to bring scire facias against the executor or administrator alone, without joining the heirs or devisees.[21] Where real property only is involved, it is proper in some jurisdictions to bring scire facias against the heirs or devisees and terre-tenants alone, without joining the executor or administrator.[22] In other jurisdictions the scire facias is properly brought against the personal representatives alone, notwithstanding the judgment binds only land, and the heirs, devisees and terre-tenants are not necessary parties,[23] although they may be proper parties;[24] but according to some authority, if it is sought to revive a personal judgment against the land of the deceased debtor, the heirs and terre-tenants must be joined with the personal representative.[25] In a few jurisdictions it has been broadly held that it is not

Record was sufficient to show that assignee of judgment was actual bona fide owner of judgment when assignee commenced scire facias proceeding to revive the judgment.—Molner v. Arendt, 55 N.E.2d 407, 323 Ill.App. 289.

(2) However, the personal representatives of the assignee suing in the name of the assignor may be deemed the "parties" plaintiff and their capacity to sue and their interest in the subject matter of the action challenged in the same manner as that of other plaintiffs.—Beattie Mfg. 34 C.J. p 677 note 19.

Under the English practice where a judgment had been entered in a personal action against a single defendant who had died before execution issued, the scire facias was first issued against the executor or administrator of deceased defendant, and, where it was sought to subject permissible to join personal representatives and heirs as parties defendant to a scire facias to revive a judgment,[26] while in other jurisdictions the personal representative, heirs, and terre-tenants may and should all be joined in the action, where their respective interests are involved.[27]

Terre-tenants. It has frequently been held that, in order to revive the lien of a judgment as against land which is in the possession of a terre-tenant, he must be made a party to the scire facias.[28] According to other decisions, however, where a judgment is revived by scire facias against the original defendant, it is not necessary to include as parties terre-tenants or persons of similar status;[29] but where the original defendant is dead the terre-tenant must be made a party to the scire facias to revive,[30] although it has also been held that he need not be made a party even in the latter case.[31]

Within the meaning of the foregoing rules a terre-tenant is one who has an estate in the land, coupled with the actual possession, which he derived mediately or immediately from the judgment debtor while the land was bound by the lien.[32]

(b) Joint Defendants

A scire facias to revive a joint judgment must be brought against all of the joint defendants who are alive, and, except as otherwise provided by statute, where one joint defendant is dead the writ should be brought against the surviving defendants and the heirs or presonal representatives of the deceased.

A scire facias to revive a judgment against two or more defendants must go against them all, if living,[33] at least where the judgment is joint,[34] although it has been held that, where the judgment is joint and several, plaintiff may elect as to which of the defendants he will have it revived.[35] Except in some jurisdictions,[36] and except where one judgment debtor has been discharged from further liability on the judgment,[37] plaintiff cannot drop one defendant and proceed against the others,[38] and if he discontinues his scire facias as to any of the parties it operates as a discontinuance of the whole proceeding.[39] If plaintiff desires to revive a judgment against one or more defendants without joining all, his remedy is by an action of debt on the judgment, not a scire facias.[40] Where a judgment was rendered against a femme sole who later married, it has been held that the writ of scire facias must be sued out against both husband and wife.[41]

After death of one defendant. The common-law rule that if one joint defendant had died the writ should be against the survivors and the heirs or personal representatives of deceased[42] still prevails in many jurisdictions,[43] but under some statutes scire lands to execution process, although the scire facias also issued against heirs and terre-tenants of deceased defendant, it could not issue against them until after a return of nihil against personal representative of deceased defendant.—First Nat. Revival of realty judgment Under old English practice, where plaintiff sought to subject decedent's real estate to execution process, scire facias issued against surviving defendant and heirs and terre-tenants of deceased defendant, surviving defendant was required to show cause why his personal property and half of his real estate should not be subjected to execution process, and heirs and terre-tenants were required to show cause why half of deceased's land should not be subjected thereto; but deceased defendant's personal representative was not proper party.—First Nat. Bank v. Crook, 174 A. 369, 6 W.W.Harr. Del., 281.

facias may be brought against either the surviving judgment debtors or the personal representatives of the deceased judgment debtor alone.[44]

h. Pleading

(1) In general

(2) Issues, proof, and variance

(1) In General

Since a writ of scire facias serves as both summons and declaration, the filing of a petition is unnecessary; the defendant should demur to the writ or plead matters of defense available to him.

A scire facias performs the double function of a summons and a pleading;[45] the writ takes the place and performs the office of a declaration,[46] and therefore it is not necessary for plaintiff to file with it a declaration or petition or rule defendant to plead,[47] although it is entirely proper that a petition should be filed, as is discussed supra subdivision d of this section. A good plea or answer on the part of defendant must be met by a proper replication,[48] but an insufficient answer is vulnerable to plaintiff's demurrer.[49]

Defendant's pleading. As is discussed supra subdivision a of this section, a scire facias to revive a judgment is an action in the sense that defendant may plead to the writ; and he may and should demur[50] or plead all matters of defense that he has,[51] as in an ordinary suit.[52] The plea to a writ of scire facias, sued out to revive a judgment, is to the writ, and not to the petition, if any, filed therewith.[53]

In some states an affidavit of defense is required in a proceeding of this character.[54] Such affidavit should contain a complete statement of material allegations sufficient to constitute a valid defense;[55]

Persons to be joined with survivor

On death of one of two joint defendants in a judgment binding land, scire facias was properly brought against surviving defendant in the judgment and personal representative of deceased defendant, and, while deceased defendant's heir might also have been made a defendant in such proceeding, she was not a necessary party; where executor or administrator of such deceased defendant was sole party defendant, his duty was to notify heirs or devisees or terre-tenants claiming under him of proceedings, and they, on application, should be permitted to appear and defend.—First Nat. Bank v. Crook, 174 A. 369, 6 W.W.Harr. Del., 281.

Insolvency of deceased's estate

In scire facias to revive alleged dormant judgment against all defendants except one, who had died, and whose estate was insolvent, court did not err in overruling demurrer to petition because it did not seek judgment as against all defendants, especially where judgment was not dormant as to deceased defendant.—Rogers v. Jordan, 132 S.E. 233, 35 Ga.App. 131.

Terre-tenants

(1) In scire facias to revive a judgment, judgment may be entered against terre-tenant as against defendant for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense.—Cusano v. Rubolino, 39 A.2d 906, 351 Pa. 41.

(2) However, some inferior court decisions apparently have held that it is not necessary for a terre-tenant to file an affidavit of defense to prevent judgment being rendered against lands held by him.—Salberg v. Duffee, 21 Pa.Dist. & Co. 144—Bell v. Yontos, 46 Pa.Dist. & Co. 636, 44 Lack.Jur. 83, 57 York Leg.Rec. 53—Harr v. Deeter, 31 Pa.Dist. & Co. 702, 5 Sch.Reg. 205.

(3) Affidavit of defense admitting conveyance to defendants of interest in the real estate of original defendant after date of original judgment showed that defendants were terre-tenants.—Adelson v. Kocher, 36 A.2d 737, 154 Pa.Super. 548.

but the insertion of matter raising only questions of law is erroneous.[56]

As discussed supra § 540, proper forms of the general issue are nul tiel record and payment; and, as considered supra § 542, the statute of limitations may also be pleaded in defense.

(2) Issues, Proof, and Variance

Under the plea of nul tiel record, which questions the existence and validity of the judgment, the only proof permitted is that afforded by an inspection of the record, while the plea of payment confines proof to matters concerning the satisfaction, release, or discharge of the judgment.

While the plea of nul tiel record is said to raise but one question, namely, whether there is such a record of the judgment as that set out in the writ,[57] and this question is to be determined on an inspection and examination of the record[58] without the aid of evidence aliunde,[59] yet it has also been held that under this plea defendant may show the judgment to be void for want of jurisdiction, where this is manifest from an inspection of the record,[60] and may take advantage of a failure to describe the judgment properly, or of a wrong statement as to the court in which it was rendered;[61] but mere errors or irregularities cannot be taken advantage of under this plea.[62]

Where the liability of terre-tenants is involved, under the strict construction given some statutes nothing may be tried except the questions whether the land was bound by the judgment, and, if at one time the land had been bound, whether the lien had been lost;[63] the question of adverse title may not be introduced at the trial.[64]

Plea of payment. Under the plea of payment the evidence must be confined to matters going in satisfaction, release, or discharge of the judgment.[65] Under such a plea defendant may prove any form of satisfaction or release of the judgment,[66] as well as an accord and satisfaction;[67] he may show a prior agreement as to the mode of discharging the judgment,[68] or an agreement to cancel it on an event which has since occurred[69] or to restrict its lien,[70] but not a mere voluntary promise on the part of plaintiff to forbear enforcing the judgment.[71]

i. Evidence

On a scire facias satisfactory proof may and should be offered concerning the existence and validity of the original judgment, and the liability of heirs or terre-tenants; payment or release may be shown by competent evidence.

On a scire facias proof of the original judgment is proper and necessary;[72] but, where this proof is made, the judgment will be sustained, with respect to its regularity and validity, by the ordinary presumptions,[73] and the revival ordinarily will be ordered unless good cause to the contrary is shown.[74] However, as against heirs it is error to render judgment without proof that they inherited assets.[75] Also the establishment of the liability of a party as a terre-tenant requires proof of facts outside the record,[76] such as his acquisition of title to the land after the rendition of the judgment and while the judgment was a lien on it,[77] and such a party may show a release or restriction of the lien of the judgment.[78] Payment or release may be shown by any competent evidence,[79] and to disprove a plea of payment a sheriff's return on an execution showing satisfaction in full may be contradicted.[80]

The court will take into consideration a presumption of payment which, in some states, arises merely after the lapse of a certain number of years,[81] and in others after the passage of a period, prescribed by statute, without the issuance of an execution.[82] The judgment creditor has the burden of overcoming such presumption,[83] and the judgment debtor may introduce competent evidence to meet the judgment creditor's attempt to rebut the presumption.[84]

j. Trial

The question raised by a plea of nul tiel record is tried by the court whereas the plea of payment entitles the parties to a jury trial.

The question raised by a plea of nul tiel record is to be determined by the court;[85] and, as considered supra subdivision h (2) of this section, the decision is made on the basis of what is ascertained from an inspection and examination of the record. Defendant is not entitled to a jury trial under his plea of nul tiel record,[86] but the plea of payment raises a question of fact which ordinarily must be submitted to the jury.[87] The court may withhold determination of a motion for judgment for want of a sufficient defense until adjudication of defendant's rule to open the judgment sought to be revived.[88] In a proper case, the court may direct a verdict[89] or set aside a verdict returned by the jury.[90]

Ordinarily, on determining the issues in a scire facias proceeding to revive a judgment, the court may and should enter final judgment,[91] but if the judgment on which the scire facias was issued is a nullity no final judgment may be based thereon and the proceeding should be dismissed.[92]

Since in most jurisdictions a scire facias to revive a judgment is only the continuation of an action, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, and the object and effect of the judgment on the scire facias are to revive the judgment as it formerly existed and to reinvest it with the same attributes and conditions which originally belonged to it, as considered infra § 549, the proper form of judgment, in such jurisdictions, is that the original judgment be revived[93] and that plaintiff have execution thereof,[94] with costs in both the original action and the proceeding to revive.[95] In many jurisdictions it is improper to render a new judgment for recovery of a specific sum;[96] nor is plaintiff entitled to damages for delay in execution;[97] but, where the judgment contains the proper statements, additional words adding nothing to its effectiveness may be treated as surplusage.[98] In a few states, however, the practice is to enter a new judgment, quod recuperet, for the amount then due, including the principal and accrued interest on the original judgment.[99]

In order to be valid, the judgment on scire facias must closely follow the original judgment,[1] particularly as to the names and descriptions of the parties,[2] unless, by reason of an assignment of the judgment[3] or the death of one of the parties,[4] the parties to the scire facias differ from those to the original judgment, it being necessary that the judgment contain proper restrictions or limitations when given against other persons than the original defendant, as heirs or terre-tenants.[5] The entire judgment, and not merely a part thereof, must be revived.[6]

Where scire facias remains merely a judicial writ, by reason of its not having been converted into an action by appearance and plea of defendant, a failure to enter a fiat thereon within a year and a day after its issuance operates as a discontinuance,[7] and an order of fiat cannot be subsequently made except on a new writ,[8] which, as discussed supra § 542, should be sued out within the statutory period after the last renewal of the life of the judgment.

Joint defendants. As discussed supra subdivision e of this section, judgment in a scire facias proceeding is not valid without service on defendant or proper notice to him; and in case of joint defendants, some of whom are not served, it is error to render judgment against all or against those served,[9] or some of those served.[10] It has been held that, on scire facias to revive a judgment against two persons jointly, it is erroneous to enter final judgment against one before plaintiff has matured the case against the other also, so that a joint judgment may be entered against both;[11] but it has also been held that a joint scire facias to revive a judgment does not necessarily require a joint judgment, but that the judgment that plaintiff have execution may be several, against each,[12] and in fact should be so where one is liable individually and the other in a representative character.[13]

(2) By Confession or Default

In a proceeding by scire facias to revive, judgments may be entered against the defendant on his confession or default.

In a proceeding by scire facias to revive, judgment may be entered against defendant on his confession[14] or default.[15] Plaintiff, moreover, has been held entitled to costs, even though he allowed the judgment to become dormant and defendant did not contest the proceeding.[16]

Except in some jurisdictions,[17] the rule, both at common law and under some statutes, is that two returns of nihil to a writ of scire facias are equivalent to a return of scire feci; that is, the court thereupon acquires jurisdiction of defendant, and may proceed to give judgment by default.[18] In such case, however, as well as in the case of other revivals by default, or by confession, the judgment may, on good cause shown, be opened to enable defendant to present his defense, as discussed infra subdivision k (3) of this section. The operation and effect of a revival on two returns of nihil are discussed infra § 549.

(3) Amending, Opening, or Vacating Judgment

A judgment of revival secured in a proceeding by scire facias may, in a proper case, be amended, opened, or vacated.

In a proper case the judgment of revival may be amended,[19] but, except in some jurisdictions,[20] the original judgment cannot be amended or corrected in scire facias proceedings to revive it.[21]

Opening or vacating judgment. A judgment on a scire facias will be opened, vacated, or set aside only where legally sufficient grounds therefor are established.[22] Judgments of revival entered amicably,[23] or by confession[24] or default,[25] may be opened for cause shown to let in a defense, and, under some circumstances, may be stricken from the record.[26] Where a default judgment may be entered after two returns of nihil to the writ of scire facias, as is considered supra subdivision k (2) of this section, defendant may afterward, by audita querela,[27] or, under the modern practice, by motion,[28] open the judgment and present his defense.[29]

l. Execution

The court may control the issuance of execution on a revived judgment to the extent necessary to do justice to the parties.

The trial court has the power to control the issuance of any execution on a revived judgment to the extent that may be necessary to do justice to the parties.[30] Ordinarily the execution may be levied on the same property bound originally by the judgment,[31] but, where the revival is had against the administrator of a deceased defendant, the execution is leviable on the assets in his hands.[32] A waiver of inquisition given on the original confession of judgment will be available on execution after the revival.[33] Plaintiff's failure to serve one of two defendants with the writ of scire facias cannot be alleged, in an affidavit of illegality interposed to the levy of execution, by the party served.[34]

m. Amicable Scire Facias

An amicable scire facias to revive a judgment is a written agreement, signed by the judgment debtor or person to be bound by the revival, in the nature of a writ of scire facias with a confession of judgment thereon.

Under the practice in at least one state, an amicable scire facias to revive a judgment is a written agreement, signed by the judgment debtor or person to be bound by the revival,[35] in the nature of a writ of scire facias with a confession of judgment thereon, which must be duly docketed,[36] but which requires no judicial action on the part of the court.[37] When such an agreement is duly made and entered, it has all the force and effect of a judgment rendered on an adverse or contested writ of scire facias, as considered infra § 549, although, as discussed supra subdivision k (3) of this section, it may be opened, for cause shown, to permit defendant to enter a defense. Several judgments against the same person, owned by the same creditor, may be consolidated and revived in one amicable action of scire facias.[38] Where a judgment against decedent has ceased to be a lien on his land by reason of lapse of time, it cannot be renewed against the administrator by acquiescence of the latter.[39]

§ 549. Operation and Effect of Revival

A judgment of revival is binding until set aside, and in most jurisdictions is invested with the same force and effect as the original judgment.

A judgment rendered on a scire facias to revive a judgment is binding until properly set aside.[40] It is not subject to collateral attack,[41] except on the ground of lack of jurisdiction,[42] it being a nullity when rendered by a court or judge without jurisdiction.[43] It is conclusive of all matters which were or might have been pleaded in the revival proceedings.[44]

The revival of a judgment by regular proceedings reinvests it with all the effect and conditions which originally belonged to it, and which have been wholly or partly suspended by lapse of time, change of parties, or other cause,[45] and, as considered supra § 494, it continues the lien of the judgment on real property beyond the period when, by statute, without such revival, it would expire. The revival, however, adds nothing whatever to the validity or effect of the judgment,[46] and cannot be invoked as curing any fault or defect which is of such a nature as to render it void,[47] although it cuts off defenses which might have been made to the original judgment before the revival.[48] The judgment on the scire facias to revive is no bar to an action of debt on the original judgment,[49] and a judgment for defendant on an insufficient and defective scire facias is no bar to another for the same cause.[50]

However, in the few jurisdictions where, as considered supra § 548 k (1), a new judgment is rendered on a scire facias to revive a judgment, an effect somewhat different from that given the original judgment is sometimes accorded a judgment of revival.[51] In such jurisdictions it has sometimes been held that the new judgment may be valid and enforceable, even though the original judgment was void;[52] and a recovery on the scire facias is a bar to a subsequent recovery against defendant on the original judgment,[53] except where the original de-

Bank & Trust Co. of Salt Lake City v. John H. Seely & Sons Co., 77 P.2d 355, 94 Utah 357.

Death of party

Revivor of judgment becoming dormant on death of party thereto restores judgment to full force and gives it effect for ensuing five years, without execution, to same extent as revivor of judgment which has become dormant for want of execution.—Jersak v. Risen, 152 P.2d 374, 194 Okl. 423.

fendant is not a party to the proceeding.[54] It has also been held that a scire facias may issue on the original judgment against a terre-tenant who is not a party to the former judgment of revivor.[55]

An amicable scire facias, duly made and entered, has all the force and effect of a judgment rendered on an adverse or contested writ of scire facias.[56] A revival on two returns of nihil, which, as discussed supra § 548 k (2), is a form of revival by default, does not stop the running of the statute of limitations in another state, where defendant resides, or support a new action against him in another state.[57]

XVII. PAYMENT, SATISFACTION, AND DISCHARGE OF JUDGMENT

§ 550. Persons to Whom Payment May Be Made

As a general rule, payment of a judgment must be made to the plaintiff of record or to his duly authorized agent, and, where there are several judgment creditors, payment may be made to any one of them.

As a general rule, payment of a judgment may and must be made to plaintiff of record,[58] or to his duly authorized agent,[59] or attorney as discussed in Attorney and Client § 99. However, when a judgment is recovered by one person for the use of another, payment may be made to the beneficial owner,[60] and it is in fact the duty of the judgment debtor to make payment to him where the debtor has notice that the judgment belongs to him,[61] although, on the other hand, it has been held that, if the debtor pays it to a third person who he assumes is beneficially entitled to receive it, he acts at his own peril.[62] If the person for whose use the judgment is recovered is a fictitious person, then the debtor is justified in treating the nominal plaintiff as the real owner and proceeding to settle the demand with him.[63] Where the court directs payment of the judgment to plaintiff only on the debtor obtaining indemnification against the claims of others interested in the fund, the debtor is not protected by such payment if he fails to secure such indemnification.[64]

Where the judgment has been assigned to a third person, the debtor, after notice of the assignment, must pay to the assignee;[65] but a judgment debtor who learns that the judgment has been assigned acts at his peril in the payment thereof to any party as assignee without ascertaining the facts,[66] and he cannot rely on the statement of the attorney for the original judgment creditor.[67] Where a judgment is recovered by one not the record owner of realty for injury thereto, the judgment debtor, before payment of the judgment, may demand proper releases from all persons who may have an interest in the realty.[68] Payment of the amount of the judgment to a creditor of the judgment plaintiff, under process of garnishment, will discharge it pro tanto, as discussed in Garnishment § 294.

If there are several judgment creditors, payment may be made to one, with the effect of discharging the whole obligation,[69] unless notice is given the debtor by one of such creditors not to pay the other more than his proportion of the judgment.[70] One of the creditors may compound or compromise with the debtor his own interest in the judgment without the consent of the others,[71] but cannot accept less than the whole amount in full satisfaction of the judgment.[72] Where two causes of action by different plaintiffs against the same defendant are improperly joined and a verdict for one sum is rendered in favor of both plaintiffs, its payment to the parties jointly or to their attorney of record will discharge defendant from liability to both on account of all matters alleged in the petition.[73]

Payment into court may satisfy the judgment where it is so provided in the judgment itself,[74] or, as discussed infra § 552, where the payment is made at the instance of, or is accepted by, the judgment creditor.

§ 551. —— Clerk of Court or Other Officer

In the absence of special authority, the clerk of the court has no right to receive money from the judgment debtor in satisfaction of a judgment. Where a sheriff or other ministerial officer holds a writ for the collection of a judgment, the amount may be properly paid to such officer.

It is a general rule that the clerk of the court in which a judgment has been rendered has no right to receive money from the judgment debtor in satisfaction of the judgment without special authority,[75] such as authority conferred expressly[76] or impliedly[77] by statute.

Sheriff or other officer. The amount due on a judgment may properly be paid to a sheriff or other ministerial officer who holds a writ for the collection of such judgment,[78] and the judgment debtor will be protected in such payment, even though the money may never come to the hands of his creditor.[79] An effectual payment cannot be made to the sheriff when he has no writ in his hands,[80] or when the return day of the writ has expired,[81] unless such payment is ratified or accepted by the creditor.[82] The resignation and subsequent insolvency of one of the plaintiffs who was a party to a judgment as sheriff furnish no excuse for defendant to withhold payment of the judgment to his successor in office.[83]

§ 552. Mode, Medium, and Sufficiency of Payment

As a general rule, a judgment for the payment of money can be satisfied only in money, unless the judgment provides for, or the owner of the judgment agrees to, some other mode of payment.

Except where a judgment by its own terms provides otherwise,[84] a judgment for the payment of money can be satisfied only in money,[85] unless the

Alternative judgment
An offer to return logs to their owner while still on his land from which they were cut, and his subsequent treatment of them as his own, were sufficient to satisfy a judgment for recovery of the logs or the value thereof, although no tender with the logs present was shown.—Less v. Delivery of stock
Where defendants made no reasonable effort to obey judgment ordering delivery of stock to plaintiff within ten days, they could not take advantage of plaintiff's effort to secure the stock as excuse for noncompliance, especially where they had withheld the stock from plaintiff for approximately five years.—Haggott v. Plains Iron Works Co., 218 P. 909, 74 Colo. 37.

owner of the judgment chooses to accept property, securities, or some other thing of value,[86] such as real[87] or personal[88] property, a mortgage on the debtor's property,[89] an assignment of the debtor's property in trust,[90] the debtor's bond,[91] a claim on a third person,[92] the performance of certain conditions by the debtor,[93] or the payment by the debtor of other claims or obligations on behalf of plaintiff.[94]

In order that the acceptance of something other than money may operate as a satisfaction, there must be a positive and express agreement to accept the substitute for direct payment of the judgment.[95] The mere fact that the judgment creditor possesses assets of the debtor does not require him to apply them in satisfaction of the judgment,[96] although if he does so apply them the judgment will be extinguished pro tanto.[97] A judgment plaintiff in lawful possession of lands on which his judgment is a lien has not the right to apply the rents and profits therefrom to the satisfaction of his judgment, as against the owner, who is not a judgment defendant.[98]

As a rule, no satisfaction of the judgment arises from the acceptance of collateral security for its payment[99] except where the judgment creditor covenants and agrees never to enforce the judgment.[1] Thus a judgment ordinarily is not satisfied by the giving of a promissory note or other negotiable instrument,[2] or renewal thereof,[3] even though the instrument is that of a third person,[4] unless it is paid[5] or there is an agreement that its acceptance is to operate as absolute payment,[6] or unless the judgment is on an obligation payable in notes.[7]

Where a judgment plaintiff has secured the payment into court of money belonging to defendant sufficient to satisfy the judgment, it is error to require payment into court of further sums owing to

Bank notes

(1) Bank notes are not cash, and cannot be brought into court as such in payment of a judgment, although the bank issuing the notes be the holder of the judgment.—State Bank at Trenton v. Coxe, 8 N.J.Law 172, 14 Am.D. 417.

(2) A statute of one state requiring a bank recovering a judgment to accept its bank notes in payment thereof is inapplicable in another state where execution of the judgment is sought, and the sheriff may refuse to receive such bank notes in payment of the judgment.—Woodson v. Bank of Gallipolis, 4 B.Mon., Ky., 203.

defendant from third persons;[8] and, where the whole amount of the judgment is paid into court and accepted by the judgment creditor, he cannot afterward return it to the clerk on the ground that there is more due him.[9] A deposit made with plaintiff as a security on which defendant's right of appeal is conditioned under a stipulation for its repayment in case of the appeal going in favor of defendant does not constitute payment of the judgment.[10] An application of payments to a judgment cannot be changed when it will affect the rights and interests of third persons.[11]

Interest and costs. There can be no complete satisfaction of a judgment by payment unless the payment covers interest, if any,[12] and the costs chargeable against defendant,[13] even though the amount of the costs is not inserted in the judgment.[14] Under some statutes, however, it has been held that a judgment creditor's acceptance of payment of a judgment, without protest or reservation as to interest not given, operates as a release thereof.[15]

Payment with borrowed money. Ordinarily, where a judgment debtor borrows money with which to pay off a judgment against him, and uses the money for this purpose, the judgment becomes satisfied,[16] but, except in some jurisdictions,[17] a judgment debtor may agree with one who lends him money for such a purpose that the judgment shall not be satisfied by payment to the holder thereof, but shall be transferred to the lender as security for the loan,[18] and a similar arrangement may be made for the protection of one who, by becoming surety for a debtor, aids the latter in procuring money with which to pay a judgment creditor.[19]

Place of payment. The fact that the payment in satisfaction of a judgment is made in a county other than that in which the judgment was rendered will not alter the effect of the payment.[20]

Payment to attorney or officer. The right to accept anything else as a substitute for money in satisfaction of the judgment is confined to the owner himself, and does not belong to his attorney, as discussed in Attorney and Client § 106, or to the clerk of the court,[21] or to a sheriff or other officer holding process for its collection.[22] The handing of money by a junior judgment creditor to the sheriff for the purpose of purchasing a senior judgment and of preventing a sale thereunder, and not for the purpose of paying the judgment, does not operate as a satisfaction.[23] Where a receiver is appointed in proceedings to collect a judgment, only the amount remaining after deduction of his expenses and fees from the amount received by him is applicable as payment on the judgment.[24]

§ 553. —— Tender

An unaccepted tender of the amount due on a judgment is not of itself a satisfaction of the judgment.

An unaccepted tender of the amount due on a judgment is not of itself a satisfaction of the judgment or a discharge of its lien;[25] but it gives the debtor, on paying the money into court, a right to apply to the court to restrain execution and enter satisfaction of the judgment.[26] In order that the rules relating to tender may be available, there must be a legal tender[27] of the full amount due.[28] It has been said that an offer to pay a judgment is not an admission of liability and is not a tender except in the limited sense of a step in compelling the satisfaction of a judgment.[29]

§ 554. Payment by Joint Party or Third Person

Whether or not payment by a joint debtor, surety, stranger, or officer operates as a satisfaction and extinguishment of a judgment as to all concerned is discussed infra §§ 555–558.

§ 555. —— Payment by Joint Debtor

a. In general
b. Assignment of judgment

a. In General

Generally the payment of a judgment by one of two or more joint defendants extinguishes the judgment as to all.

Payment of a judgment by one of two or more joint defendants usually operates as a satisfaction and extinguishment of the judgment as to all,[30] regardless of the intention of the parties to the transaction,[31] and even where the judgment is against joint tort-feasors;[32] and there are authorities holding that the rule applies to judgments on negotiable paper.[33]

b. Assignment of Judgment

Generally, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, a joint defendant on paying the judgment may not take an assignment of it to himself or to a third person for his benefit so as to wield it against his codefendant.

As a general rule, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, it is not competent for one of the joint defendants on paying the judgment to take an assignment of it to himself,[34] or, unless under special circumstances, to a third person for his benefit,[35] so as to wield it against his codefendant, and it is none the less extinguished by the payment, although such an assignment is made,[36] unless, according to some authorities, the payment was not intended to have that effect.[37] This general rule is not, however, applicable to judgments against the maker and indorser of a negotiable instrument, as discussed in Bills and Notes § 472 e (3), or against a principal and surety generally, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Subrogation § 50, also 34 C.J. p 690 note 71–p 691 note 76, and 60 C.J. p 749 notes 63–65.

Notwithstanding the general rule, it has been held that, where a judgment is paid by one of the defendants and is assigned for his benefit, he acquires the right to use the judgment as a security for the payment of the amounts properly due from the other judgment debtors,[38] such right to be exercised only after an affirmative showing to the court and a determination of the indebtedness of the other defendants.[39] The order in which the money was paid and the assignment executed does not control, if they constituted one transaction and the intent was to constitute an assignment;[40] and the mere fact that an attorney for a joint judgment debtor pays the judgment, without the knowledge of his client, and obtains an assignment to a third person, is not proof that satisfaction was intended.[41]

In some jurisdictions the extinguishment of a judgment paid by one joint and several debtor may be prevented by a substantial compliance with a statute providing for an assignment of such judgment to a trustee for such debtor's benefit.[42] In other jurisdictions, by virtue of statute, where a codefendant in a judgment on an obligation on which all are liable as principals pays the judgment in full and takes a written assignment thereof, reciting that he has paid the judgment in full and authorizing the clerk to cancel the judgment of record as to the defendant paying it, the codefendant is not released;[43] but, if a codefendant pays a judgment with the money or funds of both defendants, it is an extinguishment of the judgment as to all, so that, where such codefendant takes an assignment of the judgment to himself, he or any subsequent transferee can be prevented from enforcing it.[44]

Reason for rule

A creditor's right to have its debt paid by any or all of those jointly and severally liable, without regard to the equities between them, is merged in the judgment obtained by the creditor and ought not in equity to be acquired by any one or more of the judgment debtors for enforcement against the others.—Hoft v. Mohn, 2 S.E.2d 23, 215 N.C. 397.

Failure to take assignment

Where a joint judgment debtor pays the entire indebtedness, and neither takes an assignment from the creditor, nor proceeds under statute relating to contribution in such a case, the payment constitutes satisfaction not only as to such debtor, but also as between him and his coobligors.—Tucker v. Nicholson, 84 P. 2d 1045, 12 Cal.2d 427.

42. N.C.—Scales v. Scales, 11 S.E.2d 569, 218 N.C. 553.

New right and exclusive remedy

The statute providing a method by which a judgment paid by one or more judgment debtors jointly and severally liable may be kept alive creates a new right and provides an exclusive remedy.—Hoft v. Mohn, 2 S.E.2d 23, 215 N.C. 397.

What constitutes substantial compliance

(1) A joint obligor must pay the entire debt or more than a proportionate part before he may demand of the judgment creditor the transfer of the judgment to a trustee.—Jones v. Rhea, 151 S.E. 255, 198 N.C. 190.

(2) However, the fact that the codefendant pays a sum smaller than the amount of the judgment in full satisfaction thereof does not deprive him of the statutory method of keeping the judgment alive as against the nonpaying debtors.—Scales v. Scales, 11 S.E.2d 569, 218 N.C. 553.

(3) An assignment which, in effect, is to the paying codefendant itself, is insufficient to keep the judgment alive.—Hoft v. Mohn, 2 S.E.2d 23, 215 N.C. 397.

§ 556. —— Payment by Surety

Usually payment of a judgment by a surety extinguishes it at law.

Ordinarily a payment of the judgment by a surety will extinguish it at law,[45] unless the judgment is preserved for his benefit by statute;[46] but if the judgment is rendered against both principal and surety payment by the surety does not necessarily extinguish it.[47]

§ 557. —— Payment by Stranger

Generally a judgment creditor need not accept payment from a stranger not having an interest in the judgment, yet, if he does, the judgment is kept alive for the benefit of the stranger and is not extinguished where there is an understanding to that effect.

Although a judgment creditor is not bound to accept payment from a stranger[48] unless the stranger has an interest in property seized in satisfaction of the judgment,[49] yet, where he does accept such payment, he is precluded from further recovery,[50] and the judgment will be kept alive for the stranger's benefit, rather than extinguished, when,[51] and only when,[52] there is an intention and agreement or understanding to this effect.

It has been held, in this connection, that it is not necessary that this intention and agreement should be evidenced by a formal and valid assignment of the judgment,[53] although there is some authority to the contrary.[54] On the other hand, the taking of an assignment affords unequivocal evidence of an intention not to satisfy the judgment[55] unless it is taken so long after the payment as to evidence the fact that it was only an afterthought.[56] Such an assignment is valid and the judgment remains unextinguished in favor of a person in whose behalf it is obtained, as well where his credit is accepted as the consideration of the assignment as where it is for a payment in cash made by him.[57]

The assignment may be taken in the name of a third person,[58] and where this is done, in the absence of injury the judgment will not be declared paid because of simulation.[59] If the debtor joins with a stranger in paying off the judgment, taking an assignment to his attorney, the assignment will be valid as to the stranger, although void as to the debtor.[60] Where the judgment is against a stranger to a cause of action ex delicto, its satisfaction by such stranger is not an extinguishment of such cause of action.[61]

Who is stranger. A judgment is deemed to be paid by the judgment debtor himself, rather than by a stranger, and hence to be satisfied, rather than kept alive, where it is paid by another person with money furnished by the judgment debtor,[62] or

§ 558. —— Payment by Officer

Ordinarily payment of a judgment by an officer without legal compulsion or request by the judgment debtor operates to extinguish it, unless there is an assignment of the judgment to the officer or the debtor waives the benefit of the payment as satisfaction.

Where the amount of a judgment is paid by a sheriff or other officer without any demand or request on the part of the judgment debtor, the judgment is extinguished, and such officer cannot keep it alive for his own reimbursement[67] unless he takes an assignment of the judgment in his own name, or to a third person in trust for himself,[68] or the debtor waives the benefit of the payment as satisfaction.[69] However it has been held that the judgment is not extinguished where the sheriff or other officer is compelled to pay it by legal proceedings,[70] or where he pays a judgment recovered against himself for his failure to enforce the first judgment,[71] unless defendant adopts the payment and insists on it as a satisfaction.[72]

b. Admissibility
c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

(1) Presumptions
(2) Burden of proof
(1) Presumptions
(a) In general
(b) From lapse of time

(a) In General

In the absence of other proof it will be presumed that a judgment has not been paid.

It will be presumed that a judgment has not been paid, in the absence of other proof[73] and in the absence of lapse of time sufficient to raise a presumption of payment, as discussed infra subdivision a (1) (b) of this section. However, payment or satisfaction may be presumed from the conduct of the judgment creditor.[74] Where a satisfaction piece was given, the presumption arises that it was given on payment of the judgment.[75] Some statutes providing that a presumption of payment of the judgment shall arise from the fact that the execution has not been returned according to law apply only in a proceeding against the sheriff or his sureties.[76]

(b) From Lapse of Time
aa. In general
bb. Computation of time

aa. In General

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, it is generally held that, where twenty years have elapsed since the rendition of a judgment, without any acknowledgment of it or attempt to enforce it, a presumption of law arises that the judgment has been paid.

At common law, where twenty years have elapsed since the rendition of a judgment, without any process on it, or any acknowledgment of it or attempt to enforce it, there is a presumption of law that it has been paid.[77] A similar rule has been enacted by Presumption of payment from lapse of time generally see the C.J.S. title Payment § 101, also 48 C.J. p 690 note 56—p 600 note 65.

Basis of rule
This presumption is based on the common sense theory that the judgment creditor would have normally statute in several of the states,[78] although, under some of the statutes, the presumption of payment arises after the lapse of only ten years.[79] Such statutes are not retrospective,[80] and, where they so provide they do not apply to judgments other than those of courts of record.[81]

Ordinarily, the presumption of payment applies as well between the parties to the judgment as between plaintiff and subsequent creditors,[82] but it applies only to judgments for the payment of money,[83] including judgments for a contingent liabil-taken steps to proceed against the debtor for the collection of the judgment before such a period of time had been permitted to elapse; if the judgment has not in fact been paid, it is only reasonable and fair to put the burden of the explanation on him who was entitled to the money. —Roemer now to Use of Kendig v. Lancaster County, 190 A. 347, 126 Pa. Super. 11—34 C.J. p 692 note 6 [a].

Strength of presumption

(1) Presumption of payment after twenty years is very strong and is favored in law as tending to the repose of society and discouragement of stale claims.—In re Lefever's Estate, 122 A. 273, 278 Pa. 196—Krzykwa v. Krzykwa, Pa.Com.Pl., 15 Northumb.L.J. 230.

(3) Conclusiveness of presumption generally see infra subdivision c of this section.

City

(1) Statute establishing conclusive presumption of payment of judgment after twenty years was held applicable to a city, in its governmental capacity.—Gewertz v. Berry, 180 N.E. 251, 258 N.Y. 505.

(2) City and its officers could not waive the provisions of the statute —Application of Long Island R. Co. 22 N.Y.S.2d 706, 174 Misc. 1037, affirmed 25 N.Y.S.2d 1005, 261 App.Div 914, reargument denied 27 N.Y.S.2d 441, 261 App.Div. 987.

Subsisting obligation

Notwithstanding statute declaring that every judgment shall be deemed satisfied after the expiration of twenty years, such a judgment, if in fact unsatisfied, is a subsisting obligation.—Pensinger v. Jarecki Mfg. Co., 136 N.E. 641, 78 Ind.App. 569.

In Alabama

(1) A judgment is presumed to be paid after ten years without execution taken thereon, but the presumption does not become conclusive until after twenty years.—Gilmer v. Gant, 24 So.2d 414, 247 Ala. 347—McClintock v. McEachin, 20 So.2d 711, 246 Ala. 412—Hays v. McCarty, 195 So. 241, 239 Ala. 400.

82. Pa.—Van Loon v. Smith, 103 Pa. 238.

Third persons

Statutory presumption of payment of judgment from failure to issue execution for ten years from rendition of judgment or date of last execution issued protects third persons even against revived judgment or judgment renewed by action thereon. —Second Nat. Bank v. Allgood, 176 So. 363, 234 Ala. 654.

Only as to third persons

In some jurisdictions during the period of dormancy of a judgment, there is no presumption, in favor of defendant, that the judgment has been paid, but such presumption exists only as to third persons.—Hagins v. Blitch, 65 S.E. 1082, 6 Ga.App. 839—34 C.J. p 658 note 94.

ity,[84] and is, therefore, not applicable to judgments in rem,[85] or to judgments awarding the possession of property,[86] foreclosing a mortgage,[87] declaring a vendor's lien on land,[88] or foreclosing a tax lien,[89] without the adjudication of personal liability. Likewise, the presumption is inapplicable to a judgment which by its terms is not collectable,[90] or, it seems, to a judgment allowing a claim by an assignee,[91] or to an order of court, made in proceedings to sell land of an habitual drunkard, which finds that he is indebted to a certain person in a named sum.[92]

As a general rule, the lapse of any number of years fewer than twenty, or other number fixed by the statute, will not raise a presumption of law that the judgment has been paid;[93] but the running of a shorter period of time, when accompanied by corroborative or persuasive circumstances, may be submitted to a jury as ground for a presumption of fact.[94] In some jurisdictions a presumption of payment arises after the time when the judgment has become dormant, even though such time is less than twenty years,[95] and it has also been held, without reference to provisions specifically fixing the time after which the presumption of payment arises, that a rebuttable presumption of payment may take effect when no execution has issued within the period when an execution may issue without leave of court.[96]

bb. Computation of Time

The period after which a judgment is presumed to have been paid begins to run from the time judgment is entered or other time fixed by the statute, and may be extended by various acts tolling the period, such as commencement of proceedings to collect the judgment.

The period after which a judgment is presumed to have been paid begins to run from the time the judgment is entered up,[97] or, under some statutes, from the date of original rendition of the judgment,[98] or from the time when the judgment creditor is first entitled to a mandate to enforce it;[99] but, where a judgment by its terms is not immediately collectable, the period begins to run from the time that it becomes collectable.[1]

Although there is authority to the contrary,[2] it has been held that a statute declaring that a judgment shall be presumed to be paid after the lapse of a certain time is a statute of limitations.[3] In this view the running of the statute, or of the common-law period of twenty years, may be interrupted by a stay of execution,[4] by an injunction restraining the collection of the judgment,[5] by the disability of the party from infancy,[6] by the institution of special or collateral proceedings to collect the judgment, or uncover property subject to it,[7] by the issuance of scire facias or other process to revive the judgment,[8] or by the judgment debtor's payment on account of the judgment or acknowledgment of the debt.[9]

It has also been held that the running of the period necessary to create the presumption of payment may be tolled by the debtor's absence from the state,[10] although, where the statutory presumption of payment is conclusive, it has been held that the period will not be extended by such absence,[11] notwithstanding another statute which provides that the time limited for the commencement of an action shall not include the time during which such person is absent from the state;[12] and, in any case, the absence of the judgment creditor does not affect the running of the statutory period.[13] The period is not stayed by the mere filing of a claim against the debtor's estate,[14] or by the operation of a statute extending the time for commencement of an action for a certain period after the death of the person against whom the cause of action exists.[15]

(2) Burden of Proof

As a general rule, the burden of proving payment of a judgment rests on the person claiming payment.

As a general rule, the burden of proving payment of a judgment rests on defendant or other person claiming payment,[16] except where a prima facie case of payment has been made,[17] where the judgment is dormant,[18] or where such a period of time has elapsed as to raise a presumption of payment,[19] in which case the burden of proving nonpayment, or of overcoming the presumption of payment, rests on plaintiff or the person seeking to enforce the judgment.

(1) In General

Competent and relevant evidence may be received to prove payment of a judgment.

As a general rule, all competent and relevant evidence may be received to prove payment of a judgment.[20] The evidence admissible to prove payment includes parol evidence,[21] a written receipt or other paper passing between the parties,[22] an entry on the records of the court,[23] and the return and receipts on the execution,[24] but not evidence of the acts of the parties prior to the rendition of the judgment,[25] although it has been held that an agreement entered into prior to the date of a judgment, as to the mode of its discharge, but which was not to be executed until afterward, and all payments made in pursuance of such agreement, are admissible in evidence in support of a plea of payment.[26] The fact that a mortgagor was permitted to occupy the premises as a tenant after foreclosure, and that at his death he left considerable property, does not tend to show payment of the deficiency judgment.[27]

Evidence that the judgment has not been paid,[28] including evidence contradicting or explaining a written receipt,[29] ordinarily is admissible, but an account book of a deceased attorney is not of itself competent evidence of the fact that such attorney did not receive a payment on the judgment.[30] In some jurisdictions, however, where through lapse of time a conclusive presumption of payment is created, evidence to prove nonpayment is inadmissible.[31] At least in connection with other circumstances, evidence that no execution was issued,[32] or that one issued was not returned,[33] is admissible on the question of payment.

(2) To Support or Rebut Presumption of Payment

Generally, any competent evidence which tends to support or rebut the presumption of payment of a judgment is admissible on an issue of payment, but in some jurisdictions the evidence admissible for this purpose is prescribed by statute.

In some jurisdictions, the evidence which may be relied on to rebut the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time is prescribed by statute,[34] and, if the presumption is declared by the statute to be conclusive, only its existence may be attacked, and it may not be shown in rebuttal of the presumption that the judgment was not actually paid.[35] On the other hand, where the presumption of payment is not conclusive, it may be rebutted by any competent and satisfactory evidence that there has been no payment in fact.[36]

To repel the presumption of payment there may be shown the pursuit of a continued course of legal proceedings to enforce the judgment,[37] such as the issue and return of an execution unsatisfied within the time limited,[38] the revival of the judgment[39] or

The existence of the presumption of payment may also be attacked by evidence of the making within the twenty years or other statutory period of partial payments[46] or of a distinct acknowledgment of the judgment as an existing debt,[47] made to the creditor,[48] his agent or attorney,[49] or even to a stranger,[50] provided it is intended to be communicated to or to influence the conduct of the creditor,[51] although an admission will not be as readily implied from language casually addressed to a stranger as when addressed to the creditor in reply to a demand for the debt.[52] The acknowledgment or admission need not be accompanied by a promise to pay;[53] nor need it specify the amount or character of the judgment debt,[54] and in some jurisdictions,[55] although not in others,[56] it is of no consequence that it is accompanied by a refusal to pay. Evidence tending to support the presumption of payment, or to explain and contradict evidence given in rebuttal of such presumption, should be admitted.[57]

c. Weight and Sufficiency

The fact of payment or nonpayment of a judgment should be established by a fair preponderance of the evidence, but, where there is a presumption of payment from lapse of time, evidence in rebuttal thereof should be particularly strong and convincing.

Ordinarily a fair preponderance of the evidence is sufficient to establish or disprove, as the case may be, payment of a judgment.[58] The mere fact that a judgment is of record and appears unsatisfied is not conclusive evidence that it is unpaid.[59]

To rebut presumption of payment. In the absence of a statute to the contrary,[60] the presumption of payment of a judgment from the lapse of time, under statute or apart therefrom, is not conclusive,[61] but may be rebutted by any competent and satisfactory evidence, as discussed supra subdivision b (2) of this section. However, the evidence to rebut the presumption must be strong and convincing,[62] particularly after the death of the debtor;[63] and the party alleging nonpayment must bring forward evidence sufficient to produce a reasonable conviction that the judgment has not been paid,[64] or establish facts from which nonpayment may be clearly inferred,[65] although, if such evidence is introduced, it is sufficient to rebut the presumption, even though it would be of no avail against the general statute of limitations.[66] A mere showing of poverty or failure in business on the part of the judgment debtor will not alone rebut the presumption of satisfaction,[67] but proof of his insolvency or entire inability to pay during the whole period is sufficient evidence in rebuttal.[68] At common law, the absence of a judgment debtor from the state in which the judgment was rendered is a circumstance to be weighed with other evidence in determining whether or not the presumption of payment from lapse of time is rebutted,[69] although it is not of itself sufficient to repel the presumption,[70] but such absence will not rebut the presumption where it is not included in the exceptions to a statute raising a conclusive presumption of payment after the lapse of a prescribed period.[71]

§ 560. Payment as Question of Law or Fact

Where there is conflicting evidence on the question of payment of a judgment, the issue is one of fact to be submitted to a jury; but, where sufficient time has elapsed to raise a presumption of payment, the court must determine whether matters relied on to rebut the presumption are of sufficient force to accomplish that purpose if established.

sufficient time has elapsed to raise a presumption of payment, as discussed supra § 559 a (1) (b), and there is no proof of circumstances accounting for the delay, the question is not an open one for the jury,[73] it being a preliminary question of law for the court to determine whether matters relied on to rebut the presumption are of sufficient force to accomplish that purpose if established.[74]

§ 561. Merger of Judgments

a. In general
b. Cumulative judgments

a. In General

Under some circumstances, a judgment may be discharged or extinguished by merger of title with the property against which it constitutes a lien, but the interest of the creditor to keep the lien alive may prevent such merger.

Where a judgment debtor buys in the title acquired on an execution sale under the judgment, the judgment is discharged,[75] and a junior judgment will succeed to its priority of lien.[76] Similarly, where the judgment creditor acquires title to property against which the judgment constitutes a lien, the judgment ordinarily is regarded as merged in the title, at least with respect to such property,[77] although since a judgment is a general lien on all the debtor's real estate, as discussed supra § 455, it does not merge when the creditor acquires title to a particular portion of the lands subject to the judgment, but may ordinarily be enforced against the remaining lands.[78] The rule as to merger does not apply, however, where it is to the interest of the creditor to keep the lien alive, and in such case his intention to prevent a merger may be presumed.[79] There is ordinarily no merger of a judgment when additional security for the same debt is given, such as a mortgage,[80] or bill of sale,[81] or where a bond for payment is given on an execution sale.[82] However, where the creditor takes an assignment of property in trust to pay his own debt and those of certain other creditors and enters on the execution of the trust and pays a portion of the debts,[83] or where he accepts a deed of property, not as security, but as a conveyance,[84] he cannot afterward proceed to enforce the judgment.

b. Cumulative Judgments

There is a conflict of opinion whether or not a judgment used as a cause of action for the recovery of another judgment is merged in the subsequent judgment.

When a judgment is used as a cause of action for the recovery of another judgment, the question whether or not the first judgment is merged in the subsequent judgment is one on which it has been acknowledged that there is much conflict of opinion.[85] Some decisions hold that ordinarily merger is effected,[86] but, under some decisions on the

34 C.J. p 697 note 94.
Merger of causes of action generally see infra § 599.
Effect of merger
Under the doctrine of "merger of judgment," in a second judgment, the cause of action changes its nature when reduced to judgment, ceases to exist as an independent liability, and is transferred into obligations created by the judgment thereon; the lesser security is absorbed by the greater security and the lesser ceases to exist, but the greater is not in-question the foregoing rule is not inflexible,[87] and its application depends on the intention of the parties and the circumstances of the particular case.[88] So it has been held that the rule of merger will be applied only where the ends of justice require its application,[89] and where an inferior security or indebtedness passes into one of superior degree,[90] and, even if the judgments are considered as merged, the doctrine will not be allowed to impair the security of judgments as liens.[91]

Other decisions hold that the doctrine of merger does not apply to a judgment on which a new judgment is recovered, and that the first judgment is not extinguished without satisfaction of the second,[92] especially where the judgments are recovered in different states,[93] or where the second judgment is auxiliary or collateral to the first.[94]

Whichever may be the correct rule, as applied by courts of law, judgments will,[95] or will not[96] be treated by a court of equity as merged where this is necessary to protect the rights of the litigants.

Judgment against administrator. The lien of a judgment is not released or divested by the recovery of a judgment against the administrator of the deceased judgment debtor.[97] Where plaintiff recovers a personal judgment against an administrator, and then recovers on such judgment a judgment on his bond, the judgments are not merged.[98]

Forfeiture of forthcoming or delivery bond. In several states, where by statute the forfeiture of a forthcoming bond, or bond for the delivery of property under levy, creates per se a new judgment on creased.—Adams v. Davies, 156 P.2d 207, 107 Utah 579.

Cause of action as basis for judgment

The rule that one judgment may merge in another is applicable, if at all, to cases in which one judgment is used as a cause of action on which another judgment is obtained.

Garnishment judgment

Judgment that plaintiff was allowed a stipulated sum in full payment of any claims against association in receivership extinguished a garnishment judgment and any lien incident thereto which plaintiff had theretofore obtained, since judgment previously obtained in main suit against insurance association was merged in judgment of instant suit, and the garnishment judgment was extinguished by payment of the main judgment.—Myers v. the bond, it has been held that the original judgment is merged in such statutory judgment and thereby satisfied,[99] unless such bond is unauthorized.[1] However, in jurisdictions where the forfeiture of such a bond gives a right to take or enter a new judgment, but does not of itself amount to a judgment, there is no merger of the original judgment on the mere forfeiture of the bond, but only on the entry of the new judgment.[2]

§ 562. Assignment as Extinguishment

As a general rule, a judgment is extinguished by its assignment to the judgment debtor, or to a stranger for his benefit.

As a general rule, a judgment is satisfied by its assignment to the judgment debtor,[3] or to a stranger for his benefit,[4] unless the debtor waives his right to have it canceled,[5] or manifests an intention that the lien of the judgment shall continue for the benefit of another.[6] However, the judgment is not satisfied by an assignment to a person who, although liable for the debt evidenced by the judgment, is not a party to the judgment,[7] or who occupies the position of a surety only,[8] or who is an officer of a corporation which is the judgment debtor.[9] An unperformed agreement to assign a judgment is not a satisfaction thereof.[10]

§ 563. Release or Discharge

a. In general
b. Necessity and sufficiency of consideration

a. In General

A judgment creditor may ordinarily abandon or renounce his judgment, or release and discharge it; but he cannot, by so doing, affect the interest of other judgment creditors without their consent.

A judgment creditor ordinarily may abandon or renounce his judgment,[11] or release and discharge it.[12] The release may be made by the equitable owner of the judgment,[13] or by one of several joint owners, as far as affects his interest;[14] but in the latter case the release does not affect the share or interest of other parties in whose name judgment was recovered,[15] unless they have expressly authorized it.[16]

The release of a judgment may be avoided for fraud or deceit practiced in obtaining it.[17]

Legal or constructive fraud is sufficient to avoid a release of a judgment, so that it is unnecessary

Issuance of execution. If an execution is issued for the full amount of the judgment, a levy erroneously made thereunder for a lesser sum does not constitute a release of part of the judgment.[18]

Absolute or conditional release. An instrument cannot properly be construed to be an absolute release where its terms show that the judgment is to be kept alive and in force for certain purposes.[19] Where a judgment debtor obtains possession of a discharge of the judgment, without complying with the conditions on which it was to be delivered, and the discharge is not filed with the clerk, or satisfaction entered on the record, the judgment remains in full force.[20]

Release as condition to payment. A judgment debtor, under a judgment in an action brought by the holders of outstanding unrecorded instruments, is entitled to have such releases from the spouse of a holder,[21] or from the holder of record title,[22] as shall be necessary to prevent payment for a second time, before he is required to pay over the money due under the judgment.

b. Necessity and Sufficiency of Consideration

The release of a judgment must be supported by a consideration. The authorities are not uniform as to whether or not a judgment may be discharged by part payment.

The release of a judgment must be supported by a consideration,[23] and, where there is a valid consideration, the release is binding.[24]

In accordance with the general rule, and the exceptions thereto, as to the effect of partial payment of a debt or demand which is liquidated or certain and which is due, as discussed in Accord and Satisfaction §§ 26–35, it has been held that, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise,[25] a judgment is not discharged by a part payment under a parol agreement that such payment shall be accepted in full satisfaction,[26] or by a part payment and an ordinary written receipt "in full,"[27] and that the release of a judgment for less than the amount due is without consideration as to the balance and should be set aside pro tanto.[28] It has also been held, however, that a judgment is discharged on part payment under a lawful agreement that it shall be accepted in full satisfaction,[29] at least if the agreement is evidenced by a sealed instrument acknowledging satisfaction,[30] or if the partial payment is accompanied by an additional consideration, either in the shape of a thing of value or of some act burdensome or inconvenient to the debtor and possibly beneficial to the creditor.[31] Where the debtor cannot pay the judgment in full and the creditor is unable to enforce collection, the acceptance by the creditor of a sum less than the amount due under the judgment in full settlement thereof has been held to be binding on him.[32] If the part payment

Finality of judgment

Statutes providing that an agreement to compromise, sell, or cancel a final judgment for less than the amount thereof is void if the parties are unaware that the judgment is made by a third person,[33] or if it is in pursuance of a compromise of a dispute respecting the effect of the judgment,[34] such payment has been held to discharge the judgment.

§ 564. —— Joint Debtors

At common law a release given to one of several joint judgment debtors on his paying his proportionate share of the judgment or on other consideration releases the judgment as to all.

At common law a release given to one of several joint judgment debtors on his paying his proportionate share of the judgment or on other consideration,[35] or under seal,[36] releases the judgment as to all, unless the other joint debtors consent to such separate release.[37] In some jurisdictions, however, either by force of statute or the settled rulings of the courts, it is competent for the creditor to hold the other defendants liable on the judgment after having released one.[38]

In the absence of a clear indication of a contrary intention such a statute will not be held to be retrospective,[39] and therefore does not apply to judgments rendered before it became effective;[40] but such a statute has been held to apply to judgments rendered subsequent to the statute on obligations incurred prior thereto.[41] Under some statutes, a release or discharge in favor of one of several codebtors in solido discharges the others, unless the creditor expressly reserves his rights against the latter, but, where the creditor does make such reservation, he cannot recover from the remaining debtors more than their proportionate share.[42]

It has been stated that the judgment creditor may release the judgment as to one or all of the judgment debtors, as he sees fit,[43] and that the question whether or not a release of a judgment given to one of several joint debtors will release the judgment as to the others depends on the intention of the parties as shown in the release.[44] Thus, where the instrument shows an intention to limit the release to one or more of the joint judgment debtors and to proceed for the balance against the others,[45] as where the instrument releases one debtor from all liability or liens "so far as he is concerned,"[46] or where the creditor expressly reserves the right to enforce the judgment as to the others,[47] it has been held that the judgment is not released as to the remaining judgment debtors; but according to some authorities such a reservation is without effect.[48]

In some jurisdictions,[49] but not in other jurisdic-

has become final do not invalidate an agreement under which a judgment creditor accepts a sum less than the amount due under the judgment in full settlement thereof, where both parties know that the judgment is final.—Reinecke v. Pelham, supra.

Receipt of sum less than amount of judgment

tions,[50] the rule expressed in the foregoing paragraph as to the effect of the release of one joint judgment debtor as a release of all has been held applicable where the judgment was rendered in an action sounding in tort. The release of the other joint judgment debtors also results where one of the debtors is released by operation of law, as in the case of a surety relieved from liability by an unauthorized extension of time to his principal.[51]

§ 565. —— Agreement to Release or Satisfy

A judgment creditor may make a valid and binding agreement to release and satisfy the judgment on terms other than receiving payment of its amount, provided there is consideration. If the contract is executory, the judgment is not released until the contract is performed.

Provided there is consideration,[52] a judgment creditor may make a valid and binding agreement, either at the time the judgment is entered,[53] or subsequently, to release and satisfy it on other terms than receiving payment of its amount, as where he agrees to accept real or personal property, services, the transfer of another debt, or an exchange of securities.[54] If the consideration is already vested, the agreement itself operates in law as a satisfaction of the judgments;[55] but, if the contract is executory, there is no release of the judgment until it is performed,[56] and, while the creditor cannot rescind it without good cause,[57] the debtor is bound to perform its conditions punctually and fully, in default of which the creditor is remitted to his original rights under the judgment,[58] unless punctual performance is waived.[59]

It has further been held that, while an agreement, whereby defendant promises to discontinue the defense of a cause and plaintiff promises to accept a designated amount in full satisfaction of any judgment thereafter to be rendered, is supported by suf-

A judgment is an "obligation," within the meaning of a statute defining an executory accord as an agreement embodying a promise to accept at some future time a stipulated performance in satisfaction of any claim, cause of action, contract, or obligation, etc., so that, where a judgment creditor and a judgment debtor enter into such agreement to satisfy the judgment and the debtor performs his part of the contract, the creditor is bound thereby and cannot recover on the judgment.—Kingman Hardware Co. v. Connors, 58 N.Y.S.2d 700, 186 Misc. 90.

Compelling release

The court should compel the judgment creditor to release or satisfy the judgment, including attorney's fees and costs, where the judgment debtor has performed his part of an agreement with such creditor for the release and satisfaction of the judgment.—Cooke v. Harrington, 287 N.W. 837, 227 Iowa 145.

ficient consideration, if the other elements of accord and satisfaction are present,[60] and is enforceable when fully executed, even though it is made prior to the rendition of judgment,[61] such agreement, while executory, cannot be enforced.[62] The successors of a judgment creditor need not secure the consent of the judgment creditor's attorneys before consummating an agreement for the satisfaction of the judgment, even though they know of the inclusion of the attorney's fees in the judgment.[63]

Joint judgment debtors. A valid agreement between a judgment creditor and one of several joint judgment debtors calling for the satisfaction of the judgment as to all debtors is binding,[64] and a debtor, not a party to the agreement, may rely thereon, although such agreement is a contract under seal;[65] but the minds of the parties must meet as to the release of all the debtors.[66] However, an agreement by one joint judgment debtor to satisfy a judgment, if executory, does not release the remaining debtor until it is fully performed.[67]

§ 566. Set-Off of Judgment against Judgment

a. In general
b. Power of court
c. Discretion of court

a. In General

As a general rule, one judgment may be set off against another.

As a general rule, one judgment may be set off against another,[68] since a party should not be permitted to collect a judgment in his favor leaving unpaid a judgment against him.[69]

b. Power of Court

Courts have inherent power to order the set-off of mutual judgments.

The courts have power to order the set-off of mutual judgments.[70] This power formerly belonged exclusively to courts of equity,[71] and, of course, still continues in them;[72] but it has long been recognized as one which may be exercised equally by courts of law, proceeding on equitable principles.[73] Although in some jurisdictions a set-off of judgments is authorized by statute,[74] the power to order it does not fundamentally depend on statutes, but is independent of them;[75] it rests on the general and inherent jurisdiction and control of courts over their judgments, process, and suitors.[76]

The recognized remedy at law by motion is so convenient, speedy, and inexpensive, that the courts have shown no disposition to restrict unnecessarily the exercise of this power.[77] In difficult or complicated cases, however, a court of law will not act, but will remit the parties to equity,[78] the jurisdiction of a court of equity with relation to set-offs being more extensive than that of common-law courts.[79]

Staying proceedings until recovery of judgment. When the party claiming the benefit of a set-off cannot avail himself of the right in the trial of the action, the cause may be continued or execution stayed, if justice so requires, until the claimant obtains judgment, which may then be set off against the other.[80]

c. Discretion of Court

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, the set-off of mutual judgments is not demandable as of right, but rests in the discretion of the court.

Although it has been said that, while a court of law allows the setting off of judgments ex gratia,[81] a party applying to a court of equity is entitled to it as a matter of right,[82] or that in every proper case a set-off should be granted as of right[83] without regard to any distinction between the powers of courts of law and courts of equity,[84] the rule generally followed is that the set-off of judgment against judgment, unless given by statute as a matter of right,[85] is not demandable as of course, but rests in the discretion of the court,[86] regardless of the procedure adopted by the party seeking the relief.[87]

Such discretion is not an arbitrary one, but is controlled by established principles of equity.[88]

Therefore a set-off should be allowed only when, in view of all the circumstances, equity and good conscience require it to be made,[89] substantial justice will be promoted thereby,[90] and the rights and interests of third persons will not be infringed.[91] Thus even when the set-off may legally be made, if the court sees that injustice will be done by granting the order of set-off, it will be refused,[92] as where a third person is the equitable owner of the judgment which would be diminished thereby,[93] or where it would infringe on any other right of equal grade,[94] or where it would prejudice the rights of a bona fide assignee of the judgment[95] or of the demand on which one of the judgments was rendered.[96]

§ 567. —— Persons Entitled to

To entitle a person to have one judgment set off against another, he must be the real and beneficial owner of the judgment.

To entitle a person to have one judgment set off against another, he must be the real and beneficial owner of the judgment;[97] it is not enough that it stands in his name, if it is for the use of another.[98] On the other hand, equitable owners of judgments may set them off, although other parties appear as the nominal plaintiffs or defendants.[99]

a. In General

In order that a judgment may be set off against another judgment, it must be a valid, subsisting, and enforceable judgment, consisting of a final adjudication for the payment of money.

In order that a judgment may be set off against another judgment, it must be a valid,[1] subsisting,[2] and enforceable[3] judgment, consisting of a final adjudication[4] for the payment of money.[5] If the two judgments meet these requirements, the nature of the respective claims on which they were recovered,[6] the question whether such claims could have been set off,[7] and the manner in which the judgments were recovered[8] are immaterial, as is also, except in certain cases,[9] the fact that an execution has been issued on one or both of the judgments.[10]

Judgments in tort. Two judgments recovered in actions of tort may be set off.[11] Also there may be a set-off of a judgment recovered in an action ex contractu and one recovered in an action ex delicto.[12] The set-off may be refused, however, if it is equitable to do so,[13] as where the party asking the set-off is the tort-feasor and the tort, for which judgment was recovered, is of a character which implies an intent to injure,[14] or where the exemption laws would be defeated.[15]

b. Judgments of Different Courts

As a general rule, where the party seeking the set-off moves for it in the court where the judgment against himself subsists, such court has power to order the judgment of another court set off against its own.

an inferior court[17] or in another state,[18] or even though one judgment is in a state court and the other in a federal court.[19] In some jurisdictions resort to equity is necessary to obtain a set-off of judgments which have been recovered in different courts.[20]

c. Judgments between Different Parties

In order that one judgment may properly be set off against another, it is necessary that there should be mutuality of parties, unless there are circumstances making it equitable to set off judgments in which the parties are not the same.

In order that one judgment may properly be set off against another, it is necessary that there should be mutuality of parties,[21] unless there are peculiar circumstances making it equitable to set off judgments in which the parties are not the same,[22] as when the difference in parties is with respect to the nominal parties, and not the real parties in interest.[23] If there are joint plaintiffs or defendants in one of the judgments, it cannot ordinarily be set off against a judgment in which only one of them is concerned,[24] without the consent of the persons who are parties to only one of the judgments,[25] although some of the authorities permit it where each of the joint defendants is liable for the whole amount of the judgment;[26] and the set-off is proper where one of them is liable only in the character of a surety,[27] or is a nominal or formal party,[28] or where the owner of the judgment held singly is insolvent,[29] or even where one of the owners of the joint judgment is insolvent,[30] provided there is an apportionment of interest between him and the other owner.[31]

Judgments in individual and representative capacities. A judgment against a person in his individual capacity will not, as a general rule, be set off against a judgment in his favor in his representative capacity;[32] but a judgment in favor of the applicant against a cestui que trust has been set off against a judgment recovered by the trustee against such applicant.[33]

d. Judgments for Costs

A judgment for costs may be set off against a judgment recovered by the adverse party.

A judgment for costs may be set off against a judgment recovered by the adverse party,[34] provided the costs are liquidated or taxed at the time,[35] they belong to the party seeking the set-off,[36] he appears in the same capacity in the two judgments,[37] the debts are mutual,[38] and the judgment recovered by the adverse party is not exempt from attachment, levy, and sale.[39] A set-off of a judgment for costs against another judgment may be refused where it would be inequitable.[40] A set-off of a judgment for costs has been refused against a judgment obtained in another court and assigned to a third person, in the absence of pleading and proof of equitable grounds for such relief.[41] Where a creditor's bill is dismissed with costs, such costs cannot be set off against the judgment on which the bill was founded.[42]

Where a judgment debtor becomes the assignee of a judgment against his creditor, he may have it set off against the judgment against himself,[43] unless there are special circumstances in the case rendering the set-off inequitable.[44] A judgment debtor may purchase a judgment against his judgment creditor for the particular purpose of using it as a set-off[45] provided the purchase of judgment

Sound discretion of court

A judgment obtained by assignee by purchase may be set off against judgment against assignee in sound discretion of court.—Montalto v. Yeckley, 54 N.E.2d 421, 143 Ohio St. 181.

Mutuality

(1) In order for an assignee of a judgment to use it as a set-off against a judgment against him, mutuality is essential, that is, the judgments must be between the same parties in the same right.—Harrison v. Adams, 128 P.2d 9, 20 Cal.2d 646.

(2) In determining whether demand of assignee of a judgment against assignee's creditor, and the creditor's judgment against assignee are "mutual" so that they may be set off against each other, equity will look to the real parties in interest.—Harrison v. Adams, supra.

Lien

The court will not except the amount claimed as a lien on the assigned judgment where the assignee had no notice thereof.—Hill v. Brinkley, 10 Ind. 102.

Particular circumstances

(1) Where judgments were obtained against widow on notes executed by her as accommodation maker for her husband and, after settlement of judgments had been made by husband's estate, husband's heirs obtained assignments of judgments against widow for purpose of defeating widow's claim to unpaid dower, the right to set off such judgments against dower would be denied.—Needles v. Dougherty, 34 A.2d 396, 134 N.J.Eq. 108.

(2) The assignee of a judgment cannot use it as a set-off to defeat the debtor's exemption.—State Mutual Benefit Soc. v. Jackson, 13 Pa.Dist. & Co. 167, 20 Del.Co. 192, 78 Pittsb. Leg.J. 159.

(3) A trustee against which a divorced wife recovered judgment for past-due alimony after trustee had failed to comply with divorce decree ordering alimony to be paid out of income of trust funds payable to husband could not have deficiency judgment against husband and wife, purchased by trustee, set off against wife's judgment, especially where trustee purchased judgment at a time when it knew it was uncollectable, and wife had been compelled for years to be an object of charity, since wife's judgment dedicated a fund for her support, and it was entitled to the same protection as if it had been awarded against husband.—National Chautauqua County Bank of Jamestown v. Reynolds, 299 N.Y.S. 263, 164 Misc. 653, affirmed 4 N.Y.S.2d 176, 254 App.Div. 646.

45. Minn.—Barnes v. Verry, 191 N. W. 589, 154 Minn. 252, 31 A.L.R. 707.

34 C.J. p 711 note 53.

Time of purchase

The fact that judgment against plaintiff was purchased by defendant during pendency of suit in nature of creditor's bill brought by plaintiff as judgment creditor, to enforce collection of his judgment against defendant, did not preclude court in its sound discretion from permitting set-off of judgment pur-

against his judgment creditor is bona fide.[46] The assignee of the judgment to be used as a set-off must, however, be the absolute and beneficial owner of the judgment in order to enable him to use it as a set-off.[47] After a person has assigned a judgment recovered by him, he cannot use such judgment as a set-off against a judgment recovered against him[48] unless his judgment has been reassigned to him.[49]

(2) Set-Off against Assigned Judgment

As a general rule, one judgment may be set off against another although the latter judgment has been assigned to a third person for value, except where the assignee's equities are prior or superior.

On the principle that the assignee of a judgment takes it subject to all equities between the original parties, one judgment may be set off against another, as a general rule, although the latter judgment has been assigned to a third person for value,[50] especially where, because of the insolvency of the assignor at the time of the assignment, the party claiming the right of set-off had no other means of collecting his debt,[51] or where, in anticipation of an application to make the set-off, the assignment was made for the purpose of defeating the right.[52] Although it has been held that the right of set-off against the assignee is not defeated because he took without knowledge of such right,[53] there is no doubt that the position of the party seeking the set-off is much stronger where the assignee has notice of a judgment against his assignor such as may be set off against the assigned judgment[54] or where such person has no notice or knowledge of a prior assignment of the judgment against himself.[55]

The right of set-off must have existed at the time of the assignment;[56] there can be no right of set-off chased by defendant against plaintiff's judgment against defendant.—Montalto v. Yeckley, 54 N.E.2d 421, 143 Ohio St. 181.

Conditional purchase

(1) It has been held that the judgment cannot be set off, where it was purchased with the sole purpose of being used as a set-off and with an agreement to reassign it if a motion for such set-off should be refused.—Cornell v. Donovan, 13 N.Y.St. 704, affirmed 13 N.Y.St. 741—34 C.J. p 711 note 54.

(2) It has also been held that the fact that payment for the assigned judgment is made conditional on the assignee's ability to set it off does not deprive him of the right to the set-off.—Brown v. Lapp, 89 S.W. 304, 28 Ky.L. 409—McBrayer v. Dean, 33 S.W. 508, 100 Ky. 398, 18 Ky.L. 847.

Consideration

(1) An insolvent debtor cannot object to want of consideration for the assignment of a judgment obtained against him which the assignee has obtained for purposes of set-off.—People v. New York Ct. of C. Pl., 13 Wend., N.Y., 649, 28 Am.D. 495.

(2) The fact that defendant purchased judgment against plaintiff far below its face amount did not preclude court from permitting set-off of such judgment against plaintiff's judgment against defendant, but the low price was a fact which trial court could take into consideration in exercising its discretion.—Montalto v. Yeckley, 54 N.E.2d 421, 143 Ohio St. 181.

Where an interest assigned

Where defendant in action for recovery of possession of realty recovered money judgment against plaintiff under occupying claimants act, and assigned an interest in that judgment to third persons, and plaintiff brought action on supersedeas bond given by defendant to stay execution of judgment for possession, the judgment under the occupying claimants act could be offset by defendant against judgment in favor of plaintiff on supersedeas bond only to extent of defendant's interest in the judgment under the occupying claimants act.—Amberg v. of the judgments until both exist;[57] and the court will refuse to allow a set-off to the prejudice of an assignee for value and in good faith whose equities are prior or superior to those of the party seeking the set-off.[58] It has been held that an assignment of a demand before the entry of judgment on it gives to the assignee a superior equity to that of a party claiming a right to set off a judgment previously recovered against the assignor, and prevents the right of set-off from accruing,[59] and this has also been held to be true where a judgment was assigned before the recovery by the judgment debtor of a judgment in another action against the former judgment creditor.[60] However, these rules are sometimes relaxed and a set-off allowed where the circumstances render it equitable to do so,[61] as where the assignee took with notice of the existence of the judgment[62] or pendency of the action,[63] as the case may be, or delayed filing his assignment or making himself a party to the record.[64] Where a judgment is rendered in favor of two judgment creditors, and one of them, in good faith and for value assigns his interest to the other, the judgment debtor has no right to set off, as against the assignee, a judgment against the assignor purchased from a third person before the assignment.[65]

The purchase by a judgment creditor of another judgment owned by his debtor and sold on execution on the former judgment does not extinguish both judgments, but makes the purchaser the judgment creditor with respect to the judgment so sold.[66]

Effect of special fund for payment. A party entitled to set-off of judgments against each other, having subject to his control a special fund primarily applicable to the satisfaction of his judgment or decree, will not be permitted to avail himself of his right to set-off against the assignee of the judgment or decree against him until such special fund is exhausted,[67] and then only for any balance of his demand which may remain unsatisfied.[68]

§ 569. —— Proceedings to Obtain

As a general rule, a person seeking a set-off of judgment against judgment should apply to the court in which the judgment against himself was recovered. While the application for a set-off ordinarily may be made by motion, a set-off may also be obtained in an ordinary civil action or suit in equity.

A person seeking a set-off of judgment against judgment should apply to the court[69] in which the judgment against himself was recovered,[70] although it has been held that judgments in cross actions may be set off, when the parties in interest are the same, by the court in which one or both of the actions are pending,[71] and that a court of equity has jurisdiction to set off mutual judgments without regard to the courts in which the judgments were rendered.[72]

69. Tex.—Harris v. Ware, Civ.App., 144 S.W.2d 647.

Intervention of court necessary
A judgment debtor cannot, without intervention of the court, set off the judgment of his creditor with a judgment in debtor's favor against the creditor, such intervention being necessary in order that there may be an adjudication of question of mutual liability and other equitable rights involved.—Harris v. Ware, supra.

Character of proceeding
A proceeding to set off judgments, whether by motion or action, is equitable in character.—Bouchey v. Gilliland, 26 P.2d 451, 138 Kan. 404.

made by motion,[73] and notice given to the opposite party[74] and all other parties whose rights and interests are affected.[75] On such motion no formal pleadings are necessary.[76] The right to set off one judgment or decree against another on motion or summary application exists only in those cases where the debts on both sides have been finally liquidated by judgment or decree.[77]

In addition to the remedy by motion, a set-off of judgments may also be obtained in an ordinary civil action[78] or suit in equity.[79] A formal action or a bill in equity is proper where the rights of the parties are complicated or not definitely fixed, or where there are intervening equities,[80] and in such a case the court may meanwhile protect the rights of the parties by enjoining the collection of one or both of the judgments or otherwise.[81]

The denial of a motion to set off judgments is not a bar to an action[82] or suit in equity[83] to compel such set-off. In a proceeding to set off judgments the court may not impose conditions affecting the amount of either judgment,[84] although, where a portion of a judgment has been assigned under circumstances giving the assignment precedence over the set-off, the rights of the assignee will be protected.[85]

Time of application. An application to have judgments set off should be made at the earliest practicable opportunity, and, if delayed until the interests of third persons have intervened, the set-off may properly be denied,[86] but it would appear that,

Application prior to judgment
The trial court was authorized to determine defendant's right to set off a judgment at a hearing held after judgment in instant case had been entered, notwithstanding defendant's application for order to show cause pursuant to which the hearing was held, was made prior to judgment, before the right of set-off had accrued under statute.—Lee v. Sioux Falls Motor Co., 274 N.W. 614, 65 S.D. 401.

if no such interests intervene, the application may be granted at any time while the judgments remain valid and enforceable demands.[87] A set-off of a judgment on motion will not be refused merely because the party has neglected an opportunity to set off the subject of the judgment, or the judgment itself, on the trial,[88] although it has been held otherwise where it is attempted to enforce the set-off in equity[89] or by pleading it as such in an action on the other judgment.[90]

Tender or payment of difference. A judgment creditor may have a lesser judgment held by him set off against a larger judgment against him without a tender or payment of the difference.[91]

Intervention is sometimes allowed in a proceeding to set off judgments.[92]

Order or judgment. Adverse judgments between the same parties are extinguished only by an order of the court, by some act of the parties themselves, or some action of the officer having both executions for collection.[93] A set-off judgment may be modified by the court in a proper case.[94]

§ 570. —— Operation and Effect

The allowance of a set-off of judgment against judgment extinguishes them both if they are equal in amount, or satisfies the smaller judgment in full and the larger proportionately.

The allowance of a set-off of judgment against judgment extinguishes them both if they are equal in amount, or satisfies the smaller judgment in full and the larger proportionately.[95] If the set-off is refused, it leaves the rights of the parties as before[96] and does not prejudice the right of one of them to require the sheriff to set off executions in his hands on the two judgments.[97] Where a judgment recovered against a principal is allowed in set-off against a judgment in favor of the surety, it is not thereby extinguished,[98] but the transaction amounts to an assignment of it to the surety.[99]

Remittitur and release. The party holding the larger judgment may be ordered to enter a remittitur on his judgment for the amount of the smaller judgment,[1] and the party moving for the set-off may be required to execute a release.[2]

is valid,[5] in force, and unsatisfied.[6] Where a judgment is so pleaded, a recovery by plaintiff will either extinguish the judgment or satisfy it pro tanto according to its amount with relation to plaintiff's claim;[7] but where a party offers a judgment together with certain notes and accounts under a plea of payment, all of which are allowed, and the notes and accounts alone amount to a larger sum than the claim against him, the judgment remains in full force.[8]

Setting up opponent's right to set-off. Regardless of whether or not a party has the right to plead the set-off of his opponent,[9] there is no rule of law prohibiting him from setting up his opponent's judgment and asking that it be credited against his claim.[10]

Judgment between different parties. The set-off of a judgment against a claim cannot be allowed unless there is a substantial identity of the parties.[11] A joint judgment debt cannot be set off against a separate debt,[12] nor can a separate judgment debt be set off against a joint debt;[13] but a judgment against two parties, each of whom is severally liable for it, may be set off against the individual claim of one of them,[14] and a judgment for one party may be set off against a claim against two parties, for which each is severally liable.[15]

b. Assigned Judgments and Claims

The assignee of a judgment may use it by way of set-off in an action brought against him by the debtor in the judgment, provided, in some jurisdictions, he acquired the judgment before the commencement of the action.

The assignee of a judgment may use it by way of set-off in an action brought against him by the debtor in the judgment,[16] provided, in some jurisdictions,[17] but not in others,[18] he acquired the judgment before the commencement of such action, and provided also, in some jurisdictions, the assignment is in writing so that it is a legal, rather than a mere equitable, assignment.[19]

In an action by the assignee of a claim, a judgment recovered by defendant against the assignor after the assignment may not be relied on as a set-off or counterclaim[20] unless there are circumstances calling for a relaxation of the rule,[21] as where the assignor is insolvent and the judgment was recovered without knowledge of the assignment.[22] Where the assignee of a claim is not the beneficial owner thereof, defendant may set off a judgment against his assignor.[23] In an action by assignees for the benefit of creditors in their own right on an indemnity contract for an employee's defalcation, judgments rendered against the assignor have been held not pleadable as offsets.[24]

§ 572. Set-Off of Claim against Judgment

a. In general
b. Against assigned judgments

a. In General

Subject to some exceptions, in an action or other proceeding to collect a judgment the debtor may set off any legal demands against the plaintiff which he owned at the time of the bringing of the suit, and on which he could have brought a suit in his own name.

Although in some jurisdictions it has been held that, in the absence of an agreement therefor,[25] a claim not reduced to judgment may not be set off against a judgment,[26] it is generally held that, in an action or other proceeding to collect a judgment, the debtor may set off any legal demands against plaintiff which he owned at the time of the bringing of the suit, and on which he could have brought a suit in his own name,[27] unless the claim proposed

In proceeding in aid of execution, judgment debtor could obtain an equitable set-off of any financial obligation due from judgment creditor arising subsequent to the action and presently capable of ascertainment and judicial determination by the court.—Southern Surety Co. of New York v. Maney, 121 P.2d 295, 190 Okl. 129.

Judgment debtor held not owner of claim asserted as set-off.—Randolph Junior College v. Isaacks, Tex. Civ.App., 140 S.W.2d 459.

Partnership indebtedness not arising from, or connected with, transaction in which note was given cannot be set off against judgment thereon. —Porter v. Kahl, Tex.Civ.App., 12 S.W.2d 674.

Pleading and proof

In action by passenger for injuries, court properly refused to credit judgment against bus company with sum paid on passenger's hospital fees, where pleading and proof were not sufficiently specific.—South Plains Coaches v. Behringer, Tex.Civ.App., 32 S.W.2d 959, error dismissed.

Time of application

An automobile dealer, attempting to defeat finance company's right to apply amount of "dealer's reserve," held by such company as additional security against loss on automobile mortgages taken over by it from dealer, to reduction of dealer's obligations to company, has been held not entitled to application thereof as credit on principal amount of judgment recovered by company in its action against dealer for amount due on such mortgages, before addition of interest or attorney's fees—Franzen v. Universal Credit Co., Tex.Civ. App., 132 S.W.2d 148, error dismissed, judgment correct.

to be set off is unliquidated or disputed,[28] or is a joint claim where the judgment is several or vice versa,[29] or the right of set-off has been concluded by a former judgment,[30] or the effect of the set-off would be to attack and impair a judgment regularly entered in another action,[31] or unless, except under the statutes of some jurisdictions,[32] it could have been pleaded in defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered.[33] The dismissal of a creditor's suit on the ground that the judgment creditor is indebted to the judgment debtor on a note in an amount equal or greater than the amount of the judgment does not satisfy the judgment.[34]

Assigned claim. It has been held that a judgment debtor may set off claims against the creditor which were acquired after assignment of the judgment to a third person but prior to notice to the debtor of the assignment.[35] In order for an assignee of a claim to use it as a set-off against a judgment against him, the assignee must be the beneficial owner of the claim.[36]

Claim of federal government. Under the federal statute, 31 U.S.C.A. § 227, it has been held that the federal government is required to reduce to judgment a claim sought to be set off against a judgment debt due by it whenever the judgment creditor denies the claim or refuses to consent to the set-off.[37]

Claim of municipal corporation. Under some statutes a municipal corporation may compel the set-off of its claim against a judgment creditor as against the judgment debt due by it, where the judgment creditor fails to authorize a set-off.[38]

b. Against Assigned Judgments

As a general rule the assignee of a judgment takes it subject to the right of the defendant to set off against it any valid claims which he has against the assignor, and which would be good as a set-off against the judgment in the assignor's hands.

As a general rule the assignee of a judgment takes it subject to the right of the debtor to set off against it any valid claims which he has against the assignor, and which would be good as a set-off against the judgment in the assignor's hands,[39] although it has been held that the assignee will be protected if he had no notice of the judgment debtor's right to a set-off.[40] According to some cases the judgment debtor can set off only such claims or demands as accrued to him or were acquired by him before receiving notice of the assignment of the judgment,[41] and not those accruing or acquired with

(2) It has also been held that where comptroller general of the United States had three distinct opportunities to reduce claim against veteran to judgment so as to obtain set-off against insurance judgment in favor of veteran but failed to exercise opportunity, the court would not grant another opportunity to have the court determine the question.—Hines v. knowledge of the assignment.[42] It has also been held, however, that when the judgment creditor is insolvent a court of equity will allow the set-off in cases where, although the right thereto had not actually accrued at the time of the assignment, yet a liability then existed under which a right of set-off against the insolvent subsequently accrued.[43] It has also been held that in an action on a judgment in the name of a judgment creditor, for the benefit of an assignee of the judgment, defendant cannot set off a debt due to him from the assignee.[44]

§ 573. Satisfaction by Execution or Enforcement

a. Levy of execution
b. Sale on execution
c. Payment of execution
d. Return of execution
e. Arrest of defendant on capias or execution

a. Levy of Execution

The levy of an execution on sufficient personal property of the judgment debtor to pay the judgment amounts prima facie, and as long as the levy continues in force, to a satisfaction of the judgment, as between the parties thereto. A levy of execution on real estate, as a general rule, does not amount even prima facie to a satisfaction of the judgment.

The levy of an execution on sufficient personal property of the judgment debtor to pay the judgment amounts prima facie, and as long as the levy continues in force, to a satisfaction of the judgment, as between the parties thereto.[45] If the judgment creditor denies the actual satisfaction of the judgment, the burden is on him to prove that the execution and levy for some sufficient reason failed to result in payment of the judgment.[46] Since a levy of execution on real estate of the judgment debtor does not interfere with the title or possession of the debtor, it does not amount even prima facie to a satisfaction of the judgment.[47] It is otherwise if the creditor takes and retains possession of the land,[48] or if it is set off and delivered to him under an elegit or otherwise.[49]

The presumption of satisfaction of a judgment from levy on personal property is rebutted by proof that defendant was not in fact deprived of his property as the result of the levy;[50] that he tortiously or fraudulently recovered it from the possession of the officer;[51] that it was taken under a senior execution or other prior lien[52] or otherwise removed from the possession of plaintiff or the officer by process of law;[53] that the property levied on did not in fact belong to defendant[54] or was insufficient to satisfy the judgment,[55] or generally that the property could not be made available for the satisfaction of plaintiff's claims,[56] without any fault or negligence on his part,[57] although if it is lost or wasted by the fault or neglect of the sheriff, the rule, except in some jurisdictions,[58] is that the judgment is satisfied.[59] A levy on real property cannot be deemed a satisfaction where its enforcement is prohibited by a decree of court.[60]

Release or surrender of levy. If property levied on under execution is abandoned or surrendered or restored to the judgment debtor, either on his giving collateral security or voluntarily by the creditor, so that the latter derives no benefit from his execution, there is no satisfaction of the judgment,[61] at least as between the parties, although it is said to be otherwise as against other creditors of the judgment defendant.[62]

Levy on property of person jointly liable. Except in some jurisdictions,[63] a joint judgment against two defendants is prima facie satisfied by levy of execution on the property of one of them;[64] but there is no absolute satisfaction if the levy proves unproductive or the property is released or restored to the debtor,[65] unless the other defendant occupies the position of a mere surety,[66] and not even then, according to some decisions.[67] It has been held that a plaintiff who has recovered separate judgments against joint trespassers and taken out execution on one of them, without obtaining satisfaction, cannot maintain an action on any of the other judgments.[68]

b. Sale on Execution

(1) In general
(2) Void or irregular sale

(1) In General

Ordinarily, where property of the debtor is sold on execution, and the sale stands, the judgment is satisfied to the extent of the net proceeds of the sale.

Ordinarily, where property of the debtor is sold on execution, and the sale stands, the judgment is satisfied to the extent of the net proceeds of the sale.[69] The judgment under which the sale is made, as distinguished from some other judgment,[70] is extinguished by the sale on execution and the payment of the amount bid when sufficient to cover the amount due and costs.[71] It is sufficient for this purpose if the money is actually collected by the sheriff or paid into court.[72] Also the judgment is satisfied where plaintiff receipts the execution, even though as a matter of fact he gives credit and the purchaser does not perform his obligation.[73] Usually, if the judgment creditor himself becomes the purchaser at the sale, the judgment is satisfied in full if he bids the whole amount due him, otherwise pro tanto,[74] provided, in jurisdictions where this is necessary, the sale is reported to, and confirmed by, the court,[75] and the sheriff's deed is executed to the judgment creditor.[76] In the absence of a statute to the contrary,[77] it has been held that the fact that the value of the property purchased by the judgment creditor exceeds the amount of the judgment does not render such purchase a satisfaction of the judgment where the purchase price was less than the amount of the judgment.[78] It has also been held that a redemption from a sheriff's sale under a prior judgment is not a satisfaction of the junior judgment of the redeeming creditor.[79]

Mortgaged property. The facts that plaintiff causes an execution to be levied on defendant's property and at the sale thereunder bids a sum sufficient to pay his judgment and costs do not operate as a payment of his judgment where the property is covered by a mortgage and is subsequently

Redemption statute

Where property is redeemed under redemption statute by judgment creditor and the value of the property exceeds the amount of judgment, and the sum paid for redemption, the judgment on which the right of redemption is based is satisfied and discharged.—Hughes v. taken thereunder so that plaintiff realizes nothing on his judgment.[80]

(2) Void or Irregular Sale

If a sale on execution is set aside or held to be invalid by reason of any defects or irregularities, the judgment is not discharged. The authorities are divided on the question as to whether the purchaser's bid is a satisfaction of the judgment to the extent of the sum bid, where the sale was invalid because the debtor had no title to the property sold.

If a sale on execution is set aside or held to be invalid by reason of any defects or irregularities, the judgment is not discharged[81] although the purchaser paid the amount bid[82] and the judgment creditor's attorneys signed a receipt acknowledging that judgment was satisfied.[83] It has been held that, notwithstanding the invalidity of the sale and its failure to satisfy the judgment, the debtor may show that the purchase price was received by agreement in satisfaction of the judgment.[84]

Where the sale was invalid because the debtor had no title to the property sold, the question whether the purchaser's bid is a satisfaction of the judgment to the extent of the sum bid is one on which the authorities are divided.[85] In some jurisdictions the judgment is held to be satisfied,[86] especially where the judgment creditor himself was the purchaser.[87] In other jurisdictions there is no satisfaction of the judgment under such circumstances,[88] and a creditor who has himself purchased the property may obtain relief in a court of equity;[89] but a remedy in equity does not exist when the title acquired is good so far as it goes but does not confer the quantum of estate which the purchaser expected to get under his purchase.[90] The jurisdiction in equity is not taken away by the creation of a remedy by statute.[91] Where a statutory remedy exists[92] it should be liberally construed.[93]

A sale of exempt property is a satisfaction according to some authorities,[94] but not according to other authorities.[95]

c. Payment of Execution

A judgment is satisfied where the sheriff or other officer holding an execution on the judgment and authorized to receive payment receives a sufficient amount of lawful money in payment.

A judgment is satisfied where the sheriff or other officer holding an execution on the judgment,[96] and authorized to receive payment,[97] receives a sufficient amount in lawful money in payment,[98] whether the payment is lent or advanced to him;[99] but where money is paid by a third person to a sheriff who has in his hands an execution, with the expectation and intention that the judgment creditor shall assign to him the judgment on which the execution was issued, which the judgment creditor does, the transaction is a purchase, and not a payment of the judgment.[1]

d. Return of Execution

A satisfaction of a judgment may be shown by an officer's return of execution certified in a manner prescribed by law.

A satisfaction of a judgment may be shown by an officer's return of execution certified in the manner prescribed by law.[2] The return of an execution "satisfied" is presumptive,[3] or, according to some of the cases, conclusive,[4] evidence of the satisfaction of the judgment, except where it recites an irregular or unauthorized act on the part of the officer.[5] Where the officer actually received satisfaction of the execution, the judgment is discharged, although he makes no return on the execution or makes a false return,[6] but, on the other hand, no satisfaction is shown from the mere fact that an execution was issued and never returned.[7]

e. Arrest of Defendant on Capias or Execution

The arrest and imprisonment of a judgment debtor on an execution or a capias ad satisfaciendum do not work an absolute discharge or extinguishment of the judgment.

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise,[8] the arrest and imprisonment of a judgment debtor on an execution or a capias ad satisfaciendum constitute a satisfaction of the judgment in such sense that, while the imprisonment lasts, no proceedings may be taken against his property,[9] and no inconsistent remedy may be maintained by the judgment creditor against a third person,[10] but they do not work an absolute discharge or extinguishment of the judgment.[11]

Release or escape of debtor. At common law the discharge of defendant from custody under a capias, by the voluntary act of plaintiff, operated as an absolute satisfaction of the judgment,[12] but in a number of jurisdictions this rule has been changed by statutes which preserve the right of the creditor if the debtor is voluntarily discharged.[13] Further proceedings on the judgment are not precluded if defendant regains his liberty by an escape[14] or by operation of the law.[15]

Release of joint debtor. In the absence of a statute providing otherwise,[16] the release or escape of one joint defendant who is imprisoned discharges the judgment as to all defendants.[17]

§ 574. Other Means of Satisfaction

A decree against an administrator may be satisfied by the distribution of the estate according to law.

A decree against an administrator may be satisfied by the distribution of the estate according to law.[18] A sale by a creditor to a debtor of an execution issued on a judgment satisfies the claim of plaintiff.[19]

Purchase by creditor at foreclosure sale. Where plaintiff lent money to defendant, taking a deed to land subject to a contract to convey to a third person on payment by such person of an amount equal to the sum lent defendant, and on default of defendant obtained a judgment against him for such amount and foreclosed the land contract and bought at the sale, bidding an amount equal to the judgment against defendant, the judgment was thereby satisfied, the creditor's position being the same as that of a mortgagee buying at a foreclosure sale.[20] cause of action against the same defendant, there can be but one satisfaction, and, therefore, the payment or discharge of either judgment satisfies the other, except as to costs.

Where two judgments are recovered on the same cause of action against the same defendant, there can be but one satisfaction, and, therefore, the payment or discharge of either judgment satisfies the other,[21] except as to costs.[22] Where a judgment is rendered on the judgment of a court of another state, a payment of either judgment discharges the obligation of the other judgment.[23]

Where one of the judgments is for a smaller amount than the other, it has been held that the satisfaction of the smaller does not satisfy the larger in full,[24] although other authorities hold that it does,[25] notwithstanding an agreement between the creditor and the debtor that the payment of the smaller judgment shall be only a pro tanto satisfaction of the larger judgment;[26] but the creditor cannot be deprived of his right to elect to refuse satisfaction of the smaller judgment.[27]

§ 576. —— Against Different Persons

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, where several judgments are rendered against different persons for the same cause of action, payment of one of the judgments is a satisfaction of all, except as to costs.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary,[28] where several judgments are rendered against different persons for the same cause of action, payment of one of the judgments is a satisfaction of all,[29] except as to costs,[30] which may be collected on all the judgments,[31] unless a statute provides otherwise;[32] but where several persons are liable on the same cause of action, and are sued in the same action, and separate judgments are rendered against each, the replevy of one of the judgments is not a merger and satisfaction of the others.[33]

§ 577. Operation and Effect of Satisfaction

The satisfaction of a judgment by one primarily liable thereon operates to extinguish it for all purposes, and also to extinguish the original debt or claim.

The satisfaction of a judgment by one primarily liable thereon operates to extinguish it for all purposes,[34] notwithstanding its assignment to him or to another for him,[35] although it has been held otherwise where the assignment is to a third person for such person's benefit.[36] Although there is authority to the contrary,[37] a judgment once satisfied cannot afterward be restored or kept alive by the agreement of the parties that it shall stand as security for other debts or liabilities, whether to the same or another plaintiff.[38]

Satisfaction by one primarily liable also extinguishes the original debt or claim,[39] and in an action for the price of goods sold will operate as a transfer of title thereto,[40] but in a second action which is not between the same parties, or does not relate to exactly the same claim or demand, the effect of the satisfaction can extend no further than the issues in fact litigated and determined in the action wherein the judgment was recovered.[41] By accepting payment of a judgment and acknowledging satisfaction thereof, a person has been held to admit only the finality and conclusiveness of the judgment as between the parties thereto.[42]

§ 578. —— Recovery of Payments

The recovery of money paid on a judgment or execution in general is considered in the C.J.S. title Payment § 143, also 48 C.J. p 740 notes 78, 79, p 741 notes 80–84. The restitution of money paid where a judgment is reversed is considered in the title Appeal and Error §§ 1980–1985.

§ 579. Entry of Satisfaction

According to the usual practice, when a judgment is satisfied, an entry acknowledging or certifying that fact should be made on the record or judgment docket, although it has been held that such entry is not essential to a satisfaction.

According to the usual practice, when a judgment is satisfied, an entry acknowledging or certifying that fact should be made on the record or judgment docket,[43] although it has been held that such entry is not essential to a satisfaction.[44] The entry may be made by the clerk of the court on direction of plaintiff or the owner of the judgment[45] or his attorney of record,[46] or on the return of an execution "satisfied,"[47] or proper evidence of release,[48] or, under statute,[49] but not at common law,[50] on receipt by the clerk of payment. The entry of satisfaction by the clerk is a mere minis-

Partial payments on a judgment should be credited of record.[55]

§ 580. —— Satisfaction Piece

A satisfaction piece is a written memorandum acknowledging satisfaction of the judgment and authorizing the clerk to make entry thereof on the roll.

A satisfaction piece is a written memorandum acknowledging satisfaction of the judgment[56] and authorizing the clerk to make entry thereof on the roll.[57] It must identify and describe the judgment,[58] be duly executed by the judgment creditor[59] or his attorney,[60] on the request of the judgment debtor or other person who was liable to pay, and has paid, the judgment,[61] be witnessed or otherwise proved,[62] delivered to the judgment debtor,[63] and entered on the judgment roll.[64] Execution and acknowledgment of a satisfaction are acts of equal deliberation and solemnity with execution of an instrument under seal[65] and discharge the judgment,[66] although the consideration therefor is less than the judgment.[67]

Construction. A written instrument filed pursuant to statute governing satisfaction of judgments ordinarily should not be extended beyond its express terms, unless such a construction is required by some well-recognized rule of law.[68]

can be based only on matter arising subsequent to the judgment, not for causes accruing prior to its rendition or which might have been set up in defense to the action[70] or which were litigated and decided on a previous motion or other proceeding,[71] and, on the other hand, a motion to compel satisfaction may not be resisted on any ground which existed at the time the judgment was rendered, and which might have been urged at the trial.[72]

The duty to satisfy of record a judgment or decree, on full performance by the party bound thereby, follows as a necessary incident of the power of the court to enforce its orders[73] and prevent an abuse of its process,[74] and, therefore, in ordering satisfaction on an application therefor, the court acts judicially.[75]

Where the court's power to order a judgment to be marked satisfied is entirely statutory,[76] and the statute conferring it is in derogation of the common law and deprives a party of trial by jury, it must be strictly construed[77] and restricted to cases of actual payment in full,[78] wherein there is no substantial dispute about the facts.[79] Independently of such statute, however, and in all cases where the statute does not apply, the court has power to order an issue to try whether or not the judgment has been paid or discharged, and if the jury find that it has, the court may order a perpetual stay of execution[80] and defendant may then compel plaintiff to enter satisfaction.[81]

Satisfaction as to all. The court should never entertain jurisdiction of a motion to enter satisfaction as to any of the parties to the judgment, unless it is to be a satisfaction entirely and as to all.[82]

Credit of partial payments. The court will order partial payments on a judgment to be credited of record on proper proceedings for that purpose,[83] brought by a person entitled to such relief.[84]

b. Form of Proceeding

(1) Motion or rule to show cause
(2) Civil action or bill in equity

(1) Motion or Rule to Show Cause

As a general rule, an application to compel entry of satisfaction of a judgment should be in the form of a motion in the court which rendered the judgment.

As a general rule, an application to the court to compel the entry of satisfaction of a judgment should be in the form of a motion,[85] in the court which rendered the judgment,[86] and entitled as of the original action.[87] Also, sometimes by virtue of statutory provision,[88] a motion is the proper remedy for obtaining credit, or satisfaction pro tanto, of record for partial payments.[89] However, a remedy by motion provided by statute in cases where any payment has been made is not available when defendant has not made any payment,[90] but seeks rather to enforce a parol contract for the sale of land to plaintiff on condition that the judgment should be satisfied as part of the purchase price.[91]

A motion to have satisfaction of a judgment entered of record on the ground of payment since its rendition is merely a motion in a cause still pending, and is neither a special proceeding nor a civil action.[92] While it has been held to be a legal and not an equitable proceeding,[93] it has also been held to be a proceeding equitable in nature.[94]

The motion should be to set aside the execution and enter satisfaction, and not to set aside the execution and cancel the judgment.[95] Sometimes the motion is in the form of a regular complaint;[96] and the fact that it is denominated a "supplemental petition," instead of a motion, is not fatal.[97]

Rule to show cause. Under some statutes the remedy is by application for a rule to show cause why the judgment should not be marked satisfied of record.[98] Also the proper mode of obtaining credit on a judgment for a partial payment has been held to be a rule to show cause.[99]

Audita querela. Formerly relief was granted on audita querela,[1] and perhaps resort may be had to this remedy,[2] notwithstanding the existence of a remedy by motion,[3] but in most jurisdictions the remedy by audita querela has fallen into disuse and is now obsolete, the more convenient and less expensive remedy by motion having taken its place.[4]

(2) Civil Action or Bill in Equity

In some jurisdictions an ordinary civil action may be brought to have a judgment declared satisfied.

In some code states, a judgment may be declared paid and satisfied in an ordinary civil action brought for that purpose, without regard to whether the proceeding is at law or in equity,[5] and such an action and a motion to obtain a satisfaction of record have been held concurrent remedies;[6] but if the facts are so controverted and the rights of third persons so involved that the court declines to determine the matter on motion an action is the only proper remedy.[7]

Bill in equity. Relief usually is not obtainable on a bill in equity alleging satisfaction, since the parties have a full and complete remedy at law,[8] although in some jurisdictions the remedy by motion and that by bill have been held concurrent,[9] and a bill will lie where equitable relief is also asked which cannot be had on motion in a court of law,[10] or where complicated and difficult questions are involved, in which cases a bill in equity is deemed the most appropriate remedy.[11]

c. Parties and Notice

Either party to the judgment, or a person having some legal or equitable interest in the satisfaction thereof, is entitled to have it satisfied of record. Notice of motion or rule to compel entry of satisfaction should be given plaintiff or the party adversely interested.

Either party to the judgment,[12] or a person having some legal or equitable interest in the satisfaction thereof,[13] is entitled to apply to the court in which it has been recovered to have it satisfied of record. Notice of a motion or rule to compel entry of satisfaction of a judgment should be given plaintiff or the party adversely interested.[14] The court will not order satisfaction of a judgment to be entered unless all the parties interested therein are brought before it and have an opportunity to be heard,[15] and an order made without notice to a party in interest will be void.[16] The person owning the judgment is a necessary party to a proceeding to have satisfaction thereof entered.[17] An action to obtain satisfaction may be brought directly against an assignee,[18] joining the assignor[19] and the sheriff holding an execution[20] as parties defendant; but where the proceeding is by motion or rule, it must be solely between the original parties to the judgment, and no stranger may be brought in or intervene.[21]

d. Pleading and Evidence

General rules as to pleading and evidence are applicable in proceedings to compel satisfaction of judgment.

In an action to have a judgment declared satisfied, the petition or complaint must clearly allege the fact of payment or the other circumstances relied on as discharging the judgment,[22] but it need not allege that the person in whose favor the judgment was obtained was the legal owner thereof at the time of the alleged payment.[23] A reply must not depart from the complaint.[24] In a suit for an accounting on a judgment, it has been held that the judgment creditor could, without pleading it, deny that he received the consideration expressed on the face of a release.[25]

The burden of proving payment is on the party

The statute of limitations has been held not a defense in an action to compel entry of satisfaction.—Wilson v. Brookshire, 25 N.E. 131, 126 Ind. 497, 9 L.R.A. 792—Palmer v. Hayes, 13 N.E. 882, 112 Ind. 289.

asserting it;[26] and the burden of proving any ground relied on affirmatively in opposition to the motion falls on the judgment creditor.[27] The court will not compel entry of satisfaction unless the evidence in support of it is entirely clear, certain,[28] and uncontradicted.[29] Likewise a credit of partial payments will not be ordered unless the evidence is clear and satisfactory.[30] Under some statutes the court may order entry of satisfaction without the formal showing necessary to justify the clerk of court in entering satisfaction.[31]

e. Trial or Hearing

A motion to enter satisfaction of a judgment should not be decided in a summary manner if the facts relied on are seriously disputed and controverted.

Since a motion to enter satisfaction of a judgment is a substitute for the ancient writ of audita querela, if the facts relied on are seriously disputed and controverted, the court should not undertake to decide the question in a summary manner, but should direct an issue to be tried by a jury,[32] or order a reference to ascertain the facts,[33] unless the parties, without asking for a jury or reference, submit the issues to the court alone for trial.[34] In some jurisdictions the court may hear and determine the issue on affidavits and counter-affidavits,[35] provided they are not in contradiction of the record.[36]

f. Determination and Order

Where the court is satisfied that the judgment has been fully paid or satisfied, it enters an order directing the clerk to enter satisfaction.

Where the court is satisfied that the judgment has been fully paid or satisfied, it enters an order directing the clerk to enter satisfaction,[37] and such an order and entry are a matter of strict right.[38] Relief not within the scope of the motion or original order to show cause may not be granted.[39] It is not proper to cancel or strike off the judgment;[40] but a perpetual stay of proceedings may be granted.[41] An order of court, made on due application and hearing, requiring satisfaction to be entered, is a judicial act, and entitled to all the respect due to a record,[42] although it may be impeached for fraud or collusion.[43] Where there is a serious controversy as to the facts, the motion may be dismissed and the parties remitted to a regular action.[44] Where the court declines to take jurisdiction, its overruling of the motion is not a bar to an application for relief in equity;[45] but where it denies the motion after a hearing the determination is conclusive, as to all matters litigated and adjudicated, in a subsequent proceeding to revive the judgment.[46]

g. Appeal and Costs

An order entered on a motion to compel satisfaction of a judgment is appealable. Costs and expenses of a successful application may be charged to the party who wrongfully refuses to satisfy the judgment.

An order entered on a motion to compel satisfaction of a judgment is appealable,[47] and, at lease in some jurisdictions, may be reviewed by certiorari.[48] An intermediate court will not take jurisdiction of an appeal while an appeal to a higher court is pending.[49] The costs and expenses of a successful application for satisfaction may be charged to the party who wrongfully refuses to satisfy the judgment.[50]

§ 582. —— Actions and Penalties for Failure to Satisfy

Under some statutes an action may be maintained to recover a penalty or damages against a judgment creditor for neglect or refusal to satisfy a judgment of record when it has been paid.

Under some statutes penalties are provided against a judgment creditor who, within a certain period after being requested to do so, neglects or refuses to satisfy a judgment of record when the judgment has been paid.[51] Such a statute is penal and, therefore, according to the familiar rule for the construction of such statutes, is not to be extended beyond its plain terms.[52] To sustain an action on the statute plaintiff must be a party aggrieved by the refusal to enter satisfaction,[53] the refusal must be willful, and not based on an honest contention that the judgment has not been paid,[54] and the failure to enter satisfaction must be due to the creditor's own fault or neglect, not to that of an officer over whom he has no control.[55] The action is justified where there has not been a formal entry of satisfaction,[56] although it will not be supported by an allegation of payment before entry of judgment.[57] The form of action may be either debt or assumpsit.[58]

If the statute awards damages instead of a fixed penalty, the jury are at liberty to consider all the circumstances by which the debtor suffered vexation and inconvenience,[59] but it is not necessary to plead or prove actual damage resulting from the refusal to enter satisfaction.[60] The remedy thus provided is exclusive;[61] but in the absence of such a statute an action for damages will lie for the same purpose.[62]

Action on the case. In some jurisdictions an action on the case for failure to satisfy a judgment is authorized and regulated by statute.[63] The declaration may describe the judgment as being for a certain sum "with costs," without specifying the amount of costs,[64] but a variance between the amount of the judgment alleged and the amount proved is fatal.[65]

§ 583. —— Effect

Ordinarily a satisfaction of a judgment, entered of record by the act of the parties, is prima facie evidence that the creditor has received payment of the amount of the judgment or its equivalent, and operates as an extinguishment of the debt.

A satisfaction of a judgment, entered of record by the act of the parties, is prima facie evidence that the creditor has received payment of the amount of the judgment or its equivalent,[66] and operates as an extinguishment of the debt[67] and a bar to further proceedings which continue on the theory that the judgment remains a subsisting obligation,[68] except where the satisfaction was procured by fraud[69] or duress,[70] or without consideration,[71] or on a condition which has not been performed,[72] or was entered by the clerk without authority to do so.[73] Thus, unless the case comes within such exceptions, no action lies on a satisfied judgment,[74] and no further execution may issue, even with the consent of the parties,[75] until the satisfaction is vacated and a new execution awarded by an order of the court in which the judgment was rendered.[76] It has been held that the entry cannot be impeached or inquired into collaterally.[77] Parties to an action cannot defeat a master's fees included in a decree by filing satisfaction papers, where the master is not represented or consenting in any way thereto.[78]

Entry without notice. An entry of payment or satisfaction of a final judgment or decree, made at a term subsequent to its rendition, is not binding on a party in interest, nor is it evidence against him, when made without notice to him.[79]

Entry of satisfaction as to one of two judgment debtors. While it has been held that the entry of satisfaction of judgment as to one of two judgment debtors satisfies judgment as to both,[80] regardless of intent,[81] it has also been held that the filing of an instrument purporting to satisfy judgment against only one of two judgment debtors does not operate to satisfy the judgment as to the debtor not released by its terms.[82]

A court of law, by virtue of its control over its own records,[83] has inherent[84] power on proper application to vacate an entry of satisfaction,[85] or to reverse an erroneous entry and make a correct entry nunc pro tunc;[86] and it is not necessary to resort to equity in order to obtain relief.[87]

A court of equity has jurisdiction to vacate an entry of satisfaction,[88] but it sometimes declines to exercise jurisdiction on the ground that an adequate remedy at law exists.[89]

Authority of clerk. Since the duties of a clerk are ministerial and not judicial, he has no authority to vacate an entry of satisfaction of a judgment,[90] this being a judicial act.[91]

b. Grounds

The court will vacate or set aside an entry of satisfaction of a judgment for proper cause where the rights of third persons have not intervened. The entry of satisfaction may be vacated on such grounds as mistake, fraud, duress, undue influence, and the lack or failure of consideration therefor.

The court will vacate or set aside an entry of satisfaction for proper cause[92] where the rights of third persons have not intervened.[93] Particularly the court will vacate an entry of satisfaction of a judgment in pursuance of an agreement of the parties to that effect,[94] or where it was entered by mistake of the clerk or plaintiff,[95] or procured by misrepresentation, fraud,[96] duress,[97] or undue influence,[98] or where it appears to have been irregularly or improperly entered[99] or that it will operate to the disadvantage of a third person having a lien on the judgment or entitled to be protected or secured by it.[1]

Likewise, the court will vacate an entry of satisfaction where there has been a lack or failure of consideration therefor,[2] or where there has been a failure to perform the conditions of a settlement between the parties on which the satisfaction was based.[3] Further, the court may vacate the entry where there was a want of authority under the circumstances to make it,[4] as, for instance, where an unauthorized entry of satisfaction is made by plaintiff's attorney,[5] the clerk of the court,[6] sheriff,[7] or one of two joint judgment creditors.[8] Also a false or mistaken entry of a credit may be ordered corrected or vacated.[9]

Void or irregular sale. Where property is sold under execution on a judgment and bought in by the judgment creditor, or the proceeds collected from the purchaser, and satisfaction entered, but the sale proves to be invalid or is afterward vacated, the entry of satisfaction will be stricken off on the application of the creditor.[10]

Absence of leviable interest in property sold. Where the execution, judgment, and sale are all regular, but defendant has no interest in the property sold, according to some authorities, plaintiff may have such apparent satisfaction vacated,[11] under the power of the court to correct its own records,[12] provided plaintiff acts within a reasonable time[13] and the rights of third persons more deserving of protection have not intervened.[14] A directly contrary view, however, has been taken by other authorities,[15] based on the doctrine that there is no warranty of title in execution sales,[16] and it has been held that a mistake by the judgment creditor who purchases land under an execution as to the extent of the debtor's interest is not ground for setting aside the satisfaction after the sale and issuance of the sheriff's deed.[17] Some statutes provide that the sale and satisfaction may be set aside when the judgment on which the execution issued was not a lien on the property sold,[18] as where property sold is a homestead;[19] and, independently of statute, a satisfaction may be vacated where it resulted from the sale of a homestead.[20]

c. Proceedings

(1) In general
(2) Parties and notice
(3) Hearing and determination

(1) In General

An application to set aside a satisfaction of judgment ordinarily is made by motion in the original action for an order canceling the entry or return of satisfaction, and directing execution to issue for so much of the judgment as remains unpaid.

While a satisfaction of a judgment may be set aside by an action[21] or suit in equity[22] brought for that purpose, and sometimes scire facias[23] or an action on the judgment[24] is deemed an appropriate remedy, yet ordinarily the application to set aside is by motion in the original action for an order canceling the entry or return of satisfaction, and directing execution to issue for as much of the judgment as remains unpaid.[25] A motion to set aside the satisfaction is properly made in the court in which the judgment is of record;[26] but, except in some jurisdictions,[27] an action or suit for this purpose may be brought in another court.[28]

Time of application. The application must be seasonably made, so as to clear plaintiff of any imputation of laches[29] and to be within the time limited by statute therefor.[30]

(2) Parties and Notice

Proceedings to vacate an entry of satisfaction may be maintained by a party to the record, or by an assignee of the judgment. Notice of application to strike off a satisfaction must be given to parties interested unless they have appeared.

Proceedings to vacate an entry of satisfaction may be maintained by a party to the record,[31] or by an assignee of the judgment,[32] but not by a

Pleading

Execution creditor, suing debtor in equity on loss of property purchased to correct record showing credit on judgment, was not required to plead that judgment was still in force.—Lucas' Adm'r v. Stanley, 300 S.W. 889, 222 Ky. 374.

Attorney

(1) Where satisfaction of amount due under mechanic's lien decree was executed by plaintiff and filed in office of clerk of superior court, plaintiff's attorney, not being a party to suit, was without standing to present petition that satisfaction should be set aside.—Paul v. Shukes, 56 N. E.2d 141, 323 Ill.App. 527.

(2) Motion by attorney to vacate where satisfaction is in fraud of his lien see Attorney and Client § 231.b (2).

stranger to the record,[33] except where he was the real party in interest and the satisfaction was a fraud on him.[34] All parties affected by the judgment or claiming under or in relation to it must be made parties to the proceeding to set aside.[35] Also notice of an application to strike off a satisfaction must be given to the parties interested[36] unless they have appeared.[37]

(3) Hearing and Determination

A motion to vacate an entry of satisfaction of judgment may be determined on affidavits or depositions, unless the evidence is conflicting on material questions of fact. Where the evidence is conflicting, the party seeking relief should be remitted to an action, a court of equity, or an issue should be directed for a jury.

A motion to vacate an entry of satisfaction may be heard and determined on affidavits[38] or depositions,[39] if the court in the exercise of its discretion chooses to do so.[40] Where, however, the evidence is conflicting on the material questions of fact arising on the motion, the party seeking relief should be remitted to an action,[41] or to a court of equity,[42] or an issue should be directed for a jury.[43]

Regardless of the mode of procedure pursued, to vacate an entry of a satisfaction of a judgment, the remedy sought is governed by equitable rules,[44] involving the exercise of sound discretion by the court,[45] the ultimate question being whether it is inequitable to set aside, or refuse to set aside, the entry of satisfaction.[46] The entry of satisfaction will not be vacated because of any matters antedating the judgment or affecting the original transaction,[47] or where the rights of third persons are prejudiced,[48] such as a bona fide purchaser of property

All judgment defendants

In a suit to set aside satisfaction of a judgment, all the judgment defendants are necessary parties, because if one was not joined the satisfaction would remain valid as to him and hence would operate as release as to all, and plaintiff's decree would thus be a nullity.—Humberd v. Kerr, 8 Baxt., Tenn., 291.

Assignee

To set aside second assignee's satisfaction of judgment, on ground that judgment had been previously assigned to another, notice must be given second assignee.—Brown v. Brown, 3 P.2d 580, 117 Cal.App. 205.

Attorney

(1) It has been held that, where an attorney is retained, service of notice of a motion to vacate a satisfaction must be made on him, and not on the party, although he was only constituted attorney to confess judgment.—Wardell v. Eden, 2 Johns. Cas., N.Y., 121, Col. & C.Cas. 137.

(2) Service of notice of motion to set aside satisfaction of judgment and issue execution on attorney not shown to be judgment debtor's attorney of record was not notice to judgment debtor.—Spencer v. Barnes, 43 P.2d 847, 6 Cal.App.2d 35.

(3) Testimony that certain person said he was attorney for defendant and another and had appeared in proceeding before court in pending action as attorney for such parties has been held not competent to show that he was defendant's attorney on whom notice of motion to set aside satisfaction of judgment against defendant might be served.—Spencer v. Barnes, supra.

Opportunity to answer and be heard

Where assignee of rights of plaintiff in mechanic's lien proceeding filed petition to set aside satisfaction of judgment in the proceeding, court, in passing on another petition to set aside the satisfaction, should not have considered assignee's petition until defendant had had opportunity to answer and be heard concerning merits thereof.—Paul v. Shukes, 56 N.E.2d 141, 323 Ill.App. 527.

who became such while the judgment appeared by the record to be satisfied and discharged.[49] The entry of satisfaction will not be set aside where it would be futile.[50]

An order denying a motion to vacate a satisfaction of judgment has been held to bar further attack on the validity of the satisfaction.[51]

Conditions of relief. As a condition to vacation of satisfaction, plaintiff will usually be required to place defendant in statu quo,[52] but plaintiff is not required to restore what in any event he would be entitled to retain,[53] it being sufficient to credit such sums on the judgment.[54]

Order. The court will direct the entry of an order vacating the satisfaction of judgment where proper cause is shown.[55]

Review. It has been held that the decision of the court on a summary motion to strike off an improper satisfaction is the decision of a matter of fact, which is not subject to review on writ of error,[56] and can be reviewed only by proceedings in the nature of a writ of certiorari.[57]

Costs. In an action to set aside a satisfaction, plaintiff has been held entitled only to statutory costs.[58] An assignee with notice of prior equities, who enters satisfaction, will be charged with the costs of a motion to vacate the entry of satisfaction.[59] The allowance of disbursements is not authorized by some statutes.[60]

d. Effect

When an entry of satisfaction is vacated the judgment is again in force.

When an entry of satisfaction is vacated, the judgment is again in force.[61]

XVIII. ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENTS

§ 585. In General

As a general rule, a party recovering judgment has the right to proceed to enforce it, and the court rendering judgment has inherent power to enforce it and to make such orders and issue such process as may be necessary to render it effective.

As a general rule, a party recovering a judgment has a right to proceed to enforce it.[62] Although it has been held that the judicial function of the court ceases when the judgment becomes final and that the duty of enforcement devolves on the executive department,[63] the generally accepted rule is that every court has inherent power to enforce its judgments and decrees,[64] and to make such orders[65] and issue such process[66] as may be necessary to render them effective, and this power is not affected by the fact that the decree is final.[67] This power lies in the court itself to be exercised without the aid of a fact-finding body.[68] The rule with reference to the court's loss of jurisdiction over its judgments after the expiration of the term, as discussed supra § 230, merely bars the court's right to alter, modify, or change them but does not preclude their enforcement as originally rendered.[69]

Ordinarily it is not necessary that a judgment be served on any party to the cause after it is entered or filed;[70] but under some statutes a judgment other than a judgment for money or for the possession or sale of property is enforceable by service of a certified copy;[71] and, as discussed infra § 586, where it is sought to enforce the judgment by contempt proceedings, a copy of the judgment should first be served on defendant. A joint and several judgment may be enforced by the judgment creditor against either or both of the judgment debtors.[72]

It has been held that a judgment may not be enforced in favor of a person other than the one in whose favor it is rendered unless it has been transferred in writing to such person.[73]

§ 586. Enforcement at Law

a. In general
b. Auxiliary remedies

a. In General

Proceedings for the enforcement of a judgment are governed by the law of the jurisdiction in which they are brought and by the law in force at the time such proceedings are had; and the usual method of enforcement, where the judgment is for a sum of money, is by execution.

Proceedings for the enforcement of a judgment are governed by the law of the state or country in which they are brought,[74] and by the law in force at the time such proceedings are had.[75] As such laws refer only to the remedy, all judgments and decrees are taken subject to such changes, before execution thereof, as the legislature may make in the procedure for their enforcement.[76] Jurisdiction to enforce a judgment does not exist in another court of equal rank with that in which the judgment originated, unless authorized by statute;[77]

Jurisdictions of courts generally and, where a judgment is recovered in one capacity, proceedings to enforce it must be brought in the same capacity.[78]

Where the judgment is for the payment of money, the usual process of execution will ordinarily be the appropriate method of collecting it,[79] unless the right to issue this process has been limited or deferred by an agreement of the parties;[80] but the right to enforce the judgment by execution is subject to the condition that the judgment must be final, and that the amount, if uncertain, must be ascertained in a proper proceeding before the writ may issue, as discussed in Executions § 6. If the judgment is rendered in pursuance of an agreement of the parties which directs a particular mode of satisfying it, it cannot be enforced in any way inconsistent with the agreement.[81] While service of notice on defendant is necessary in an independent action to enforce a judgment, no service is required when the proceeding is in the form of a motion to enforce.[82] A demurrer to a petition to enforce a void judgment is properly sustained.[83]

Time for enforcement. Generally, a judgment may and should be enforced within the time limited by statute, if any,[84] and an exception to the limitation period must be found in the statutes themselves and cognate sections.[85] Under some statutes, a procedure is established whereby action may be taken to enforce a judgment notwithstanding the lapse of the normal period of limitations.[86] Such procedure is regarded as a subsequent step in an action already commenced and not a separate proceeding.[87] It has been held that the question whether or not a dormant judgment shall be enforced is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court.[88]

b. Auxiliary Remedies

In addition to the remedy by writ of execution various other collateral or auxiliary remedies for the enforcement of judgments are recognized or established by statute in various jurisdictions.

In addition to the remedy by writ of execution, various other collateral or auxiliary remedies for the enforcement of judgments are recognized or established by statute in various jurisdictions,[89] such as attachment, as discussed in Attachment § 12, garnishment, as discussed in Garnishment §§ 5, 12, and supplementary proceedings as considered in Executions §§ 345–402. However, a court of one state cannot give effect to the judgment of a court of another state by enforcing any of the collateral remedies provided in the state where the judgment was rendered,[90] or by enforcing remedies provided by over judgments of another court see Courts § 496.

It has been held that district court on its law side can enforce judgment only by execution through its ministerial officers.—McNary v. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, D.C.Ohio, 6 F.Supp. 616.

Interest in partnership property

Holder of judgment against a partner individually may by proper procedure reach judgment debtor's interest in partnership property without resorting to statute making judgment against partnership on service of summons on individual partner enforceable against partnership property.—J. Discretion of court Judgment creditor was not entitled as matter of right to order for issuance of writ of execution on showing that prior execution was issued within five years after judgment, where twenty-one years had elapsed since judgment was rendered; refusing to issue execution was not abuse of discretion under circumstances.—Williams v. Goodin, 61 P.2d 507, 17 Cal.App.2d 62.

Not action or special proceeding

Procedure authorized by statute for enforcement of judgment after five years constitutes neither "action" nor "special proceeding" of civil nature, but is mere subsequent step in action or special proceeding already commenced which is governed so far as time within which step may be taken is concerned, by provisions of statute specially relating thereto.—Tolle v. statute in the state where enforcement is sought, where such remedies are limited by statute to domestic judgments.[91]

Contempt proceedings. As a general rule, as discussed in Contempt § 13, mere nonpayment of a money judgment or decree does not constitute contempt of court, and payment cannot be enforced by proceedings and imprisonment for contempt. Where, however, a judgment requires of a party the performance of any act other than the payment of money or delivery of real or personal property, a performance of such act may be enforced by proceedings as for contempt;[92] but, as in contempt cases generally, as considered in Contempt § 57, an application to punish for contempt is addressed to the discretion of the court,[93] and, under some circumstances, should be denied.[94]

§ 587. Enforcement in Equity

Although it is presumed ordinarily that the court which renders a judgment is competent to enforce it without the aid of equity, the rule is subject to numerous exceptions under which the power of a court of equity may properly be invoked where the legal remedy is unavailing.

Ordinarily it is presumed that the court which renders a judgment is competent to enforce it, and equity cannot be invoked to obtain satisfaction.[95] This rule, however, is subject to numerous exceptions under which the power of a court of equity may properly be invoked,[96] as where the object is to reach equitable interests in land, not subject to execution,[97] or other property of defendant which cannot be made available in the ordinary way,[98] or, except in some jurisdictions,[99] where the judgment debtor is dead and recourse cannot be had against his estate without the aid of chancery.[1]

Before equity will grant relief, it must first appear that complainant has recovered a judgment at law,[2] and that he has no adequate remedy at law,[3] or that his legal remedy has been lost without any fault or laches on his part,[4] or has been exhausted without avail.[5] On such a proceeding the regularity of the judgment will not be inquired into,[6] although the nature of the original cause of action may be investigated if its character would have any influence on the action of a court of equity in the premises.[7] Complainant must of course show himself equitably entitled to the relief which he asks,[8] and his petition will be defeated by anything showing that it would be unjust or unfair to grant it.[9]

Jurisdiction. In order to sustain a bill in equity for the enforcement of a judgment at law, it is necessary that defendant should be subject to the jurisdiction of the court,[10] or, if he is a nonresident, that the particular property sought to be subjected to the judgment should be found within the state.[11] Under some statutes, where a court of equity has once acquired jurisdiction, it may decree the sale of land in any county.[12]

Limitations. Equity will not entertain a bill to enforce a judgment after the statute of limitations has run against the judgment at law.[13] Conversely, equity may entertain a bill or petition to enforce a judgment prior to the expiration of the time limited by the statute.[14]

Process and parties. The proceeding in equity is an action independent of that in which the judgment was rendered, and further process is necessary.[15] An assignee of a judgment may file a bill to enforce it,[16] or he may file a motion for a decree over against defendant.[17] All persons having interests in the particular property sought to be subjected should be joined as parties.[18]

Pleadings and evidence. In some jurisdictions the bill or petition must allege that plaintiff has recovered a judgment against defendant,[19] that execution has issued, directed to the county in which the judgment was rendered or in which defendant resided and was placed in the hands of an officer authorized to execute it,[20] who has made a return of no property found.[21] The bill must set forth fully the judgment on which it is based,[22] but pleading the judgment in general terms,[23] or alleging, in pleading a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction, that it was recovered in a named court, in a designated action,[24] or equivalent averments,[25] have been held sufficient. The bill should also allege the assignment of the judgment, if any, to complainant;[26] show the liability of respondent to satisfy it;[27] and negative the existence of an adequate remedy at law.[28] The evidence must clearly establish complainant's right to the relief prayed.[29]

Decree and relief. If the proceeding is merely to enforce the lien of the judgment, a personal decree for the payment of its amount will not be proper;[30] but otherwise the decree may be for the aggregate amount of the original judgment with interest and costs,[31] although this relief may not be given against defendants who are joined merely as claiming under alleged fraudulent conveyances from the judgment defendant.[32] The decree should generally give the debtor time to redeem from the sale ordered, although this is not indispensable;[33] but it should not undertake to adjust equities or settle partnership accounts between defendants.[34] Complainant cannot, by a petition to enforce a judgment in his favor dismissing an action for an injunction and an accounting and awarding him costs, have an issue adjudicated where he failed to ask for any affirmative relief and none was granted him by the judgment.[35]

§ 588. Scire Facias to Enforce

Scire facias may be used as a process for obtaining the enforcement of a judgment when authorized by statute or in special cases.

Scire facias may be employed as a process for obtaining the enforcement of the judgment when authorized by statute, or in special cases,[36] as where the judgment includes installments of a debt subsequently to accrue,[37] or where it embodies an express condition or is to be released on performance of an act in pais.[38] In a proper case, the writ is available to the assignee of a judgment.[39]

Since scire facias is a judicial, and not an original, writ, it should issue from, and be returned to, the court which rendered judgment and has possession of the record.[40] Generally issues which were or might have been raised prior to entry of judgment will not be considered on scire facias thereon;[41] but this rule is inapplicable if the invalidity of the judgment clearly appears from the record.[42] The question whether or not a judgment is void on its face may be properly considered on a motion to dismiss and quash service of the writ;[43] but the question whether or not the allegations of the writ comply with statutory regulations thereto should be raised by demurrer and not on motion to quash.[44] Scire facias is of course not available in jurisdictions where it has been abolished by statute.[45]

Scire facias addressed to the devisees of a judgment debtor is in the nature of a proceeding in rem.[46] The writ must allege that the debtor was dead at the time it was issued, that he left a will under which the addressees succeeded to his realty as his sole devisees, and describe the realty.[47]

§ 589. Scire Facias to Obtain New Execution

Scire facias to obtain new execution is discussed in Executions § 85, and scire facias to revive a dormant judgment supra § 548.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 590. Proceedings to Make Parties

Joint debtors not originally summoned may be made liable to a judgment by being summoned in accordance with statutes providing therefor, or by means of scire facias, where the common-law practice prevails, requiring them to show cause why the judgment should not be effective against them.

Where judgment has been recovered against one or more of several persons jointly indebted on a contract, the others not having been served, it is sometimes provided by statute that the judgment may be made effective against those defendants not originally served, by summoning them afterward to show cause why they should not be bound by the judgment.[48] Such proceeding is not an action on the judgment,[49] or one to enforce such judgment;[50] nor, strictly speaking, is it an action on the original liability.[51] It is a statutory proceeding based partly on the former judgment and partly on the original liability.[52] While the statutory proceeding to bind the absent debtor has been held to be exclusive,[53] it has also been held to be merely cumulative, and not exclusive of other remedies,[54] and that, therefore, a second action may be maintained against all the defendants to the original action, on the original cause of action;[55] such second action is not an action on the original judgment.[56] Such statutes frequently contain provisions limiting the time within which the new parties may be summoned.[57]

Joint debtors not originally summoned may also be made liable to the judgment in those states where the common-law practice prevails by means of a scire facias requiring them to show cause why they should not be so bound.[58] This writ is also an appropriate common-law process for making a person a party defendant to the judgment, who, since its rendition, has become chargeable to an execution thereon, or in some way accountable for the assets of the original defendant, as in the case of subsequent purchasers, heirs, and devisees.[59] Where a scire facias issues to make one a party to a judgment, the trial as to him should be conducted as if no judgment has been rendered against his codefendant, and such defendant has a right to make every defense which he might have made had he been served with summons and a hearing had as to him at the same time that the cause was heard as to his codefendant.[60]

§ 591. Scire Facias on Justice's Transcript

Where a transcript of a justice's judgment is entered in a court of record for purposes of lien and execution, a scire facias either to revive it or to obtain an execution against lands must issue from the superior court.

Where a transcript of a justice's judgment is entered in a court of record for purposes of lien and execution as discussed supra § 129, a scire facias either to revive it or to obtain an execution against lands must issue from the superior court.[61] In such a proceeding the merits and the validity of the justice's judgment cannot be inquired into, if want of jurisdiction is not apparent.[62] The writ should be correctly entitled in the names of the parties to the original judgment,[63] and should show the rendition of a valid judgment by the justice,[64] the amount due on it,[65] the issue and return of execution on it, if any,[66] and that the transcript was duly certified by the justice[67] and filed or recorded in the superior court.[68] If the scire facias appears on its face to be valid, a motion to quash it will be overruled.[69]

Defendant may deny the existence of the judgment or transcript,[70] allege its alteration in a material particular,[71] or deny its filing in the superior court.[72] The allegation that he has lands within the county which are subject to execution must be proved,[73] unless he appears and suffers judgment by nil dicit.[74] The issue and return of execution from the justice's court is provable by producing the original execution or a certified or sworn copy.[75]
